None! Go to some city right now. You won't starve. Get your "job in a factory" and then cultivate the acquaintance of city operators and managers. Watch your chance and get into a city operating room as helper or apprentice. Get a handbook with the first four dollars you can scrape together, and with the next get the first eight volumes of Hawkins Electrical Guide, which may be had at $1 down and $1 per week, Theodore Audel Co., 72 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Then work and study hard. That is the only system.

But, friend manager, honestly, what encouragement do you think it is for me or any one else to try to improve projection when you offer a man eight dollars a week after serving a year of apprenticeship and holding a job as operator an equal period? You claim operators' unions are unfair in their demands. Well, what do you call an example of this kind? What about this manager who has the man at his mercy? Eight dollars a week? Huh.

An Interesting Letter.

Marion Long, Toronto, Canada, contributes a letter which will, I am sure, be read with much interest by all. She says:

As one of the vast army of moving picture fans, and as a steady reader of the Moving Picture World, I assume the privilege (Right, you mean, Ed.) of writing to you. Being of the weaker (?) sex you will perhaps bear with me long enough to wade through to the end of this, my first letter to the Dean of Projection. First, a word as to myself; age, well, under thirty; personal description, have won no medals in a beauty contest thus far; education, Bachelor of Science, expert in all branches of photography, and an enthusiastic student of projection. Own my own M. P. camera, an Ensign, and a Power's Six projector. Have taken more than 20,000 feet of film, mostly scenery, fishing, hunting, farming, ice skating, and views of various games, such as hockey, baseball, lacrosse, etc. Do my own developing and printing.

There, I am now properly introduced (Glad to meet you, Ed.), and will now set forth the real "raison d'être," for this letter (You should have waited for the postscript to do that, Ed.). First of all I have a complaint to make, viz: poor projection in the average motion picture theater! I read the account of your trip, and would wager that some of the operators you criticized are now giving better screen results (Let us hope some friend managers have also benefited, Ed.). I have one of your latest handbooks, as well as a copy of the earlier editions, and have benefited through study of them. Am leaving Toronto soon on a "go-as-you-please" trip to Vancouver. Mother and a younger brother accompany me. We are all that remain of a family of six. Father and one brother are buried "somewhere in France," and the other is a prisoner of war in Germany. The war has stricken a great many, and we are all praying for its end.

I propose on my trip to visit all the movie houses possible, and if you would like, will send a first-hand criticism of projection, believing that if the operator can see what one of the audience thinks of his work it will either encourage him, or cause him to try and improve if criticism is found necessary.

Permit me, therefore, to begin at home. In a majority of Toronto houses the work is fair, in some it is excellent, in others it is just good, while in a few it is very rank. In some of the downtown houses they use first class film and second class operators; in others vice versa.

The Regent, the York, and the Crown have absolutely the finest projection in the city. Next these three come the Madison, Strand, Red Mill, Globe, Photodrome, Playhouse, Tech, the Iola, and the Peter Pan. In the following, projection is not quite fair, light poor, flickery, etc.: The Woodbine, Empire, His Majesty's, the Garden, the Cum Bac, People's, Hippodrome, Pickford, U-Kum, Doric, Rialto, and Colonial. This will classify the Toronto houses as to projection, except for the Windsor, Eclipse, and the Broadview, in which is seen the worst possible.

A couple of very amusing incidents occurred recently. In one of the downtown houses a beautiful fire scene was on the screen. Suddenly Charlie Chaplin jumped into the fire upside down, and, with legs gyrating in the air, commenced doing his stunts standing on his head. Three or four minutes of this and the screen went first white and then black, as though disgusted with what was being done to it. Did not inquire as to the cause. Probably you can figure it out for yourself—I can.

A long letter, but interesting. Will be very glad to have your reports on projection, but be very careful and do no injustice. When projection is poor, try to ascertain nature and state of equipment. Light is often poor for no other reason than that friend manager won't allow the operator to use sufficient current. Shadows sometimes occur because of the same reason—the operator is compelled to concentrate his light to the limit at the spot in order to get sufficient screen illumination, and the too-small spot breeds trouble, especially when the operator has rewinding and other things to do as he projects a picture. It is also a fact that poor results are often traced to penuriousness in machine parts and carbons. Be certain of your grounds, Sister Long, and then go ahead. No, I am unable to dope out any reason which would account for such a screen result, if it continued for "three or four minutes." Starting a second machine with its film not rewound would produce the effect; but unless the operator was dead or sleeping it could hardly last more than a few seconds. This is the first we have had from Toronto for a long time. Wassa matter up there anyhow?

Could Not Recommend It.

R. A. Bray, Big Timber, Montana, wants my opinion as to the advisability of patenting a speedometer device for moving picture projectors. Says the same could be made to fit any make of machine, and would operate on the same general principle as that of the automobile speedometer, enabling the operator to see at a glance the precise speed of projection.

Would not advise you to invest money in such a patent. As I have many times said, the only correct method of judging projection speed is the action on the screen. It would be useless to know that you were projecting a scene at sixty-four feet per minute unless you knew the camera speed at which that scene was taken was also sixty-four feet per minute. I believe such a speedometer would merely make it more convenient for friend manager to compel the strict adherence to an art butchering "schedule." This department could not recommend such a device, moreover I think you would quickly discover that the principles upon which automobile speedometers operate are already very thoroughly covered by patents.

Interesting Experiments.

Recently the editor remarked to Mr. Porter, general manager, Precision Machine Company, that he believed a speeding-up of their intermittent movement would be decidedly advantageous. Ordinarily, when a suggestion of this kind is made to a machine manufacturer, he assumes an air of insulted dignity, pointing out the fact that HIS machine now is, always was and always will be the very ne plus ultra of perfection and that criticism of the same is, or very nearly approaches the cardinal sin. Mr. Porter took issue with me as to the advisability of speeding up the intermittent. "If operators were all high-class projectionists and conditions ideal, then your contention would hold. But we, as manufacturers," said Mr. Porter, "must of necessity deal with things as they are—with conditions as they exist, and we are prepared to lay before you a demonstration which we believe will prove a surprise."

We then proceeded to the demonstration room, where two projectors were hitched together, side by side, so that one motor ran both at precisely the same speed, hence, barring a slight possible difference in screen illumination, there could be no question as to the fairness of the test. There were ammeters and voltmeters on both lamps, but since equal amperage does not necessarily mean equal illumination, we judged illumination by the eye alone.

First, we had a demonstration of the comparative evenness of screen illumination and brilliance with incandescent lamps, using a "semaphore" and a plano convex condenser (the screen was amply large to accommodate the two images side by side). I did not myself make the exhaustive experiments I would wish to make before finally expressing a final opinion as to the relative merits of the two condensers, but certainly the test seemed to be a fair one, and it was all in favor of the plano; also, with the plano the same same condenser may be used for the stereo, which cannot be done with the semaphore lens.

But it was in the shutter tests the surprise lay. First, the light was gotten as even on both screens as possible, after which certain tests were made with various standard shutters, the result of which would, if published, get us a whole hod-full of brick delivered, one at a time. Next, we installed a four-wing shutter (the tests were all made with a clear field—no film). This shutter, which had four blades of equal width, was a "fifty-fifty" and presented a field clear of flicker when run at 38 revolutions of the crank shaft per minute. We then trimmed approximately one-quarter inch from each side of three of the blades, leaving one, presumed to represent the main blade, as it was. Under this condition it was found necessary to run the machine at 62 in order to clear the field from flicker. The shutter gave 50 per cent. of light before trimming and 57 per cent. after.

Next we placed on one machine the shutter marked A and on the other the one marked B. IT REQUIRED 112 REVOLUTIONS PER MINUTE TO CLEAR THE SCREEN OF FLICKER WITH B AND ONLY 84 WITH A! Explain that if you can. A gives 43 per cent. of the light and B gives 44.4 per cent. On each of the blades and openings of both shutters is marked its width in degrees. A is the shutter which will very soon be sent out with the Simplex projector as a part of its regular equipment. Please don't ask me why this difference in result is. I don't know, nor does Mr. Porter. But it most certainly IS, and after all that is the main point.

Mr. Porter and I had quite some argument as to intermittent speed. His contention is that the Simplex projector employs as fast a movement as is at this time commercially practical or advisable. Said he: "It would be a very simple matter for us to speed up according to your demands and most certainly if we believed your position to be correct we would do it. It would be very nice for us to say 'we have a very fast movement. But what about the aftermath of howls caused by excessive wear, due to over-speeding of the projector, inefficient lubrication and unintelligent handling? We are now using as fast a movement as any of the other machines, or practically so, and the movement stands up well. We do not, therefore, feel that it would be wise to increase speed, even conceding that gain in light and lessening of tendency to flicker would result. When the time comes that operators have advanced to the point where they AS A WHOLE can and will give such a movement the intelligent care absolutely necessary to satisfactory performance we will concede your demand and put out the movement. Until that time we or any other machine manufacturer would merely be inviting trouble, and lots of it, to do so."

I suggested the possibility of putting out a fast movement for use only by theaters who employ a high-class operator, to which Mr. Porter replied: "Sounds all right, but the practical operation would be that as soon as the 'other fellow' heard of the high-speed movement he would demand it immediately and we would be in boiling water."

I am setting forth all this in detail because Mr. Porter is the first manufacturer who has ever consented to discuss these matters frankly in print. What he says is true; also it is an added argument for greater intelligence and efficiency in the operating room. Here is a needed improvement held back for the simple reason that (this on my own authority) a good two-thirds of the present-day operators either could not, would not or would not be allowed to handle it intelligently. Mr. Porter's arguments are good. But they constitute an indictment upon theater managers, because of the fact that managers are, when all is said and done, directly responsible. They could use the fast movement, with its manifest advantages, even with an inefficient operator, were they willing to stand for the repair bills made necessary, which would, after all, be but a comparatively small item—say, in no event, more than four dollars per month. But I can imagine the howl which would go up if an intermittent required that expenditure to keep it in first-class condition. One whole, great big cast silver cartwheel per week. Oy, oy, oy—business of tearing the hair. Of course, he would get more light and less flicker, and f-o-u-r dollars a month for intermittent repairs! Curses!!! One hundred bucks a DAY for films? Why sure! That is paid without any very great splutter, but one dollar a WEEK added to machine repair bills—horrors!

And now let me utter a caution. Mr. Porter has faced some risk in allowing me to set forth these things frankly. I appreciate his action and you may take it from me I will defend him to the limit from any unfair advantage being taken. For instance, any who may question his statement, either in this department or elsewhere, as to relative speed of Simplex and other machine intermittent movements, will be given ample chance to prove their contention, and the tests will be made publicly, by men whose decision may not be doubted. A discussion of desirability of generally increased intermittent speed will be welcomed, but cut out the hot air and deal in known facts, or in theories which have to do with other things than comparison of equipment of various makes.

Foolish Procedure and False Economy.

From time to time this department has called attention to theater managers to the altogether too common practice of false economy in the purchase of operating room supplies, which really is wasting of money instead of saving it. It is a fact that the overwork of machine parts, until their wear is evidenced by even the slightest deterioration of screen results, is not economy. The same holds true in the purchase of carbons, etc. A carbon which produces a white, steady light is more economical than one which gives unsteady light or light of poor quality, even though its first cost price be double that of the second. Suppose you save ten, fifteen or even twenty-five cents each day in cost price by purchasing cheap carbons and that these carbons lower the screen result efficiency by even as little as one per cent. HAVE YOU ACTUALLY SAVED ANYTHING???? "You have not" is the self-evident answer. Instead, you have actually lost money, since your other overhead expense remains the same, whereas the finished result sought by the expenditure of that overhead has been injured and, in exact proportion as it is injured, the box office income is decreased. This is a proposition which does not admit of argument.

But there is another possible loss aside from box office loss. Suppose you are paying one dollar a day for projection current. A worn gear causes lost motion to an amount which compels the operator to use a main shutter blade enough wider than would be necessary, were the gears all in good condition, to cause the additional loss of three per cent. of the light—not at all excessive under the conditions named. How long will it require to waste the price of a new gear? Then, too, the necessary addition to the shutter blade has set up added tendency to flicker, thus injuring the screen result and the box office returns.

There is no such thing as a possible economy in operating room supplies, except as applies to actual waste. Use of worn machine parts is not economy. Managers should consider the value of the work their projection machines are performing, the value of the films they are handling and the dramatic value of the photoplays the projector is interpreting on their screens. Many managers expect utterly unreasonable things of their projectors. Other things they expect will wear out, but their projection machine never. It was good when they bought it, ergo, it must be equally good a year from that time. They do not know that 576,000 times in a ten-hour run, at 60 feet of film to the minute, the intermittent has acted, steel striking on steel with a heavy, sliding, hammer blow. In a year's run, at ten hours a day, this means more than 210,000,000 hammer blows, yet some managers yell bloody murder if an intermittent wears under that service to an extent which requires the replacement of some of its parts.

The only true economy is to keep your projector in A-1 condition, and it most emphatically is NOT up to you to pinch nickles on that end and ladle out coin for film service with a dipper.

From a Globe Trotter.

E. B. Olson, whose name is well remembered, though not his former location, sends a P. O. card postmarked Pago Pago, Samoa, which reads: "There is not much doing in the picture business in Alaska; nothing but small villages up there. Am sending picture I took when you were in Tacoma, Washington. Business is fine in Honolulu—so is the swimming. Am on my way to Sidney, Australia. Will see you in New York soon."

Evidently Brother Olson is not adverse to change of scene. Too bad I can't loan him Nancy Hanks, the Go Devil, for his Australian trip. He could put paddle wheels on her and ride more comfortably.

Victor Animatograph Projector.

It has been brought to our attention that the Victor Animatograph Company is putting out a really excellent projector designed for use in schools, for church and for light exhibition work. The editor has examined this machine, and finds it to be excellent for the purposes named. It is compact, strongly built, easily transported, readily prepared for transportation and quickly re-assembled and set up ready for business.

The workmanship and material are claimed to be high class, and I see no reason for doubting the manufacturers' claims in this respect, since the machine sells at a price permitting of both. And that is a most commendable thing. A too-cheap machine is not likely to be really a cheap one at all. In fact, the purchaser will most likely find it a very dear investment in the end. The price of the Victor is, I should say, just about what it should be for a well built projector of its class.

The machine takes standard film, has a three-point star, which gives rapid ratio of film movement, thus allowing of the utilization of a comparatively large percentage of the available light. The shutter is similar in its action to the old Kine-drome shutter except that it is of the "inside" variety. There are two blades, which close the aperture from opposite directions, meeting in the center of the aperture opening. This plan is very economical, in that it permits of a minimum shutter blade width when using what is known as an "inside shutter."

A unique feature of the Victor consists of its "flexible focus." For moving picture projection the condenser is quite close to the film. For stereopticon projection the lamphouse is, by a very clever mechanical arrangement, made to move backward several inches as it swings over into line with the stereo lens. When in position for stereopticon projection the condenser used for moving picture projection is automatically lined with and locked to a frame, or hood, carrying a second condenser, which remains in a fixed place behind the slide carrier. The combination thus formed is correct for the projection of standard stereopticon slides. It is a very clever, as well as effective, arrangement.

The illumination is by means of an incandescent lamp, and current may be taken from a battery or from power lines of any voltage up to 230. The manufacturer claims a good ten foot picture, with possible twelve feet under good conditions. I have not actually seen this demonstrated, but would imagine that with a good screen and tolerably dark room a very good result might be had with a ten foot picture—as good as can be gotten with any standard projector under the same conditions, using an incandescent lamp. Caution:

Now, Mr. Theater manager, don't jump at conclusions. In that statement I meant precisely what I said, and can see no reason why what I have said is not entirely correct. It does not, however, follow that the Victor is a machine which will give continued satisfaction in your theater. It is not designed or built for the heavy theater grind, nor will it, in my judgment, stand up under such service. It is guaranteed by the manufacturer against all defects in material and workmanship for one thousand two hundred (1,200) hours of service, which means it is guaranteed to stand up to a four-hour-a-day service for one year, not including Sundays, and that any part which may fail during that period will be replaced free, provided it fails through faulty material or workmanship.

The parts are all interchangeable, and are mostly die made. The machine is on the list of projection apparatus approved by the Underwriters. All film is enclosed, and so is the mechanism. The automatic fire shutter is certain in its action; also it is adjustable for wear of parts. The machine frames more than one full picture. It may be had either hand or motor driven. The motor driven machine has speed control in acceptable form. The stand is adjustable for both angle and height. Threading is easy and all bearings readily accessible for oiling. A part of the bearings are bronze and part are babbitt metal. Magazines accommodate ten-inch reels and are thoroughly fireproof, so far as any magazine can be said to be that. All types of new high-power incandescent lamps may be used.

An idea of the machine is had from the illustrations, the first being the machine as a whole, the second the mechanism from the operating side and the third the mechanism from opposite side.

To sum up, this department recommends the Victor, Model No. 2, to the careful consideration of schools, to churches, and to those exhibitors who travel from one small town to another on one-night stands, and who require an easily portable projector with incandescent lamp projecting a picture not to exceed ten feet in width.

Who Wants This Job?

An exhibitor in a small city less than fifty or sixty miles north of New York City, on the Hudson River, wants an operator. Will pay twenty dollars to start, and if the man makes good might raise that later two or three dollars. Either union or non-union. Must be able to deliver the goods. Position is a steady one. Six days per week, six and a half hours a day. Those wishing to apply must send stamped envelope containing their application to this department. We will immediately send it to the manager. But don't put in an application unless you know your business and are prepared to make good, remembering that no transients are wanted. Presumably a married man would be preferred.

Calculating Shutter Time.

Mac, Detroit, Mich., writes: "Being a constant reader of the 'World,' I take the liberty of writing you seeking to know what the duration of exposure would be on Erneman camera with the shutter wide open at two cranks per second? Also does not the time the intermittent is at rest designate the duration of exposure? If it is not possible to state exactly what the exposure would be, could you tell me whether it would be 1/16 second or less?"

The shutter of a motion picture camera is the segment of a disk revolving in front of and parallel to the aperture or frame plate. It revolves once for each frame or picture taken; in synchronism, that is, in time with the movement which draws the film down for each successive picture. Its function is to cut off the light or image from the film during that period of time during which the film is drawn down in readiness for the next exposure. While the exposure is being made, the section of film in the gate and before the aperture plate is motionless and, just as the platen of a printing press must hold the paper to be printed firmly against the type without permitting it to move in relation to the type lest it smear the imprint, so must the film remain stationary while it receives the impression of the lens image or it will be blurred.

The type of the intermittent movement with which the camera is provided determines the greatest or maximum shutter opening. The instant that the claws or fingers of the intermittent movement commence to draw the film down to its position for the next frame, the aperture opening must be covered by the shutter and remain closed until all downward movement of the film has ceased. Should the movement of the film commence before the aperture is entirely covered by the shutter, such portion of the frame as remained uncovered will be blurred.

As the shutter moves continuously and uniformly around, it must be a fraction of a disk large enough to cover the aperture during the time that it takes the claws to pull the film down plus a segment large enough to cover the aperture when the movement begins. If it takes one-half the time of a complete shutter revolution to pull the film down for the next frame, the shutter segment must be half a circle plus a segment wide enough to cover the aperture opening; for this extra segment portion must completely close the aperture before the downward movement takes place. For that reason a rod and pitman, or a crank which requires one-half the time interval for drawing the film down must have a shutter segment of one-half a circle plus 1/6 of a circle to cover the aperture opening when the film travel begins. Since 1/2 plus 1/6 equals 2/3 of the circle, there is left only 1/3 for the exposure, or 1/3 shutter opening as it is termed.

The Lumiere type movement which uses the so-called harmonic cam for throwing the fingers, draws down in about one-fourth of the time interval and consequently can employ a shutter whose open segment is slightly more than one-half.

At sixteen pictures per second, each picture is drawn down and exposed in one-sixteenth part of a second; if the shutter is one-third open then the exposure time is one third of one-sixteenth, or one-forty-eighth; if one-half opening, one-half of one-sixteenth, or one-thirty-second of a second. For any other shutter opening the speed or time is calculated in the same simple way. Thus, also, it will be seen that all shutter openings bear a simple arithmetical ratio to the time of exposure: a quarter opening is twice as quick as half opening, but only gives half the exposure that half opening gives.

In still photography it is often necessary to use exposures as quick as one-thousandth part of a second to get an unblurred picture of a moving object, but in the motion pictures it is essential that a swiftly moving picture should be blurred in each individual frame to reproduce on the screen the effect of a single moving object. If we close the shutter opening to a mere slit and photograph a baseball thrown in the sunlight, we will get a succession of clear images of the ball on the negatives, but when the picture is thrown on the screen, we get an impression of three or four balls chasing one another across the screen. The clean cut images are too far apart to blend correctly in the eye and produce the swish of the single moving ball.

*Copyright, 1917, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

It is, therefore, advisable in almost all cases to use as wide a shutter opening as the intermittent movement of the camera permits. Also the larger the shutter opening the smaller the diaphragm opening and the smaller the diaphragm the greater the depth of focus.

Formulas for Making Motion Pictures to Scale.

E. W. Davis of the Universal Camera Company has worked out a very valuable and simple method of calculating in advance the scale of magnification of pictures upon the screen so that a cameraman may predetermine exactly the size of the projected image before the picture is photographed.

His data is as follows:

In cases where the cameraman wishes to photograph an object so as to be projected to a certain size, relative to the actual size of the object, the following formulas may be useful. The formulas which apply to "life size" projection are particularly useful. In all those formulas the distance from camera to object is given in feet and the focal length of the lens in inches.

For life size projection (16-foot screen): With a given lens, to determine the distance from camera to object: Formula: Distance = focal length x 16. Example: We wish to photograph an object with a 2-inch lens so that it will be projected life size; how far shall we place the camera from the object? Solution: Distance = 2 x 16 = 32 feet.

For life size projection (16-foot screen): With the distance given, to determine the lens: Formula: Focal length = $\frac{\text{Distance}}{16}$. Example:

We wish to photograph an object 50 feet away so that it will be projected life size; what focal length lens shall we use? Solution: Focal length = $\frac{50}{16}$ = 3 1/8 inches. Obviously a 3 inch lens would be near enough for practical purposes.

Lens and distance given, to determine magnification: Formula: Magnification = $\frac{\text{Distance}}{\text{Focal length} \times 16}$. Example: What will be the projected magnification of an object photographed at a distance of 20 feet with a 2-inch lens? Solution: Magnification = $\frac{20}{2 \times 16}$ = 1 3/5 times actual size. If the answer is less than 1 there will be reduction instead of magnification.

Lens and magnification given, to determine the distance: Formula: Distance = $\frac{\text{Focal length} \times 16}{\text{Magnification}}$. Example: With a 3-inch lens, at what distance from the object shall we place the camera to obtain a projected magnification of 2 times actual size? Solution: Distance = $\frac{3 \times 16}{2}$ = 24 feet.

Magnification and distance given, to determine the required focal length of lens: Formula: Focal length = $\frac{\text{Distance} \times \text{Magnification}}{16}$. Example: We wish to photograph an object at a distance of 35 feet and obtain a projected picture 3 times actual size; what lens shall we use? Solution: Focal length = $\frac{35 \times 3}{16}$ = 6 9/16 inches.

All the above formulas may be condensed for convenience to the forms given below, in which

D = distance from object to camera in feet.

F = focal length of lens in inches.

R = ratio of projected size to actual size; for example:

Life size, R = 1; double size, R = 2; 1/2 size, R = 1/2, etc.

Then: $R = \frac{F \times 16}{D}$, $D = \frac{F \times 16}{R}$, and $F = \frac{R \times D}{16}$.

When the pictures are to be projected life size, then R becomes 1 in the above formulas and we have:

$D = F \times 16$; $F = \frac{D}{16}$.

As pointed out previously the last two formulas are particularly useful. A convenient way of remembering them is to bear in mind that the focal length of any lens multiplied by 16 gives the distance (in feet) at which an object photographed will be projected life size.

Note—In all the above formulas it is assumed that the picture when projected will be 16 feet wide.

Chicago News Letter

Major Funkhouser at Bay

The Censorship Hearings Before the Sub-committee of the Council's Judiciary Committee Are Favorable to Pictures and Indications Point to the Curbing of the Major's Arbitrary Rulings.

FURTHER hearings of the charge that Chicago is suffering from a one-man censorship board were held before a sub-committee of the Council's judiciary committee, Friday, Nov. 23, and Tuesday, Nov. 27. At the Tuesday meeting, Mrs. Juliette L. Stuart, one of the members of the censorship board, declared that she had been in bad standing for a long time with Major Funkhouser because she had insisted on her rights as a board member. Michael L. Igoe, formerly U. S. district attorney and now leader of the democratic side in the lower house of the state legislature at Springfield, was present as attorney for Mrs. Stuart and charged that the Major had tried to intimidate members of the censor board from revealing the actual conditions prevailing in the censorship bureau. Through Mrs. Stuart, Mr. Igoe showed that Major Funkhouser ruled arbitrarily in the matter of cut-outs.

In answer to a question put by Alderman Steffen, the Major replied, "I am the real official censor." On being further questioned by Mr. Steffen, he acknowledged that some of the members of the board did not understand that, but that some of them were beginning to understand.

In answer to a query made by the Rev. Frederick Seidenburg, of Loyola University, and secretary of the committee of the Catholic church on moving pictures, Alderman Steffen explained the object of his amendment to the ordinance on censorship.

"This amendment eliminates the present censor of moving pictures from the situation," he said. "It provides for a real board of ten. It aims at a solution which will be fair to all, and it is in no way an attack on Major Funkhouser."

A member of the judiciary committee, which will pass on the final report of the investigating sub-committee, said shortly after Friday's meeting:

"I'm sick and tired of the palavering which Funkhouser and his friends are seeking to inject into this matter. The modern film industry, to my mind, has grown to such proportions that no censorship at all is necessary, or desirable.

"Is it common sense to believe, as Funkhouser intimates, that the big men of this country who have millions invested in this growing industry seek to destroy themselves by basing their film productions on immorality and crime? Why, such an insinuation is nonsensical!

"Place the film industry on the same plane with other great businesses. President Wilson has done so by his praise of the splendid co-operation this industry has given in aiding our prosecution of the world war."

At Tuesday's meeting Major Funkhouser was accused of attempting to intimidate members of the board of censors who had been summoned before the investigating sub-committee. The charge was also made in the meeting that the so-called board of censors is an authoritative body in name only, providing that the major does not agree with its findings. It was also charged that unless the twelve members of the board of censors agreed unanimously on passing a film, the major sets their findings aside and exercises his one-man judgment.

Favoritism also was charged, and the names of two of the major's favorites were mentioned, these two women members, it was said, being vested with power to over-rule the decision of their seven associates.

The major once, during Tuesday's hearing, scoffed at the assertions of producers that they can be placed on honor to produce clean pictures, and asserted that they appeared to be keeping awake at nights in devising new plans to take advantage of the city.

The Chicago dailies are taking deep interest in the hearings before the sub-committee, and the consensus of opinion is strongly against the one-man censorship of Major Funkhouser. The Chicago News ran the following editorial in its issue of Nov. 27, under the head, "The Low Cost of Morality":

If the consumer of theatrical entertainment is willing to spend from $1 to $5 for the purpose he may run the risk of suffering injury to his morals by attending the vaudeville show, grand opera, or the admired legitimate drama, all unpurged by the official censors. If he belongs to the great democratic majority of 10-cent first-nighter and takes his drama in two dimensions his morals will be officially guarded, he will save money, and will get to bed—somewhat bored, perhaps, but officially with no loss of moral tone—at a respectable hour.

A laboriously applied official censorship goes with the cheap film dramas, whereas any iniquity, real or imaginary, that invades the higher priced entertainments is served without alteration to anybody who chooses to pay the price.

Meanwhile the censorship of motion picture films is not applied according to any established and well defined principles of art and good morals, but mainly in accordance with the personal whims of the official censors or of well meaning volunteers who are determined to save by their own special formulae the other fellow's morals from contamination no matter how he may squirm and resent it.

There is, of course, no concerted public appeal to the authorities to place vice within the reach of all, but there is a genuine popular movement in favor of wise revision of the censorship system that shall bring to it some intelligent perception of the demands of the new art and its limitations.

Any producer who presents in public an immoral film should be made to suffer for it under the law. A censorship which serves to give official sanction to films that otherwise might be condemned by wholesome public opinion is a peril rather than a protection. To disarm public opinion and put it out of commission by means of a clumsy official censorship is at best a doubtful aid to morality.

Following is an editorial published by the Examiner in one of its issues last week:

Of all American cities, Chicago should take the broadest and sanest view of the real position that film production holds today as a world factor in giving education, wholesome entertainment and amusement to the people.

Yet Chicago is the only large city in the United States or in the world that clings to a one-man censorship.

And this single official censor of films in Chicago is a policeman at that!

Practically all other American cities that have film censors at all have high class boards or commissions. Representatives of educational bodies are on these boards.

The idea that a police officer, whose special duties are to suppress gambling and open vice, should be also the sole censor of moving pictures is peculiar to Chicago alone. New York, also a large film-producing center, does not consider it necessary to maintain any form of censorship.

A police censorship of moving pictures takes the wrong ground to start with—that film producers are seeking to commercialize immorality whenever they get a chance.

The exact opposite is the case.

The only really effective censorship of moving pictures is by the producers themselves, for the very life of the business requires conformity to the moral sentiments of the people.

The moving picture business has left its crude beginnings behind. It has reached a plane where it no more required outside censorship than does the printing press, the stage or the art galleries.

All these great civilizing forces have demonstrated that they do not need tutelage by official censors, and the modern film industry will do the same.

The committee of public information at Washington, D. C., henceforth will have the rulings of Major Funkhouser in censorship matters under its particular scrutiny. Most likely before this matter appears in print, the committee will have examined certain film pictures which have been put under the ban by the head of the Chicago censor board. The "Rose of Blood," for which Major Funkhouser has refused a permit in Chicago, will be one of the pictures in question.

Patriotism at the Movies.

The Chicago Tribune sees the great influence of moving picture theaters in the spreading of patriotism and the stirring of the war spirit at the present time, as is shown in the following editorial paragraph in one of its issues last week, under the heading given this article:

The moving picture theaters are becoming community centers of patriotism. The producers are turning out films reflecting the American war spirit, and the majority of the theater owners have devoted a part of each program to pictures and slides calculated to arouse support of the Government. In addition the theaters have thrown open their doors to the four minute men, who are exercising a very great influence, especially in combating German propaganda. In communities largely made up of persons of foreign birth or extraction the work of the movie theaters and the four minute men has been of special value.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Sir A. Conan Doyle, author of the Sherlock Holmes stories, who was an interested spectator of Essanay's production of the "Sherlock Holmes" play, in which Wm. Gillette plays the title role, at the Alhambra theater, London, Eng., recently, wrote, in part, as follows to the firm interested in the distribution of the picture in Great Britain and Ireland:

"Before leaving London let me say how pleased I was with the Sherlock Holmes production. It is admirable, and will forever preserve Gillette's wonderful rendering of the part."

Richard C. Travers, the well-known and popular star in moving pictures, who was with Essanay for quite a time and who has been at the Fort Sheridan training camp for several months past, with the men of the second reserve corps for officers, has won a captaincy. While still a youth, Mr. Travers saw service with the British army in South Africa during the Boer War, and on one occasion narrated to me one of the narrow escapes he had as a sharp-shooter at that time. Mr. Travers had been lying full length for ten or fifteen minutes, behind a small hillock of sand, awaiting an opportunity to draw a bead on one of the enemy. By some strange influence his cramped position became so intolerable that he was obliged to move his head and one of his shoulders a little way in order to get relief, and in that fraction of a second of time a bullet plowed through the sand just where his head had been. Mr. Travers heard the shot and looking up discovered the body of a Boer sharp-shooter falling from a scrubby tree several hundred yards away. Some other British sharp-shooter had shot the Boer marksman just as he fired at Travers. Captain Travers was very popular in film circles in Chicago, and was a great favorite with moving picture fans, who were always delighted to see him on the screen. His numerous friends congratulate him on his newly conferred honor and wish him a glorious career in France and a safe return to God's country.

Louis A. Boening, another well-known figure in film circles in Chicago, has also been honored with the commission of captain in the same training corps. Captain Boening served in the Spanish War as a volunteer and was mustered out as captain. He is president of the United States Cinematograph Co., this city, and he has filled several other prominent positions in the industry during the past ten years. The best wishes of a large following of friends will follow him to the front where, it is hoped, he will distinguish himself with honor and live to reap the results long afterwards.

The license committee of the Chicago city council at a recent meeting, at which representatives of Chicago exchanges were present, finally agreed to raise the license for exchanges from $25 to $100. The committee made a concession in this instance, as it was the original intention to raise the license to $200 for each exchange.

"The Flame of the Yukon," a Triangle feature, with Dorothy Dalton in the leading role, was given a private presentation at the Ziegfeld theater, Monday morning, Nov. 26, which was attended by several hundred invited guests. Major Funkhouser had previously refused to permit its presentation in Chicago and the opinion of prominent and well-known picture theater goers was sought before taking the case to court. The opinions of those who attended the presentation at the Ziegfeld were decidedly against Major Funkhouser's ruling.

Irving A. Mack and Miss Belle Harris were united in marriage at the bride's home, this city, Tuesday evening, Nov. 27. Mr. Mack has charge of publicity, in Chicago, of the Universal Film Co. The happy pair departed for a brief honeymoon trip after the ceremony.

"Bab's Matinee Idol" (Paramount), with Marguerite Clark in the leading role, will begin a week's run at the Ziegfeld theater, Sunday, Dec. 2.

Julius F. Smietanka, collector of internal revenue, Chicago, gave out last week under advisement that the government may print theater tickets for use in this city as a protection to the public against the raising of prices by moving picture and dramatic houses. The method to be used, in case the plan is enforced, will be to print the regular ticket, with the war tax coupon attached.

Manager M. J. Weil, of the Castle theater, State St., celebrated the second anniversary of that house last week. The chief attraction was "The Hungry Heart," in which Pauline Fredericks is star. This house charges an admission of twenty cents with war tax added and is showing to a fine business.

Invitations for the ninth annual ball, given by the Moving Picture Operators of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., have been sent out. The ball will be held in the Coliseum, Wednesday evening, Dec. 5, and the receipts, after expenses have been deducted, will be devoted to a fund for the assistance of the families of enlisted members. About eighty of the boys are now at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill.

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, made a short stop-over here Saturday, Nov. 24, on his way from Los Angeles to New York. While here he gave out that Marshall Neilan is now at work directing Mary Pickford in her new photoplay, "Amarilly of the Clothes Line." Director Neilan has still six months left before he will proceed to a cantonment camp, under draft.

The license committee of the city council, Chicago, agreed upon the following increase in the license for moving picture operators in this city: the original license fee has been raised from $3 to $50 and the license renewal has been raised from $2 to $5 per year. It was also ruled that instead of the apprentice paying a fee of $1 for a life time, he will be obliged to pay $1 per year hereafter. It was also ruled that an apprentice must serve five years before taking charge as a licensed operator in a picture theater.

Miss Catherine C. Melcher, who is preparing the list of non-taxable music for Chicago local, branch No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A., has requested me to state in this issue that the firm of Jerome H. Remick & Co. has resigned from the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, so that theater owners can henceforth play all Remick numbers without any further fear of a libel suit. A complete list of Remick numbers will appear in a forthcoming issue of the Moving Picture World.

Universal Consolidates Its Chicago Interests

Laemmle Film Service Taken Over and All Subsidiary Exchanges Now Under One Roof.

ARRANGEMENTS have been consummated whereby Universal's Chicago interests will hereafter be operated from one exchange located in the Consumer's Building, at No. 220 South State street, where Bluebird headquarters have heretofore been situated. The Laemmle Film Service of Chicago has been taken over by Universal and the three distributing plants have been assembled for separate and distinct operation at one address.

By this move the distribution of all Universal products will be expedited, making it more convenient for exhibitors to transact their business in Chicago and centering Universal's interests with a view to greater efficiency in every particular. An important consideration of advantage to exhibitors will result from the fact that showmen may now arrange for every class of pictures on the market without leaving Universal's premises—everything from State right features to comedies, news weeklies or program pictures being available under one roof.

There has been a rearrangement of the management of Universal's Chicago interests brought about by the consolidation of the Laemmle Service, Universal, Butterfly and Jewel interests. I. L. Leserman will be in charge of Universal releases, C. R. Plough will handle Bluebirds and I. Van Ronkel will look after the Jewel State right features. The new order of affairs went into effect Nov. 26.

RICHARD STERLING TO DIRECT ATLAS.

Richard Sterling, formerly of the Eclair, is directing the Atlas' series of Modern Peck's Bad Boy. Harrie Orvis will, with little Dorothy Benham, support Master Leland Benham. The pictures are being made at the company's studio in Newton, Mass.

GEORGE BERTHOLON PROMOTED.

George C. Bertholon, who since the formation of Goldwyn Pictures has been an assistant director at the Fort Lee studio, has been made assistant to Aubrey M. Kennedy, director of productions.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Horkheimer Would Aid Red Cross

Suggests That Spare Time of Women Employes Be Utilized in Knitting Garments and Making Surgical Bandages.

H. M. HORKHEIMER, president of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, through the co-operation of the Red Cross Chapters of Southern California, has launched a project which will result in the making of thousands of garments for our soldiers and in the conserving of hours now lost in the motion picture industry through delays peculiar to the manufacture of photoplays.

Through the Horkheimer plan, which has been indorsed by various Red Cross chapters, every odd moment of the picture players will be directed into some channel useful to the Red Cross. Already a committee of leading producers has been organized, and through the co-operation of this committee it is hoped a Red Cross auxiliary will be established at every studio.

"It is our aim," said Mr. Horkheimer, "to commandeer the spare time of every motion picture player. For instance, an actress who is waiting for her scene can be knitting a sweater for a soldier; members of a company that is forced to wait for proper sunlight can be working on wristlets, socks or mufflers to fill the Red Cross garment quota. All money for the purchase of needed materials will be donated. The Balboa studio is contributing $500 toward this fund, and undoubtedly every other studio in the industry will raise a like amount. I anticipate that at least $25,000 will be gathered in this drive, and that thousands of garments will result; in fact, it is my belief that the entire quota of 100,000 garments required from Southern California in the present national Red Cross drive will be furnished by the picture people."

Those appointed on the producers' committee by Mr. Horkheimer are H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle studios at Culver City; Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Henry McRae, general manager of Universal; D. W. Griffith, Mrs. Cecil B. De Mille and Charles Van Loan, famous writer of motion picture fiction.

Of those who have indorsed the Horkheimer plan, Mrs. William A. Edwards, chairman of the board of directors of Los Angeles Red Cross Chapter, and Mrs. Hancock Banning, member of the board and one of America's richest women, were most enthusiastic in their praise.

Camouflage Artists Leave for Training.

The greatest camouflage company in the world, according to Major George P. Robinson, United States engineers' corps, left Los Angeles November 24, for an eastern training camp. There were sixty-five men in the party, headed by Lee Lawson of the Universal. The personnel was recruited almost exclusively from the leading motion picture studios of Los Angeles.

"Nowhere else in the world could a company of men of similar qualifications have been recruited," said Major Robinson. "The best scenic artists and men of kindred trades in the motion picture industry are here."

Just before the train pulled out of the station Lee Dawson made a short speech to the crowd. "Friends, we're going over there to fool the Kaiser, and if Yankee genius counts for anything we'll be there with the goods," he said.

The leave taking was different from any farewells given any party of soldiers leaving Los Angeles heretofore. Sixty-five young men, all of them known personally to the five hundred or more persons who bade them goodbye, caused everybody to cry goodbye to everybody else. It was a scene not easily forgotten.

At the American Studios.

President Samuel S. Hutchison of the American Film Company arrived at the studios in Santa Barbara, November 20, on a hurried inspection tour. Mr. Hutchinson's present mission is in the furtherance of improvements started in every department of the studio. The technical end of the business will be given particular attention.

Director Edward Sloman has completed "In Bad," featuring William Russell. Mr. Russell will soon start work on the final of his present series of six pictures, entitled "Polo Jack," another Charles Turner Dazey story.

Ruth Stonehouse to Have Own Company.

Ruth Stonehouse, Universal Bluebird star, and more recently with Triangle, has signed a long-term contract to be featured in big productions. H. Berg, owner of the Overland Film Company, while in Los Angeles, made Miss Stonehouse an offer which, on November 21, was signed by her.

Ruth Stonehouse.

The contract provides for the producing of six feature dramas during the year. Mr. Berg was interested to a great extent in the producing of "Who's Your Neighbor," "Today" and many other screen successes.

Miss Stonehouse will leave November 25 for an extensive tour of the larger cities of this country, appearing in person at theaters and meeting exhibitors and exchangemen. Three months will be given to the tour from here to New York City, when Miss Stonehouse will return to commence work on the first production, to be made at the Bernstein studios.

The first vehicle selected for the star is "The Wolf Breed."

Periolat to Go on Tour.

George E. Periolat, the well-known American character actor, will make an extended tour through the Middle West and the East, starting December 10. Mr. Periolat will combine business and pleasure, for he will appear in motion picture theaters in every city and town he visits, spending most of his time in Chicago, his home, where his father, C. F. Periolat, now eighty-two years of age, still resides.

When "The Mate of the Sally Ann," starring Mary Miles Minter, in which Mr. Periolat plays the part of Captain Ward, a slightly demented old sea pilot, is released in Chicago the actor will appear in many theaters where the production is shown.

Upon his return trip Periolat will visit Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver and Salt Lake City. The trip will take more than two months.

Comedians Subscribe to Comforts Fund.

Ample proof that comedians can be serious when occasion demands was demonstrated at the Triangle-Keystone studios when every employee was called upon to donate to the Y. M. C. A. fund. Thirty-five million dollars is being raised to provide comforts for the boys in the trenches. Every studio in and around Los Angeles was visited, and a cheer went up when, upon counting the pledges, it was found that the Keystone studios had outdistanced the Culver City studios by over $50. Later on it was learned that the Keystone donation was the largest individual subscription in Los Angeles barring one large corporation. Frederick Bennett of the scenario staff started the fund with $100.

At the Diando Studios.

With two companies actively engaged in the production of five-reel features for the Pathe program, the studios of the Diando Film Corporation in Glendale are busy. Under the direction of William Bertram, the child star Baby Marie Osborne is working on "Any Home," the third story in the new studios. It is from the pen of John W. Grew and M. Ramirez Torres, and affords Baby Marie the opportunity of displaying her wonderful childish charms that have so endeared her to the hearts of motion picture playgoers.

Baby Marie Osborne.

The supporting cast includes Herbert Standing, Lou Cody, Marian Warner, Katherine McDonald, Harry Van Meter, and J. H. McDowell.

Bryant Washburn will have completed his first story within a few days. The title is "Kidder and Ko."

Richard Foster Baker, who was associated with Washburn in the east, is directing the story. The action is among the "down-east" fisher folk. Supporting Mr. Washburn in the leading feminine role is Gertrude Selby.

Every male employee of the Diando studios in Glendale had to pay admittance to the studio since a recent morning. The charge is one cigarette and the collector is Baby Marie Osborne. Recently Marie saw a container for cigarettes in the lobby of one of the Los Angeles theaters. Making inquiries regarding it her father told her it was for cigarettes to be sent the soldiers in France. Marie conceived the plan of collecting from the studio boys and since has made them come across every morning. She plans to ship once a week and already has quite a large stock on hand.

Diando is a coined word. W. A. S. Douglas is president of the company, while L. T. Osborne, the baby's father, is vice-president. So take the capital "D" for Douglas, with the I and "and" in the middle, and O for Osborne on the end and you have it.

Ray Griffith Returns from Camp.

Ray Griffith, Triangle-Keystone comedian, has returned from the training camp at American Lake, and is again with the comedy forces. Griffith was given a permanent discharge from the service on account of his voice. For several years the Triangle-Keystone comedian has been unable to speak above a hoarse whisper, and the army examining board decided this would impair his efficiency as a soldier.

And What Became of the Smile?

Anita King, the Balboa star, received a wire from the proprietor of the Starland Theater in her home town of Michigan City, Ind., saying he was going to show one of her first pictures under the new release and that he wanted something she had worn in the making of the picture, as he intended to auction it off at the theater for the benefit of the Red Cross. He assured the popular star the whole town would turn out to a man to see her picture.

Miss King immediately sent a beautiful string of beads and a pair of moccasins she had worn, and as it was her own home town she wired a local florist to supply the theater with sufficient carnations to present one to each patron.

McGowan Finishing Up "Lost Express."

At the Signal studios Director J. P. McGowan has finished the fourteenth episode of "The Lost Express," the Signal-Mutual serial, featuring Miss Helen Holmes. Episode 15 has been named "The Return of the Lost Express," the last installment of this serial.

When the last scene is made it will mark the closing of Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan with the Signal Film Corporation, after over two years of continuous service in the making of railroad thrills. Immediately following the making of the final episode Miss Holmes and Mr. McGowan will leave for a three or four weeks visit to New York. It is rumored in the trade that Director McGowan has signed up with the Pathe Company to produce serials.

Polo and Pony Take a Steep Ride.

A spectacular accident in which Eddie Polo, the Universal serial star, and the horse he was riding miraculously escaped death occurred recently. Director James W. Horne and his company at the time were staging the new serial, "The Bull's Eye."

When the brink of a cliff accidentally crumbled and gave way, horse and rider plunged sixty feet down the declivity. Polo dug himself out of the avalanche of loose earth that had followed him and began an inspection to discover the numerous minor dent and scratches he had received.

Satisfied no bones were broken the horse was extricated from the small mountain of earth, and also was found to be undamaged to any extent.

Miss Allen Adds to Her Medals.

Aileen Allen, Triangle-Keystone's diving champion, added another medal to her collection recently at Ocean Park, when she again demonstrated her right to the Pacific Coast championship by scoring ninety-three points out of a possible hundred, eclipsing her former record. Miss Allen now holds forty-seven medals for high and fancy diving and has won more championships this year than any man or woman has previously in the same length of time.

Balboa Gives Dance for Arbuckle.

Balboa's new glassed-in studio, which is now nearing completion, was initiated on the night of November 28 with a big dance for which invitations had been sent to a thousand of the foremost people in filmdom. The affair was given by the Messrs. Horkheimer in honor of Roscoe Arbuckle, now making pictures in Long Branch.

The structure is one of the largest under cover, its dimensions being 100 by 200 feet, without a post or obstruction. The floor is of the finest quality and especially suited for dancing. Special lighting effects were provided and music without end. A symphony orchestra played for the dancers, while the Balboa jazz band furnished numbers in between.

The refreshments conformed to the Hoover program for war economy. Arrangements were made to take the Los Angeles guests back to the city in a special train, after the dance.

Flare Explodes Ahead of Time.

Trapped at the bottom of a mine shaft where they were filming scenes for "The Love Claim," Director Elmer Clifton and his company of players, headed by Herbert Rawlinson and Sally Starr, put in one of the most trying hours of their existence when a "four-minute flare" exploded.

This particular flare, instead of burning as a good, respectable flare should have burned, decided to do it quickly and have it over with. The whole thing went off at once, filling the passage with suffocating and poisonous gases. Fortunately the immense volume of gas produced was lighter than air, and by lying flat on the mine floor the players were able to avoid suffocation while lighted candles at a higher level burned weakly or went out altogether.

It was fully an hour before the passage had cleared sufficiently so that the players could resume their work.

Waddell Flying in Europe.

Joseph Waddell, for several years cameraman at Universal City, is now with an American aviation corps in Europe. Fred Le Roy Granville, of the Universal camera force, received a letter a few days ago from Waddell, in which the cameraman described his experiences.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

The Triangle-Keystone studios raised nearly one hundred dollars for the tobacco fund for American soldiers in France, and Employment Manager Ben Singer spent nearly a day selecting the purchases. The shipment, which required twenty specially built cases, was packed this week by the Triangle-Keystone girls and is already on its way to France. Photos of the Triangle-Keystone girls preparing the cases for shipment were taken and several prints packed in each box sent to France.

Ferris Hartman and Harry Wulze are the latest additions to the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff. Mr. Hartman was formerly a Triangle-Keystone director and just recently completed a five-reel comedy drama at the Triangle Culver City studios. When producing comedies Mr. Hartman wrote practically all of his own stories. Mr. Wulze also was formerly with the Keystone organization and before again signing with the comedy forces had been free-lancing. The present writing staff of the Triangle-Keystone studios is considered one of the strongest in the comedy field. Eleven writers are now regularly employed.

Work on the picture "Any Home" featuring Baby Marie Osborne, the tiny Pathe star, was held up for several hours one day this week, when her father, L. T. Osborne, in appreciation of the work done by Baby in her last picture, "Very Young Love," presented her with a beautiful Shetland pony and cart. Baby Marie was so delighted with the outfit that all the combined efforts of father, director and nurse could not get her to resume work until she had a drive.

Gold has been reported again in the Santa Monica mountains. This time the strike is reported from Hartville, the motion picture studio.

While staging a battle scene small dynamite bombs which were exploded to throw up the earth brought to light small particles of the ore. The motion picture employes have started digging.

Periodically gold in small quantities has been found in these mountains and on a number of occasions prospectors have flocked there. This was particularly true four years ago, when hunters bagged a number of quail and in the stomachs of all of them were found small particles of gold. Carbon canyon, where the quail had been shot, was dug over, but no gold was found.

Keystone Director Reggie Morris is making final scenes for "Dancers and Dimples," his first comedy featuring Harry Gribbon.

With one of the largest cafe sets ever erected in the Keystone studios, Director Charles Avery "shot" one of the greatest rough and tumble fights ever used in motion pictures for his current comedy, "Courts and Cabarets." Every chair, table and dish in the set was a "breakaway" and when the scene was taken it was found that some one had made the wrong entrance and the entire scene had to be done over again. The cast includes Max Asher, Marianna de la Torre, Myrtle Reeves, Arthur Moon, Baldy Belmont, Peggy Pearce, Milburn Morante and Eddie Gribbon.

Blanche Payson, Triangle-Keystone's tallest leading woman, is in a serious condition at a Los Angeles hospital as a result of injuries sustained by slipping on the tiled entrance of a Los Angeles jewelry store. It is indeed a strange turn of fate that has saved Miss Payson from countless hazardous feats in film comedy only to seriously injure her while on a leisurely shopping tour.

Melbourne MacDowell, well known screen actor lately with Triangle, has been signed by Thomas H. Ince. Mr. MacDowell will be in the company supporting Dorothy Dalton and under direction of R. William Neill.

Howard Hall has been engaged to play the leading role opposite Emily Stevens in the forthcoming Metro production, "Alias Mrs. Jessup," adapted from the story of Blair Hall and directed by William S. Davis.

J. A. Quinn recently gave a preview of "Who's Your Neighbor?" to an invited audience, at which Mayor Woodman, City Prosecutor N. W. Widney, the city council, Dr. Barton of the federal government and Dr. Lulu Peters of the city health department were present. The council in its statement said the picture could not offend public morals and that it could go on the screen without trouble. However, the body seems to be the only one which regards the picture as fit to be shown, the other officials solidly lining up against it. Mr. Quinn has therefore taken off the picture until the controversy can be settled amicably and has substituted in its place Monroe Salisbury in "The Savage."

John Collins, Director of Metro's "Blue Jeans," a Man with Wisdom

METRO Pictures Corporation is congratulating itself on the excellence of its forthcoming special production, "Blue Jeans," a screen version of Joseph Arthur's famous old melodrama, starring Viola Dana. The star herself deserves unlimited credit in connection with the production, and another factor of supreme importance has been the direction. John H. Collins, in this seven-act de luxe production, has justified those who have contended that he is one of the foremost motion picture directors of America today.

When the script of "Blue Jeans," adapted by June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor from Joseph Arthur's old play, was given into the hands of John Collins, the young director was besieged by people who had played in "Blue Jeans" at different times in their lives, and by their relatives and friends, who thought they knew how it ought to be played, who wanted parts in the screen production. But the director said, to every one's amazement:

"I want no one who has ever played in the stage production. If possible, I would rather have people who have never seen the play at all." The reason for Mr. Collins' decision was soon evident. Twenty odd years ago, when "Blue Jeans" was first introduced to an admiring audience, public taste was a different thing from what it is now. Incidents that seemed thrilling then no longer ring true. Collins was putting on a picture for audiences of today, not for an audience of twenty odd years ago.

Accordingly, Metro's "Blue Jeans" possesses all the original charm and thrill, combined with a story, every detail of which can be believed. The "Blue Jeans" of today is a masterpiece of today.

John Hancock Collins was born in New York, and educated in the New York public schools. He first heard the elevated trains rattle by in 1890. Motion pictures early engaged the young man's attention, his first work being for Edison. Acting did not interest him, but the directing end of the business did. He first became associated with his present star at the Edison studio, and when Miss Dana signed her big contract with Metro Pictures Corporation Richard A. Rowland deemed it the part of wisdom to take both star and director, with a few of her supporting players thrown in for good measure. Two of these—Robert Walker and Augustus Phillips—are in the cast of "Blue Jeans."

"Bob" Walker, who plays Perry Bascom, by the way, is a nephew of Robert Hilliard, who played Perry Bascom in the original company at the old Fourteenth Street Theater, when Mabel Taliaferro played the baby in the cast and Jennie Yeamans played June. "Bob's" clothes are exact copies of those worn by his uncle in the original production, including the bicycle clothes, that were considered quite the correct thing at that time. But the acting is the acting of today, and the "Blue Jeans" of today is a play that will grip the hearts and sympathies of every one of its spectators. And that fact is due not only to its adorable star, Viola Dana, but also to its serious young director, John Collins, the man with vision; the man who is not afraid of being sincere.

COLFAX NOW A MAJOR.

The appointment of Schuyler Colfax, of Rochester, as a major on the staff of Adjutant General Sherrill and inspector of small arms practice, New York State Guard, has been announced at Albany, N. Y., state militia headquarters. Major Colfax is well known in the motion picture trade as manager of the Cinema Department of the Eastman Kodak Co. of Rochester.

Artcraft Producing "The Bluebird"

Maurice Tourneur Directing Adaptation of Maeterlinck's Famous Stage Success.

A STATEMENT from Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, announces the production of a pretentious screen version of Maurice Maeterlinck's famous stage success, "The Bluebird." Work on this new cinema spectacle has been going on at the Fort Lee studio for the past three weeks under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who, upon completing Elsie Ferguson's last picture, "The Rose of the World," was selected to stage Maeterlinck's play of international fame.

"Considered the world over as a literary and dramatic masterpiece," says Mr. Greene, "this famous subject proved one of the greatest achievements of the celebrated Belgian poet and dramatic author. The fantastic play pleased young and old alike in this country, as well as abroad. In London it originally opened at the Boudoir Theater in December, 1909, where it created a sensation and attracted devotees of the true dramatic art and further enhanced the fame of Maeterlinck. Proclaimed a wondrous production of great scenic magnitude, this play was presented in ten scenes and took four hours to portray. With its American appearance in New York, at the New Theater, a playhouse erected to present the world's most renowned dramatic offerings, the production was revived with two additional scenes in February, 1911. Its success here is now a matter of theatrical history.

"To stage the elaborate screen adaptation, which closely follows the play, Artcraft selected Maurice Tourneur, the accomplished producer of various artistic screen triumphs. The important task of preparing the scenario for this gigantic film was intrusted to Charles Maigne.

"In the screen presentation of Maurice Maeterlinck's world famous classic Artcraft has achieved another triumph in keeping with its high standards and policies. It is entirely fitting that this masterpiece of the drama should be presented by Artcraft Pictures, whose trademark is synonymous with the acme of motion-picture perfection.

"Although of unusual magnitude, the picture will be handled through our usual distributing system, which means that the exhibitor will be given the opportunity to present it in his theater. Neither time nor expense is being spared to make this the film achievement of the year, and for this reason a definite release date cannot be named at this time."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 2 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Tom Sawyer" at the Strand.

MARK TWAIN'S famous story, "Tom Sawyer," with Jack Pickford in the title role, was seen as a motion picture at the Strand Theater the week of December 2. The production was filmed in Hannibal, Missouri, the scene of Mark Twain's boyhood. In screening "Tom Sawyer" none of the familiar details has been left out. It is all there from the start, where Tom "licks" the sissy-boy and steals the jam, to the finish, where he and Huck Finn run away together and return only in time to attend their own funeral services. It is a Paramount picture, produced by Jesse L. Lasky. Victor Moore, in his latest comedy, entitled "Toothache and Heartache," a scenic study in natural colors, and the Strand Topical Review completed the picture part of the program.

Mery Zentay and Herbert Waterous were the soloists.

"Until They Get Me" at the Rialto.

"Until They Get Me," a new Triangle production, which tells a singularly human and dramatic story of the Northwest Mounted Police, was the principal feature of the program at the Rialto. Pauline Stark enacted the principal role. Kenneth B. Clark, the author, and Frank Borzage, the director, have combined their efforts in turning out a consistently good photodrama.

"Fishing for Fish," a new comedy, and the Rialto Animated Magazine were also shown.

The soloists were Mlle. Madeline l'Espinoy and Sascha Fidelman.

"Bucking Broadway" and "My Little Boy."

"Bucking Broadway" and "My Little Boy" are the titles of the two five-part photoplays that were offered at the Broadway Theater.

The former, a typical western drama, showing the thrills of the cowpunchers' life on the ranch, is a Butterfly production, featuring Molly Malone and Harry Carey. The latter is a Bluebird picture, and a skillful combination of Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" and Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue," by Elliott J. Clawson, featuring Ella Hall and little Zoe Rae. Both features were included in each performance, as well as the latest weekly events, scenic and educational pictures and a comedy.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater the following pictures were shown:

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday—Taylor Holmes in "The Small Town Guy." Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday—Florence Reed in "Today."

New Producing Company

HERBERT LUBIN, one of the prime movers in the affairs of General Enterprises, Inc., and the man who negotiated the contract between Madame Petrova and Super-Pictures, Inc., announced this week the consummation of a deal only secondary in importance to the one involving the famous Polish star. By means of a contract signed by both parties this week, William Christy Cabanne and Mr. Lubin have become associated in a film enterprise of considerable magnitude.

Mr. Cabanne was formerly one of the leading Metro directors, and is responsible for two of the great film successes of the current year—namely, "The Slacker" and "Draft 258." He is the author of both these pictures, which have recently been presented to the public through the Metro exchanges. Through the contractual arrangement completed between Messrs. Cabanne and Lubin a series of pictures bearing the title of Cabanne Super-Productions will be released during the forthcoming year. The General Enterprises, Inc., executive has not yet decided upon the channel of distribution through which the new Cabanne productions will be presented, but stated, when questioned upon this point, that he had "another pleasant surprise in store for the exhibitors throughout the country."

Mr. Lubin has been an active factor in the recent sales campaign covering "The Warrior," and prior to his advent in New York film circles was the holder of the Metro franchise for the Dominion of Canada. He is considered one of the ablest executives of the picture industry, and further announcements relative to the Cabanne contracts are awaited by the trade in general.

EDNA PURVIANCE IN NEW YORK.

Miss Edna Purviance, Charlie Chaplin's attractive leading woman, who has co-operated with him in the manufacture of laughs in his recent pictures, is visiting New York for the first time. Miss Purviance, who is a western girl, found a trip to the "Big Town" necessary in order to secure an extensive wardrobe for use in her forthcoming pictures with the renowned Charlie in his own company.

She arrived unheralded, but her presence soon became known, and she has lacked a minute to call her own since leaving the train. In addition to purchasing her wardrobe, being interviewed and photographed, she has been entertained and feted by many of the prominent theatrical folk in New York.

In speaking of Mr. Chaplin's new pictures, which will be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Miss Purviance declared that his best work was yet to come and that some of his new ideas for laughs—good, hearty laughs—in his new productions were nothing short of wonderful.

RIALTO TO RUN "UNTIL THEY GET ME."

Of great interest is the announcement that the Rialto Theater will run the Triangle feature, "Until They Get Me," for the week beginning December 2nd. Following a private showing of the film in the Rialto projection room, at which time Manager S. L. Rothapfel termed it "A splendid picture," it was decided to book the feature. Inasmuch as Triangle pictures have not appeared on the Rialto program for some time, the decision to run this picture is considered an important recognition of the new Triangle standard. "Until They Get Me" is a play of the northern country, showing the work of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and has Pauline Starke in the leading role.

"The Raggedy Queen"

Five-Reel Bluebird Offering Features Violet Mersereau in Entertaining and Congenial Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN THE character of "Tatters" Violet Mersereau has a child part which fits her ingenuous temperament very nicely. She portrays the little walf of the mining camp who had been led to believe herself of royal birth, and conducts herself accordingly with skillful ease.

The story begins like a fairy tale and the observer fully expects the course of events to prove that "Tatters" really is the daughter of a queen. This does not prove to be the case, but she turns out to be the child of an actress who appeared in royal roles upon the stage. So that if the denouement is not what was expected, it is in fact something equally pleasing and serves the end of justice in a convincing way.

The child has been reared since infancy by Anne Martin, former maid to the actress mother. "Crazy Anne," as she is called, has a very confused recollection of her previous life and really believes the child's mother was a queen. This has led her to instill the idea into the mind of "Tatters" so assiduously that the girl accepts it as gospel.

The facts in the case are brought out by the visit of David Grant and Hugh Tillson to the mining camp. There is a strike on and these men come to plead with their employees. A laborer named Braxton commits all of the villainy of the piece, which is sufficient to keep the plot moving at an agreeable pace. The fall of the office building over the cliff and the narrow escape of the men is well staged. "Tatters" saves Grant from drowning and nurses him back to health. She nearly loses her own life in trying to prevent the fall of the office building, and it is while she lingers between life and death that Tillson discovers she is his long-lost child. The final scenes are worked out with considerable pathos.

The story as a whole is not powerful in any way but makes an enjoyable number of a lighter type. The scenes are laid in a picturesque mining region. Others in the cast are Frank Otto, James O'Neill, Charles Slattery, Robert F. Hill, Donald Hall and Grace Barton. Nell B. Bronson is the author of the story, which was adapted by John C. Brownell and directed by Theodore Marston.

"THE SILENT MAN."

Artcraft Presents William S. Hart in An Intense Melodrama of the Border by Charles Kenyon.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE SILENT MAN" casts its emphasis on a highly sensational incident in the life of an adventurous gold-seeker on the desert, but William S. Hart lifts it to a higher plane at times by his intelligent characterization. The story is that of what might be expected to happen to a rough miner who has struck it rich and starts in to celebrate at a dance hall swarming with gamblers and crooks of all kinds, lying in wait for just such foolish victims. He is led to drink and to gamble by the dance-hall proprietor, his claim is jumped and his years of weary work are dissipated in one evening. He turns road agent to recover the first consignment of gold taken from his claim and, in this way, becomes the accidental savior of a young girl the dance-hall proprietor has married bigamously in order to make her an inmate of his place. The Silent Man carries her away to a retreat in the mountains, where an old minister and his wife are trying to build up a church community and leaves her there while he continues his life of adventure. He returns at intervals, learns to love her, and wins her affections, but a reward has been posted for his capture, dead or alive, and both their lives are in imminent danger.

The pangs and perils of hero and heroine are many from that time on, but we feel a sense of comfortable assurance that all will turn out well in the end, that innocence will be rewarded and the guilty punished. The sensational events, however, follow each other thick and fast. We are drawn into an irresponsible train of circumstances, replete with adventure for its own sake. But the story is admirably told, and Hart enacts his role with a manly dignity which has made him popular in these border roles. The story was enjoyed by a crowded house at the Rialto, packed to the doors, with a long line at the box office, and it was applauded at the conclusion in evidence that it suited the crowd. Hart's own interpretation is an improvement on anything he has done, more finished in style, and his support is without flaw, the best impersonations being those of "Betty Boyce" by Vola Vale, "Handsome Jack" by Robert McKim, "Preachin' Bill" by Geo. P. Nichols and "Grubstake Higgins" by J. P. Lockney. The release is bound to win with the crowd wherever shown.

"The Good for Nothing"

Carlyle Blackwell, Muriel Ostriche and Evelyn Greeley in Five-Part World Photoplay

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CONTRARY to most of the Prodigal Son stories the World five-part photoplay, "The Good for Nothing," does not commence with the young man hitting the high-priced spots on Broadway and spending money at a record breaking rate. The story furnished by A. Alexander Thomas shows the hero at the start enjoying the husks connected with a seven-dollar-a-week job as clerk in a country store. The familiar career on Main street, Manhattan, is left to the imagination of the spectator, but, after making it clear that the boy has experienced enough of the rough side of life to teach him the error of his ways, he is brought back to his home town and given a chance to make good. This does not prove such an easy task. His mother is shocked by his free and easy Western manners, and is not at all pleased to introduce him to a new father and a half-brother and a half-sister.

The half-sister turns out to be all right, and the boy marries her at the proper time, but the new brother is busy sowing an extensive crop of wild oats on his own account, and manages to mix up the ex-prodigal in a robbery. The half-brother also behaves badly to the little stenographer in his father's office, and engages himself to another girl, but the man who has been through the mill straightens out both affairs, and the typewriter becomes one of the family.

The story is not particularly strong on plot, but contains a number of amusing incidents, and the scenes in society and those in a small town are well contrasted. Carlyle Blackwell as Jack Burshaw fits the part to his own personality, which is adapted to the role. Evelyn Greeley and Muriel Ostriche, co-stars with Carlyle Blackwell, are satisfactory as the half-sister and the stenographer, respectively.

"Fighting Mad"

Five-Reel Butterfly Number Harks Back to the Days of '49—Pictures Rough Life of the Early West.

Reviewed by Robert E. McElravy.

THIS five-reel production, written by J. G. Alexander and Fred Myton, and produced by E. J. LeSaint, is particularly good in its faithful reproduction of the atmosphere and character types of the days of '49. Certain of the characters are very well drawn, notably the preacher hero, who comes with his wife to fight the devil in a mining camp, the gentleman gambler, his friend of the dance hall, and other minor portrayals.

The plot itself moves in a rambling and enjoyable way, devoid of any particular suspense, but containing numerous episodes of a dramatic sort. The tale begins with the appearance of the preacher and his bride at the camp of Arapahoe Flats.

Scene from "Fighting Mad" (Butterfly).

"Doc" Lambert, as the divine is called, takes a small cabin. The gambler, "Clean-up" Carter, is shot in a row over the card table and taken to the minister's cabin. Here he recovers his strength and entices Lambert's wife to leave her home.

The wife is about to become a mother and such is her general depression that she agrees to leave the mining camp. Later she returns, after being deserted by the gambler, and falls on the roadside. She is taken into a cabin by Faro Fanny, the gambler's dance-hall friend, and dies after the birth of her child. "Doc" Lambert comes to the cabin after his wife's death and is so angered by the turn of events that he almost loses his reason. He leaves the child on a doorstep and begins wandering about the country, hating and despising everything but the cur dog that goes with him.

Years later Lambert, now a confirmed drunkard, returns to his camp. A young girl named Lily befriends the dog when it is injured and wins Lambert's confidence. "Clean-up" Carter and his friend reappear and the former takes a fancy to Lily. The girl is saved from him and Lambert, after recognizing West, shoots and kills him. Lambert experiences a return to his former self-respect and also discovers Lily is his daughter.

The picture as a whole makes a feature of about average strength. William Stowell plays the part of Lambert, Helen Gibson the wife, Betty Schade is Faro Fanny and Hector Dion the gambler.

"THE TENDERFOOT."

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Five-Part Feature from Western Story by Alfred Henry Lewis.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WITH Alfred Henry Lewis to furnish the story and William Duncan to direct the scenario and play the leading character, "The Tenderfoot," a Vitagraph Five-Part Blue Ribbon Feature, is like a man who points to his family tree as an indication of worth. The time of the picture is in the early '80s, before the women of this land had dared to hint to themselves that they would one day wear skirts that come only to their boottops or cherished such an immodest idea as beholding one of their sex riding astride. The costumes of the women in the cast are consequently quite amusing, especially when worn in a western settlement and offering, as they do, such a marked contrast to the wardrobe of the modern cowgirl. All these details of production have been well arranged by the director, and the queer assortment of types to be found in a Lewis story are adequately portrayed.

"The Tenderfoot," as the name implies, is a gent from the east whose arrival in Wolfville is a source of great mirth to the inhabitants of that free and easy burg. The object of this hilarity has come west to live down the pain in his heart caused by the cruel treatment of a maiden born in the shadow of Bunker Hill. "The Tenderfoot" doesn't amount to much until his ladylove reaches Wolfville and cold shoulders him again. He then fills up on firewater, whips the toughest man in town and becomes a regular feller. The eastern maiden tries her smiles on an Indian brave and finds that the redskin claims that her actions have made her his squaw.

The man with the pain in his heart saves her from an awkward position by fighting and killing the Indian and driving off his companions. But with his change of character has come wisdom and he does not marry the lady from the east. A no-nonsense take-a-good-man-when-you-can-get-him western girl turns the trick.

William Duncan in his dual role of director and actor displays his usual efficiency, and Carol Holloway is capital as Cynthia. The remaining parts are well played by Florence Dye, Joe Ryan, Walter L. Rodgers, Charles Wheelock, Hattie Duskirk and Fred Forrester.

"Gift o' Gab"

Jack Gardner Makes Telling Hit in Photocomedy by Essanay, and Is Well Supported.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

A RIGHT merry photocomedy, with a dash and vim about it that keeps the spectator in a state of tense excitement throughout its five reels, is the "Gift o' Gab" by Essanay. I can commend it to all who love a hearty laugh and clean fun, and who are on the lookout for amusement of a somewhat different type.

The script, by H. Tipton Steck, is based on a story which appeared in Ainslee's magazine, and the adaptation shows a keen appraisal of what will stir the risibilities of a gathering. W. S. Van Dyke, the director of the photocomedy, has availed himself finely of the opportunities offered both by the story and the capable cast, to furnish a screen attraction that fairly teems with action—telling action which has its mirthful surprises and humorous situations.

The story is so clearly told on the screen that it needs no telling here. Suffice it to state that the mirth centers on Tom Bain (Jack Gardner), who has an exceedingly glib tongue, and also a craving for impossible inventions since childhood. At college he is famous halfback of the football team and wins the heart of Peggy Dinsmore, sister of one of his college chums and daughter of a millionaire, who watches his splendid work in the intercollegiate game. His escapades at college and his efforts to gain a position that will enable him to support Peggy (Helen Ferguson), without help from her grim, old father, form the mirth centers of the comedy.

Surprise will likely be general that Jack Gardner, who has been confined hitherto to Western roles, appears in the part of Tom Bain; but I feel certain that, like myself, they will be still more surprised to find that he acquits himself as a comedian of fine talent and art. The truth is that Mr. Gardner always preferred comedy roles to any other, but was obliged to await his opportunity. His Western roles I always considered commendable characterizations, and now that I have seen him as Tom Bain, I am convinced that he has come into his own and that we shall have the pleasure of watching him in many other comedy creations just as amusing, or better.

Some of the athletic stunts performed by Tom Bain during his frolic with fellow students after the football game reminded me of characters in which Douglas Fairbanks has figured; not that the stunts were similar, but they had something amazingly uncanny about them, so dare-devil and difficult.

Helen Ferguson's Peggy Dinsmore is a most delightful young lady, winsome and beautiful. The hasty wedding ceremony in the hospital, where Tom Bain and Peggy are both patients, and the officiating clergyman is also a patient whose end is supposed to be very near, is a most unusual situation, and one that has its grim as well as a comedy aspect. The "Chub" Dinsmore of Frank Morris, the Pater Dinsmore of John Cossar and the "sneezing" Professor by a player whose name has not been furnished, are all worthy characterizations.

The release date was Nov. 26, through the George Kleine System.

IN "The Scarlet Car," Richard Harding Davis turned out a story which William Parker has made into a good melodrama. Bearing the Bluebird brand, directed by Joseph DeGrasse, and featuring Franklyn Farnum this five-part photoplay has for a hero a young chap in a small town whose chief occupation in life is playing Kelly pool. His father is the proprietor of the Bolton Argus, and when the old gentleman gets into financial difficulties his boy, Billy, braces up and helps pull him out. Billy also takes a hand in straightening out a bank robbery in which his future father-in-law is involved. The president of the bank and his son are the real criminals, but they manage to fasten the crime on the cashier after knocking him insensible and having him carried off in a scarlet car belonging to a man from the city who is interested with the banker in a number of speculations.

The car is wrecked, and the owner killed. The cashier is not to be found, and his daughter is prevailed upon to accept an offer of marriage from the banker's son. Billy is in love with the girl, and is instrumental in bringing about that her father is interested in a number of speculations.

national reserve we are accustomed to associate with his interpretations. Supporting him and most acceptably are Florence Vidor, Jack Holt, Charles Ogle, Mayme Kelso and Raymond Hatton.

Miss Vidor is Kittle Little, of German parentage with a brother in the Kaiser's army, and a stenographer in the office of the coast quartermaster. Under the influence of Dr. Smith, played by Mr. Ogle, she represents the "leak" the secret service men are trying to locate. Miss Vidor plays well. Mr. Ogle personates the relentless, persevering spy in his own finished style. Jack Holt is the quartermaster, Miss Kelso the quartermaster's chief assistant—and capitably done was the scene in which she is drugged by the spy; Mr. Hatton was the aid of the German agent.

William C. De Mille directs the script, from the pen of Marlon Fairfax. In his staging of the blind curio shop of Nara-Nara it is said the director has used freely of the collection of Hayakawa—a matter that may contain interest for those who see the picture.

"The Secret Game" will make a timely release.

A heavy rain storm is one of the features of the production, and is handled with excellent effect. Franklyn Farnum puts the requisite amount of energy into the part of Billy, and Edith Johnson is an engaging Beatrice Forbes. "The Secret Game"

Sessue Hayakawa Featured in a Strong Story of Japanese-American Secret Service.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

FINELY exemplifying the change in international relations as regards Japan and the United States is "The Secret Game," the Lasky release of December 3. In this story the representatives of the two countries are not at odds, they are working hand in hand against a common enemy—Germany. Sessue Hayakawa has a role of a member of a Japanese secret service organization, co-operating with the United States authorities in an effort to uncover the work of the sleepless Teutons.

"The Secret Game" is an entertaining detective story. It is this phase of the tale that submerges the love interest—present, but not dominating. What is uppermost is the attempt of the secret service men to balk the German agents in their efforts to get news of the sailing of American transports on the Pacific. In the accomplishment of this there are employed tell-tale devices and there are successful hunts for codes which transform everyday communications into messages of national catastrophe.

Mr. Hayakawa as Nara-Nara has a role that wins the sympathy. He has, so to speak, let himself go. It is a character into which he has put his heart. He manifests less of the monkey, and this monkey is one of the most amusing things in the picture. Its antics and the things the director has thought up for it to do are both fresh and compellingly laughable.

The action is decidedly speedy, and oftentimes is exciting. There is a good deal of chasing to and fro among trolley cars, there are near-accidents that give the spectator an instant's apprehension as when an automobile rushes directly at a trolley car, and the next instant we find it running calmly along beside it. The real quality of this kind of farce is indescribable, except that one can safely say that this one is a winner as a laugh maker, and has proved itself out with a good sized audience. I saw it at the Academy of Music in New York, and it made a hit there without a doubt.

Seven-Part Metro Propaganda Picture Written by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis and Starring Mabel Taliaferro Has Many Human Touches.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A PROPAGANDA picture that contains many human touches and treats of the effect in the United States of the present war should be a winning combination. Such a photoplay is "Draft 258," a seven-part Metro production, written by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis, and starring Mabel Taliaferro. The picture was also directed by William Christy Cabanne. The story of "Draft 258" is a plea for Americanism, and every available argument is introduced that will help to arouse the right spirit in the young men of this country and make them eager to serve the cause of the Allies. Historical incidents are shown bearing in the struggle for liberty since early times, but the chief merit of the picture is the human interest in the story and the amount of sympathy that centers around the Alden family, which consists of the heroine, whose name is Mary, her brothers Matthew and George, her mother, and Mary's lover, John Graham.

Mary is a true-hearted little woman, whose one regret is that her sex prevents her from becoming a soldier and going to fight the Germans. Both brothers hold opposite views, and Matthew, the elder, is such a strong pacifist that he makes speeches against the draft and finally becomes entangled with a set of secret agents working for the Kaiser. John Graham enlists at once, and Mary's arguments open the younger brother's eyes to the truth when he is drafted and make him proud to go. Matthew clings to his old belief until he is convinced by the acts of his associates that they are plotting wholesale murder. He also discovers that the head of the secret agents has his sister locked up in a room and is attempting to assault her. Mary is rescued by Graham and a troop of cavalry, and Matthew is ready and willing to shoulder a gun and fight for the right.

The production is a thoroughly good one. It is never overburdened with the atmosphere of war, the marching of soldiers and scenes from camp life. The news reels have shown us the genuine thing, and it is the story of one woman's fight for the honor of her country and her home that makes "Draft 258" worth while.

Mabel Taliaferro realizes all the possibilities in the part of Mary Alden, and that is praise enough for any actress. Walter Miller, Earle Brunswick and Eugene Borden are a well chosen trio as Graham, Matthew and George, respectively. Sue Bal-four, William H. Tooker, Camilla Dalberg, Baby Ivy Ward, Sidney D'Albrook, Robert Anderson and Edwin Boring round out the cast.

CHARLES BRABIN COMPLETES HIS SECOND METRO.

Director Charles J. Brabin has completed a new Metro production, "Red, White, and Blue Blood," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which is his second Metro picture with these co-stars. "Red, White, and Blue Blood" was written by Shannon Fife and adapted for the screen by June Mathis.

Triangle Five-Part Productions

"The Learnin' of Jim Benton," Western Melodrama of Good Quality, Featuring Roy Stewart, and "Fanatics," Capital and Labor Play, with Adda Gleason and J. Barney Sherry at Head of Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Learnin' of Jim Benton."

FOR the first two reels "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," a five-part Triangle melodrama taken from a story by Al Neitz is vastly entertaining comedy. Then Jim gets into the hands of the sheriff on a charge of putting a bullet through one of a party of sheepmen that is trying to cut off the water from Jim's cattle and is almost sent to kingdom come by the hemp route, after a trial at which one of the witnesses does some tall lying. The arrival of the Governor and the evidence submitted to him by a pretty little schoolmarm in love with the prisoner wins Jim a reprieve, and the war between the cattlemen and the sheep-raisers over who shall control the characters, and Fritz Ridgeway is a fetching and dominating figure as the schoolmarm. Excellent impersonations should be credited to Ed Brady, William Ellingford, Thornton Edwards, John P. Wild and Harry Rattenberry.

"Fanatics."

John Lynch wrote the story of "Fanatics," another five-part Triangle, and Joseph A. Roach turned it into a screen drama. Its theme is the struggle between capital and labor, but it does not follow the usual course of fiction, capital being represented by a wealthy mill owner who desires to deal with his men justly, and labor is misled by a wild-eyed anarchist whose one object is to destroy property and annihilate the owners of wealth. The wife of a worthless young man, who has been befriended by the mill-owner, gets mixed up with the anarchist and his plots after the death of her husband and learns that she is making a terrible mistake. Obtaining a position in the mill-owner's office, she helps to foment a strike among the hands. In the meantime, her employer has begun to care for her, and she is glad to accept him when she discovers her mistake.

The picture also contains one of the latest type of vampires, a most sinuous young woman, who does her best to wind her wiles about the capitalist, and nearly succeeds. She has already been the means of the heroine's husband taking the downward road, and relies considerably upon the unconventionality of her wardrobe to trap her victims. Olga Grey, who plays the part, has nothing to learn about vampiring from the more famous adepts at this world-old art. Adda Gleason as Mary Lathrop and J. Barney Sherry as the mill-owner vindicate their positions at the head of the cast, and William V. Mong contributes an interesting character study as the anarchist. Donald Fullen, Eugene Burr, Edward Hayden and W. A. Jeffries complete the cast. The direction by Raymond B. Wells is realistic, the scenes at the mill being among the best shown.

"Raffles"

Seven-Part Screen Version of E. W. Hornung's Famous Crook Story, Presented by L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., with John Barrymore in Title Role, a Fascinating and Finely Produced Photoplay.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE honor roll connected with "Raffles" is a long one. First on the list is E. W. Hornung, the creator of the amateur crook whose exploits started so many authors to writing criminal stories and dramas and furnished Kyrle Bellew with one of his most celebrated stage characterizations. Then comes Eugene W. Presbrey, who adapted the story to the stage; Anthony B. Kelly, who prepared the screen version for the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., production; George Irving, the director of the picture, and John Barrymore, the star. In passing from the novel to the stage and then to the screen, the story has enjoyed the good fortune of always falling into the hands of masters of their several professions, the last stage of the work having been performed by men competent to obtain results equal to any that have gone before. With all this in its favor, small wonder that the screen version of "Raffles" has the same fascination in picture form it possessed on the stage and in the novel. Its hero's morals may not be anything to brag of, but his adventures make a bully good story, and that's a blessing for which he deserves our heartfelt thanks.

The worst thing to be said against the character of the amateur cracksman is that he does not always deal honestly with the spectator, but tries to pull the wool over his eyes with that particularly offensive bit of sophistry, that he robs the rich and unworthy in order to give to the poor. Of course, there is no law—except the law of common sense—to prevent any person from believing in such foolishness; but when it comes to a thief with that kind of moral development—well, there ain't no such animal. And no one cares if there isn't; or gives a hang about the right or wrong of what "Raffles" does, so long as he does it with so much dexterity and charm of manner, and confines his sphere of operations to the mimic screen. In real life the amateur cracksman might prove a somewhat embarrassing acquaintance.

The screen version of the Hornung story opens on board a ship bound from Australia to England. "Raffles" is trailing a notorious swindler who has in his possession a valuable ruby. The manner in which the cracksman steals the gem, is discovered and makes his escape by diving into the sea with his prize, is shown most interestingly on the screen. The other incidents relate to his adventures in London, his pursuit and capture of the famous Melrose diamonds and his love affair with an English heiress. Also his efforts to avoid a certain Mrs. Vidal, who knows who he really is and is very much in love with him. The spectator follows the struggle between "Raffles," Detective Bedford and Crawshaw—a thief without any social standing—for the possession of the jewels with unabated interest and heaves a sigh of relief when the well-mannered crook makes his famous escape through the clock.

John Barrymore is an admirable impersonator of "Raffles." He hasn't the fine polish and distingue air of the lamented Mr. Bellew; nevertheless, he makes the amateur cracksman an engaging chap and brings out every point in the action with striking effect and gratifying ease. John Barrymore is an impressive example of how quickly a real actor adapts himself to his medium. His support is in keeping with the character of the production and is cast as follows: Captain Bedford, Frederick Perry; Lord Amersteth, H. Cooper Cliffe; Bunny Manders, Frank Morgan; Mrs. Vidal, Christine Mayo; Gwendolin, Evelyn Brent; Crawshaw, Mike Donlin; Lady Melrose, Mathilda Brundage, and Marie, Nita Allen. Harry B. Harris, the photographer, belongs in such good company.

"Vengeance Is Mine"

Irene Castle Featured in New Pathe Play, Written by John A. Moros and Produced by Astra Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject is the fourth Pathe Play featuring Mrs. Castle in the leading role. It was adapted to the screen by Howard Irving Young from a novel by John A. Moroso, and produced by Astra Film Corporation under direction of Frank Crane. In some respects it lacks the strength of previous numbers, at least two of which have been memorable successes, and all of which have been very entertaining.

"Vengeance Is Mine," as the title implies, is melodramatic in plot and subject matter. Mrs. Castle appears as Paula Farrington, daughter of Colonel Farrington. Early in the story her father is made the scapegoat of a number of crooked financiers. A bank is wrecked and looted by the heartless crew, and Colonel Farrington is driven to suicide by their persecutions.

At the time of her father's death the girl, Paula, is attending a finishing school. She is summoned home by the housekeeper, and after her father's funeral Paula vows to have revenge upon her father's enemies. Through the friendship of Marion DeLong, whom she had saved from drowning, Paula is received at the home of Peter Van Brunt. The latter was chiefly instrumental in bringing about her father's ruin.

In the course of the story, Paula meets and falls in love with a young Dr. Smith. She is using the name of "Farring" at the Van Brunt home, but her identity is later discovered, and she is forced to leave. Paula then becomes a cabaret dancer, and forms a friendship with Old Bill Fitch, who aids her in entering the Van Brunt home and obtaining papers from the safe which clear her father's name. She then relents, and determines to forego her vengeance. Incidentally, she saves Mrs. Van Brunt from a love affair which would have been fatal to her reputation.

There is a well developed story interest in this number, but the full strength of certain situations have not been realized. The final scenes in the Van Brunt home are the most dramatic.

Frank Sheridan appears as Peter Van Brunt, Helene Chadwick as Marion DeLong, and Elliot Dexter as Dr. Smith.

"Nearly Married"

Goldwyn Presents Madge Kennedy in a Delightful Comedy by Edgar Selwyn.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

NEARLY MARRIED approaches roaring farce comedy in its exaggeration of character and incident, but it rises to greater heights through its very bright lines. Mr. Selwyn has made a screen hit. He was not headed that way two years ago, but he had it in him. He was entrenched in theatricalism at that time, but he has gone over the top, cleared his way through the wire entanglements of screen difficulties on his charge to decided success, which I am only too glad to acknowledge. "Nearly Married" is admirably constructed, crowded with ingenious situations and so nicely balanced in characterization that it could be successfully interpreted by any intelligent company of actors. Those are the kind of plays we need.

Amid the elaborate preparations for a wedding ceremony, the bride, charmingly impersonated by Madge Kennedy, decides that it cannot take place unless she is 'given away' by her brother Dicky, of whom she is childishly fond, but Dicky is celebrating his admittance to the bar and makes a frantic, last-moment dash for home in a stolen motor car. He meets with disaster, is arrested and telephones for help. By this time the bride has permitted the ceremony to be performed, but she refuses to go on the honeymoon trip until her brother is released. The deeply annoyed groom becomes aggravated beyond endurance by the exactions of his wilful bride; a quarrel follows, and Dicky gets his first case in securing a divorce for his sister before the marriage has been consummated. A co-respondent is hired to compromise the groom and the case goes to court, but the newly-weds really love each other, and they elope in a fast motor car. Dicky and some intimate friends go in pursuit, as does also the young lady hired to play the role of co-respondent.

Business is dull at a wayside tavern on their route, and the patron spreads broken glass over the road in front of his house to disable passing cars. First to arrive, and on the edge of a storm, are the eloping bride and groom. They decide to remain for the night and are barely at ease in their room when Dicky arrives in the storm with a decree of divorce and drags his sister from the bedchamber. The young people are about to be married again by a friendly Justice from over the way, when it is discovered that the decree forbids the groom to marry again. Complications thicken when the hired co-respondent arrives, and the audience is kept in a state of suspense by skilful maneuvers successfully carried out until it is in a roar of laughter.

The elements of suddenness and surprise, arousing a constant feeling of expectancy, are so cleverly handled that the outcome is far from being obvious. The conclusion is swift and so satisfactory that a large audience at the Strand generously applauded the story at the end. For all that Mr. Selwyn has admirably collected many of the elements which arouse laughter, highest value must go to his brilliant subtitles—they contain the very essence of humor. Miss Kennedy and her support, especially Mr. Barthelemy as "Dicky" do flawless work, and the scenic effects, notably the tavern exterior, are beyond praise. The release is a gem of its kind.

"Alimony"

Strong Arraignment of Easy Divorce Laws in Release of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS six-reel release of The First National Exhibitors' Circuit makes a sane and intelligent exposure of the lax divorce system prevailing in certain states, by which designing women have been enabled to exact heavy alimony from rich husbands. While there is a strong element of propaganda in the offering, it is properly subordinated to the story itself; in fact the number is a good example of the way in which screen narratives with a purpose may be successfully constructed.

The cast is a pleasing and well balanced one. Josephine Whittell, who has been drafted to the screen from the musical comedy stage, makes her debut in pictures in this number. She gives a skillful rendering of the part of Mrs. Bernice Bristol Flint, a hard, experienced society woman. Lois Wilson is a close second in the feminine roles. Her work as Marjorie Lansing, the girl so nearly victimized by Mrs. Flint, is at once delicately attractive and full of dramatic tensi in her one big scene. George Fisher is also strong in the role of Howard Turner, the boyish millionaire.

The story commences with a divorce action begun by Mrs. Flint, who succeeds in freeing herself from her husband by practically forcing him to swear away his own honor in order to protect the name of an innocent woman. Mrs. Flint obtains big alimony and then turns to Howard Turner, with whom she had already been trifling. To her chagrin young Turner, shocked by her cold-blooded methods, says he no longer loves her. The big moments are reached when Mrs. Flint encourages a hasty marriage between young Turner and Marjorie, and then packs the bride off to Bermuda. Her subsequent efforts to engineer a divorce, with alimony, for Marjorie, are frustrated by the girl's emotional rebellion and refusal to "sell her child." At the close Mrs. Flint shoots herself, and the young couple, who really love each other, are reunited.

The social atmosphere is accurate and the settings are correspondingly good. The subtitles, most of which are in pertinent conversational form, are printed against a background of metropolitan scenes. The production was managed and directed by Robert Brunton and Emmett J. Flynn, with photography and art direction by L. Guy Wilky and R. Holmes Paul.

"The Skylight Room," an O. Henry Story with Jean Paige, and "Zollenstein," a Falcon Feature with Vola Vale and Monroe Salisbury.

"The Skylight Room."

PATHOS is the dominating characteristic of "The Skylight Room," a four-reel Broadway Star Feature released by the General Film Company, based on O. Henry's story of the same title.

This subject tells a pretty story of a charming girl who, unable to secure work and too proud to let others in the boarding house know her condition, succumbs to hunger in her "skylight room" way up in the garret, after bidding a last good-night to a bright star that shines through her window, to which she has given the name "Billy Jackson." She is taken to a hospital, and mention of the case in the newspaper concludes with: "Dr. William Jackson says the patient will recover."

Jean Paige gives a fine portrayal of the girl, and the others in the cast, including Grace Ashley, Carlton King, Nell Spencer and Bruno Karnau, are good types and capably handle their respective roles. Several situations not in the original have been introduced, and Director Martin Justice has put over the author's idea in a creditable manner. The main fault is that the production is rather long for the theme on which it is based.

"Zollenstein."

Mythical principalities, situated between France and Germany, furnish the location for "Zollenstein," a four-reel Falcon Feature released by General Film Company; however, it is not a war picture, but involves the romance to two generations of the reigning families. The story is of moderate interest, and the action introduces several familiar characters and situations.

The crown prince of Zollenstein marries beneath him and is banished. The King on his death bed recalls him. In the meantime, a child is born, but an illegitimate brother causes the news to be brought to the court that both mother and baby are dead. Years later, after the new king's death, an envoy sees the child, now grown to manhood, and because of his resemblance to the king, causes him to come to Zollenstein and pose as the rightful heir. After he has been forced to marry the princess of a neighboring country, his old nurse appears on the scene, and establishes the fact that he is entitled to the crown.

Vola Vale and Monroe Salisbury are satisfactory in the leading parts, both having dual roles. The production, directed by Edgar Jones, is not altogether consistent or convincing, but it will probably appeal to admirers of this type of story.

"Her Sister's Rival"

Pathe Releases Strong Five-Reel Subject, Produced by the Russian Art Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

HER SISTER'S RIVAL, produced by the Russian Art Film Corporation, and directed by A. Arkatov, tells a pathetic and at the same time emotional story. It is enacted by a strong cast of Russian players headed by V. A. Polonsky, who plays Prince Baskoff; V. V. Colodna as Nita, the adopted daughter, and L. M. Coronova as Mary, the daughter.

The story is simple in its outlines, but furnishes the background for events which move with increasing interest to the tragedy at the close. Two girls, Nita, the adopted daughter, and Mary, the real daughter, are reared as sisters by Madame Kromoff, a wealthy business woman. Nita meets and falls in love with Prince Backoff, a fascinating young spendthrift.

The prince, always in need of funds, calls upon a banker who is also in love with Nita. The banker, to further his own ends, induces the prince to ask Madame Kromoff for Mary's hand instead of Nita's in order that he may have Nita for himself.

Scene from "Her Sister's Rival" (Pathe).

The prince agrees to this, and Madame Kromoff consents. As the result of this diplomacy there is a great double wedding at which the prince marries Mary and the banker marries Nita. But, during the dance which follows the ceremony, the prince tells Nita he still loves her, and intends to have her.

The situation, as may be seen, is unusual and full of interesting possibilities. These possibilities are fully realized as the story proceeds. The prince squanders Mary's fortune, and carries out his threat to make love to Nita. He neglects Mary, and wins Nita away from her banker husband. The latter determines to kill the prince, and makes an abortive effort to do so, but his nerve fails at the last moment. In the end Madame Kromoff, racked by grief and rage at the sad turn of events, shoots the prince, and alleges suicide on his part.

The story, as a whole, is a well wrought tragedy, acted in a convincing and dramatic fashion. The settings are indigenous to Russia, where the scenes are laid, and have a pleasing and attractive novelty. The wedding scene and banquet are perhaps the most notable in the production.

"That Night"

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy Features Charles Murray with Wayland Trask and Mary Thurman.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE two-part farce comedy number entitled "That Night" appearing in the release schedule of the Paramount-Mack Sennett productions presents no distinctly refined situations. It will no doubt be greeted by the ordinary audience as a tremendously funny offering, but as entertainment for the more cultured it will hardly be welcome. The story of the comedy tells its own tale.

The opening scenes of the picture introduce us to some entertainers in a cafe. Mary, one of the scantily dressed young ladies more beautiful than the rest, becomes the coveted prize of more than one man. The news that Mary is to inherit a large fortune causes a series of complications, and to avoid marrying the manager of the cafe she accepts the proposal of Trask, head entertainer at the cafe, and becomes the victim of a fake marriage. Then there are scenes in the bedroom of their honeymoon flat where the assistant entertainer arrives by accident in a drunken state. And following this there is the spreading of the news that the couple are not really married, and the rush of the mother to rescue the girl. Finally, after a number of embarrassing scenes, the mother arrives with a real minister, and, upon learning that Mary's hope of a fortune has vanished, a marriage ceremony is performed, with Mary and the assistant entertainer the chief figures. Charles Murray, Wayland Trask, and Mary Thurman are the featured members of the cast. The direction of the picture by Mack Sennett is ably and artistically performed.

Favorites in January Bluebirds.

Carmel Myers, in "My Unmarried Wife"; Mae Murray, in "The Eternal Columbine"; Ruth Clifford, in "The Highest Card," and Franklin Farnum in "The Catamount" will provide attractions for January that promise to sustain Bluebird's reputation for good entertainment. Violet Mersereau, in "The Wild Cat," and Dorothy Phillips, in "Broadway Love," have also completed plays to add to the good start Bluebird has planned for the New Year. All of the stars mentioned are now busy on location with material worthy of their effort preparing releases far in advance of present requirements.

"As Others See Us"

Metro-Drew Comedy, Original and Amusing, Finds Husband Faking Deafness as a Cure for Wife's Propensity for Reading Aloud.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

QUITE an original idea has been used as a basis of the Metro-Drew comedy entitled "As Others See Us." It is an artistically made comedy, with plenty of action and genuine atmosphere. In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew there are two other well equipped players in the cast interpreting a couple of interesting roles, that of the cook and of the mother-in-law.

As the story runs the wife of the household is enamoured of her own elocutionary ability, and persists in reading aloud on every conceivable occasion until hubby well-nigh loses his mind over the matter. Finally, after confiding in his mother, he decides to fake deafness, and is successful in gaining his point to the extent that his wife not only gives up reading aloud to him, but also becomes so disconsolate that she discontinues her morning sessions for the improvement of the mind of the cook. In despair for some one to talk to, she sends for her mother-in-law to whom, in the course of conversation with all three present, she confides many of hubby's faults, which results in a rapid clearing up of that good man's hearing. Needless to say the evening reading is resumed, and under vastly different circumstances.

An entertaining comedy, refined and pleasing, and suitable for the best theaters in the land.

"The Eternal Mother"

Ethel Barrymore Featured in Propaganda Picture Dealing with Evils of Child Labor.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

ADAPTED from Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," the Metro Pictures Corporation's offering for November 26, in which Ethel Barrymore is featured, "The Eternal Mother," is a strong arrangement of child labor in mills and factories. Other considerations have been subordinated to this theme, and the story is not always pleasant, as extreme instances have been used; such as the mill runner-in on horseback dragging a sick child back to work, and threatening her with a heavy whip.

Maris, having married a worthless man who deserts her taking their daughter with him, marries Dwight Alden after receiving a letter that her husband and child are dead. She discovers that Alden, who is a mill owner, employs child labor, and, assisted by the village minister, tries to persuade him that this is wrong, but he will brook no interference in his business. After violently denouncing Alden from the pulpit, the minister dies, and Maris becomes interested in a child who has been injured while working overtime at night in the mill only to discover that the child is her daughter, and her first husband is alive. She leaves, taking the child, and Alden, after a fight with the first husband, discovers that he obtained a divorce in the West. He then seeks Maris, telling her he has done away with child labor and made other improvements affecting the welfare of his employees, and a reconciliation occurs.

sympathetic part of Dwight Alden do effective work. Charles W. Sutton is ably cast as the minister, and others in the company, including J. W. Johnston, Louis R. General Film Company.

HIS OLD FASHIONED DAD (Falcon Feature).—This four-part subject illustrates the extremes to which an old couple are willing to go in order that their profligate son may benefit, the father even feigning death in order that the son may get his insurance. Daniel Gilfeather and Mollie McConnell are pleasing as the elderly couple. The story is not always convincing, and is weakened by the fact that the ending does not logically account for certain elements developed by the action.

HARD LUCK (Essanay).—A tough, after being forced to pay for a steak he could not eat, gets revenge by hiring a sandwich man to wear a sign advertising free meals at the restaurant. The sandwich man sets the worst of the deal and then tries various means to commit suicide, without success. He finally stands in front of a runaway team which stops, and he is acclaimed a hero and receives a reward. A knockabout comedy number with some laughable situations built along familiar lines.

BREAKING IN (Jaxon Comedy).—A Pokes and Jabs number with the usual amount of slapstick comedy, in which Pokes becomes a burglar and has exciting adventures in which Jabs assists. It has a few laughs and is about on a par with the other numbers of this series.

A BARGAIN—$37.60 (Sparkle Comedy).—Kate Price and Billy Rudge are featured in this number. In order to keep up with their neighbors they sacrifice a varied assortment of live stock which occupies the same living room with them, and buy a second-hand auto, which finally runs away with them, and ends by their being arrested for speeding. Contains a few laughs.

THE SKYLIGHT ROOM (Broadway Star Feature).—A pathetic O. Henry story in four parts, dealing with a young girl who because of her pride starves in the garret and is saved by her sweetheart, an ambulance surgeon. Contains much human interest. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

ZOLLENSTEIN (Falcon Feature).—A four-part romantic picture involving the love affair of two generations of the reigning families of Zollenstein and a neighboring mythical principality. A picture of moderate interest, reviewed on another page of this issue.

THE SILENT MAN (Artcraft).—A highly sensational melodrama of the border, with William S. Hart at his best in one of the roles he has made popular.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE RAGGEDY QUEEN, December 3.—A five-reel offering, written by Nell B. Bronson and produced by Theodore Marston. It features Violet Mersereau as a waif in a mining camp, in charge of a slightly demented woman who leads the child to believe she is of royal birth. It develops later that her mother was an actress who played royal parts. The action contains a number of melodramatic episodes, the fall of the office building being the most exciting. The girl finds her father in the course of the story, which is enjoyable throughout. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE SCARLET CAR, December 24.—Five-part screen version of story by Richard Harding Davis, this photoplay contains a large proportion of melodrama and is well acted by Franklyn Farnum and the rest of the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Ebony Film Corporation.

WRONG ALL AROUND (Ebony Comedy).—A farce played by negroes and with the trials of a young man who is in love with the village belle as its motive. She has also a rich suitor. Her poor lover has many jobs and is the victim of bad luck in many different ways. The lady is always turning up at the moment when he is in some not wholly dignified predicament. For a longer notice see page 1483, issue of December 8, 1917.

SOME BABY (Ebony Comedy).—A somewhat diverting chase picture by negro players. It ought to go pretty well in many houses partly on account of the novelty of a dark-skinned cast and partly because it is light and inconsequential to fit the mood of some who do not want to think. A longer notice is on page 1483, issue of December 8, 1917.

GHOSTS (Ebony Comedy).—A farce by negro players with some novelty in the business. This darkey ghost is wholly satisfying and the other players are also pleasing enough to insure the picture a welcome in most places. For longer notice see page 1483, issue of December 8, 1917.

THE PORTERS (Ebony Comedy).—One short piece of vulgarity will probably hamper the usefulness of this picture in some places. This section can easily be cut out and no harm done to the farce. It is lively, is played of course by negro players, has some bits of cleverly handled business and may serve on a program in some places. For longer notice see page 1483, issue of December 8, 1917.

First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

ALIMONY.—A six-reel story of metropolitan life, exposing the lax divorce laws in certain states, which give designing women a chance to gain freedom and big alimony from their husbands. The story interest is strong and is always kept uppermost. The production is a compelling one and enacted by a cast including Josephine Whittell, Lois Wilson, George Fisher and Ida Lewis. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

TREASURE ISLAND (Fox Standard), November 18.—A delightful five-reel picture that imaginative children will take as real and that grown-ups will find as a diverting offering on account of its humor. It is a picture that will win wide favor and will make a good deal of money for exhibitors, without a doubt. For a longer review see page 1484, issue of December 8, 1917.

A MILK-FED VAMP (Fox-Sunshine Comedy), November 25.—This two-reeler made by the Fox-Lehrman Company is a laughmaker and can be safely depended on to make good in the average theater. It has touches of vulgarity that will make it the more acceptable with most of the people; but are just enough to keep it from being a sure choice for a children's party or a Sunday school entertainment.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

NEARLY MARRIED, November 18.—A sparkling comedy of divorce, filled with ingenious situations, with Madge Kennedy in the leading role. A gem of its kind.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE TENDERFOOT (Vitagraph), December 3.—A Blue Ribbon feature in five parts, this picture is a screen version of an Alfred Henry-Lewis Wolfville story, and is cleverly acted by William Duncan and his support. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

THE WATER TRAP, December 3.—Episode 13 of "The Fighting Trail" serial keeps up the keen interest excited by the previous installments, and that is high praise.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

RAFFLES (L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc.).—Seven-part screen version of E. W. Hornung's celebrated story, this picture is worthy its source. George Irving directed it, Anthony B. Kelly made the scenario and John Barrymore is the star. It is given a longer review in another page of this issue.

George Kleine System.

GIFT O' GAB (Essanay), November 26.—This comedy in five reels has a vigorous snap and action that should commend it to all who delight in clean comedy. Jack Gardner in the leading role proves his title to comedy honors. His support includes Helen Ferguson, Frank Morris, John Cossar and other capable players. See extended review on another page, this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

DRAFT 258 (Metro), November 15.—This seven-part war propaganda picture by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis has a strong human contrast and should find much favor. Mabel Taliaferro is excellent in the leading role. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE ETERNAL MOTHER, November 26.—A picturization of Sidney McCall's story against child labor, entitled "Red Horse Hill." Ethel Barrymore is featured and her work, together with that of Frank Mills, helps the story, which apart from the propaganda is of only ordinary interest. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY AND THE BURGLAR (Cub), November 29.—Up to date "Jerry and the Burglar" is the best Cub comedy yet produced. Here some semblance of an interesting plot has been aimed at, and there is a happy release from the usual girl question. Jerry after trying to steal some fruit eludes the police and suddenly finds himself in a trunk in the den of a couple of thieves. He is forced into service after a policeman who has followed them to the den has been knocked down and divested of his uniform. In the home of a wealthy citizen he manages to turn the tables on the thieves, but is hauled off on an old charge before he can accept a financial reward.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 153 (Gaumont), December 2.—This issue of the Weekly is unusually interesting, containing views showing women at work making bandages for the war hospitals, a cowboy regiment, hundreds of soldiers passing in review before President Wilson and other attractive current incidents.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE ISLAND OF DREAD (Pathe), December 9.—Episode No. 3 of "The Hidden Hand." This number brings the story into its stride as a serial, after the elaborate introduction scenes have been completed. Doris escapes from the Hidden Hand and his followers, carrying the mysterious packet with her. The principal incidents occur on Whitney Island, where Doris and Jack are caught in a rain storm. The girl is later made captive by the Hidden Hand, but dives from the rowboat and conceals herself under it. The story contains strong melodramatic touches.

OVER THE FALLS (Pathe), December 9.—Episode No. 13 of "The Seven Pearls." This opens with Perry and Stayne leaving Ilma a prisoner in an old warehouse. She sounds an alarm with a lighted cigar, dropped by one of the men, which she places against the automatic sprinkler. Ilma is rescued, but later again falls into the hands of the men. The aeroplane feature and later the imprisoning of Ilma in a piano box are the strong incidents of the number. It closes with the box going over a series of water falls.

MOVE ON (Rolin-Pathe), December 9.—A comic number, featuring Harold Lloyd in the part of a young police officer. He takes part in a crap game, flirts with a nurse and gets into numerous difficulties of an amusing nature. The hobo exchanging places with the baby makes a laughable occurrence. Slight in plot, but breezy and entertaining.

HER SISTER'S RIVAL (Pathe-Russian Art Film), December 9.—A five-reel subject, with a Russian locale, telling the story of a spend-thrift prince who wins the love of two girls, reared as sisters. He marries Mary, the real daughter, and dissipates her fortune, then wrecks the married life of Nita, the adopted daughter. The story is produced in an elaborate, convincing manner. At the close the mother shoots the prince. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Select Pictures.

THE SILENT SACRIFICE (Select Pictures).—Alice Brady's first Select Pictures release is a five-part romance taken from a stage play by Henry J. W. Dam. The story is French and is laid in Paris and a small town in the North. The acting and production are adequate. A longer review was printed in the issue of December 8.

Triangle Film Corporation.

FANATICS (Triangle), December 9.—A capital and labor story, this photoplay is well produced and acted and is an average good picture. Adda Gleason and J. Barney Sherry head the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE LEARNING OF JIM BENTON, December 9.—Roy Stewart and Fritz Ridgeway are the featured players in this five-part photoplay of ranch life which contains many amusing and dramatic moments. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 100 (Universal), November 28.—Contains many features of current interest, showing distribution of officers' commissions by Secretary Baker, instruction of new officers, making war bread, American aid to Belgium, cross country run in New York and others. Hy Mayer drawings are shown at the close.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 29 (Universal), December 1.—War activities lead this in general interest, showing women workers in France, confiscation of illegal whisky in Los Angeles, devastated grain fields on the Russian front, U. S. marines in training and other strong features. This closes with newspaper cartoons.

FIGHTING MAD (Butterfly), December 3.—A five-reel production, written by J. G. Alexander and Fred Myton and produced by E. J. Le Saint. The story is of the West in the days of '49 and is strong in atmosphere and characterizations. The plot itself concerns a young preacher, whose wife was led astray by a gambler. The preacher leaves his child, after the mother's death, and wanders for years, cursing God and man. Later he returns and in the course of the story shoots the gambler and finds his child. The plot is loosely constructed, but has some fairly strong dramatic moments. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE MUNITION WORKER'S CURSE (Nestor), December 10.—A comedy, by Craig Hutchinson, featuring Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson. The former plays the part of a hobo imposter, who denounces flirting in a public address. He is shown up later at a moving picture performance, when his picture appears on the screen. This is not very new in plot, but proves moderately amusing.

DEEP SEAS AND DESPERATE DEEDS (L-KO), December 12.—A two-reel comic, featuring Merta Sterling and Al Forbes. The girl plays a milkmaid who drives a wagon into the city, and the latter is a janitor in love with her. The janitor is shanghaied and the girl climbs hand-over-hand to where the vessel passes under a rope. This makes a good stunt and certain of the situations get up considerable humor as they occur. The number provides a fair amount of entertainment.

ADRIFT (Universal Special), December 15.—Episode No. 3 of "The Mystery Ship." Betty locks Gaston and his crew in the engine room of the yacht. They threaten to allow the vessel to drift upon the rocks, and the yacht is saved from this fate by a small craft described as the "mystery ship," which is manned by a figure representing death. It exercises a certain protection over Betty at moments of peril. Further struggles take place between the opposing crews. An entertaining installment.

A VOICE FROM THE DEAD (Universal Special), December 15.—No. 9 of "The Red Ace" serial. This number is full of exciting action. It begins with a gun fight between Virginia and the sergeant with the foreign agents in the mine. Later Virginia and her friends discover the hidden cache of platinum and are immediately forced to protect it from their enemies. A good installment.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE GOOD FOR NOTHING (World), December 10.—Carlyle Blackwell is the director and male star of this five-part photoplay in which Muriel Ostriche and Evelyn Greely are also featured. The story shows the regeneration of a son of wealth who tries shifting for himself, and has considerable interest. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Builds Cross-Section of Paris

Erects Nine Blocks of City of Hugo's Time for Spectacular Staging of "Les Miserables."

NO greater example of camouflage and stage carpentry has ever been offered than the building and painting of an entire cross-section of Paris for use in the production of "Les Miserables," which William Fox offers.

The production called for the Paris of Victor Hugo and entailed an enormous amount of research for drawings and descriptions of the city of that time. Nine city blocks were built at a cost of $50,000, and so perfectly was it all reproduced that French military officers visiting New York have insisted that it was not a reproduction at all, but Paris itself.

This Paris was rebuilt "somewhere in New Jersey," and the greatest attention was paid to the most minute details. In paving the streets, the cobble stones were deftly shaped to show the ruts and erosions of heavily laden carts and were colored to give the appearance of age. Drains were set in the hollows so the streets might not be overfull of puddles.

So insistent was Director Frank Lloyd upon historical accuracy and detail that in the scenes in which money was used, he hired from collectors the gold and silver coin of the period he was using.

Nothing was neglected; nothing overlooked, and no detail, however small, had been counted unimportant. There were the houses with their gabled roofs and little second-story balconies; the stores and cafes, particularly the Cafe Corinthe, dingy with age, with its little tables set out on the narrow sidewalk and protected by small awnings.

And to people this "Reproduced Paris" there was a motly and interesting assemblage. One thousand extra people roamed the streets, sat before the cafes to drink and gossip, went about their tasks, many of them building barricades behind which to fight for fraternity and equality, for revolution was in the air, and later was to flame into savage fighting in the streets.

Groups of uniformed soldiers rode here and there, stunning figures in their Guard uniforms of red and blue and white, and while to them it was mimic and in a measure miniature warfare, it also was in the nature of rehearsal for sterner tasks.

Things Are Doing at Mutual Studios

List of Coming Plays Now Under Production Both East and West.

EDNA GOODRICH, twinkling Broadway favorite, whose Mutual successes have become proverbial, has been furnished with the best medium in her quintet of dramas bearing the Mutual stamp in "Her Second Husband," a brilliantly clever satire on modern social conditions in Gotham, written for her by Hamilton Smith. It is set for release December 31. The new play has to do with the disturbing influence of "war brides" on Wall Street's social centers.

As though to center interest in the family, Ann Murdock has been devoting herself to the completion of "My Wife," a famous Broadway success, which has been produced at the Glendale (L. I.) studios of the Empire All Star Corporation under the direction of Dell Henderson.

Included with Miss Murdock in the original cast are Herbert Druce, formerly with Sir Henry Irving; Amy Veness, a widely-known artist of the speaking stage; Rex McDougal and Ferdinand Gottschalk.

Another splendid production just finished at the Glendale studios is "The Girl and the Judge," starring Olive Tell, who is supported in the splendid cast by David Powell as leading man. The play was written by Clyde Fitch, and it was one of the best paying speaking stage productions of the last decade.

All producing companies of the Mutual have interesting releases pending. At the Santa Barbara studios Mary Miles Minter is putting the finishing touches on "Mile Tiptoe," which has been directed by Henry King. This promises to be the prettiest of Mary's recent offerings—a play with a wonderful touch of nature and the youth and happiness sort of thing that goes to all hearts. Miss Minter's next production, "The Veil of Memory," seems likely to be still another of her proverbial successes.

William Russell is splendidly suited in his latest play, "In Bad," which is scheduled for early release on Mutual calendar.

Margarita Fischer and her clever company is engaged under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham in the production of "Molly, Go Get 'Em," one of the best plays she has had in some time and in which she is certain to be a hit.

The J. F. Lee Buying Agency

Much Work with Little Said Has Been Going on Since Joe Lee Made His Initiatory Announcement—Final Circuit Swing Begins December 8.

JOE LEE announced the formation of a state right buying organization in September of this year. Three months of conscientious work in its behalf have passed since that time, and things are now ready for the clinching ceremonies. In order to obtain the closest of working affiliations between the membership of this continent, as well as that of the foreign membership, the identity of all of whom are to be found enumerated on Page 1710 of the September 15 issue of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Lee has arranged to leave New York on or about December 8, for a final swing around the circuit of exchanges that constitute the association, which incidentally will be known as the J. F. Lee Buying Agency, with temporary office on the seventh floor of the Godfrey Building, with the entrance to the suite through Room 705.

In a recent trip, this live little film man has already covered the South and the East, both of which territories and their various members are restive for the general meeting to be held in Manhattan about the beginning of the new year. This time therefore Lee will take in the middle west and far west, and will stop at such centers as Chicago, Omaha, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Denver, Portland, Ore., Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and so forth. As each of these territories is already lined up, Lee will not stay long in any one spot, and plans to be back in New York around the holiday period.

While Lee has never divulged the details of the plans under which the Joseph F. Lee Buying Agency will operate, enough of his ideas are known to allow us to pass on the general comment that his views are thoroughly practical and are laid with a view of serving the membership as well as the manufacturing interests from whom they secure productions with a comprehensive market and exploitation. Two distinctly new features stand out prominently in the Lee plan, and these alone make the policy of this body differ from that one any other state right buying and distributing organization either already formed or proposed: firstly, the fact that the buying strength is variable so as to completely suit the individual tastes of the members; and secondly, the provision whereby three subdivisions of buyers may belong and participate in any one territorial franchise. These three subdivisions represent (a) those buyers who deal in spectacles and attractions of the "super" order ranging from eight to ten reels in length and upward; (b) those independent exchangemen who are in the market for productions ranging from five to seven reels; and (c) those buyers who specialize in comedies, educational, specialties and novelties, which are of short length.

Mr. Lee assures that when he reveals the full working plans of his buying organization for publication, the trade will readily admit the practicability of each of the basic ideas which characterize the Joseph F. Lee Buying Agency. The three months that have passed since he first made known his plans along this line, have been devoted to the perfecting of all details, wherefore much interest will be centered about Mr. Lee's further announcements upon his return from the Pacific coast.

FUN-ART FILMS, INC., DOES NOT INSIST ON CONTRACTS.

Fun-Art Films, Inc., who are making a series of two-reel comedies for the market, the first, "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair," which has just been completed, announces that it does not intend to tie the state rights buyer up to contract for its entire output.

Fun-Art comedies have been built to sell as well as to please audiences, and the high standard that has been set, entailing clean, wholesome comedy, places them, in the opinion of the management, on a footing peculiarly their own and far above the average.

Real comedies are naturally in great demand, and knowing the high standard of their product, Fun-Art Films does not bind the state right buyer to a contract. He may purchase one, or any number up to the entire output without binding himself in any manner. No deposits are required whatsoever. It is a case of laying the real goods on the counter in the open market and it is strictly up to the judgment of the buyer.

This really establishes a precedent in the marketing conditions, especially in the comedy field, and should be hailed with a great deal of satisfaction by the state right buyer, and even the exhibitors who have heretofore been compelled to sign contracts for comedies still unproduced.

F. E. BACKER RETURNS EAST.

Franklin E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, has returned from California, where for the past three months he has been exploiting "Who's Your Neighbor?" in eleven western states.

Said Backer, who owns over a dozen state rights pictures for New Jersey and New York territory, comes forward with a new proposition for the exhibitors with whom he is doing business in this section. He proposes to help the exhibitors by the following means: First, he has instructed his manager to refrain from charging the 15 cents per reel per day; secondly, he has decided to "do his bit" by cutting the rental of all his features to the lowest figure consistent with business principles.

Regarding the picture which the president of the Mammoth proposes making on the Coast in the near future, Mr. Backer stated that he was not prepared to go into details at the present time, but that the project was in process of financing and the director and star practically engaged. In this connection Mr. Backer has a novel idea that he confidently expects will be a money-getter for exhibitors. It involves the elimination of middle profiting.

E. H. Martin has already been engaged as director, and a competent cast is soon to be assembled. Studio work in Los Angeles is expected to begin about the first of the year.

While in San Francisco Mr. Backer was a guest of Eugene H. Roth at the opening of the California theater.

SPANUTH SELECTS CHARLOTTE TITLE.

The title contest of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation's initial production, featuring Charlotte, the international ice-skatrix, has come to its conclusion. "The Frozen Warning" is the title selected, though the Commonwealth president has not informed us concerning the identity of the winner. The name decided upon is, indeed, appropriate.

The Commonwealth company has not yet decided whether they will conduct a contest for the title of their second release, in which Naomi Childers is to be featured. Mr. Spanuth is still in New York, though it is likely that he will return to Chicago during the current week.

REID JOINS W. H. ORGANIZATION.

Hal Reid, playwright and author of typical American plays, among them "Human Hearts" and "The Confession," has been engaged especially by the W. H. Productions Company to write titles. Mr. Reid is now re-editing William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," which will be distributed through the W. H. Productions Company on a state right basis.

The W. H. forces are of the opinion that titles should be specialized in just as carefully as any other part of a picture, and that perhaps they are the most important feature in connection with a picture, and figure that they are giving the exhibitor the best possible service in this matter by the engagement of Mr. Reid.

State Rights Buyers!

The Moving Picture World desires to advise the manufacturing trade, through its columns, whenever you or any of your staff are due in New York. In this way we will be able to render your trip more effective, particularly if you advise the date of arrival, contemplated length of stay, and hotel where you will stop.

Write if letter will reach us sufficiently far ahead—otherwise wire to the State Right Distributor, Inc., Activities

General Manager Mel Simmons Now on Job in New York Looking for Suitable Headquarters—Lesser and Rosenberg Last of Members to Leave for West.

MEL SIMMONS, the general manager of the State Right Distributors, Inc., of which Sol. L. Lesser is president, and which was perfected at a recent convention held in the Hotel Claridge, New York, as announced in this department in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, arrived in Manhattan Thanksgiving afternoon after a transcontinental journey from Los Angeles, where he resigned the management of the local Goldwyn exchange on November 23. Previous to his duties in the city of film studios, Simmons had opened and conducted the Goldwyn exchange in San Francisco.

He started on the job at his desk in the temporary offices of the organization on the fifth floor of the Longacre building the next morning, and concerned himself with the establishment of the body's headquarters in a different and more suitable location. It is expected that a lease will be closed for the new suite the coming week, and the State Right Distributors, Inc., will be in their new home about January 1.

Only two of the out-of-town members are still in the East; namely, Sol. L. Lesser and Mike Rosenberg, of Seattle. Both are due to return before the tenth of the month.

C. H. CHRISTIE IN TOWN.

New York received a visit from Charles H. Christie, treasurer of the Christie Comedy Co., the past week. He arrived here on Thanksgiving day in time to partake of the "turk" at the Knickerbocker Hotel, and plans to stay about two weeks. Mrs. Christie accompanied him, and with her husband stopped off in Chicago and Denver en route.

Mr. Christie has arranged to go down to Washington this week in company with the N. A. M. P. I., and has also arranged to journey to the far South in order to select the right exchange to represent Christie comedies for Southern territory embracing the states of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, North and South Carolina, and Tennessee, the last of the open spots in the Christie distributing alignment. On his return trip to Los Angeles the company's treasurer will call on almost all of the exchanges handling the Margaret Gibson laugh producers, with a view toward keeping in full touch with trade conditions in all parts of the country, in accordance with the Christie policies.

"LIFE AGAINST HONOR" NEXT.

Perhaps never before has Leah Baird, who heads the cast in Ivan Film Productions' novel picture, "Life Against Honor," had the opportunity to display her artistry as in this production, directed by Edmund Lawrence.

The picture is replete with entirely novel situations, both from the artistic as well as photographic standpoint. It is said that the picture shows a marked departure from the usual Ivan output.

James Morrison, who has a double role, will be seen at his best advantage. Violet Palmer, who has made so great a hit in "The Blue Streak," has the ingenue lead, and Edward MacKay, Ben Hendricks and Harry Burkhardt, all well known to the stage and screen, have excellent opportunity to display fine points of their work.

Marcel Le Picard, chief photographer of the Ivan people, has taken the picture, and so intricate, difficult and entirely novel, does he claim, are some of the situations devised by Mr. Lawrence, that in fulfilling the desire of the director Mr. Le Picard feels that he has accomplished somewhat of a feat.

Sales of the Week

Herebelow a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Rights Market the Past Seven Days.

Rankin & Lee announce the conclusion of a deal whereby "A Modern Lorelei," the five-part feature co-starring Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham, to Rowland and Clark, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Pittsburgh, for the states of West Virginia and western Pennsylvania.

Hiller & Wilk announce the sale of "The Whip," featuring Irving Cummins and Alma Hanlon, to the Supreme Photoplay Company (L. Goldstein, manager) for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico. The Supreme exchange is located in Denver.

The Renowned Pictures Corporation has just completed the sale of four of their productions to the African Film Trust, Ltd., of South Africa. Two are special Universal releases, namely, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Where Are My Children?" whereas the other two were the Edward Warren features, "Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed."

Frank J. Seng advises of the closing of a deal whereby the newly formed Liberty Film Co., of Boston, Mass., secures the New England rights to Hobart Henley's production, "Parentage."

Credit is due to the firm of Hiller & Wilk for the sale of the negative of Sidney Olcott's "The Belgian" to the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, which was announced in our last issue.

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprise, Inc., sales agents for the McClure feature, "Mother," have disposed of nine states on the territorial plan.

Among the buyers was Martin Wohlfarth for the State of New Jersey. Mr. Wohlfarth operates theaters in Lakewood, Spring Lake, and Laurel, N. J. He proposes to establish an exchange for his territory in Newark.

Other buyers of "Mother" were Westcott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, for Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota; and James R. Grainger, of the Allen Film Corporation, Chicago, for Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, and Nebraska.

Samuel Krellberg, president of the Overland Film Company, was in Boston last week completing arrangements for the exploitation of "The Russian Revolution" in New England.

Mr. Krellberg has secured the services of Al. Lewis to take charge of the picture in that territory. Mr. Lewis formerly traveled for the Supreme Photoplays Corporation exploiting "Enlighten Thy Daughter."

M. H. HOFFMAN ON TOUR.

Hoffman-Foursquare exchange managers are preparing for visits from their chief, M. H. Hoffman, during the coming two weeks, for he has just started on his first extended tour, that will take him to all parts of the United States in the interest of his organization. Mr. Hoffman's trip, however, is being made largely to meet personally the many leading exhibitors who want to discuss with him important matters connected with Hoffman-Foursquare plans, particularly the marketing of the big William J. Flynn serial supreme, "The Eagle's Eye," co-starring King Baggot and Marguerite Snow.

SECOND U. S. E. B. TRADE SHOWING.

"Those Who Pay," the seven-part Thomas H. Ince drama, featuring Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman, announced as the second release of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, will be shown to the trade Wednesday, December 5, at the Broadway theater. The production will be given to exhibitors the country over, both on the franchise fixed price and wide open booking policies, not later than December 15.

G. E. HANDLING "MOTHER."

Announcement was made this week that Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., had been appointed the exclusive selling agents in the United States and Canada for "Mother." This latest feature is a McClure picture in six parts. Bearing the directorial stamp of George Loane Tucker, and starring Elizabeth Risdon, who played the leading feminine role in "The Manx Man," "Mother" promises to make an ideal state right record for itself.

DUE IN NEW YORK.

Dec. 3.—James R. Grainger, president of Allen Film Corp., Chicago, accompanied by Messrs. Allen and MacInerney of same company. At Knickerbocker.

Dec. 5.—Phil. Kauffman, Globe Features, Ltd., Montreal. At Hotel Astor.

Dec. 5.—J. L. Adams, Deseret Film Co., Salt Lake City.

Frohman Amusement Co. Activities

New Production Due for Trade Showing This week. Noble and Staff of Forty in Florida Commencing on "Birth of a Race," the Coming Sherrill Spectacle.

THOUGH the Frohman company's successor to "God's Man" is as yet untitled the trade can expect its trade showing at a Broadway theater either late this week or early next, according to the promise of General Manager Joseph Farnham. It was originally to have had its premiere at the Rialto theater the past week, but owing to the demise of Mr. Farnham's father and the stubborn cold and compulsory confinement of President Wm. L. Sherrill the presentation was laid over.

Director General Jack W. Noble and a troupe of forty left New York on Wednesday, November 28, for the studios in Tampa, Florida, to begin actual camera work on the forthcoming spectacle, "The Birth of a Race," which will mark the supreme effort of not only Director Noble, but of independent manufacturers as well. Among the party that journeyed to the Southlands with Mr. Noble were Charles Horan, who directed Mae Marsh for Goldwyn in "Polly of the Circus," and who has been retained as chief assistant to the director general; George Klein, Arthur Vaughan, Jack Rogerson, and William Harris, all directors.

F. B. MURPHY OPENS EXCHANGE.

Fred B. Murphy has just closed a contract with Frank J. Seng which gives him the distribution of "Parentage," Mr. Seng's independent feature, throughout the six New England States. This reveals the interesting fact that this popular New Englander is once more doing business at his old stand.

Mr. Murphy's first move was to organize the Liberty Film Co., with head offices in Boston, at 209 Pleasant street, and a branch office in Springfield, Mass., located at 167 Dwight street. Sam Moscow, almost as well known to New England exhibitors as Murphy himself, will be in charge of the Boston office, and William F. O'Brien will manage the Springfield exchange.

Mr. Seng, in his statement to the trade, says that he believes that every exhibitor in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and Connecticut will be glad to verify his choice of a distributor in their territory. The very fact that Mr. Murphy has promised to devote every minute of his time to the laudable enterprise of helping the exhibitors in his territory make money with "Parentage" gives this statement added news interest.

On December 5, "Parentage" will be given a trade showing in one of Boston's downtown theaters. It will be presented with full orchestra effects, using the same musical score that was prepared by Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, of New York's Rialto theater.

G. FRED FARNHAM DEAD.

The trade learned with sorrow of the death on Monday, November 26, of G. Fred Farnham, father to Joseph Farnham, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and president of the Screen Club. The elder Farnham died during an operation in the Greenwiche Hospital, and was buried from his home in Sound Beach in Evergreen Cemetery, New Haven, Conn. The deceased was 58 years old.

The senior Farnham was quite active in the trade until a year ago, having spent two years with his son when the latter conducted his business in the Candler building under the firm names of first, Joseph W. Farnham, and later, the Amalgamated Photoplay Service.

PRIEST HANDLES SPECIAL CAMPAIGN.

Robert W. Priest, of Shallenberger & Priest, will undertake the special campaign of publicity that the Mayfair Film Corporation has decided upon for New York City and its environs in behalf of "Persuasive Peggy." He has arranged a veritable broadside comprising both the daily papers and the billboard systems. The firm of Shallenberger & Priest are also the exclusive selling agents for this, the first Mayfair production.

INVITATION AUDIENCE SEES "ROMANOFFS."

The new Times theater, at Eighth avenue and Forty-second street, opened on Wednesday evening, November 21, with a special showing of Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

The showing was arranged as a special event for the opening by S. J. Berman, sales manager for the New York and northern New Jersey territory of the Brenon Distributing Corporation. The audience, an invited one, was highly impressed with Mr. Brenon's cross-section of contemporary history.

The invitation showing was Manhattan's first glimpse of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" since the production ran for three weeks at the Broadway theater. It will not be seen again in this field until it is launched on January 6, with a statewide premiere. Mr. Berman announces that at least twenty theaters will show "The Fall of the Romanoffs" simultaneously during that week.

IVAN ENLARGING SCOPE.

The attention of State Right distributors throughout the country is drawn to the fact that Ivan Film Productions have initiated the enlargement of their scope of operation. It would be well if distributors would watch the pages of The Moving Picture World for the advertising matter soon to appear. Their publicity department has been greatly enlarged, and this has been necessitated by the fact that whereas previously Ivan Abramson, with the exception of a picture or two, was the sole director for the company, the retention of the services of three directors, viz., William Humphrey, Edmund Lawrence and F. J. Grandon, would, under common circumstances, demand three times the amount of labor that the publicity department would be charged with. But as it is the aim of I. E. Chadwick to have Ivan Film Productions' output in every hamlet of the Union and have every territorial right in the country efficiently looked after, no limit on the advertising and publicity has been put.

Unquestionably the high standing of the directors in charge of the productions is a guarantee in itself of the high class output to be expected. At a very early date announcement of stars with whom contracts are pending will be made, as well as negotiations for rights of plays and books that will soon be concluded. In a word, the company, feeling that as an independent organization the themes of the subjects to be pictured must be more pretentious than those of other companies, will not spare expense or labor to make their product stand out above contemporary screen effort.

STRONGE HEADS NEW COMPANY.

Nat S. Stronge, formerly head of the publicity department of the Vitagraph company, and for the last ten days with Hiller & Wilk, arranging the special publicity campaign for their new offering, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksmen," began on Monday, December 3, as the head of a new firm which will offer moving pictures of a military nature in an entirely new way. Quarters have been engaged on the ninth floor of the Longacre building, whence a full announcement for the trade is expected to emanate in time for our next issue.

"RAFFLES" GIVEN TRADE SHOWING.

"Raffles," the L. Lawrence Weber Photoplays, Inc., state right production being exploited by Hiller & Wilk, was given its trade showing at the Miles theaterette, in the Candler building, on Wednesday afternoon, November 28, before a large audience that expressed much praise for the work as they filed out. It is an interesting side-light on the salability of this John Barrymore feature that several sales were made prior to said showing and quite a few more were recorded immediately after the premiere.

SAWYER IN NEW ENGLAND.

Arthur Sawyer, president of the General Enterprises, Inc., ate his Thanksgiving meal in Boston among his folks at their home near Plymouth Rock. Pleasure, however, was only one part of his trip, wherefore the trade can expect to hear further particulars upon his return to New York. Now that the G. E. forces have practically finished their work in behalf of "The Warrior," both Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Lubin, the other half of the concern, are now specializing on "The Liar," featuring Jane Gail, and "Mother," featuring Elizabeth Risdon.

KEY FILM PLAY BEGINS WORKING.

Wednesday, December 12, "The Fringe of Society," a Hoffman-Foursquare feature, will have its first New York showing at Marcus Loew's New York theater. "The Fringe of Society" is the first picture drama to be written by Pierce V. R. Key, a lineal descendant of Francis Scott Key, the author of the "Star Spangled Banner," and who has been for years the music critic for the New York Morning World. Co-starring are Ruth Roland, Milton Sills, Leah Baird and J. Herbert Frank.

MORE HONOR TO OLCOTT.

The Executive Committee of Hero Land, in progress at the Grand Central Palace, has selected Sidney Olcott's production, "The Belgian," starring Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant, as the moving picture feature at the bazaar on December 5, on which date Belgium Day will be observed. "The Belgian" was selected by Mme. W. T. Hali, wife of the Belgian Consul in New York, who viewed the Olcott production at a recent testimonial showing in honor of the King of Belgium at the Ritz-Carlton on the occasion of the King's birthday.

"ZEP" RECEIVES HEAVY BOOKINGS.

The U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation has closed contracts with the heads of all the Eastern vaudeville and picture theater circuits for week runs for their first special release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid." Nine big circuits in all will show the "Zep" production in the East, namely, the Loew, Fox, Moss, Poli, Gordon, Proctor, Keith, Nixon-Nirdlinger, and the Hulsey chain will present it in the South. The aggregate bookings involve upward of 300 days.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

VERA COLODNA RUSSIAN "VAMP."

THE most wonderful "ingenue-vampire" ever seen on the screen is promised in the title role of "Her Sister's Rival," which Pathe announces for December 9. This is a Russian Art Film in five reels, and it marks the first appearance here of Vera Colodna, who is described as "the girl with more appeal to every sense of all that is beautiful in the human face and form than any star ever presented on the screens of America."

This girl is confidently expected by Pathe officials to prove such a sensation that arrangements have already been made looking toward surmounting the difficulties to be encountered in bringing her to this country.

"Her Sister's Rival" is looked upon as the best of the Russian Art Films yet released, the others being "The Painted Doll" and "The Queen of Spades," both featuring Ivan Mozukin, the greatest screen star of Russia.

In addition to having Miss Colodna in the title role, "Her Sister's Rival" is said to be "a powerful story with a thrill of real drama in every scene, a class of production that is extremely high."

It tells of two girls, one the daughter and the other the adopted daughter of a very rich factory owner, Madame Kromoff. Both fall in love with a handsome, spendthrift Prince. He married Mary, the daughter, because she is the one who has the big dowry, though he really loves Neta. He squanders his wife's money, and breaks her heart by forging his brother-in-law's name to a check; he is in danger of prison and disgrace. In a gripping climactic scene, rather than see her daughter's name dragged in the dirt, Madam Kromoff shoots him, and owing to his financial difficulties it is believed that he committed suicide.

The suspense in the picture is maintained till the last scene, as it is impossible to foretell the outcome.

INSERTS NEW TOUCH TO FINISHED PICTURE.

The person who stated that the plays of the speaking stage are superior to those of the motion picture screen because it is possible to improve them constantly after the original production is made will have to take note of an artistic touch just given by Jane Cowl to her first Goldwyn starring vehicle, "The Spreading Dawn."

Miss Cowl, who is now appearing on the speaking stage in her own play, "Lilac Time," lately gave a performance for Uncle Sam's student officers at the great military mobilization camp at Plattsburg, N. Y., and while she was there she found an opportunity to get some special scenes of an authentic military character that would fit in with splendid effect in her first picture play, "The Spreading Dawn."

Accordingly she telephoned from Plattsburg to the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, N. J., to have a cameraman sent at once. When that functionary arrived he found that Miss Cowl had everything in readiness for the taking of the pictures. The results were splendid, and were at once incorporated in the many prints that are now doing service over the country through the Goldwyn distributing offices.

FIRST ISSUE OF "BRENON'S EXHIBITOR."

The first issue of a new house organ, "Brenon's Exhibitor," has just made its appearance. It is a weekly, intended for the film theater managers of New York and northern New Jersey, and published by the Brenon Distribution Corporation, of No. 509 Fifth Avenue, which is controlled by Herbert Brenon.

"ALIMONY" RELEASED THIS WEEK.

The organization and equipment of the nation wide distributing service which is to handle the exchange end of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's business have at last been accomplished, according to a statement issued this week from the Circuit's New York offices.

"Alimony" will be the first release and is said to be available immediately following its exhibition in the Circuit's own theatres. The Circuit's purchasing board expect unusually good results from this "dark horse," which they regard as one of the big "finds" of the year.

Other releases to follow are Mme. Petrova in "Daughter of Destiny," which has been held up until December 23rd to allow ample time for laboratory work; Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets" follows about Jan. 1; Chaplin's first "Signature Protected" comedy on the comedian's million-dollar contract will be ready some time early in the new year.

BLACKTON TO MAKE "WILD YOUTH."

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, producer for Paramount of the novels of Sir Gilbert Parker, the first of which "The Judgment House," went to the public November 19, is actively engaged in his preparations to leave for California, where he will make "Wild Youth" at the Lasky studios.

Following his departure, "The World for Sale" second of the Parker novels to be translated to the screen by Mr. Blackton, will be released by Paramount in January.

"MY LITTLE BOY" (Bluebird).

"My Little Boy" will be the unusually attractive Christmas release at the Broadway theater the week of December 2, when Elliott J. Clawson's skillful adaptation of Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" and Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue" will be presented with an all-star cast, including little Zoe Rae, Ella Hall, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer. It is one of the most important attractions that have ever been presented at the Broadway theater and one which is said to be unusually timely in essentials of human interest and gripping appeal. Elsie Jane Wilson is the director and the story takes grown-up and child back into the land of visions which everyone experiences and which makes over a crabbed pessimistic, child-hating old man in the deliciously human story, "My Little Boy." The child, Clara, had a dream that some day she would be married and have a little boy whose name would be Paul, but she would always call him "little boy blue," even when he grew up to be a man. In her picture of the future she saw a country house covered with ivy and set far back in the big yard.

The boy Fred had a dream that he was going to have a wife and love her very much. The wife that he saw in his dream looked just like the girl who was dreaming of her "little boy blue." Left in the care of his Uncle Oliver, an old misanthrope, Fred's childhood and manhood would have been a hideous nightmare had not a number of very human and unusual situations which make "My Little Boy" a new Christmas epic, arisen.

"THE LAST LEAF" (General Film).

Three favorite "O. Henry" players return to the screen this week in the current General Film "O. Henry" release, "The Last Leaf." Mildred Manning, star in many of the early "O. Henry" pictures, makes her reappearance after an absence of several months. She is joined in "The Last Leaf" by Patsy DeForest and Bernard Siegel, both of whom are well known for their work in "O. Henry" pictures. Miss DeForest's last appearance was in "A Night in New Arabia," while Mr. Siegel is remembered in "The Love Philtre of Ikey Schoenstein."

Scene from "The Last Leaf" (General Film).

"The Last Leaf" is an exquisite and intimate drama of life in the Washington Square artists' colony in New York City. Old Behrman, after a lifetime of effort to paint a great masterpiece, finds the opportunity to fulfill his ambition during the illness of "Miss Johnsy" (Miss Manning), even though he sacrifices his life in doing it. "Miss Johnsy," too ill to care for life, tells her companion she will die when the last leaf falls from the vine just outside the window. Gruff, kind-hearted Behrman hears of it, and that night in a storm paints his masterpiece, a leaf which is so realistic and holds on so tenaciously in the wintry blasts that the young artist is persuaded to make a successful fight for life. The old painter, however, becomes a victim of pneumonia and passes away in a hospital.

"JULES OF THE STRONG HEART" (Paramount).

Surrounding George Beban in his next Paramount vehicle, "Jules of the Strong Heart," in which he creates the role of Jules Lemaire, a French Canadian trapper, is a cast which it may be claimed is superior in every respect. Mr. Beban is seen in the atmosphere of a lumber camp in the great north woods where men of rough but stout-hearted character ply their rugged trades vigorously amid conditions calling for virility and physical prowess of the most pronounced description.

In the cast will be seen Raymond Hatton, Charles Ogle, Guy Oliver, Ernest Joy, H. P. Carpenter, Edward Martin and James Neill. The leading feminine role is played by Helen Eddy, and Donald Crisp is the director of this production, which promises to be one of the most successful in the career of Mr. Beban.

JEWELS FOR DECEMBER.

Officials of Jewel Productions, Inc., have made known their plans for December. These include the release of at least two features, both of which will come to the Broadway theater during the month. The first of these is a story of life in a mining town in which the busy tendrils of a newspaper and its antecedents of politics and trickery enter. This has been titled "The Grand Passion" and Dorothy Phillips is its star. Included in the cast are Lon Chaney, William Stowell and Jack Mulhall as the featured players. This story first appeared in "Adventure" and was titled "The Boss of Powderville." Thomas Addison is the author and Ida Mary Park has made the screen version.

The second Jewel release for the month of December is announced as "K." It is a Lois Weber production after the famous Mary Roberts Rinehart novel of the same name, which first appeared as a serial in McClure's and which afterward attracted such widespread attention. Mildred Harris, who first made her appearance as a Jewel-Lois Weber star in "The Price of a Good Time," again stars in this feature with True Boardman playing opposite. No additional Jewel features have been announced for December.

"THE AUCTION BLOCK" (Goldwyn).

In Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," released throughout North America, December 2, as a Goldwyn subject, students of the psychology of crookedness ought to find living illustrations of examples customarily expatiated upon in dry text by authorities on the subject.

The gentle art of the "frame-up" and the "double-cross" as practiced in some strata of society is exemplified in realistic action in the course of the story, which has been described as embodying an undercurrent narrative of "blackmail piped with thuggery." These incidents are but color for a story delightful in its essentials—a story of true love born of trials and temptation.

VIVIAN MARTIN IN "THE FAIR BARBARIAN."

To interpret the many characters in the delightful story of English country life the decorum of which is upset by the advent of a dashing little American girl, "The Fair Barbarian," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, a large cast of capable players has been chosen to support Vivian Martin in the production of the picture for Paramount.

Miss Martin appears in the role of Octavia Bassett and the other members of the cast are Charles Gerrard, Douglas MacLean, Al Paget, Jane Wolfe, Helen Jerome Eddy, Josephine Crowell, Charles H. Geldert, May Busch, Elinore Hancock, John Burton, William Hutchinson and Ruth Hanforth.

The picture gives Miss Martin a chance to romp through five reels with that vivacity that is a large part of her charm. The situations are many and amusing, with little touches of pathos by way of contrast. Edith Kennedy made the adaptation and the direction was by Robert Thornby. The picture will be released by Paramount December 17.

KAUFMAN DIRECTING ELSIE FERGUSON.

The production of Elsie Ferguson's new screen vehicle, "The Song of Songs," an adaptation from Edward Sheldon's well known play of the same name, has been intrusted to Joe Kaufman. Mr. Kaufman attended the first night of this play at the Eltinge Theater three years ago and liked it so much that he saw the stage presentation four times since. By strange coincidence Miss Ferguson, who now stars in the film, was also present on the opening night of the play.

Another coincidence in connection with the screening of "The Song of Songs" is the fact that Frank Losee, who now appears in chief support of Miss Ferguson in the film, was scheduled to portray that character on the stage, but on account of sudden illness could not fulfill his engagement.

Pathe Program

Three Scintillating Stars Head the Schedule with the Argus Pictorial, a Scenic and The News Reel.

IRENE CASTLE, Doris Kenyon, and Mollie King are the box office stars on Pathe's program for the week of December 16. "Vengeance is Mine," a Pathe Plays special in five reels, is the feature in which Irene Castle is starred. It was produced by Astra, directed by Frank Crane, and the scenario was written by Howard Irving Young from the novel by John A. Moroso. This is a strong drama of society and high finance, fourth of the series of Castle-Pathe Plays; all big features complete in five reels.

A splendid cast supports Irene Castle in "Vengeance is Mine." Because of his fine work in "Arcady" and "Sylvia," Elliott Dexter was again engaged as leading man. The rest of the big cast includes Edwin Hoyt, Frank Sheridan, Reginald Mason, Fred Teden, Ethel Grey Terry, Frank Monroe, and Julia Stewart. The star is given numerous opportunities to wear beautiful clothes in this picture, which has also many thrills.

Doris Kenyon is starred in "The Hidden Hand" No. 4, "The False Locket," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, and Mahlon Hamilton, produced in two reels by Pathe.

A clever plot put into effect by the Hidden Hand causes Doris to doubt Ramsey, who professes his loyalty. That night she surprises the false Ramsey at the safe. She grabs him, believing him to be really the man she is beginning both to love and distrust. He binds her to a chair. Breaking open the safe he takes the explosive packet, inserts the locket, and is about to open it, when he is mysteriously shot. Terror stricken, Doris looks toward the window, and to her amazement sees the Hidden Hand.

Mollie King appears in the 14th chapter of "The Seven Pearls" serial, "The Tower of Death," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra.

The suspense of the thirteenth episode is heightened in this one. Ilma has but one more day to recover the Seven Pearls or be taken to the Sultan's Harem. With the seventh pearl in her possession, she is cornered by Perry and Stayne, and, in attempting to escape them, falls into a water tank by the side of the railroad. Perry and Stayne fight, since the latter wants to rescue Ilma and get the Sultan's reward. As Stayne draws his gun and fires at Perry his shot hits the tank, it explodes, falling to pieces. Harry falls to the ground stunned. Perry is knocked flat. Where is Ilma?

Another feature of the program is Argus Pictorial No. 3, a screen magazine in one reel produced by Argus Laboratories, Inc. There are four remarkable articles featured in this screen magazine. The first is "Coral Limestone Rocks," showing how the Coral Islands in the tropic seas are formed. The second is "Crystallization," in which you watch through the microscope the process of crystallization of salts such as salicin, sulphate of zinc, and nitrate of silver. The third is "Tied Dyeing," one of the oldest human crafts, demonstrated under the direction of Professor Edward J. Thatcher, Fine Arts Department of Columbia University. And a touch of humor is provided by Helena Smith Dayton's Clay Folk in "Banquets," in which the amusing antics of the guests at a "stag" dinner are cleverly burlesqued.

"Along the Vardar" (European Turkey), Pathe colored travel, and "A Fresh-Water Pirate," Pathe colored educational, form an interesting split-reel novelty.

An International Cartoon and Educational split-reel and Hearst Pathe News No. 102 and No. 103 complete this program.

DIRECTION OF "LAND OF PROMISE" EXHIBITS SKILL.

In the forthcoming production of "The Land of Promise," starring Billie Burke, and to be released by Paramount December 10, much credit is given to Joseph Kaufman, the director, for his remarkable work in securing realistic and beautiful effects. It is a picture, according to all report, that called for unusual directorial skill. The wonderful wheat fields of Canada, the Rocky Mountains, the farming lands of the Dominion—form the picturesque background for the story of life in a comparatively primitive location.

Then, too, in the tensely emotional moments, the humorous interludes, so delightfully enacted by Miss Burke and the sterling players supporting her, the artistic note of the direction is particularly apparent. Mr. Kaufman, himself is pleased with the picture, which he counts as one of the most satisfactory from every point of view he has directed.

Coupled with the talent of the star, the strength of the supporting cast and the excellence of the story—adapted from W. Somerset Maugham's stage play in which Miss Burke starred—is the superior direction by Mr. Kaufman, and the result should be a picture that will live long in the annals of the screen.

ANN AT WORK ON "CALVARY ALLEY."

"Calvary Alley," the latest novel by Alice Hegan Rice, whose famous story, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," has become a classic of its kind, has been chosen as the next Paramount picture starring Ann Pennington. It is a story filled with pathos, genuine comedy and human interest in large measure.

Charles Giblyn has been secured to direct Miss Pennington in this new picture. From all appearances "Calvary Alley" should constitute a production above the average in entertaining qualities and dramatic interest.

VICTOR MOORE IN "TOOTHACHES AND HEART-ACHES."

On December 3 Klever Pictures, Inc., will release their newest comedy, "Toothaches and Heartaches," with Victor Moore. The comedy was written by Thos. J. Gray and directed by Chester M. DeVonde.

When Vic married Cupid played a dirty trick on him and handed him a lemon in the garden of love. At the beginning of the comedy Vic is suffering from a terrible toothache, and he feels his troubles are like grapes, they come in bunches. His wife tries to soothe him, but this only makes the pain worse. They decide to go to a dentist, and on arriving Vic is confronted with no end of patients in the waiting room. This almost scares Vic off, but he sticks and is soon sitting in the chair. The dentist asks him will he take gas, to which Vic replies that he will, if the price is not too high. The dentist administers the gas and Vic passes out. As is the case most times when a person is under the influence of gas, the dreams they have take them on wonderful journeys, and it is needless to say that Vic's gas was no different.

This comedy is a laugh riot from start to finish, and is bound to go big. It is natural and yet "chuck" full of laughs, and Moore and his company get it over in good style.

A MILLION CANDLE-POWER FOR "SEVEN SWANS."

Brilliant in every respect will be "The Seven Swans," Marguerite Clark's Paramount Christmas play, which is now under way and which has taxed to its utmost even the exceptional facilities afforded at the Famous Players studio. In one scene, that representing the king's gardens, the entire studio floor is occupied and the setting is built up in terraces reaching to the ceiling. In this amphitheater, on a raised platform surrounded by seven sun dials, the dance of the hours from "La Giacomina" was interpreted by professional dancers from "Chu Chin Chow"; from "The Riviera," and the Metropolitan opera. In addition there is one young woman from the Alhambra Music Hall in London.

The lighting for this scene probably marks a high record in this respect. Over a million candle-power was employed, including approximately four Harmer-Mark photo lights, seven arcs, twenty-six Cooper-Hewitts and sixteen Kleig lights.

J. Seale Dawley adapted the story from ancient fairy plays.

BRENON'S "EMPTY POCKETS" READY FOR RELEASE.

It is announced that "Empty Pockets," upon which Mr. Brenon has been working since the conclusion of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," is now practically finished and ready for release. It is his fourth big production within the year, and it is his second picture of this type, his first melodrama, "The Lone Wolf," having met with unqualified success.

Taken from Rupert Hughes' popular novel depicting the various phases of New York life from the tenements in the slums to the mansions on Fifth avenue, "Empty Pockets" is one of the swiftest and most timely melodramas that has ever been projected on the screen, from all accounts, and it contains above all that human appeal which moving picture audiences never fail to appreciate.

MADGE KENNEDY WORKING IN GEORGIA.

The filming of exterior scenes for Goldwyn's version of George Weston's novel, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" with Madge Kennedy as the star, is progressing satisfactorily in Georgia, according to telegraphic reports from the company, which is working on location with Savannah as headquarters.

Glucksmann Returns from Chicago

South American Film Man Makes Advantageous Contract with Western Film Co.

JACOBO GLUCKSMANN, New York manager of the house of Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires, returned from Chicago last week after a sojourn of ten days in the windy city, where he went to renew contracts with the American Film Co. and the Essanay Co. Mr. Glucksmann controls the exclusive rights in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile for both these companies' productions and reports them to be two of the most popular brands that are at present being shown in this territory.

The New York office of Max Glucksmann has been established six months, and during that time there has been a striking increase in the volume of American film that has been shipped for distribution in Argentina.

The Precision Machine Co. has shipped eighteen Simplex new models to Buenos Aires and a number of these have already been disposed of by the main office in that city. A contract has been closed by which the house of Max Glucksmann controls the exclusive rights for the Simplex machines in these rich Latin-American countries.

Jacobo Glucksmann.

Mr. Glucksmann when he came to New York spoke very little English, and in the short while that he has been here he has mastered the language and has shown a decided ability to buy American film at the best prices in the market and by dealing direct with the manufacturer or his export agent. Mr. Glucksmann is now making plans for the erection in Buenos Aires of a theater of over 3,000 seating capacity to be run on the same style as the Rialto and Strand in New York. This theater will be copied after the style of these two beautiful New York houses, and moving pictures, together with classical music, will be the sole source of the amusement. They already have one house, called the Palace theater, that seats over 1,000 people and shows a program of film that is international in scope. The house of Max Glucksmann not only has an office in New York but also has a branch office in Paris whereby their pictures are composed of the cream of the market from both Europe and the United States. Jacobo Glucksmann has decided to remain permanently in our city and will look after the needs of the Latin-American people from a New York viewpoint.

"THE GREEN SEAL" FOR CARMEL MYERS.

Charles Edmund Walk's popular novel, "The Green Seal," an absorbing and thrilling story, is being filmed at the Bluebird West Coast studios, under the direction of Stuart Paton, from the screen version by A. G. Kenyon, who recently joined the Bluebird writing staff. The book contains all the ingredients that go into the ideal picture play—suspense, strong love interest, stirring action and baffling mystery in full measure—and all of these elements have been developed and their utmost possibilities in the scenario.

Carmel Myers plays the principal feminine role, and opposite her appears Ashton Dearholt, who recently finished an engagement of two years with the American Film Company, and who makes his bow in Bluebird photoplays in "The Green Seal." In the supporting cast are Betty Schade, Harry Carter, Alfred Allen, Frank Deshon and Frank Tokanaga. One of the striking features of the production will be the elaborate Chinese settings which have been designed. Though the action occurs in an American metropolis, a band of influential Chinese plays an important part in the production, its work contributing largely to the mystery interwoven in the story.

NEW FARRAR-ARTCRAFT FILM FINISHED.

Artcraft's second Geraldine Farrar picture, "The Devil Stone," has received its final preparation for public presentation and will be released December 17. The same supporting cast which has appeared to excellent advantage in previous Farrar films is seen in this latest photoplay, including Wallace Reid, Hobart Bosworth, James Neill, Horace B. Carpenter, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton and Theodore Roberts. To Alvin Wyckoff chief of the camera staff, who has been responsible for the splendid photography of Lasky pictures, is due the credit for the exquisite effects in "The Devil Stone" and the splendid ocean views of the fisheries of Brittany.

Secret Service Serial Progressing

Whartons Have Practically Completed Cast for Chief Flynn's Big Story, and Preliminary Scenes Are Being Taken in New York.

DURING the past ten days the Whartons have been busily engaged in filming the opening episodes of their new serial, "The Eagle's Eye," written by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service, starring King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, which will be distributed through M. H. Hoffman, Inc.-Foursquare exchanges.

Scenes about New York City in which the representatives of the Imperial German Government figure socially have been taken, including the reproduction of the famous U. S. Naval Ball, which was held at the Hotel Ansonia in 1915, just prior to President Wilson's review of the Atlantic Fleet. This big affair was staged in the ball room of the Ansonia between 12:30 and 4 A. M., and was declared by several of the guests who attended the original festivities to be an exact duplicate of the scene amid which the Kaiser's agents added the finishing touches to one of their most ambitious and daring conspiracies. Several hundred people took part in the re-creation of the event, and according to the report of Leroy Baker, chief of Whartons' mechanical staff, the lighting utilized amounted to over 450,000 candle-power.

The cast of "The Eagle's Eye" is now practically complete, and in addition to Baggot and Miss Snow, who will appear as the hero and heroine, Harrison Grant and Dixie Mason, respectively, John P. Wade, William N. Bailey, Paul Everton and Bertram Marburgh have been assigned to fill important roles. George A. Lessey, well known as a stage and motion picture director, is handling most of the preliminary work under the personal supervision of Theodore W. Wharton.

Through the influence of Chief Flynn, access has been secured to locations that are now absolutely closed to other picture concerns, while excellent discretion is being used in the filming of scenes showing shipping and other activities of vital import in the conduct of the war. Exhibitors who book "The Eagle's Eye" can be assured of several thousand feet of film crammed with new interest that will not be duplicated by any other production on the market.

Courtney Ryley Cooper, one of the most successful of contemporary short-story writers, is making the screen version of Chief Flynn's expose of the Imperial German Government's propaganda and espionage in the United States.

FOX CIRCUIT PROMOTES JOE LEO.

Joe Leo, who has been for many years a prominent figure in the film world and in theatrical circles, has been appointed assistant to the general manager of the large William Fox circuit of theaters, now consisting of twenty playhouses, most of which are in New York City.

Mr. Leo was closely associated with Mr. Fox in the latter's pioneer days as a showman and as a motion picture producer. It was he who opened the first theater Mr. Fox ever had, and as the circuit grew his duties were enlarged correspondingly. For several years Mr. Leo had a booking office upon which scores of vaudeville houses relied for their acts. About three years ago he returned to the Fox forces and served at first as business manager for various companies of Fox players making feature photoplays. In this way he obtained an intimate knowledge of actual film making.

Following this work, Mr. Leo did special duty in connection with most of the Fox theaters. He has an unusually wide acquaintance among exhibitors and in the legitimate.

PATHE ANNOUNCES THE PENDLETON ROUND-UP.

The West that has almost vanished, the West that is fleeing before the advance of fences and the farmer's plough, the West that was the most picturesque and truly native of anything that America has ever evolved, that West is to be seen in a remarkable three-reel Pathe special, "The Eighth Annual Round-up, Pendleton, Oregon," which will be released on December 30. One ordinarily thinks of a melodrama as furnishing the most in the way of action and thrills, but this picture is so crowded with what in circus parlance are known as "death-defying deeds" as to be in a class by itself.

In the picture are shown such thrillers as broncho busting, wild horse racing, bull-dogging steers, horse-breaking by some of the famous cow-girls of the West, squaw races, roping cattle and riding them. The observer soon becomes conscious of the great danger to life and limb that these contests impose. There are several instances where men and girls are thrown so violently to the ground before the camera that they lie senseless and are taken away to the hospital.

DE MILLE AT WORK ON BIG SERIES.

Cecil B. De Mille has commenced preparatory work on the production of "The Whispering Chorus," from the novel by Perley Poore Sheehan. This will be the first of the series of special De Mille super-productions for Artcraft release, featuring the artistic accomplishments of this talented director as well as the work of exceptional casts of well known artists. The Artcraft release schedule calls for four of these special De Mille subjects during the year.

For the first picture a number of players already have been selected, including Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter and Raymond Hatton.

Triangle's Weekly Schedule

J. Barney Sherry in "Fanatics" with Olga Grey, One of Screen's Most Alluring Sirens; Followed by "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," Featuring Roy Stewart.

THE Triangle program for the week of December 9 offers features certain to attract attention. "Fanatics," with J. Barney Sherry in the leading role, supported by Olga Grey and Donald Fullen, is scheduled as the first release. "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," with Roy Stewart as the star and Fritz Ridgeway supporting, will follow.

In "Fanatics" the tense story of a man's desire for "silks, satins, wine and women" is presented. The beautiful Olga Grey, who recently returned to Triangle, appears as the adventuress whose machinations lure one man to death and whose charm glances off the armor of another more firmly in control of his destiny. Miss Grey is an unusual type, possessing all the appealing Slavic traits of her Hungarian blood. Her work with Douglas Fairbanks in "Double Trouble," "Jim Bludsoe," and with Henry Walthall in "The Pillars of Society," recommends her for the exacting role in "Fanatics." "Fanatics" was written by John Lynch. The scenario is by Joseph Roach and the play was produced by Raymond Wells.

The results of a country school teacher's efforts to convert a ranch owner and two-gun man are shown in "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Roy Stewart, whose work in Triangle productions has attracted considerable attention of late, plays the part of Jim Benton. Fritz Ridgeway is the school teacher.

In the Keystone Comedy, "The Grave Undertaking," George Binns and Lloyd Bacon are both very much in love with Maude Wayne. It is a battle of wits between both for the hand of the fair maiden. But one day Maude imagines she sees Lloyd carrying on with another, and in order to get back at him showers all her attentions on Binns. Lloyd can't stand this and he attempts to commit suicide. When two undertakers, both very hard up for want of business, arrive to care for Lloyd, the broken-hearted suitor begins to grow nervous. The undertakers depart, Lloyd stands up, coffin and all, and after being extracted from his "packing," he prevents George from securing a fortune that he (Lloyd) has inherited while he was "dead." Of course Bacon "brings home the bacon."

"Their Straying Feet" and "When War Meant Peace" will also be released on the regular program for December 9 as one-reel Triangle Komedies.

"HIS ROBE OF HONOR" COMPLETED.

Henry B. Walthall's first Paralta play, "His Robe of Honor," written by Ethel and James Dorrance and adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lemothe, was recently completed at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, Cal., and the first print was received in New York on Thursday of last week.

"His Robe of Honor" is an absorbing account of love, law and politics in metropolitan New York of to-day. It is a daring exposure of the corruption of certain elements of the bench and bar by political and corporation interests. It is a bold work of fiction based on facts, and for truth and timeliness it has not its like in any fiction of to-day. In the role of Julian Randolph, the shyster lawyer, who is a tool in the hands of a great political machine, and who, through the refining influence of a woman of noble instincts abandons his party and becomes an upright judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, Mr. Walthall has found a role particularly suited for the style of acting which has won for him his greatest laurels.

In this photoplay Mr. Walthall has two leading women. Miss Mary Charleson, who has appeared opposite him in many of his greatest successes of the past, is seen in the role of Roxana Frisbee, an adventuress who assists the lawyer in his underhand methods. The role of Laura Nelson, the girl who awakens his nobler instincts, has been allotted to Lois Wilson, whose work in J. Warren Kerrigan's first Paralta play, "A Man's Man," received the unstinted praise of all the critics who have reviewed the film.

The remainder of the supporting cast includes Noah Berry, Jr., who plays the part of the political boss. Eugene Pallette appears in the role of his younger brother, who faces the electric chair on a murder charge, and whose case is fought by Julian Randolph; J. J. Dowling as Bruce Nelson, and Ray Laidlow as Robert Partland, attorneys for the traction company, which the shyster lawyer has bled unmercifully with his damage cases, and Fred Montague as Million Mulligan, one of the gangsters.

"TYPHOON" GLANTZBERG IN THE SOUTH.

Ernst Glantzberg, president and chief engineer of the Typhoon Fan Company, is traveling through the South, and, as usual, is booking orders right and left for the installation of Typhoon cooling and ventilating systems. The consensus of opinion among theater managers throughout the South seems to be that because of the moderately cool summer we had this past year we are due for a long stretch of torrid weather next year. Many of these managers are getting ready now, as may be seen from the fact that they are equipping their houses with Typhoons. Some of these managers, of course, are Typhoonizing their theaters now not only because of the jump it will give them on next summer's hot weather, but also to ventilate their houses at this time of the year.

ZUKOR AND ROTHAPFEL VISIT INCE.

During his sojourn in California Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, visited the Thomas H. Ince studios. S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the New York Rialto Theater, was present.

While Mr. Ince was conducting his guests about the studio William S. Hart, accompanied by a score of his cowpunchers, whirled into the lot, after three weeks in the mountains.

Following the interchange of greetings the four representative men were requested to pose for a photograph.

At the left of the picture is seen the redoubtable "Bill" Hart; next is Thomas H. Ince, producer; then Adolph Zukor, and then S. L. Rothapfel, the well known exhibitor of Manhattan.

EDNA GOODRICH IN WALL STREET STORY.

What happens to a financier who introduces casual financial friends into the bosom of his family is the basis of a new drama, "Her Second Husband," produced by Mutual and starring Edna Goodrich, one of the best known of the speaking stage stars whose allegiance has been transferred to the screen.

Miss Goodrich has been given a wonderful opportunity in "Her Second Husband," which reveals the topsy-turveydom caused by abnormal stock market conditions which permitted all sorts of people to make large fortunes over night and gave them the chance to invade social centers to which they had not previously aspired.

The new Goodrich play is said to be one of the most thrilling of modern stories of "The Street." The wife, portrayed by Miss Goodrich, is placed in an impossible position by her husband's determination to play his social assets against his financial liabilities.

A situation which compels a one-time exclusive stock broker to entertain his former chauffeur in his own home and to entertain a proposition of marriage for the hand of his favorite sister of course involves humiliating aspects, but when the chauffeur happens to be a war bride millionaire, why what's a poor banker to do?

"BROADWAY LOVE" (Bluebird).

W. Carey Wonderly's story, "Broadway Love," has been translated to screen uses by Ida May Park who also directed Dorothy Phillips in the star role. This will be a Bluebird of forthcoming release, but the date of distribution has not been definitely filed; it will probably be late in January before the offering will reach the regular schedule.

The story of "Broadway Love" was originally published in a popular magazine and reflects the career of a country girl who advances to interesting and exciting experiences through the medium of her start on the road to fame as a chorus girl in musical comedy. William Stowell, who has long been Miss Phillips' leading man, will head the supporting company in which Lon Chaney will also be featured. Harry Von Meter, William Burress, Gladys Tennyson, Eve Southern and Juanita Hansen will be among others in the assisting organization.

UNIVERSAL WEEKLY TRADE SHOWINGS.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company will show a Butterfly and Bluebird feature for the benefit of the trade at the Broadway theater every Friday morning beginning December 7. Mr. Laemmle, President of Universal and Director General of Bluebird, believes that exhibitors will take advantage of these showings, as they make it easy for them to see the pictures before they book them.

Comedies at Triangle-Keystone Studios

Five Directors Working Hard on Productions—Abundance of Material Being Prepared—Two New Additions to Scenario Staff Announced.

TRIANGLE-KEYSTONE director Reggie Morris is making final scenes this week for his first comedy featuring Harry Gribbon. "Dancers and Dimples" is the title of the production, and it is thought it will even surpass the Western comedy recently completed by Morris.

Director of Production Albert Glassmire is preparing a new story for Director Morris, and it is expected work will be started this week. The story calls for a great deal of action in a roller skating rink, and as this requires a very smooth floor, it is likely a skating rink set will be erected on the immense new comedy stage at Culver City. Thus far, the cast that has been selected for the skating rink comedy will be headed by Harry Gribbon, supported by Claire Anderson, Franklyn Bond, Dora Rodgers, Myrtle Lind, Mario Bianchi and Dorothy Hagar.

Director Herman Raymaker has his Sea Captain story well under way and plans to start on the boat scene at San Pedro Harbor next week. The leading roles in the new story will be played by Billy Franey, Dale Fuller, Maud Wayne, Milton Sims, Jim Donnelly, Lloyd Bacon and Frank Opperman. Dale Fuller's parrot also has a prominent role in the story.

With one of the largest cafe sets ever erected in the Triangle-Keystone studios, Director Charles Avery "shot" one of the greatest rough and tumble fights ever used in motion pictures last week, for his current comedy, "Courts and Cabarets." The cast in Director Avery's story includes Max Asher, Marianna de la Torre, Myrtle Reeves, Arthur Moon, Baldy Belmont, Peggy Pearce, Milburn Morante and Eddie Gribbon.

Director William Beaudine has his piano mover story near completion. The cast includes Harry Depp, Paddy McGuire, Sylvia Ashton, Ruth Langston, Nate Salmon, Jack Henderson and Ed. Baker. Beaudine is getting some real action in this picture.

Director Walter Edwards is making a Triangle-Keystone comedy that promises to be a whirlwind of action. In the Edwards' comedy, Alatia Marton and Rose Carter will be seen as artists' models, which is probably one reason why everyone on the comedy "lot" not otherwise engaged have been "watching" Director Edwards. Others in the cast of the picture are Milburn Morante, Martin Kinney, George French, Sylvia Ashton, Dorothy Hagar and Fred Mack.

Ferris Hartman and Harry Wulze are the latest additions to the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff. Mr. Hartman was formerly a Triangle-Keystone director and just recently completed a five-reel comedy drama at the Triangle Culver City studios. When producing comedies, Mr. Hartman practically wrote all his own stories and his services as a staff writer at the Triangle-Keystone studios is considered a valuable acquisition by Director of Production Albert Glassmire.

Harry Wulze was also formerly with the Keystone organization and before re-signing with the comedy forces had been free-lancing.

HOLMES IN "UNEASY MONEY."

George K. Spoor will offer, early in January, Mr. Taylor Holmes in "Uneasy Money" as the first of a series of ultra features to be released at various times regardless of any fixed program.

The story is from the pen of Pelham Grenville Wodehouse and ran as a serial in The Saturday Evening Post. It gives Mr. Holmes unusual opportunities and undoubtedly is his best screen production.

The story opens in England, where Mr. Holmes as "Lord Dawlish," is bequeathed a million pounds by an aged gentleman whom he cured of the habit of slicing at golf. A niece and nephew in America are cut off with a shilling and a hundred dollars, respectively, and when Lord Dawlish hears of it he makes an endeavor to restore to them their just portion.

Such an endeavor is not easily accomplished, however, and the incidents of his efforts are amusing and numerous.

In the cast with Mr. Holmes are Miss Virginia Valli as "Elizabeth Nutcombe," the niece; Arthur Bates as "Nuttie Nutcombe"; Virginia Bowker as "Lady Wetherby," Fred Tiden as "Lord Wetherby," Lillian Drew as "Claire Edmont," James F. Fulton as "James Pickering," and Rod La Rocque as "Johnny Gates," an American newspaperman.

"LES MISERABLES" TO SUCCEED "CLEOPATRA."

"Cleopatra," the William Fox Standard Picture, which has been running at the Lyric theater, New York city, since fall, will make way there soon for William Farnum in "Les Misérables." The picture during this seven weeks has had one of the most successful showings of any of the Fox productions that has been given its premiere in a big Broadway district theater.

During the last week or two copies of the production also have been run in other cities. It was the attraction for one week at the Belasco theater in Washington, D. C., and did a business proportionately equivalent to that done in New York. It also was shown with similar results at the Teck theater in Buffalo and in Schenectady, N. Y.

MacMahon's Lists Ready

Is Supplying the Trade with Addresses of Authors, Editors and Syndicates.

HENRY MACMAHON, who is conducting a bureau of general literary service to the industry, with headquarters at 321 West Fifty-fifth street, New York, has completed his lists of authors, editors, syndicates and feature writers, and now offers them to scenario and publicity departments. He says of his plan:

"I aim to facilitate the relations between the world of letters and the world of pictorial art. For example, I have compiled the names and addresses of the 600 most distinguished fiction authors in the United States. The executive or scenario chief in search of filming rights of current fiction will find this a guide. The author of any story that strikes his fancy can be located by means of the list, and the rights secured without delay.

"The service rendered to publicity departments is to put them in touch with the men behind the scenes of newspaperdom. Hundreds of tons of useless motion picture mail are dumped on the desks of dramatic editors throughout the country. The wastage is enormous and will have to be stopped in the course of construction brought on by the war. My suggestion for economy is that publicity departments cut out 'dead' names, specialize their stories to meet the wants of special mediums, and above all make use of the news, magazine and feature syndicates and of the writers that contribute to them and to the weekly and monthly magazines. A single good story landed through these channels will do more good than thousands of pieces of routine press matter that are regularly mailed out and as regularly consigned, with the fat, bulky envelopes unopened, to the office cat.

"My list of 500 newspaper editors standardize a careful selection of those daily mediums which encourage and support the motion picture. As even more valuable, however, I regard the shorter list of feature syndicates and writers and editors of magazines. These are the real men behind the scenes, the syndicate or 'chain' story being automatically reprinted everywhere. I offer the three lists at a nominal figure, as my idea is more to help the entire industry than to gain immediate personal reward."

HARRY CAREY WESTERN UNIVERSALS.

Having identified Harry Carey with features that especially involved Western atmosphere, wild riding and straight shooting, the Universal is undertaking a campaign of promotion for this particular style of photoplaying in which Mr. Carey will be coupled with the production of a series of special features. Jack Ford, who has directed the dashing horseman for many months, will produce these attractions from stories he will invent as collaborator with George Hively.

The first of these special productions will be "Bucking Broadway," a combination of episodes that link the Great White Way with the grassy plains. Molly Malone, L. M. Wells and Vesta Pegg will have the chief roles in Mr. Carey's support and there will be a large cavalcade of horsemen to raise the dust and animate the scenes. "Bucking Broadway" will "buck" the asphalt and subway canyons of New York's main street during the current days at the Broadway theater as a prelude to general circulation Dec. 24. Universal believes that in this feature it will bring to exhibitors something to create a Merry Christmas at the box office.

"The Phantom Riders" has been prepared by Messrs. Ford and Hively as the second "special" in which Harry Carey is to appear late in January. Molly Malone will continue as Mr. Carey's leading lady in "The Phantom Riders," with Buck Connors heading the saddle cavalcade. Bill Gettinger and Vesta Pegg will also be prominent in the support.

ALICE BRADY MAKING "WOMAN AND WIFE."

Alice Brady's second Select production, in which she plays the role of Jane Eyre, is now finished and cutting of the film is under way. The screen version has been taken from an adaptation by Paul West of Charlotte Brontë's famous novel, and owing to certain necessary departures from the plot of the original story, the book title, "Jane Eyre," is not being used. "The Lifted Cross" was first suggested as a title for the photodrama, but has since been definitely rejected and "Woman and Wife" adopted in its stead.

"Woman and Wife" has been screened under the able direction of Edward Jose, who directed Miss Brady's first Select production, "Her Silent Sacrifice." In her interpretation of the appealing and unhappy Jane Miss Brady gives a fine bit of characterization and rises splendidly to the emotional demands of the part. She is competently supported by Elliott Dexter in the role of Rochester, Jane Eyre's fascinating and unhappy lover, and by a brilliant cast which includes Helen Lindroth, Victor Benoit and Helen Green. "Woman and Wife" will be distributed through the Select exchanges.

"THAIS" NOW IN ASSEMBLING STAGE.

Mary Garden has completed the final scenes of Goldwyn's master-production of Anatole France's "Thais." The work of assembling and titling the thousands of feet of film is now well under way at the Fort Lee studios and trade prints of the production soon will be in the hands of exhibitors throughout North America.

Kipling's "Naulahka" by Pathe

Scenario by George B. Seitz, Direction of George Fitzmaurice—Big Cast Includes Doraldina, Antonio Moreno, Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick, Mary Alden, J. H. Gilmour.

WHAT is characterized as the biggest special feature Pathe has ever made, a picture that stands out in the same relation to others as "Les Miserables" did when first presented, is announced for the first time in Rudyard Kipling's famous story of romance and adventure, "The Naulahka."

lahka." The scenario was written by George B. Seitz and the picture made by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, a combination which has been responsible for a number of the best features made in the past year or so.

One of the most carefully chosen casts is a feature of the big film and the names include Doraldina, the famous Hawaiian dancer, who has taken New York by storm, who makes her screen debut in "The Naulahka"; Antonio Moreno, known as one of the most popular heroes in motion pictures; Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick, Mary Alden and J. H. Gilmour.

George B. Seitz's script of "The Naulahka" is a splendid piece of writing, having been read and O. K'd by Rudyard Kipling without a change.

Doraldina plays the role of the Gypsy Queen about whose machinations to place her son on the throne revolves the exciting story in which two young Americans find themselves playing such important parts. In her role she performs a number of amazing native Indian dances, on which she is an authority.

Antonio Moreno's role is that of Nic Tarver, a wideawake, energetic young American of the great West.

Warner Oland's role is that of the Maharajah, a powerful Prince of India and owner of the fabulously precious stone known throughout the world as "The Naulahka."

Helene Chadwick plays Kate Sheriff, a pretty young native of Topaz, who loves Nick Tarvin and is loved by him, but feels that she ought to be doing more in the world than simply marrying the man she wants and settling down. She gives a charming interpretation of this girl with a "mission" who finds out in the end that her man is the most important thing after all, and it is she that makes his ultimate triumph complete.

Mary Alden plays the first wife of the Maharajah, whose son is the rightful heir to the throne, and despite the desperate efforts of the Gypsy who has stolen her husband's love to steal the palace also, she wins final victory through the fearless intervention of Nick and Kate.

J. H. Gilmour has the part of Mr. Mutrie, millionaire president of the railroad in whose hands rests the ultimate fate of Topaz.

The story, delightfully simple in its basic theme, thus has every element for success. It deals with America and with India, with the Great West and the Great East. It presents characters we all know and love and others of which we have read and hate. It has romance, adventure, action and speed, and it is brought to an end that is superlatively satisfactory because it is what you want with all your heart as you watch the tale unfold.

"The production breathes the spirit of Kipling, which Mr. Seitz seems to have caught in the scenario and Mr. Fitzmaurice to have held in direction to perfection. Mr. Fitzmaurice has spent a great deal of time in India and knows it like a book. The result is a picture which is as nearly perfect as brains and unlimited money can make it," an official stated. "The method of release has not yet been determined."

GRADUATION OF RESERVE OFFICERS.

The Gaumont Company has always endeavored to make its news reel, the Mutual Weekly, as timely as a newspaper. With this object in view, the release date has been placed on the first day of the week so that there will be as little delay as possible in showing it to the public.

Timely views in No. 153 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which will be released on Sunday, December 2, show the graduation of the new classes of reserve officers and students of our nautical schools. At Fort Meyer, Virginia, President Wilson and his wife are interested onlookers while Secretary of War Baker presents commissions to the new officers. This number of the Weekly contains many other subjects of up-to-the-moment interest. In Phoenix, Arizona, Governor Campbell presents the colors to the Range Riders' Regiment, while the crack cowboy cavalry entertains the fifty thousand visitors to the Arizona State Fair. Somewhere on our coast—the censors will not permit us to name the place—rookie sailors are shown in an educating boat drill. Everywhere in the United States Red Cross workers are doing their bit, and in one subject they are shown making bandages and appliances for wounded soldiers. Away down in Texas, Governor Hobby and his staff review thirty thousand men of the army of liberty. On the Pacific Coast an old wooden dry-dock has been burned to make way for a newer one with greater capacity, and the construction of the new concrete dock is pictured.

FAIR WEATHER DELAYS CONSTANCE TALMADGE.

Constance Talmadge's projected departure for the west has been held up by the stretch of unusually fine weather which New York and its environs enjoyed for ten days. Miss Talmadge's next Select production, "The Studio Girl," which is to be completed before her departure, calls for a great number of rain scenes and she and her director, Charles Giblyn, were distractedly marking time while the sun shone.

ETHEL BARRYMORE IN "AN AMERICAN WIDOW."

In "An American Widow," a Metro Pictures Corporation production to be released December 19, Ethel Barrymore, for the first time on the screen, has a comedy for the background of her brilliant talents. It is from the play of the same name of Kellett Chambers. It calls for spontaneity, sparkle, and charm, differing entirely from the powerful dramatic work Miss Barrymore has done in such Metro pictures as "Life's Whirlpool," "The Eternal Mother," and "The Call of Her People."

In this new picture Miss Barrymore plays Betsy Carter, a rich, vivacious, young woman who has everything in the world she can think of—except a title. She decides to buy this in the person of the Earl of Dettminster. But a codicil in the will demands that she marry an American. In the event the clause is disregarded the estate is to revert to Pitney Carter, a nephew of her deceased husband, who also loves her in spite of her indifference to his attentions.

In the series of amusing complications that follow, Mallory, who is really in love with Betsy and determined to remain married to her, discovers that the codicil in the will was forged by Pitney Carter's lawyer. By this time he and Betsy are deeply in love with each other, and their happiness is further assured by the receipt of a telegram from the Earl saying that he has eloped with Mlle. Albani, and the American widow becomes a happy American wife.

Betsy is the sort of role Miss Barrymore has scored so brilliantly with on the stage. Irving Cummings, who has recently appeared in "The Whip," "Rasputin, the Black Monk," and other well known screen pieces, plays opposite Miss Barrymore. Dudley Hawley, Arthur Lewis, Charles Dickson, Ernest Stallard and Alfred Rappeler complete the cast.

MISS YOUNG TO MAKE "HOUSE OF GLASS."

In the face of competition among the producing companies Clara Kimball Young has secured the screen rights to "The House of Glass," the great stage success of a few seasons ago. Owing to the number of prospective purchasers Miss Young was forced to pay a record figure for the play.

"The House of Glass" is a melodrama from the pen of Max Marcin, and with Mary Ryan in the leading role enjoyed a record run at the Cohan and Harris theater two years ago. It is the story of a reformed girl crook and her desperate efforts to regain her lost status in society. The plot abounds in tense scenes and thrilling moments, and the role of the ex-thief affords a rare opportunity for emotional acting.

The end of the week witnessed the last bit of filming on "The Marionettes," and work on the new play will follow immediately. Scenario writers are already busy on the script and nothing is being left undone to facilitate production. It is Miss Young's determination to make "The House of Glass" the banner play of the year.

"The Marionettes," which is now being completed, will be one of the holiday releases and will follow "Shirley Kaye," Miss Young's latest picture. Distribution will be through the Select Pictures Corporation.

"TROUBLEMAKERS" A FOX STANDARD PICTURE.

"Troublemakers," a Fox Standard Picture featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, ready for exhibitors December 9, appeals with equal force to adults and juveniles. It conveys a story with a number of emotional scenes—a wee bit of tragedy and an abundance of sure-fire comedy. The story is primarily a background for the Lee children's pranks, but everything they do has a bearing on the climax.

Their mischievousness compels a servant to "disappear" mysteriously; another servant is charged with murder because of another prank of the youngsters and is condemned to be executed, being finally rescued from the death chair by the children.

In "Troublemakers" cast supporting the "Baby Grands" are Lillian Concord, Richard Turner, Robert Vivian, Stuart Sage (now in the army), William T. Hays and Frances Miller. Keanan Buel wrote the story and directed the picture.

"OVER THE HILL" (Pathe-Gold Rooster).

Gladys Hulette's next appearance on the Pathe program will be on December 30 instead of December 9 as originally announced. The picture is "Over the Hill," produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke, from the story and scenario by Lois Zellner. It is a romantic comedy-drama of a small town newspaper that is pulled "over the hill" to success through the efforts of a plucky little girl and the man she loves.

The cast in this picture is one of the biggest that has ever appeared in a Pathe Gold Rooster play. It includes J. H. Gilmour, as the millionaire owner of a chain of newspapers, William Parke, Jr., as his spendthrift son Roy, Dan Mason, the famous character actor as an old minister, Gladys Hulette as his plucky little daughter, Chester Barnett as Allen Stone, business manager of the newspaper and hero, Richardo Thornton, as Jim Barnes, the editor, Joyce Fair, who is a star in her own right, as Rose Lawlor, Paul Clerget, the famous French actor, as her father, Tula Belle as Rose's younger sister, Inda Palmer as Mrs. Finn, Johnny Carr as Mike and William Sullivan as King Arthur, pitcher on the local baseball team.

"BULLETS AND BONEHEADS" (L-Ko).

Not to be outdone by the more serious-minded producers, the management of L-Ko starts a "star series" of its own with the presentation of Dave Morris, in "Bullets and Boneheads" Dec. 19. Craig Hutchinson created this release as the first of a number of comedies in which Mr. Morris will be presented, among other stars, with Gladys Tennyson his leading lady.

Scene from "Bullets and Boneheads" (L-Ko).

Mr. Morris has a distinctive style in creating screen-laughs that has been demonstrated in other comedy brands and his presence among L-Kos is depended upon to add materially to the effectiveness of the series in attracting for exhibitors the attendance of theatregoers who like to laugh as a prelude to their enjoyment of feature photoplays. "Bullets and Boneheads" is confidently depended upon to give L-Ko's "star series" a good send-off.

NEW STARS IN "RUGGLES OF RED GAP."

Taylor Holmes, featured in Essanay comedy dramas, has been successful in adding a number of new stars to the cast of "Ruggles of Red Gap," the famous Saturday Evening Post story by Harry Leon Wilson, now being put into film by Essanay for release as an ultra feature.

Mr. Holmes, who is to be seen as "Ruggles" in the visualization of the story, already has the support of Mr. Lawrence D'Orsay as "The Honorable George," Frederick Burton as "Cousin Edgar," Edna Phillips Holmes as "Klondike Kate," Lillian Drew as "Mrs. Effie" and Virginia Valli as "Mrs. Judson."

To this cast Mr. Holmes has been successful in adding Charles Lane, who has been with William Gillette in "A Successful Calamity" at the Studebaker theater, Chicago; Ferdinand Munier and Miss Rose Mayo. Mr. Lane will be seen as "The Earl of Brimstead," Mr. Munier as "Senator Floud" and Miss Mayo as "Maw Pettingill."

The remainder of the cast will be chosen before the company leaves for location in Arizona.

HART TAKES UP WORK AFTER ACCIDENT.

William S. Hart, who has been resting as a result of a recent accident in which he tore his arm and smashed a finger, is back at the studio. Simultaneously with his return to work comes the announcement that the title of the photoplay now being produced has been changed from "The Bloodhound" to "Dead or Alive." The picture is scheduled for release the middle of January.

"The Cardinal"

A Brady-Made Incident of the War in Which Cardinal Mercier Is Characterized.

CARDINAL MERCIER, one of the most stalwart and commanding figures of the war, has been made the central personage of a new and exceedingly timely photodrama provisionally called "The Cardinal," directed by George Archainbaud under the direct supervision of William A. Brady. The picture, which is not directly a war picture, since it contains no battle scenes, is in eight reels, and the dominating role is embodied by Montagu Love, the principal member of whose support is Jeanne Eagels, the young leading actress of George Arliss' company.

The story of "The Cardinal" is laid entirely in Belgium with the exception of a single episode depicting the history-making visit of Cardinal Mercier to Rome seeking the intervention of the Pope.

At the beginning Belgium is at peace, totally unsuspecting the calamities which are to follow with such astounding swiftness. In the great Cathedral, which is thronged with devout men and women, the Cardinal is celebrating mass.

Suddenly this scene of tranquil yet impressive religious observance becomes a tumult. German troops rush in with hoarse cries and clattering accoutrements. The people, in mingled horror and indignation, attempt to resist the invading force. A soldier attacks a young woman, who resents the action by slapping his face.

Instantly she is shot down and the troops overrun the edifice, brutally ejecting the civilians and advancing even to the altar, where the Cardinal, in the full majesty of his holy office, defies them. They retreat, but pile up the furnishings of the Cathedral and set fire to them.

From this point onward there is a rapid succession of events military and otherwise in which "the protector of Belgium" matches his wits against the mailed force of the invaders, playing upon their superstitions, meeting craft with craft, and pitting the power of the Church against the enemy's arms.

Through these stirring events runs the love story of a young Belgian officer and the Cardinal's ward, illicit possession of whom is sought by the German military governor. It is only by the most consummate devices of the Cardinal's invention that the girl is saved from this fate, secretly married to her lover by her guardian himself and finally smuggled to safety behind the French lines.

The greatest of care and the utmost prodigality of expenditure have been devoted to this production in the completion of which several months were consumed. The cathedral was built upon a massive scale of realism, as were several street scenes of proportions sufficiently ample for the passing of masses of artillery, cavalry and infantry.

Some of the military scenes were taken in Belgium and are a part of the formal records of the invasion, while the interiors of the Cardinal's residence are accurate copies in detail, made from enlarged photographs. Real tapestries and antique furnishings of very great value were collected for this picture to carry atmospheric perfection.

This consideration of reality was pursued also by Mr. Love in sinking his own identity in the personality of the revered Cardinal of Belgium. The remarkable facility of this player in the art of make-up is already a matter of general knowledge, and it has been carried to its highest quality in the present instance.

In composing the likeness for the real Cardinal Mercier, Mr. Love assembled a number of authentic portraits, taken from different angles, and placing these upon his dressing table made himself up to resemble them as closely as possible. The result is said to be a remarkably faithful reproduction of the greatest Belgian of this time.

"The Cardinal," in magnitude and timely interest, may be regarded as a companion picture to "Rasputin, the Black Monk," which has been exceedingly successful. In addition, it carries a powerful religious appeal and doubtless will receive the sanction of the Catholic Church.

ZUKOR PRAISES "LITTLE MARY'S" LATEST.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon his return to New York from California last week, announced the completion of Mary Pickford's newest Arctcraft picture, "Stella Maris" and expressed great enthusiasm over the dual characterization presented by "Our Mary" in this picture. This production was adapted from William J. Locke's well known book by Frances Marion and staged by Marshall Neilan.

"The production of 'Stella Maris' is the most remarkable thing which Mary Pickford has ever done for the screen," was the declaration of Mr. Zukor in an interview at his New York office. "Miss Pickford has made a wonderful success in charming characterizations from child life, bringing joy to millions of hearts through her winning personality, but I am sure all will agree with me, when they have seen 'Stella Maris' that her work in this will be long remembered as one of the outstanding accomplishments in screen art. The fact that Miss Pickford plays a double role, one of two distinct personalities, has made this a triumph all the greater. As for the comedy of the piece that is of necessity a minor feature, although it finds its rightful place in some of the amusing sides of the character of Unity Blake."

"WHISTLING DICK'S CHRISTMAS STOCKING"

(General Film).

General Film Company announces this week the completion of an O. Henry Christmas story, "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," a two-reel feature which will be released on December 22. It is one of the few Christmas stories ever written by O. Henry, who provided a few thrills to accompany one of the most whimsical holiday stories ever conceived. George Cooper and Adele De Garde, two screen favorites, are featured in this picture. Cooper impersonates a musically inclined tramp whose search for cozy winter quarters leads him into an amazing Christmas Eve adventure. Miss De Garde, the ingenue who made such a hit in "Within the Law," plays Virginia Rodney, whose "Merry Christmas" came very near changing the entire course of Whistling Dick's life. A rich vein of humor is found throughout the entire story.

"BELOVED JIM" (Butterfly).

Harry Carter and Priscilla Dean will be featured in the Butterfly designed for release Dec. 17. Joseph Girard provided the story and leads the supporting company in a role that carries equal importance with the featured character portrayed by Mr. Carter. There will be an excellent assisting company involved in the story among whom Charles Hill Mailes, J. Morris Foster, Sidney Dean, Frank Dachio, Edward Brown and Mrs. A. E. Witting will be prominently disclosed.

"Beloved Jim" is a Christmas story that is worthy of exhibition the year 'round—for its spirit of charity and good will may be absorbed with profit in any season. But in timeliness and force, the exhibitor will have, in "Beloved Jim," a feature that may be exploited as particularly applying to the Christmas season. It will be released just at the right time to help combat the influence of the usual apathy of theatregoers just previous to Christmas and may be continued right through Yuletide as an offering of special worth and effectiveness.

"THE LOST EXPRESS" APPROACHES THE END.

The mystery of "The Lost Express" has been solved, but the motion picture public won't know what happened to the missing passenger train until holiday time, when Chapter XV of the fifteen-chapter Mutual-Signal photo novel is set for release.

"The Lost Express" has forcefully shown the drawing power of a mystery serial. The exhibition of the production starring Scene from "The Lost Express" (Mutual).

Helen Holmes has met with constantly increasing attendance at theaters where it has been booked.

Chapter XIII is entitled "The Escape." It is scheduled for release December 10. The last chapter is entitled "The Return of the Lost Express."

MISS FISCHER NOW SEEN IN ARMY STORY.

Margarita Fischer's first production under her recently made contract with the American Film Company, Inc., "Miss Jackie of the Army," is set for release on the Mutual schedule for December 10.

Miss Fischer, heroine in "Miss Jackie of the Navy," a box-office record breaker—is cast in "Miss Jackie of the Army" as the irresponsible daughter of an American army post, desperately but coyly in love with one of her Colonel-father's aids, a lieutenant.

The picture shows both the social and military sides of life at an army post. There are pretty and impressive camp scenes, there is a perfectly gorgeous Red Cross benefit with a kiss auction as a side issue, alien spies, traitorous soldiers and knitting bees.

Miss Fischer produced "Miss Jackie of the Army" under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, who has directed the last few Mary Miles Minter pictures, at the American studios, Santa Barbara. It is from the pen of Beatrice Van and William Parker, adapted for the screen by Chester Clapp.

FOX ANNOUNCES COMING SUNSHINES.

William Fox's predictions of success for his new Sunshine Comedies is being realized, for with but two releases, reviewers everywhere have acclaimed the Sunshine brand. The comedies have not only been most successful in motion picture theaters throughout the United States but have been equally so in many of the foremost vaudeville houses.

The Sunshine Comedy releases for December and January are: December 9, "His Smashing Career"; December 23, "Damaged—No Goods"; January 6, "Shadows of Her Pest"; January 13, "Are Married Policemen Safe?"

All the Sunshine Comedies are under the personal direction of Henry Lehrman. He now has four companies at work at Los Angeles and Mr. Fox announces he will continue to release a Sunshine every two weeks—twenty-six a year.

SENNETT'S "THAT NIGHT" A GALE OF LAUGHTER.

Fast and furious is the fun in "That Night," Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy scheduled for release December 16. The effect of the film may be described as "heady," and advance showings indicate that the producer has outdone himself.

Featured in the cast are Charles Murray, Wayland Trask, and Mary Thurman, ably supported by Wallace Beery, Gene Rogers, Eva Thatcher and Tom Kennedy. Eddie Cline directed the picture. The bevy of beauties inseparable from Sennett comedies appear to advantage in cabaret scenes, and novel effects are secured in the camera work during the pursuit of an eloping pair who believe themselves married but are not.

"Taming Target Center" will be the next release following "That Night," and will again bring to the fore darling Polly Moran, Ben Turpin, Tom Kennedy and Gonda Durand.

KEENAN'S FIRST PATHE PLAY HAS STRONG STORY.

In "Loaded Dice" it is believed Frank Keenan, the Pathe star, has one of the strongest stories of his photoplay career. In it he plays a part of the kind in which he delights, that of a strong and masterful man who accomplishes his ambitions regardless of all opposition. "Loaded Dice" was written by Ellery H. Clark, with a scenario by Gilson Willetts, and is being directed by Herbert Blache.

The story is that of a man who believed there was no God. Unscrupulous, forceful, dominating, he at last realizes his ambitions and becomes the governor of his state. And then, at the height of his power, and apparently of unbeatable strength the hand of God shows itself. The picture portrays a character and a belief (or lack of it) that is not uncommon in public life. And there is a moral there that is obvious. All who have seen Mr. Keenan on the screen will at once appreciate the suitability of his vigorous personality to such a part. It is expected that the picture will be ready for assembling and titling within the next few days.

VIRGINIA FOLTZ IN "EVIDENCE."

Virginia Foltz, daughter of Clara Shortridge Foltz, well-known Los Angeles club woman and suffrage leader, has been engaged for an important role in "Evidence," a forthcoming Triangle feature of unusual interest. At one time Miss Foltz was one of the best-known musical comedy actresses in the country, being exceedingly popular on Broadway.

Work on "Evidence" is progressing rapidly under the direction of Walter Edwards at the Triangle Culver City studio. Jack Cunningham wrote the play and it is said that "Evidence" is a play of the type that Henri Bernstein would have been proud to have written for the French stage. The leading male characters are a highly successful criminal lawyer and his closest friend, a physician. The theme of the plot is based on the attorney's assertion that almost anyone could commit deliberate murder, give himself up and escape punishment by securing competent counsel. Throughout the picture there is a strong air of mystery.

"SECRET SERVANTS" (Nestor).

William Franey and Gail Henry, a brace of Nestor's most popular merry-makers, will lead the company presenting "Secret Servants" Dec. 17 as an issue in the supplemental series of Nestors the Universal announced for distribution when activities at Universal City were recently curtailed. For the comedies scheduled as these additional Nestors a selection of the best offerings were made from the negatives then on hand and "Secret Servants" was included in the lot. Exhibitors have found their audiences quickly responsive to the comedy "stunts" of Mr. Franey and Miss Henry and there is managerial assurance that "Secret Servants" represents one of the best comedies they have turned out during the time they have been making Nestors.

LITTLE RAYS FROM SIMPLEX.

Sam Berry, connected with the Lucas Theatre Supply Co., the well-known Southern distributors of Simplex Projectors, has become a benedict according to the latest reports from Dixieland. Miss Lillian Hightower was the lucky girl.

The Wurlitzer Hall, New York, N. Y., has lately installed two type B Simplex Projectors.

One more star has been added to the Service Flag of the Precision Machine Company by the call to arms of Wm. Eggerman. This makes the twelfth Simplex employee to answer his country's call. Five selected the navy and seven the army.

Two Simplex Projectors are "doing their bit" at Heroland, the mammoth bazaar now being held in the Grand Central Palace, New York, N. Y.

ANOTHER SUNSHINE COMEDY TO BE RELEASED.

"His Smashing Career," the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy to be released December 9, is a story depicting the exciting and thrilling adventures of Hundred Horsepower Harry, a valiant automobile racing driver, in his efforts to win the Girl, whose father does not fancy Harry in the light of a prospective son-in-law. Various and sundry villains and others do everything they can to prevent Harry from winning. There are declared to be some remarkable automobile stunts in this Sunshiner, which shows the lowly flivver doing things that would tax the versatility of an aeroplane.

The cast includes Billie Richtie, who is Little Peter; Gertrude Selby, whose role is that of the Girl; Billy Bevan, who makes a lively Father, and Victor Slim Potel, whose part is that of the judge of the races.

FOX NAMES THREE JANUARY RELEASES.

Titles have been selected for three uncompleted pictures which have been tentatively set for January release as Fox Special Features. The arrangement, as it now stands, is to start the month with a Gladys Brockwell picture and to follow with Tom Mix's first production as a star in Western dramas. The third offering of the month in the 52-a-year series probably will be another Sonia Markova feature.

The Brockwell picture is to be called "Stolen Honor" and the Mix debut will be made in "Cupid's Round-up." For the Markova picture the title "A Heart's Revenge" has been decided upon.

Fox Gets Encouraging Reports

News from All Over the World Tells of Expanding Field for His Productions.

PERSONAL reports on the motion picture situation in the United Kingdom and in Europe brought to New York on his recent visit by Ernest Reed, managing director at London for William Fox, are declared to be highly encouraging and indicative of continued success of Fox productions in this territory. Spain and Portugal, recently booked for pictures that Fox is showing in the United States, are declared to have manifested the same interest in the productions which have been shown in them by people of this country and elsewhere.

Communications from Johannesburg, Cape Town, and other cities in British South Africa indicate exhibitors are anxiously awaiting the showing there of "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellermann picture, and the first of the Fox Special Features, which also are to be introduced to the public of that territory.

Theda Bara super-pictures, according to cabled reports, have taken Peru, Chile, and Bolivia by storm, their reception, it is contended, being exactly what the Fox management had predicted for them. Somewhat less favorable word comes from Central America, but this concerns transportation rather than public attitude toward the pictures, which, it is said, is altogether encouraging. The difficulty in this field is that express and railroad companies cannot guarantee films will be delivered safely, so that in many cases it is necessary to employ special messengers to carry them from central distribution points.

The universal appeal of Fox pictures, which is the point most strongly emphasized, recently has had new demonstration through successes achieved in Egypt, India, Ceylon, Burma, and the Straits Settlements. The test here, because of the varying and peculiar racial customs and prejudices of the people, was considered particularly severe, but the pictures are declared to have come through with flying colors, and now are considered to be firmly established.

Work is being carried on with characteristic Fox energy and thoroughness through other portions of the civilized world, the very greatest possible assistance being afforded the foreign buyer in the development of territory. Special opportunities in this field are said to be open, but it is announced that they are rapidly being seized upon, scarcely a day passing during which the foreign department does not close contracts respecting temporarily undeveloped territory.

"HER SECOND HUSBAND" (Mutual).

What happens to a financier who introduces casual financial friends into the bosom of his family is the basis of a new drama, "Her Second Husband," produced by the Mutual Film Corporation and starring Edna Goodrich, one of the best-known of the speaking stage stars whose allegiance has been transferred to the screen.

Miss Goodrich has been given a wonderful opportunity in "Her Second Husband" which reveals the topsy-turvydom caused by abnormal stock market conditions, which permitted all sorts of people to make large fortunes over night and gave them the chance to invade social centers to which they had never previously aspired.

The new Goodrich play is said to be one of the most thrilling of modern stories of "The Street." The young wife, portrayed by Miss Goodrich, is placed in an impossible position by her husband's determination to play his social assets against his financial liabilities.

A situation which compels a one-time exclusive stockbroker to entertain his former chauffeur in his own home and to entertain a proposition of marriage for the hand of his favorite sister, of course, involves humiliating aspects, but when the chauffeur happens to be a war-bride millionaire, why, what's a poor banker to do.

REID TO BE FEATURED IN "RIMROCK JONES."

"Rimrock Jones" by Dane Coolidge is to be produced with Wallace Reid in the leading role and released by Paramount in January. This interesting announcement proved as pleasing to the author now in New York, as it will to the photo-play public and to exhibitors, who will appreciate the drawing power of Wallace Reid in a story of the virility of this moving tale of the Western copper country. Donald Crisp is director, assisted by L. Howland, and the photography is by Saxon Dean.

Mr. Coolidge is author of many novels of the West. "Rimrock Jones" was scenarioized by Harvey Thew and Frank X. Finnegan. A strong cast will support Reid and the scenic features will be particularly striking. The story abounds in startling situations and a strong vein of romance runs through it.

SOME COMING SHORT MUTUALS.

Billie Rhodes wears a dress suit, gets tipsy and also gets caught in "Putting One Over," the Mutual-Strand comedy slated for release Tuesday, December 21. Billie decides to put the kibosh on Fred's flirting. She impersonates a count, calls on herself when Fred is watching, keeps him in suspense just long enough, but—she upsets things when she tries to hide her disguise by slipping her dress over the trousers.

Jerry uses unfair but effective methods of beating the high cost of living in "Jerry's Boarding House," Cub comedy, released by Mutual, Tuesday, December 13.

The Mutual Weekly, Number 154, released Monday, December 10, carries scenes of the latest and most important of world events up to the hour of going to press.

NORMA TALMADGE FINISHES HUGHES DRAMA.

Norma Talmadge's new picture, "Ghosts of Yesterday," an adaptation for the screen by Mildred Considine, of Rupert Hughes' powerful drama, "Two Women," has been completed, and the star has retired to Atlantic City for a quiet stay over the Thanksgiving season.

With a fine record of past successes, Miss Talmadge has probably achieved the triumph of her career in "Ghosts of Yesterday." Her interpretation of the role which Mrs. Leslie Carter made famous is said to be the most pretentious thing she has done. In it she sets new standards.

The picture is scheduled to follow Miss Talmadge's "The Secret of the Storm Country," and will be distributed through Select Pictures.

STAR SYSTEM FOR L-KO.

Julius Stern, president of L-KO, has decided to adopt the star system in presenting the several comedy companies that are under the general supervision of J. G. Blystone, with an individual director for each organization. When the situation was canvassed and the decision reached, contracts were closed for the appearance of Mack Swain, Hughie Mack, Myrtle Sterling, Gale Henry and Bobbie Dunn to appear as L-KO stars.

Immediately forthcoming releases will have Dave Morris as an L-KO star in one subject, "Bullets and Boneheads"; Myrtle Sterling will be the star of "Deep Seas and Desperate Deeds," with Vin Moore her personal director; Bobby Dunn, directed by Dave Kerr, in "A Hero for a Minute," and Mack Swain, in "Ambrose's Icy Love," in which William Frederick has prepared "Ambrose" for his L-KO initiation.

METRO SOUTHERN HEADQUARTERS MOVES.

Arthur S. Dickinson, manager of the Southern headquarters of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is moving his offices from Chattanooga, Tennessee, to Atlanta, Georgia, to meet the rapid increase of business Metro pictures are doing in the south today. Sales have been particularly heavy, according to Mr. Dickinson, in the states of South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Georgia, the last year.

The new main headquarters of Southern Metro will be in a spacious suite of rooms in the Hirsch building at 146 Marietta street. All Metro films, as heretofore, will be handled in the south from Mr. Dickinson's offices.

Rivoli Theater Opens Under Good Auspices

Hatch-Adams Amusement Takes Old Fifty-second Street Theater and Reopens After Many Improvements as the Rivoli Theater.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The Fifty-second Street theater in West Philadelphia, after having been closed during the past year, was reopened on Thanksgiving Day under the new name of the Rivoli. The Hatch-Adams Amusement Co., who have secured the lease for a long period of years, spent approximately $25,000 in improvements, alterations, and in beautifying the house throughout.

A handsome Japanese stage setting has been artistically painted in oils, giving a rich and striking effect. Electric light dimmers have also been installed to enhance its beauty. The auditorium will have indirect illuminating ceiling lights. A marble effect base runs from the stage clear around, and the woodwork is neatly painted in French gray. Two new Simplex machines have been installed with general electric motor generator. The house has a seating capacity of 1,000, and will come under the capable management of Carl Miller, formerly of the Knickerbocker.

Mr. Miller is prepared to make things hum in general, and will open with Eva Tanguay in "The Wild Girl." One of the special features about the theater is the marble booth, which contains an automatic ticket selling machine, and which cost $2,300 alone. The Hatch-Adams Amusement Co. is also interested in the film distributing business, having purchased the state rights for "The Whip" for West Virginia and Ohio for $50,000.

Sachsenmaier Will Open the New Brunswick.

Philadelphia, Pa.—William Sachsenmaier, a leading luminary of the local film industry, and distributor of the Universal Film Service in this territory, announced last week that he was going to open the New Brunswick theater, which had undergone extensive overhauling, and which he purchased some time ago. The New Brunswick, at 2011 Frankford avenue, was originally owned by S. Goodstein, and contains five hundred seats. Considerable repainting and redecorating have greatly beautified the house, which will also have a magnificent organ. William Kellner, formerly manager of the Family Vaudeville theater in Chester, Pa., will manager the New Brunswick, which is scheduled to show first-run Metro, Universal, Fox, Goldwyn, and all the leading feature films.

L. J. Chamberlain Building Theater in Shamokin.

Shamokin, Pa.—L. J. Chamberlain, who controls a chain of theaters in Pennsylvania, was in Philadelphia last week, and stated that business was generally fair. He is completing a new theater in Shamokin next to Higgins & Sons' theater, separated by a partition wall only.

Charles Calehuff Back.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Charles Calehuff, branch manager of the United Theater

Equipment Corp., recently returned from a successful business trip, having taken a little tour calling on old friends among the exhibitors throughout the state.

D. E. Allen Goes to Pittsburgh Pathe.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Donald E. Allen, formerly roadman of the Goldwyn, has joined the Pittsburgh branch of the Pathe forces.

J. M. Flynn Will Distribute Petrova Films.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. M. Flynn, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the Peerless Feature Film exchange, 1339 Vine street, will distribute the new Petrova productions for this territory. Mme. Olga Petrova as the star in her first new release will be ready for booking during the latter part of December. Charles Chaplin's new productions will also be announced later.

Regent Theater Changes Hands.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Regent theater, a high class photoplay house at 16th and Market streets, has been bought by the Central Market Street Amusement Co., of which Frank W. Buhler is general manager, and will be added to their chain of theaters here. The Regent was built by Alexander R. Boyd, a prominent exhibitor of this city, and opened on November 1, 1913, under the management of Mr. Buhler. It also contains the first Kimball organ installed in any theater in this city. It has a high class patronage, which is expected to be materially increased in numbers while under the efficient direction of Mr. Buhler.

Notes of Interest.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Many exhibitors witnessed "The Planter," featuring Tyrone Powers, at a private performance given by J. Gill, of the Mutual Film Corp., on Sunday, November 25, at the Belmont theater. This production was considered by the majority of the newspaper men present as a noteworthy and a highly dramatic feature of merit, having a considerable amount of interest throughout the story.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. J. Hagerty, manager of the local Triangle, announces that a considerable amount of interest is being manifested with the release of the seven-reel production, "Because of a Woman," which will be booked on the regular program without additional advanced rental.

Baltimore News Letter.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Benefits Continue Strong.

BALTIMORE, Md.—The patriotic ardor of the Maryland exhibitors knows no waning, and this fact is being shown in the number of benefits which are being held for patriotic purposes. This list, which keeps it up to date, follows:

Red Cross Collection at the Broadway.

On Sunday, November 25, J. Louis Rome, counsel for the Maryland Exhibitors' League and manager of the Broadway theater, 509 South Broadway, gave a benefit performance for the Whirlwind Campaign of the Fourth District of the American Red Cross. Young ladies dressed as Red Cross nurses acted as ushers and took up the collection, and the affair was held under the auspices of the Broadway Red Cross Circle.

Ladies' Auxiliary Gets Two Benefits.

On the same day the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Sixteenth Draft Division had a benefit performance at the Walbrook theater, North avenue and Rosedale street, through the courtesy of Manager Thomas D. Goldberg; while another was held at the West End theater, Baltimore and Gilmor streets, through the courtesy of Manager Paul Emmert. The films used at the former benefit were loaned through the courtesy of M. Seigel and Peter Oletzky, of the Baltimore Film exchange.

Machine Gun Company Helped by Hornig.

Frank A. Hornig, president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League and proprietor of the Horn and Royal theaters, both on Pratt street near Payson, courteously loaned the houses for benefits which were given on this same Sunday to start a company fund for the Machine Gun Company of the 131th Infantry, which is made up of men from the Twentieth. One hundred and sixty-two dollars was donated to the cause by those attending the performances.

For Comfort Kits at the New.

On the night of that same Sunday, L. A. DeHoff, the manager of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, gathered a standing room only crowd into this playhouse for a benefit given under the auspices of the Red Cross Comfort Division of the Maryland Equal Suffrage League to enlarge the comfort kit fund. A fine program of film plays was arranged for the occasion.

Drafted Men Aided by Schlichter.

On the evening of this Sunday, Louis Schlichter, vice-president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League and president of the Edmondston Amusement Company, loaned the Bridge theater at Edmondson avenue and Pulaski street for a benefit for the drafted men of the Twentieth district under the auspices of the Patriotic Association of this district. Lou Tellegen in "The Victoria Cross" was the feature.

Company I Mess Fund Helped by Levine Brothers.

On the evening of this same Sunday at the Little Pickwick theater, 312 West Lexington street, through the Levine Brothers, a benefit performance was held for the mess fund of Company I of the 131th Regiment at Camp Meade under the auspices of the men themselves.

Receiver Appointed for Ker Mar.

Baltimore, Md.—On Tuesday, November 27, in the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, Judge Stump appointed Samuel Want receiver for the Ker Mar Picture Producing Company. This action was taken upon the petition of J. Henry Marchant, a creditor to the extent of $340. The bond was fixed at $500.

Theater Notes in Northwest.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Wisconsin Items of Interest.

GREEN BAY, WIS.—The personnel of the new unsalaried city board of censors is interesting. It is composed of D. M. Cranston, head of the Boy Scouts' organization in Green Bay; R. R. Campbell, a Civil War veteran; John H. Bennie, railroad train dispatcher, who was identified with theatrical work for several years; Mrs. John Gary, wife of a railroad engineer, and Mrs. Rowland T. Burton, wife of a real estate dealer. Both women are active in club work.

Cassville, Wis.—Glen Ashlock has sold the moving picture show to Warren Craig and Peter Wester.

Phillips, Wis.—C. W. Rice has been making arrangements to reopen the Idle Hour theater. Rice formerly operated the Unique theater at Marshfield.

Rio, Wis.—Bridges & Price have been making arrangements to reopen the Princess theater.

Milwaukee, Wis.—C. C. Perry, of Minneapolis, has been made manager of the Strand theater.

Sheboygan, Wis.—John G. Froidel, who managed the Pastime theater for six years, has purchased the interest of Otto Koch and George Froehlich in the Idle Hour theater.

Sunday Shows Attract Out-of-Town Patrons.

Kearney, Neb.—The popularity of Sunday moving picture shows and their value as a sane recreation is attested by some observations made in connection with seventh day shows here. It has been found that seventy-five per cent. of the patrons were visitors from out of town.

Nebraska Changes.

Nelson, Neb.—George Allgaier, Jr., has bought a moving picture theater here.

Westpoint, Neb.—The Ideal theater is now under the management of Zed Oaks.

Ong, Neb.—The Ong moving picture theater has been sold to C. D. Wilcox.

Cleveland Theaters Show a Falling Off

Business in and Near the City Was Poor During the Early Weeks of November—Recovered Slightly Before the Close of the Month.

By M. A. Maloney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—As was expected the month of November showed a falling off in receipts of the Cleveland theaters. It ranges from 10 to 20 per cent. the first two weeks, but there was a slight recovery during the latter part of the month. This was as compared to the same month of the preceding year.

Likewise the method of collecting the tax in the neighborhood districts developed into a conflict. At first most of the theaters started out to collect it by the extra pennies. Then a group on the west and south side broke away from this idea, some of them raising to straight 15 cents every day and paying the tax. Then others in different neighborhood sections followed this example.

The majority, however, carried out their original promise. These included the first-run theaters and the downtown houses. They reported little difference in their gross receipts.

A Theater with Interesting Owners.

Plymouth, O.—In Plymouth there is an interesting family in the exhibiting business. Reuben Diesler, pioneer picture man of this town, is blind, but that does not prevent him from taking care of the job of cashier at the theater. Mr. Diesler can tell each coin by touch, and has become so proficient in this respect that he can handle the largest crowds in quick time.

Many Changes Among Toronto Exhibitors

Week Sees What Looks Like a Change All Around—Cameraman A. Kay Killed by a Train—Other Interesting Notes of the Film Trade.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The exhibitors of Toronto have taken a turn at turning things upside down. A few weeks ago the exchange men changed hands all 'round, and now the theater owners and managers are taking the jumps.

S. Besvenick, one of the oldest exhibitors here, formerly of the Empress theater, has taken a five-year lease of His Majesty's, which is one of the best known downtown houses. He took the theater from Bert Applegath, who will continue with the Red Mill, another Yonge street theater.

J. Jenks, formerly with Besvenick at the Empress, has taken the Iola theater on Danforth avenue from Mr. Burns.

N. Neun has assumed the proprietorship of the Playatorium, also located on Danforth avenue.

S. Massoud has become the owner of the Empress theater.

Helen Chadwick Attends Exhibitors' Dance.

Toronto, Ont.—The members of the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association were in need of a special attraction for their annual film ball in the Fort Garry hotel, Winnipeg, on Thursday evening, November 29, so they got in touch with President L. E. Ouimet, of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian distributors for the Pathe. He came with Helen Chadwick, one of the dainty Pathe artists. Miss Chadwick first made appearances in the Holman and Lord Nelson theaters in Montreal on Monday evening, November 26, after which both the star and Mr. Ouimet proceeded to Winnipeg for the annual society affair. The ball was staged as a benefit for the blind soldiers of Canada, and the tickets were $3 a throw. Moving pictures were taken of the grand march, and various theaters supplied vaudeville attractions.

Miss Moving Picture World Graces Toronto.

Toronto, Ont.—The Moving Picture World was vividly represented at a recent pantomime performance in Toronto. Various publications, representative of different fields of interest, were depicted in a parade of young ladies who bore sandwich boards on which were painted the front covers of the journals or magazines. The Moving Picture World was taken as the representative paper of the film industry. (Our sincerest good wishes and compliments to the young lady.)

Got $18,000 for Victory Loan.

Toronto, Ont.—More than $18,000 was secured for Canada's Victory Loan during the week of November 18 by George Nicholas, managing director of the Independent Amusement Company, Montreal, who devoted the entire proceeds of his three houses to the purchase of Victory Bonds. The theaters were the Strand, Regent, and Moulin Rouge, Montreal. The company's fund was augmented by the subscriptions of employees and officials of the company. Great interest was taken in the move by the general public, and the three houses were crowded every night of the whole week. The growth of the receipts was shown on large thermometers over the lobbies of each theater.

Changes Among the Distributors.

The Toronto office of the Triangle has been moved to the Canadian headquarters of Regal Films, Ltd., 21 Adelaide street West, by whom the Canadian Triangle franchise has been obtained.

Kenneth Davidson, of Toronto and Montreal, has joined the Globe Films, Ltd., and is now in charge of the "Redemption" road show in Western Canada. The Evelyn Nesbit feature is being presented in the West at 25 and 50 cents.

Miss Madge Bloomer, formerly of the Toronto Universal headquarters, has joined the staff of Super-Features, Ltd., and Griffin Pictures at Montreal.

Bert Mason has resigned from the K-E-S-E to accept a position as salesman with the General Film Company, Montreal.

Cameraman A. Kay Killed.

London, Ont.—A regrettable accident occurred at London, Ont., when A. Kay, cameraman of the Pathscope of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, was instantly killed when a taxicab in which he was riding was struck by a railway train. He was on his way to take pictures at the London Asylum. After an inquest the remains were removed to his old home in Philadelphia, Pa., for interment. The deceased leaves a wife and family. He was a veteran cameraman, and was originally associated with Lubin.

"Nation" Film Again at Massey Hall.

Toronto, Ont.—The people of Toronto apparently never tire of seeing "The Birth of a Nation." After ascertaining that there was a further demand for this masterpiece, General Manager William Cranston, of the Basil Film Corporation, arranged for still another run at Massey Hall for two weeks starting Christmas Eve. This will be the fourth presentation of this feature in Toronto. "Intolerance," which is also controlled in Canada by this company, is also due for another Toronto engagement early in 1918.

Montreal, Que.—The management of the Tivoli theater, Montreal, took advantage of the presence of Sarah Bernhardt in the city to revive "The Mothers of France," in which the great French actress played the leading role.

Cleveland Theater Ownership Fluid.

Cleveland, O.—Whether or not the war tax had anything to do with it the fact remains that during the two weeks ending November 24 many theaters have changed hands in Cleveland.

The S. W. Mannheim company, brokers, report the following sales:

The Corona theater, downtown, was sold by Aubley & Hess to T. Felber & Zoffer Brothers for about $13,000. The rent per year on this location is $8,400.

The Atlas theater was sold to John I. Emig on a rental basis, which calls for $6,000 for five years.

The Center theater was leased from Beatrice R. Forbes by Carl Novak for six years for a rental of $125 a month for the first three years, and $150 a month for the last three years.

The Peerless theater was sold by Carl Noval to Rosenfeldt and Krantz for $1,500. The Victor theater was sold by Gusie Schneider to Max Greenberg for $1,500.

The U-No theater was sold by J. V. Wolcott to J. Stoss and A. Ransom for $3,000.

Screen Advertisers of World in Convention

Cincinnati Entertains Screen Ad Men on November 23 and 24—San Francisco Will Have the 1918 Convention—Broader Name Taken.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—Some of the leading men of the moving picture producing business were in Cincinnati, November 23 and 24, in connection with the annual convention of the Advertising Film Producers' Association, the name of which was changed at this meeting to the Screen Advertisers' Association of the World.

The organization is affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, whose secretary, P. S. Florea, of Indianapolis, was one of the principal speakers, addressing the members on the subject of "Better Advertising." He warned the producers against the dangers of exaggeration, which he admitted formed a strong temptation in advertising films, but paid a high tribute to the possibilities of the publicity end of the business.

Another speaker was J. Maurice Ridge, publicity representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, who was strongly in favor of increased use of newspaper space for local purposes. An interesting feature of the entertainment was the offering of the Cincinnati Advertisers' Club on the evening of November 23, various stunts being pulled off by the ad men for the amusement of their guests. The convention was handled by a Cincinnati committee of film men, and the visitors were so pleased with the Queen City and with the manner in which they were treated that it was decided to throw the influence of the organization in favor of Cincinnati as the meeting-place for the 1919 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The 1918 convention of the association will be held in San Francisco at the same time as that of the advertising clubs, and a strong delegation will be sent to pull the two conventions to Cincinnati together. Several interesting films were shown during the convention, including a three-reel production dealing entirely with the St. Louis convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs, while another showed the process of making a film from start to finish. Officers to serve until the next convention were elected as follows: President, Joseph Brandt, of New York, general manager of the Universal Film Co.; first vice-president, R. R. Hollister, Dayton, O.; second vice-president, Tyre Ford, San Francisco; secretary, W. A. Harris, Cincinnati; treasurer, W. F. Herzberg, Chicago.

McMahan & Jackson Buy Carrel Theater.

Cincinnati, O.—The Carrel theater on Eastern avenue, near Carrel street, has been bought outright from Shober Bros. by McMahan & Jackson, $14,000 being the price of the entire property, including a frame store building. The purchasers, who own several theaters in Cincinnati, including the new Gifts and the Forest theater in Avondale, will make extensive improvements to the Carrel, including the addition of 300 seats to the theater.

Alhambra Theater Gets Films of Local Boys in Camp.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager Charles Weigel, of the Alhambra theater, made a decided hit with Cincinnati audiences, especially people having a direct interest in the old "Fighting First" Regiment of the Ohio National Guard, Cincinnati's own organization, now in training at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala. A fine set of pictures showing the work of the boys while in camp near Cincinnati, comprising two reels in all, was made, and was shown recently at the Alhambra for the first time as a whole, having been taken from time to time as a part of the Pathe-Times

Star Weekly. The release was by special arrangement with the Pathe organization in view of the fact that Mr. Weigel donated 20 per cent. of the gross proceeds for the week's run to the Christmas fund of the regiment. Many Cincinnatians availed themselves of the opportunity to see brothers and sons again in the pictures, and the fact that the boys may depart soon for France lent to the exhibition more than a touch of seriousness. The soldier picture was only a part of the Alhambra's bill for the week, a William S. Hart picture, "The Narrow Trail," being the feature.

S. L. Martin Consolidates Ashland Theaters.

Cincinnati, O.—A welcome visitor with Manager H. L. Orear, of the General Film, a few days ago was S. L. Martin, of Ashland, Ky., who was in the city in search of attractions for his houses. He brought the news that he is now the magnate of the moving picture business in Ashland, although he did not put it in precisely that fashion, being of genial and modest mold. At any rate, Mr. Martin has added to his ownership of the Columbia and the Edisonia the Grand and the Modern, having just purchased the latter two houses, and these four being all of the theaters in Ashland. He has been decidedly successful with his other houses by dint of a policy of good pictures and good treatment of his patrons, and hopes to do as well with the new members of his string.

Electric Signs Must Darken Early.

Cincinnati, O.—New and more stringent regulations regarding the use of electric signs were announced in Cincinnati a few days ago by the Hamilton County Fuel Administration Committee, making definite the requirements laid down to save the fuel which goes to make electric current. Theaters will be permitted to start their signs a half-hour after sunset, or at about five o'clock in these winter days, but they must shut the signs off half an hour after the beginning of the first performance. This applies to all theaters, but works a slight hardship on moving picture houses, some of which run not less than three performances after five o'clock.

It can easily be seen that the enforcement of the requirements indicated leaves the sign dark for persons looking around for a moving picture show from about half-past seven to ten o'clock, two full performances being without the advertising benefit of the electric signs now so generally used. However, the exhibitors are a patriotic lot, and are doing the best they can under the circumstances, relying upon public knowledge of the location of their houses and on lobby displays to give information about the attraction running.

Girl Ushers at May's Opera House.

Piqua, O.—The management of May's opera house is one of the first in Ohio, as far as can be learned, to try the experiment of using girls as ushers. It was announced by the management some time ago that the plan would be tried in consequence of the shortage of male help on account of the demands of the army, and the announcement was made good during the run of "The Garden of Allah." The idea seems to work nicely, and will be retained permanently.

New Gifts Theater in Cincinnati Opens

McMahan & Jackson's Newest House Formally Opened November 23—Admission Is Fifteen Cents for Adults and Includes War Tax—Some Features.

CINCINNATI, O.—The event of the week in moving picture circles in Cincinnati was the formal opening of the Gifts, McMahan & Jackson's new house at Sixth and Vine streets. The house proper is located on Sixth street, but has a handsome lobby and entrance on Vine, which is expected to prove a great advantage. Curiously enough, however, the firm states that so far the Sixth street entrance, which, of course, is the entire width of the theater, has proved much the more popular. The theater seats about a thousand persons, and, with its equipment, cost the firm in the neighborhood of $100,000.

The formal opening on the evening of Friday, November 23, was under the auspices of the Sixth Street Business Men's Club, which bought out the house and staged the initial show in first class style. Some leading citizens made addresses in honor of the occasion, and McMahan & Jackson were given high credit for their enterprise in placing so handsome a house on Sixth street, this being the first theater on that busy thoroughfare, although there are several just north or south of that street on Walnut and Vine.

Naturally, the house was filled to capacity for the semi-private opening, and the same was the case on the following Saturday, when the public was admitted for the first time. The opening bill was the Goldwyn production of "Polly of the Circus," featuring Mae Marsh, and it ran all of the following week, in accordance with the house policy of running but one show a week. Both Goldwyn and Fox Standard attractions will be run at the Gifts.

The admission price of 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children has been so adjusted as to include the war tax, the firm feeling that this would be a concession much appreciated by the public, inasmuch as the extra pennies which must go to Uncle Sam are not always convenient. On the other hand this admission charge is higher than that of all but the Walnut theater in Cincinnati, so that the Gifts is advancing and not reducing prices.

The two lobbies of the Gifts are finished in white Italian marble, with tapestry decorations in ivory and gold, and an electric fountain adds attractiveness to the Vine street entrance. An unusual feature of the design is the high pitch of the rear of the house, which is fifteen feet above the street level, giving it the appearance of a balcony, and providing every seat with a fine view of the screen. Three entrances lead from the Sixth street lobby, and, with that from Vine street, give remarkable speed to the entrance and departure of patrons. McMahan & Jackson will manage the house personally, its location just around the corner from their offices on Opera place making this an easy matter.

Iowa News Letter

By Dorothy Day, Register Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

Price Opens Isis Theater in Des Moines.

DES MOINES, IA.—J. H. Price has opened the Isis theater on the corner of East Sixteenth street and Grand avenue on Thursday the 22d of November. The Isis is one of Des Moines finest suburban houses, and it has been closed some little time.

Bruce Burgess Back with Metro.

Des Moines, Ia.—Bruce Burgess, who left the Metro exchange in Des Moines to go to the Universal office in this city, is returned to his first job the first of December. Mr. Burgess is one of the best known and most successful film salesmen in this territory.

War Tax Closes Two Iowa Houses.

Deep River, Ia.—C. L. Light has closed his Lyric theater in Deep River on account of the war tax and O. E. Johnson, of the Idle Hour in Guernsey, Ia., has followed suit. Both houses are closed indefinitely.

Walter Peacocke with the Colors.

Des Moines, Ia.—Walter Peacocke, shipping clerk with the local Pathe exchange, has left for service with Uncle Sam. Mr. Peacocke left the office Saturday the 17th of November for the Great Lakes and from there plans to leave for Harvard to take up wireless telegraphy.

With Iowa Exhibitors.

Barnes City, Ia.—Putnam and Morrow have purchased the Opera House in Barnes City from M. Johnson.

Wellman, Ia.—Messrs. Cook and Bell have bought the Lyric theater in Wellman from C. C. Hahn. The house is closed at the present time and the new managers are doing some extensive remodeling and redecoration.

Montezuma, Ia.—Monday the 18th of November the Princess theater in Montezuma was badly damaged by fire. Fred Wasson, the manager, is showing his pictures in the opera house while the Princess is being remodeled and redecorated.

Toledo, Ia.—Forney and Kvidera reopened their house in Toledo on Monday the 19th of November after three weeks' repair work after the fire that partially wrecked the house. The offering was "The Slacker" and the entire proceeds of the evening were given to the Red Cross. The house was literally packed from the time the doors opened until very late in the evening.

Revenue Collector Hits at Profiteering

Scores Theaters That Raise Their Prices More Than Amount of Direct Tax as Though Tax on Seats Were the Sole Tax on Shows.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Managers of motion picture theaters and other places of entertainment who have raised their prices of admission more than 10 per cent. under the pretext that the increase is to cover the new war tax are likely to get into serious trouble immediately, according to notices sent out this week by Peter J. Kruyer, internal revenue collector for the Indianapolis district.

Mr. Kruyer says his department has received complaints that some theaters in this district have increased the admission prices in excess of the war tax, and have led the public to believe that the increase is based on the ground that it is rendered necessary by the imposition of the tax. The treasury department, he says, has given instructions to him to send all complaints of this nature to him at once.

Considers Seat Tax as Whole Charge.

An investigation of the complaints is being conducted now, he said, in an effort to find out if there have been deliberate misrepresentations of the amount of the tax for the purpose of justifying the increased prices. The Government, he says, has not authority to control prices, and does not wish to do so, but does not intend that false statements shall be made to the public concerning the amount of the war tax.

"The tax on theater admissions is 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission," continued Mr.

Kruyer, "and any increase in admission charges beyond this amount is not necessary in order to absorb the tax. Deliberate misrepresentations of the amount of war tax for the purpose of justifying increased prices will not be tolerated by the department, and warning is hereby given to all of those who are indulging in that practice."

Mr. Kruyer did not give the names of any of the theaters which he had been informed with misrepresenting these things, and the motion picture men say they know of none in this city who have been doing so.

Discuss Changes in City Building Code.

Marion, Ind.—The motion picture exhibitors of this city are about to face some municipal legislation in regard to the industry as a result of the city's efforts to get an increase in fire insurance rates. In order that the decrease might be granted the city must pass several ordinances recommended by the Indiana Inspection Bureau, one of which deals with the operation and equipment of motion picture machines and the premises wherein the same are operated.

The proposed measure stipulates that the picture machine must be inclosed in a booth not less than 6x8 feet and 7 feet high. Covering for the booth is also designated in the ordinance, as well as minute description as to the operation of the machine. The measure would also provide that no machine be operated in a building that does not abut directly on the street.

The proposed measure also provides for exit doors, setting out that the opening shall not be less than five feet wide, and that the doors shall swing outward. Regulations as to seating are that no more than twelve seats shall be placed between the aisles. In order to operate a motion picture theater, according to the measure, the manager or owner must procure a certificate from the fire chief showing that the rooms conform to the measure.

The measure was discussed at the last regular meeting of the council, but the councilmen did not take any action on it. It will come up in regular order in a few weeks, it is said.

Burden of Blue Sundays Covers Alabama

Every Branch of Business Feels the Weight of Radical Interpretation of Old Sabbath Laws That Go Back to Territorial Days.

By J. L. Ray, Trade News Service, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Every branch of business, including the moving picture industry, has fallen into the grasp of what is probably the most radical and stringent interpretation of the Sunday closing "blue laws" ever seen in the South.

At Selmer, following the indictment by the Dallas county grand jury of every druggist in the city on a charge of violating the Sunday law, a mass-meeting of citizens was held, and it was decided to give the town a taste of a real "blue Sunday." Every merchant pledged himself not to sell anything, even the newstands, although the court ruled that the sale of newspapers did not come under this head. Automobile owners have even been warned that they cannot buy gasoline at the street filling stations.

At Montgomery, Judge Wm. Hodge Sanford, of the Court of Appeals, reversed himself on a former decision, and held that bona fide drug stores alone could operate, and that a drug store which opened for the sale of anything else than drugs exclusively would be closed immediately by the authorities.

At Anniston, Judge D. C. Blackwell, a member of the Alabama legislature from Calhoun county, disclosed the fact that the popular idea of the Sunday "blue laws" being a recent enactment is erroneous. The territorial assembly of Alabama first provided against any kind of business or amusement on the Sabbath by an act adopted in 1803. From 1803 to 1833 it was even a violation of the law to make music for merriment or entertainment. In 1833 the legislature let down the bars to such an extent that druggists alone were exempted from the provisions of the Sunday act. Hunting, fishing, or engaging in any kind of amusement on the Sabbath was prohibited, and penalties were provided for hauling or delivering any kind of merchandise on Sunday. Alken's Digest, which was the law during this period, provided strict penalties for operating amusement concessions, and even for swearing on the Sabbath.

The moving picture men of Alabama are having a hard time in keeping any shows open at all, and in those cities and towns where the law is not so closely pressed by local authorities with regard to Sunday closing threats are coming from outside to the effect that action will be taken very shortly.

Nashville Sizing Up Situation.

Nashville, Tenn.—The local attorney employed by the Nashville theater interests to look into the question of bringing about a reopening of the moving picture shows on Sunday is conducting research work in an effort to locate former opinions and decisions of the Tennessee courts with regard to the Sunday opening matter. In the past few weeks renewed activity has been in evidence toward securing a way in which to operate the shows of Tennessee seven days a week, and a careful study of the situation at Chattanooga and Memphis is being made. Sunday shows are running in both of these cities.

Kaufman Eliminates Reel Tax.

Memphis, Tenn.—Feeling that the exhibitor has made more than his share of burdens to shoulder this day without assessing a reel tax upon him, A. H. Kaufman, manager of Kaufman Specials, of Memphis, has decided to eliminate the 15 cents tax on the new Oro Features.

The Oro Pictures are being put out on a unique plan. An extensive scale has been published showing the population of every city and town in each state. The pictures are exploited on a population basis; for instance, cities with a population of 1,000 pay $1 a reel; 2,000, $1.25 a reel, etc.

Sunday Show Charity Fund Criticized.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Joseph E. Bell Charity Fund, which is and has been maintained in this city for the last four years by contributions from Indianapolis motion picture show owners who operate their places on Sunday, was the object of criticism by the New York Bureau of Municipal Research, which has just completed an investigation of Indianapolis city departments under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce.

The report submitted by the bureau in regard to the charity fund advises that the "people of Indianapolis should either obtain from the state legislature an act legalizing Sunday performances in motion pictures houses, or require the city officials to enforce the law to the letter."

Conquest Program for Children's Shows.

Lafayette, Ind.—The management of the Lyric theater in this city has announced that beginning the latter part of the week there will be special school children's programs each Saturday. The Edison-Conquest program of subjects of special interest to children has been obtained for the events. The plan, according to the management, is in accordance with a similar movement in a number of the larger cities, and is approved by the teachers and Board of Education.

Trade Notes of Interest from New Orleans

New Boehringer House Nearly Ready—Suicide of Widely Known and Eccentric Exhibitor in Jackson, Miss.—War Burdens Close Theaters.

By N. A. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Liberty theater, the new project under the direction of the Boehringer Amusement Company, is rapidly nearing completion, and it is the expectation of Manager Boehringer to have the theater ready not later than the middle of January. The other projects of the Boehringer Amusement Company in the other cities of the state are moving apace, and this organization will soon be an active factor in the New Orleans territory.

E. V. Richards Back at His Desk.

New Orleans, La.—E. V. Richards, Jr., managing director of the Saenger Amusement Company, is back at his desk after being confined to his home for more than a week by an illness that for a time occasioned his friends some concern. His indisposition was brought about by too close attention to business, and even while he was confined to the house he kept his stenographers busy and directed the multitudinous affairs of the Saenger Amusement Company by wire and messenger.

J. C. Landen Found Dead.

Jackson, Miss.—J. C. Landen, one of the best known exhibitors in the New Orleans film territory, builder of the Istrione theater in this city, and pioneer in the advanced idea of motion picture presentation, was found dead in the garage at his home on Monday morning, November 26. An empty carboloid acid bottle was the mute witness which was found by his side. J. C. Landen was a man whose personality was impressed upon all with whom he came in contact. Uncompromising fidelity to principle, blunt adherence to the truth, and an unswerving belief in his convictions made him, at times, appear to be rough, but no man had a bigger heart, nor is it frequent that one is found who experienced more personal pleasure in helping others than did he. He believed in progress, and brought the first automobile to Mississippi. He drew the plans for the first modern theater in Jackson, and, when the projectors expressed doubt as to the success of the enterprise, he built the theater himself, and named it the Istrione. Recently he disposed of this theater, and offered his services to the Government as an expert builder. Because of his age his offer was rejected, and this, in connection with other disappointments over which he could exercise no control, are held to be responsible for his demise. The New Orleans exchange managers sent a beautiful floral offering as a testimonial of the high regard in which he had been held by them, and as a tribute to his memory.

War Burdens Close Theaters.

New Orleans, La.—War taxes and the effect of heavy enlistments in the United States Army are beginning to show their results in the Southern territory. Within the past few days the motion picture theaters of Vivian, La.; Grenada, Miss., and two or three other towns of considerable importance have been closed, and reports that other managers are preparing to give up the struggle to provide entertainment for the people are becoming more numerous.

"Jack" Stewart Weds.

New Orleans, La.—"Jack" Stewart, the popular New Orleans manager of the Southern Triangle, was married on Wednesday, November 28, to Miss Gertrude Louise Morris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Morris, of Memphis, Tenn., and all of "Jack's" friends are offering him congratulations. There is not a more popular manager among the New Orleans boys than is Manager Stewart.

New Orleans Notes of the Trade.

New Orleans, La.—President C. E. Tandy, of the Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation, of Atlanta, spent a few days here last week looking over the affairs of the local office. Manager Wilkes, of the New Orleans exchange, has been swamped with business for the past few weeks, and there appears to be no cessation of the work which is being piled upon him. President Tandy is well pleased with the affairs of the local exchange.

Arthur Lucas, representative of Goldwyn for the Southern states, with headquarters at Atlanta, was a New Orleans visitor for a few days last week. The Goldwyn pictures are gaining in popularity here despite the fact that they have had very spasmodic and indifferent advertising.

The remodeling of the old Trocadero theater on Adams street has about been finished, and Manager Frank R. Heiderich, Jr., expects to open the new house early in December. It is to have a new name, and the best class of patronage will be invited.

Walter Kattman, who has had the management of the Palace theater since it was opened as a "pop" vaudeville and picture theater, has resigned to take up work in the Red Cross division, and he has been succeeded by Sam Meyers, of New York, who took charge on Sunday, November 25.

Louisville News Letter.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Changes in Universal Service.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—A. S. Farrel, manager of the Central Film Service Co., Louisville Universal office, reports that the Universal company has discontinued its short program, but in addition to its Butterflies, news pictures, serials, and weeklies it is now booking Bluebird specials, Jewel production, Alco comedies, and other material that was formerly handled through the Indianapolis Bluebird office, which has been consolidated with the Universal office. While the short program stuff has been discontinued the local office will continue for several months booking the material on hand, a considerable portion of which is comparatively new.

Only Nickel Theaters Are Filled.

Louisville, Ky.—Business with the local photoplay houses has been under par for the past four or five weeks due to bad weather conditions and the increased box office prices. Both afternoon and night business has suffered a severe slump. The boys at Camp Taylor have not been patronizing the theaters as well as formerly, the Liberty Loan having been over-subscribed by the soldiers, who have been having trouble in taking care of their insurance, and have been pressed for ready cash. The jitney theaters are doing an excellent business in most cases, however.

A New Exchange with Cheap Films.

Louisville, Ky.—Arthur Scheckler, formerly connected with some of the Fall City's theaters, is now doing nicely with a new film concern which he has organized, and which is operating in the Columbia building as the Dixie Feature Film Co. This concern has a number of reprints and cheap films, which are in good demand among the small theaters.

Discuss Young Girls at Theaters Near Camps.

Louisville, Ky.—Much discussion has been heard in Louisville of late, and various welfare organizations have been prominent in this discussion, which is relative to a curfew law for young girls, some leading persons claiming that such a law is necessary to protect the young girl in connection with the military camp at Louisville. However, the leaders in welfare work claim that such a law would be out of harmony with the protective agencies now at work, and they prefer military police to protect the city. Attendance of young girls at theaters unchaperoned has been lighter during the past few months as a result of local conditions, and a few unfortunate affairs which got into the press, and which were closely linked to the theaters. However, the agitation will probably blow over.

Notes of Interest to the Trade.

Louisville, Ky.—The Strudo Amusement Co., operators of the Walnut theater, 418 West Walnut street, have purchased and installed a large Wurlitzer unit orchestra. This company recently leased the theater, which had been closed for some weeks.

Louisville, Ky.—The "Four Minute Men" have started another campaign through the theaters of Louisville, the subject being "Carrying the Message," the purpose of which is to show people where to procure the best literature on the issues of the war, and how to keep informed on the subject. The Alamo, Walnut, Majestic, Strand, Keith, and other downtown houses and a number of the suburban houses have been lined up to aid in the work.

Atlanta Film Men Watching Effects of Tax

Find That About Forty Per Cent. of Patrons Are Kept from Attending the Shows by the Added Expense—Will Collect New Data.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—With the present theater war tax, will the public appreciably cease to patronize the theaters? These are questions which are harassing the theater managers and owners, and it is said close tab is being kept on the matter in Atlanta so that exact status can be placed before Congress if necessary at the beginning of the next session. It is not the disposition of the theatrical people to protest needlessly, but it is also not the disposition of Congress to levy and enforce a tax which will prove a decided hardship or burden on anybody. If the public can stand the war tax, well and good. If the public cannot afford to pay the war tax the theaters will be forced to close up.

In Atlanta alone it is estimated the tax nets about $2,000 on a normal week. Sixty per cent. of the theatergoers paid it and do not miss it. The other 40 per cent. do miss it, and the question arises that if it proves a deterrent to this 40 per cent., and if they cease to be theatergoers, will this fact not tend to put out of business many of the smaller houses?

There is no intention on the part of the theatrical folks to evade a patriotic duty, but rather to intelligently aid Congress in making every effort to make successful the great world war with as little hardship as possible to the great public.

Free Shows for Soldiers and Their Friends.

Atlanta, Ga.—Beginning Sunday, December 2, the soldiers at Camp Gordon and Fort McPherson will be able to attend a motion picture show in Atlanta prepared especially for their benefit. These pictures will be a part of an elaborate entertainment at the Auditorium, which is scheduled to begin at 2:30 in the afternoon and run well into the evening.

Under the auspices of the Atlanta commission on training camp activities a program will be provided which will include an organ recital, community singing, and special feature pictures. Both the public and the soldiers will be admitted without charge, and it is expected that the meetings will provide a common meeting place where the men in uniform and the people of the city can become acquainted. The pictures will be of the very highest standard, and will not be taken from the cast-offs of the film exchanges. Feature films which have just been released will be shown, and many short subjects of special interest. The exact schedule has not yet been worked out, but just how this will be viewed by moving picture exhibitors of Atlanta and also those who were recently so active in closing all forms of amusements on Sunday in Atlanta is to be seen.

Forsyth Gets Big Organ.

Atlanta, Ga.—Frederick W. Smith, of the J. P. Seeburg Company, of Chicago, is in Atlanta now installing one of the large type Seeburg Smith instruments in the Forsyth theater. Mr. Smith has come to Atlanta for the sole purpose of supervising the finishing touches on the erection of this instrument for the Forsyth.

Lyric Collects $874 for Smokes Fund.

Atlanta, Ga.—Atlantians who attended the Lyric theater last week contributed $874.70 to buy tobacco for American soldiers. George H. Hickman, manager of the theater, issued a statement thanking the public for the generosity displayed. The contributions were made in cash in response to an invitation given at each performance to the people generally to swell the fund being raised in the theaters on the Keith circuit to supply tobacco to the men while they are on transports.

Big Camp Gordon Theater Almost Ready.

Camp Gordon, Ga.—Seats are being installed in the big War Department theater on the reservation at Camp Gordon, Ga., preparatory to the final completion of the structure on December 1. The building will have about 20 exits, so there will be little danger from fire.

J. B. Kelly Gets Important Job.

Atlanta, Ga.—James B. "Smiling Jimmy" Kelly has been appointed general Southern representative and manager for the Southern States Film Corporation, and his headquarters will be in Atlanta, Ga. For the past seven years he has been salesman and then manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., the local distributor of the Universal output. He is fortunate in the possession of an extremely large acquaintance among film men in the South, and, more fortunately still, they are more than apt to be on most friendly terms with "Smiling Jimmy," who used to tack "Universal" to his friendship name. He has had to cover eleven states, and knows the ground between Kentucky, the Atlantic Seaboard, the Gulf of Mexico, and New Mexico.

The Southern States Film Company is connected with the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, and Mr. Kelly will have pictures like the big Thomas Ince production, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "Those Who Pay." In leaving the Universal organization, "Smiling Jimmy" will still have the same boss, as Hon. William Oldknow, "The Atlanta Commuter," with whom he has been connected for the past seven years, is one of the leading figures in the U. S. Booking Corporation.

Kansas City Exchange Managers Organize

Move to Form a Union to Advance Good Business Methods—Officers to Be Chosen at Next Meeting—Committee on Arrangements.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Firm in the belief of the old doctrine "that in union there is strength," the managers of the local moving picture exchanges have again organized. On November 14, the local managers of the exchanges met at the Hotel Muehlbach for a luncheon and a business meeting. The meeting which followed lasted three hours, and during this time the advisability of effecting an organization among themselves was discussed and acted upon in the affirmative.

Richard Robertson, manager of the local Goldwyn office, presided over the meeting. A committee of three was selected to draw up rules, regulations, and to inform all interested in the aims and purposes of the organization. At the present it is planned to include only managers and assistant managers in the organization; however, it is probable that the membership may be extended to the sales and advertising forces of the different companies.

The first meeting was successful; but not so great a success as the one which followed a week later, November 21, at the same place. The report of the first meeting was withheld awaiting the report of the arrangements committee, which was composed of George Bowles, manager of the Bluebird office; F. F. Nine, manager of the Greater Vitagraph office, and J. E. Storey, manager of the George Kleine's office here. This committee reported that the purposes of the organization would be manifold. Some of these are the reporting of the violations of contracts by exhibitors, failures of these persons to pay past accounts, as well as to put the deposit system on a firm basis, treat cancellations, and to form a defense against practice of several exhibitors in one locality combining to secure a low rental of films.

Another meeting of the young, yet-unnamed organization, was to be held November 28, at which time it is possible that an election of officers will be held. This organization will be for business only and will not in any way be similar to the now-dead Screen Club, which has been closed for some time.

Marty Williams Will Travel for Standard

Kansas City, Mo.—Marty Williams, formerly manager of the Kansas City Bluebird office and also with the Universal Film and Supply Co., is now again in the employ of the Standard Film Corporation. He will travel in the capacity of salesman in southeastern Missouri and also will make a part of Kansas as his territory.

Two New Men Signed Up by Select.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Select Pictures Corporation announces the signing of two new men, Charles P. Hammon, who will be soon assigned to a territory, and E. J. Peskay. Mr. Peskay will assist W. H. Bell, the manager of the office, and will make trips throughout the territory on special business matters.

John W. Hicke, Jr., Heads Local General.

Omaha, Neb.—John W. Hicke, Jr., formerly manager of the Kansas City office of the General Film Co., has been appointed manager of the General Film Company's office here.

Exchange Notes and Personals.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was a visitor in Kansas City November 21 for a very short period, but while here he conferred with A. D. Flintom, president of the Kansas City Feature Film Company and district manager for the Paramount-Artcraft interests.

C. A. (Red) Jones, Missouri salesman for the Universal Film and Supply Co., and J. H. Morgan, southern Kansas salesman for that company, visited the local office of the company November 24.

H. W. Talbot, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Co., recently made a trip to St. Joseph, Mo., to visit the exhibitors of that city.

Bluebird Pictures are proving popular for holiday bookings, judging from the number of requests for "My Little Boy" for Christmas and "Mother o' Mine" for Thanksgiving. The first picture is especially appropriate for Christmas, as the story is laid in that particular time of the year; however, it would prove an equally good attraction for any season.

R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film Corporation, was a recent visitor from Chicago at the local office of the company.

Private showings of the new one-reel Finley Nature Study Series, released by the Universal Film and Supply Company, were held at the local office of the company November 23, at which many of the local exhibitors and several out-of-town exhibitors were present.

In Illinois and Michigan.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Changes Among Illinois Exhibitors.

BELLEVIEW, ILL.—The Washington theater has been taken under new management, that of the Erber Theater Company, of East St. Louis. Joseph Embler, who has been in control of one of the East St. Louis houses, will have direct charge. Vaudeville and moving pictures will be used. Following the change a banquet was given on the stage at the Washington theater for Louis Landau, Jr., who for five years has been president and manager. More than a score of employees bade him farewell, and presented him with a handsome silver loving cup. In addition he was presented with a large bouquet of chrysanthemums and a gold pocket knife.

Stonington, Ill.—Fred Weiser has sold the Gem theater to G. E. Rodman.

Benton, Ill.—F. D. Whittington, the new manager of the Auditorium, has purchased two new picture machines.

Galesburg, Ill.—The Orpheum theater has reduced its admission price to 10 and 20 cents, plus the war tax.

Benton, Ill.—Manager George Colovos, proprietor of the Mars theater, donated his house to the county Y. M. C. A. to three shows for the school children.

Mt. Pulaski, Ill.—Snyder & Snyder are remodeling their building to be used by Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Zach for the Dreamland theater.

Michigan Theater Notes.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Columbia theater, which has been dark since last spring, has been reopened by H. S. Logan, of Chicago, who has taken a lease. O. R. Sebring will be manager. The house will use five acts of vaudeville, three reels of pictures changing twice a week. Admission, 10 and 20 cents, with 10-cent matinee.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—Emily Wehlen in "The Duchess of Doubt" was shown at the Bell opera house for the benefit of the Home Guards.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—Manager W. C. Mellanson, of the Princess theater, has donated a space on the side of his theater for a huge electric sign, 18x40 feet. "Food Will Win the War, Don't Waste It."

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Texans Slowly Coming to Accept the Tax

Business in State Is Generally Good and Bank Deposits High—Theater Patronage Returning to Normal by Degrees Despite Taxes.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEN. — Deposits in Texas banks on November 20 were 20 per cent. lower than they were on September 11, but Texas moving picture men disclaim any great help in the attainment. The statistics are available as a result of the statements made by Texas bankers in response to the call of the national comptroller and the state banking commissioner. Picture theater men claim they are not doing a business that warrants piling up hoarded wealth in the shape of bank deposits, but at that they're not downhearted. The big deposits, it is pointed out, are due to the high prices being paid for all agricultural products, and that Texas, despite its drouth, is an agricultural commonwealth which produces the things that a nation must have. Ergo, basic conditions in Texas and the eleventh Federal reserve district are really better than in any of twelve financial zones established under the new Wilson administration currency system.

Picture theater patrons are slowly coming 'round to the new order of things, and are slowly becoming accustomed to the added charge put upon their amusements as a result of war-time conditions. But amusements are amusements, and the first line of retrenchment begins at luxuries, so the result is apparent in Texas amusement circles just as it is elsewhere.

Texan Gets Big Cantonment Contract.

Dallas, Tex.—What he believes is the biggest single contract ever written by a Texas moving picture branch house manager has just been closed by J. B. Dugger, manager of the Dallas branch of the Vitagraph company. Signed on the part of the Red Cross for the Government by J. E. Bagley, Southwestern secretary, a contract calling for nearly $10,000 has been closed under which fourteen weeks of film service will be given to army cantonments in the Southwestern district, which includes the camps at San Antonio, El Paso, Fort Worth, Waco, Houston, Laredo, Mission, and other points in Texas. Mr. Bagley is representative of the Community Motion Picture Board, headquarters at Boston. It will be remembered that Henry Putz, of Dallas, pioneer projector man in Texas, has already gone with the board in the capacity of expert and supervising operator. The board is furnishing three "shows" a week at each of the several Y. M. C. A. huts at the various cantonments.

Mineral Wells, Tex.—It may be done with additional development, but at the present writing a woman can't knit soldiers' sweaters and properly assimilate the fine points of a first class moving picture. So says J. C. Fanning, who operates the Crazy theater at Mineral Wells, Tex., but who is far from being a candidate for an institution the chief characteristic of which is barred windows. Fanning says the women folks are knitting all the while—very commendable, of course, and all that sort of thing—but it hurts the moving picture business because they can't knit and weep over the heroine at the same time. "Out side of that everything's pretty," said the genial and horn-rim spectacled gentleman from Palo Pinto County. And he's been giving them some good stuff, too—Jane Cowl in the Goldwyn, "Spreading Dawn," for instance, which at this writing hasn't even been shown to a Dallas audience yet.

Special Offerings in Dallas Recently.

Murray is really more popular than another film comedian of wide reputation.

Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon" was a clean-up during the latter part of the week. For the following week the Old Mill offerings were the Paramount, "Judgment House" and Hart in "The Silent Man."

The censor got her scissors on "The Planter" at the Hippodrome, but not before Manager Arthur Clare had done some "clarifying" that he thought local conditions demanded himself.

"Babbling Tongues," with James Morrison and Grace Valentine, were the Hippodrome offerings following Tyrone Power's big picture.

Manager Lew Bissinger's offering at the Washington for the week beginning November 26 was the Selznick, "The Silent Master," with Robert Warwick, which proved entirely popular.

G. L. Randal Goes on the Road.

Dallas, Tex.—G. L. Randal, for the last few months in the bookkeeping department, has been placed on the road for Vitagraph by Branch Manager J. B. Dugger.

W. S. Tottle, of the local Vitagraph branch, has been transferred to the St. Louis branch as booking clerk.

Why Theaters Near Camps Don't Pay.

Dallas, Tex.—Moving picture theaters established in close proximity to army camps in Texas have not proved to be paying propositions. Several exhibitors who have tried it will so testify. The answer is simple, and undoubtedly it applies to army cantonments in other states as well. The Y. M. C. A., with its Community Motion Picture Board, is the reason. In one Texas cantonment there are sixteen Y. M. C. A. "huts." In each of these three "shows" a week are given. They're free. As long as "Sammie" is on duty in camp and has an hour or so of recreation he sees his "movies" in the Y. M. C. A. balliwick. But when Sammie is given shore leave, does he go to the moving picture show just outside the cantonment boundaries? Hardly. He takes a hike for the white lights on Main street—and that's the answer.

Notes of Interest from Texas.

Dallas, Tex.—Ben Meyer, manager of the Queen theater at Tyler, Tex., now wears a fez. Mr. Meyer took the Masonic Shrine degrees in Dallas at the Scottish Rite reunion which closed on November 25 along with nearly two hundred other candidates. He says East Texas is in good shape, and that he is surviving despite war taxes and other tribulations.

J. C. Clemmons, of the Tivoli theater, Beaumont, was a visitor to Dallas exchanges during the third week in November. He reports business good, with all sorts of activity in a shap-building way in his home town.

Sherman, Tex.—C. W. Batsell, of the King theater, Sherman, booked Goldwyn releases in Dallas recently, and reports this prosperous north Texas city in excellent condition, with business fairly good. Manager L. B. Remy, of the Dallas Goldwyn branch, has made a trip over the greater portion of the state, and, while admitting that conditions could be better, says the picture filmed by drouth calamity howlers isn't near as black as they'd have it appear.

Waco, Tex.—J. C. Roberts, who is opening a new theater at Waco, booked Goldwyns during the week also.

Dallas, Tex.—Slim attendances is a complaint that picture theater men are not alone in apparently. "Bargain matinee, 25c., including war tax," is a big sign on a local vaudeville house's bill board.

Middle West Theater Jottings.

By Kansas City News Service.

Noonan, S. D.—Louis Gits and Eugene Tripp have bought the Grand theater.

Arlington, S. D.—S. H. Cornell has bought the Fad theater.

Chotopa, Kan.—The picture show here has gone out of business.

Muscotah, Kan.—C. W. French has bought the Electric theater from W. L. Norris.

Baxter Springs, Kan.—Messrs. Tindale and Margruder, owners of the Elite picture show in Iola, Kansas, and the Starr theater in Cherryvale, have rented the Grantham building here, which was formerly occupied by the Cozy theater. The building is being remodeled and will be up to date in every respect. The new theater is to be called the Elite.

El Dorado, Kan.—The Everson theater is to be managed by Charles Parton and will soon be opened for business.

Rosendale, Mo.—The new opera house here will probably be fully completed within a week or so.

"Quo Vadis" Has Pre-Showing.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager M. J. Cohen of the local office of the George Kleine System, recently featured a pre-showing of the revised edition of "Quo Vadis" at Photo Player hall which was attended by exhibitors, dramatic critics, members of the clergy, school principals and members of the local school board.

Express Rates to Increase.

San Francisco, Cal.—The State Railroad Commission has authorized an increase in express rates in this state ranging from one cent to five cents a shipment, depending on the weight. The order applies to both first and second-class shipments and is expected to add about $100,000 a year to the revenue of Wells, Fargo & Co.

Circuit Building Occupied.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ackerman & Harris, who control a circuit of large theaters on the Pacific Coast, have moved their headquarters from the Humboldt Bank building, where they have been located for several years, to the Circuit building, a three-story structure recently completed at 281 O'Farrell street. The offices of Sam Harris, the Western Vaudeville Association and the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association are located on the second floor, while Irving C. Ackerman has his offices on the third floor.

San Francisco Briefs.

The new owners of the Halcyon theater on Devisadero street have decided to change the name to that of the Park theater.

The Fox exchange has been repaired and now presents as handsome an appearance as formerly. The recent fire blackened the ceiling and necessitated replastering a portion of the interior.

The People's theater on Mission street has been closed for remodeling and a thorough overhauling.

Walter Preddey recently disposed of two Power's Cameragraphs and a motor-generator set to be installed in a new theater at Bay Point, Cal.

Architect Carl Werner is completing plans for the theater to be erected at Ninth and Clement streets by the Colonial Theater company. The cost of the house is estimated at $125,000.

The Western Poster company has issued its new date books covering the year 1918 and is offering these to exhibitors free of charge.

The California Camera Club, which includes several camera men in its membership, recently showed the Leon F. Douglass natural-colored moving picture at Native Sons' Hall.

New Producing Company Very Busy.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Rev. Paul Smith Motion Picture Co., which recently produced and released the "Finger of Justice," featuring Crane Wilbur, has met with so much success with this that work is to be commenced at an early date on a second release to be known as "More Deadly Than Battle." L. W. Chaudet, who directed the first production, will also have charge of the making of the second release, which will be filmed at San Rafael, a suburb of this city, noted for its beauty and the excellence of its climate. Bookings on the "Finger of Justice" have been very heavy in this territory and the producing concern has decided to give up its downtown offices and locate on Film Row, quarters having been secured at 120 Golden Gate avenue. The production is now being shown over the entire T. & D. circuit and at an early date will be offered at the Portola theater, this being the first time that a picture has ever been put on at this house after having been shown elsewhere in this city as a first run. It has already been shown for three full weeks at the Savony theater. William H. Joblemann is now acting as assistant general manager of this new concern and has charge of the publicity work. Negotiations are now under way for placing it in the southern part of the state and in the Northwest.

San Francisco, Cal.—Local moving picture interests were startled recently to learn that plans were under way to use the Exposition Auditorium in the Civic Center, a structure with a hall having a seating capacity of about 12,000, for the presentation of Italian war pictures, ostensibly for the purpose of raising funds for the Italian Red Cross.

Strongly suspecting that the charitable feature of the proposed nine-day exhibition was but a cloak to cover the profits of the promoters' representatives of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California met at the new California theater and decided to investigate the matter and to oppose it if their suspicions proved true. It later developed that the Italo-North American Commercial Union, which controls the films and which, it is asserted, represents the Italian Government, has offered to sell the California rights to the pictures for $20,000. The Red Cross has disclaimed any connection with the exhibition, it being pointed out that when it gives an entertainment no rent is paid and the full proceeds go into its funds.

The moving picture men later attended a meeting of the Auditorium committee and made a protest against allowing the hall to be used for the purpose specified, claiming that the proposed exhibition was for commercial purposes. Through their attorney, Eustace Cullinan, they offered to assist the project, provided one hundred per cent of the proceeds went to the Red Cross or the Italian Government and further offered to supply operators, ushers, musicians and all help gratis. The opinion was expressed, however, that the proposed exhibition was primarily a commercial enterprise for the profit of its promoters.

Included among those who met at the California theater were Eugene H. Roth, Norman Eisner, E. B. Johnson, I. Oppenheimer, J. A. Partington, L. Weinberg, H. J. Sheehan and Herman Wobber.

The indications are, however, that the protests of the moving picture men have been not without avail. Advertisements have appeared in the daily press stating that the exhibition will be given under the supervision of Mayor Rolph and Italian Consul Margotti, with the entire net receipts going to the Italian war sufferers through the Italian Government. The prices are listed at 25, 50, 75 cents and $1, including the war tax. The opinion is expressed that the strong opposition of theater owners has led the local city officials to safeguard the receipts and that the pictures will be shown under an entirely different plan than was at first intended.

Rothapfel Talks on Conditions in Trade

Entertained at Luncheon in San Francisco Press Club—Talks to Distinguished Fellow Guests on Conditions in the Trade and Modern Showmanship.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—S. L. Rothapfel, the well-known New York exhibitor and member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., spent several days here recently inspecting local houses and conferring with members of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which is also a member of this organization. On November 21 he was the guest of honor at a luncheon tendered by Turner & Dahnken and the Press Club at the rooms of the latter organization on Powell street, a gathering that was attended by almost one hundred film men of this city and vicinity.

Mr. Rothapfel's Speech.

After luncheon the visitor was introduced in a happy manner by Al C. Joy, president of the club. Mr. Rothapfel stated that he was "running on a flat tire," referring to a distressing cold he had contracted on the road to the Pacific Coast, but this was lost sight of as he warmed up to his talk on "The Moving Picture Game." This speech was along the same general lines as the one delivered here by him two years ago, but brought right up to date. At that time he declared that the day of the exhibitor had arrived, that moving pictures were fast becoming the greatest factor in the amusement field and that the crying need of exhibitors was some manifestation of individuality in the manner of conducting their business.

Conditions Serious for Film Men.

In his recent talk he stated that conditions throughout the country, from the standpoint of exhibitors and film men in general, were serious. The war has brought about new conditions and exhibitors have made too few changes in their methods, he declared. With the drama in a rut and vaudeville showing nothing new, he expressed the belief that a wonderful opportunity was open to the moving picture industry and urged his hearers to get out of the idea that pictures were still a side-show attraction.

Program Coming Back.

Mr. Rothapfel stated that while the open market is here the program is coming back; not the old-style tight program, but one in which the exhibitor has a hand, that of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit being mentioned as an example. Exhibitors were urged to select their bills with care and not to depend on so-called stars to keep their houses filled. By keeping in a rut and depending on names that are a household word exhibitors are but boosting the salaries of these stars higher and higher, he said, and keeping quality production down. The prediction was made that during the coming year there would be a weeding out in the moving picture business, with a decided change for the better, as the result of a closer co-operation between producer, distributor and exhibitor.

Methods Used at Strand and Rialto.

The speaker told of the methods he had utilized in making a success of the Strand and Rialto theaters and declared that the latter had not fallen below $16,000 in receipts in the past twenty-one weeks, with some weeks passing the $20,000 mark. He told how he had worked to make the theater a social factor in the community and how the musical programs were appreciated. Declaring that moving pictures were the hardest form of amusement to "put over," on account of the length of most programs and the semi-darkness he stated that the exhibitor needed to employ taste, snap, precision and new ideas to secure an impression above the ordinary.

He told of some of the innovations that would be found in the new Rival theater in New York, how perfumes were to introduce the sense of smell in addition to those of sight and hearing and what plans were under way to make the music the finest in any moving picture theater. In regard to prices the statement was made that four hundred seats had been set aside for which a charge of one dollar would be made and he made the interesting remark that these had all been sold in advance for a period of one year.

The talk throughout was essentially one of good cheer, with an appeal for exhibitors to show their individuality and make their houses above the ordinary. The speaker frowned on the double-bill program, the shelving of film to keep a competitor from getting service, and similar tactics.

Among Those Present.

Among the other guests of the Turner & Dahnken circuit and the Press Club, included among which will be found the names of leading exhibitors and film men, were the following: Eugene H. Roth, J. A. Partington, Harry David, Herman Wobber, J. A. Allen, Louis Reichert, M. J. Cohen, E. C. Jensen, E. O. Child, Ben F. Simpson, William J. Citron, Newton Levi, Harry Schmidt, M. J. Sheehan, Irving C. Ackerman, Louis R. Greenfield, Joseph E. Levin, Robt. Abraham, A. Goldberg, Nassau Bros., S. Wolf, Joe Wiseman, A. A. Richards, Bert Levey, Marion H. Kohn, I. Oppenheimer, A. Karski, Fred Gibbs, Joe Bauer, Charles I. Luntz, E. B. Mayer, Chas. Rosenthal, Jr., Larry Lund, A. Markowitz, Morris L. Markowitz, Harry Leonhardt, R. B. Quive, C. B. Parsons, H. Gosliner, Reuben Cohen, X. K. Stout, T. A. Church, F. Habekos, E. W. Scott, H. G. Schmidt and Henry Frohman. The Turner & Dahnken Circuit was represented by Fred Dahnken, Jr., J. T. Turner, E. B. Johnson, Claude E. Langley, E. M. Asher and L. V. Crook.

Luncheon Given by Turner & Dahnken Circuit and Press Club of San Francisco in Honor of S. L. Rothapfel, on November 20, 1917.

Northwest Film Association Gets to Work

Exchanges in Pacific Northwest Working for Permanent and Useful Organization—Committees Appointed for Special Activities.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The Northwest Film Association, the formation of which was discussed two weeks ago, was permanently organized on November 20, when the exchange managers stationed in Seattle met at the Metropolitan Club. J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Northwest territory for the World Film, presided, and a plan of immediate action was drawn up.

Committee on Transportation.

A Transportation and Traffic Committee will discuss with the express companies the quickest and best routes for the handling of film throughout the territory. It will look after the adjustment of claims against the express companies for both exchanges and exhibitors. It will also insist upon prompt and proper collections for C. O. D. orders. One of the first benefits which the exchanges themselves expect to receive from co-operated action is a later delivery of films each day by the express companies. This committee is now working on this problem, and expects at the next meeting of the association on November 27 to lay the matter before some of the managers of the express companies. It will be prepared with a written statement from the postmaster to the effect that if all the exchanges will agree to send films by parcel post he will have a delivery wagon to handle films alone. The Transportation Committee is also working on the matter of better service for the exchanges during the holiday season, when so many delays in the delivery of film generally occur.

A Credit Committee.

The Committee on Credits will furnish the association with regular reports as to the financial reliability of exhibitors. This information will be given to the committee by the different exchange managers. The names of all exhibitors who give an N. S. F. check, hold shows extra days without paying, or in any other way make it advisable for one exchange manager to give protective information to the others will be reported by the Credit Committee.

Committee on Complaints.

There is a Grievance Committee which will attend to the complaints made by any individual exhibitor or group of exhibitors against any exchange. The members of this committee will discuss such problems both with individuals and with state and national organizations of exhibitors.

Will Watch Legislation.

The Legislative Committee has been appointed for the purpose of leading the fight against legislation that is adverse to the interests of any branch of the motion picture industry. It will work against local censorship not only in Seattle, but in any town in the territory where this restriction on motion pictures is threatened. This committee will also handle operators who steal scenes from films, and attend to all business for the association where points of law are involved.

Want Permanent Organization.

By the immediate perfection of such a businesslike organization as this the exchange managers of Seattle show that they intend to have a permanent association at last. Heretofore attempts at such an organization have been half-hearted, and the idea given up after a few poorly attended meetings. The Northwest territory is one of the largest in the country, and co-operation between different exchanges and between exhibitors and exchanges is much more important than in a more compact territory. It is to be hoped that every exchange man will continue to support the association with the same enthusiasm with which it has been started.

Mr. Koerpel is peculiarly fitted as a leader for the association through his long experience in all branches of the film business and his past record as an organizer. He was an exhibitor in New York when motion pictures were the wonder of the day, and he charged 5 cents to see the pictures and 10 cents to see the projection machine. Since that time he has managed exchanges all over the United States. He was general manager of the 1915 Motion Picture Convention and Exposition.

G. A. Faris Wins Promotion.

Seattle, Wash.—G. A. Faris, for the past year Northwest manager for Greater Vitagraph, has been promoted to the managership of the Los Angeles territory. Mr. Faris leaves many friends in the Northwest, for he was truly a man whom Ruggles of Red Gap would call "a mixer." J. M. Tally, formerly manager of the Denver office, has succeeded Mr. Faris. Mr. Tally is the nephew of T. L. Tally, the well known exhibitor of Los Angeles. H. D. Naugle, Vitagraph Coast division manager, spent several days in Seattle at the time of the changing of the managers. Mr. Naugle had with him his father and mother, whom he has taken with him on a tour of the country, which he is just now completing.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, East 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Union Men Advertise Friendly Theaters.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Representatives of local unions, carrying banners urging patronage of theaters and motion picture houses that are employing union men paraded the downtown streets of the city Friday night, November 16.

Permission for the parade, which was headed by a band of about 40 pieces, was secured from the city council by C. Reimer, representing the musicians, and C. S. Alderman, business agent of the picture machine operators' organization. The permission of the city council was asked after failure to obtain a permit from the department of public safety, in the absence of Mayor Fleming, head of that department.

It was with considerable reluctance that the other members of the council gave the permit, and only after some of the legends proposed for the banners had been censored because of their imputation of a boycott upon the show houses—six in all—which have become involved in difficulty with the unions.

Liberty's Policy Will Be About the Same.

Spokane, Wash.—Manager Cohn of the Liberty announces that there will be no material change in the program policy of the theater, although more "open-market" productions will probably be offered in addition to the standard Arctcraft and Paramount releases.

Under the new management all Fairbanks' pictures will be shown at the regular admission price. Heretofore the price was raised on all the Fairbanks' releases.

"The Daughter of the Gods" is coming back to the Liberty before the end of the year at popular prices. Other bookings for the near future include William S. Hart in "The Cold Deck," Clara Kimball Young in "The Easiest Way," "The Whip," Billie Burke in "The Mysterious Miss Terry" and a return engagement of the Griffith super-spectacle, "Intolerance."

"Heroic France" at Auditorium.

Spokane, Wash.—For one week beginning Sunday, November 25, the Auditorium theater will present the latest French government picture, "Heroic France," released under the auspices of the American relief clearing house association of Paris. A percentage of the receipts goes to the war relief fund of the association.

Minneapolis Has Snow and Full Theaters

An Abundance of Good Feature Pictures Fill Houses—Some of the Recent Offerings in the Twin City Theaters—Notes About Film Men.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—With new managers in action at the Pathe and Hoffman Foursquare exchanges the film rialto has slunk back into the solitude and it looks as if things will be quiet until after the holidays. The first heavy snow since October fell upon Minneapolis and St. Paul Sunday night, Nov. 24, and, despite slush-covered sidewalks and an occasional chilly breeze good crowds attended theaters in both cities.

In Minneapolis capacity houses were recorded almost everywhere and an abundance of good features was exhibited. The New Garrick began a four-day run of Elsie Ferguson's "The Rise of Jennie Cushing." The Strand showed "The Bar Sinister" and the fifth and sixth reels of "France in Arms," the Lyric offered Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country," the New Garden offered "Fear Not" and "Minnesota Boys of the Rainbow Division," the New Unique William S. Hart in "The Disciple" and the New Astor displayed Earle Williams in "The Grell Mystery."

In St. Paul the New Garrick offered Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon," the New Majestic Margery Wilson in "Wild Sumac," the New Princess "The Public Be Damned," the Alhambra George Walsh in "This Is the Life," Starland, William Russell in "Snap Judgment" and the Blue Mouse, Bushman and Bayne in "The Voice of Conscience."

Rialto Begins Again as the Summit.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The theater at Western and Selby avenues, previously called the Elk and the Rialto, has been reopened by J. B. Reisman under the name of the Summit.

G. W. Malone and T. C. Goldrick Leave Metro.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Governor" George W. Malone and Thomas C. Goldrick have resigned from the Metro exchange.

Louis Kaufman Now Laemmle Road Man.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Louis Kaufman, former Pathe exchange salesman, has gone out on the road for the Laemmle exchange. He is covering Southern Minnesota towns.

Prosper Schwie Made Corporal.

According to advices from Camp Dodge, Iowa, Prosper Schwie, former Arctcraft, Bluebird and American Maid salesman, has been appointed a corporal in the National army.

Manie Gottlieb at Camp Mills.

Manie Gottlieb, former manager of the Favorite Feature exchange, is now encamped at Garden City, L. I., awaiting orders to embark for France.

John Fournier Now a Sargeant.

John Fournier, former salesman for the Unicorn and Lochren exchanges, is now a sargeant at Camp Devins, Boston, Mass.

Karl Goethals Joins Mutual.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Dan Donnelan of the Mutual exchange has secured Karl Goethals for his South Dakota roadman.

What the Exhibitors Are Doing.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Branham of the Strand has shifted to an open-book policy. He has booked "For the Freedom of the World," "The Auction Block," "Her Hour," "Easy Money," "The Burglar," and two Sennet comedies and Burton Holmes' travelogues for showing in the near future.

Manager James A. Keough of the New Lyric will show "Draft 258" for the first time in the Northwest at his house the week of Dec. 2. Manager Branham of the Strand will offer "For the Freedom of the World" in opposition.

Manager Koch of the New Astor has contracted for future Metro releases.

Manager Watson of the New Garden has booked "Fighting Mad" and "The Door Between" for future showing at the New Garden.

The Shubert theater following its unsuccessful season of stock productions, Dec. 1, will begin a two weeks' run of the Supreme feature, "The Italian Battlefront" Dec. 2, according to announcement by Manager Niggermeyer.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Seven Corners theater has been reopened and is now showing the best second-run pictures available.

Manager Bert Goldman of the New Princess has booked "The Co-respondent" for showing at his house in the near future.

What Exchangemen Are Doing.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The third meeting of exchangemen bent on organizing a permanent exchange managers' club here was scheduled for Monday evening, November 25, at the Minneapolis Elks' Club.

Manager Benjamin Friedman of the Friedman Film Corp. has sent out invitations for a showing of "The Whip" at the Lyric theater the afternoon of Nov. 26.

Manager Myron Conhaim, of the Supreme exchange has booked "The Russian Revolution" film in the Strand theater, Duluth, Minn., for the week beginning Dec. 2.

Manager Graham, of the Klein exchange, has booked Perfection pictures in the Casino theater, Des Moines, Iowa.

General Manager J. Earle Kemp, of the Westcott Film Corp., has gone to New York on a ten-day business visit.

Harry A. Sherman spent a few days in Minneapolis last week. Harry stated he was unable to get passports for London when he attempted to cross the Atlantic for Goldwyn.

Manager Dan Donnelan, of the Mutual exchange, displayed "The Planter," featuring Tyrone Powers, to exhibitors at a special showing in the Gold room of the Hotel Radisson recently.

According to Manager Conhaim, of the Supreme exchange, Ruth Stonehouse, former Universal star, will be in Minneapolis and St. Paul Dec. 1 and 2.

Manager Harry Rathner, of the Select exchange, has booked a majority of his productions in the Lerner theater at Eveleth, Minn.

James V. Bryson has booked "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" in the Orpheum theater, Fargo, N. D.

It has been reported that Benjamin Judell has secured territorial rights to the feature, "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and her son.

Manager Wilson, of the American Maid Film Co., has announced the purchase of territorial rights to the George Loane Tucker production, "I Believe."

Portland Film Business Up in the Air

Exhibitors Making Strenuous Efforts to Keep Up to Mark—Trying New Policies—Prices Upset—Tax Pay Day Causes Gloom.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Indications are that the depression in business experienced in the Rose City last week and reported in these columns was of a temporary nature, and that the people are becoming accustomed to the twenty-cent admission in the downtown theaters. Managers report that this week's receipts have shown a perceptible increase.

However, the situation is not at all serene, and individual managers are much to blame for the condition. The People's Amusement Company dampened the ardor of the downtown exhibitors this week when it cut the admission price at the Star theater to 15 cents all day and absorbed the war tax. The Sunset slipped back to 10 and 15 cents, also paying the tax. While these two theaters do not control the price situation in Portland the other downtown exhibitors feel that it would have been to the general advantage of the industry if they had stuck it out for thirty days anyway at 20 cents and given the plan a fair trial.

That the price raise has caused the managers to go to work and figure new ways of getting the money is indicated by the changes in policy of operation made during the past week. At the Star, Ann Pennington has been showing all week, this house usually changing twice a week. At the Columbia, starting November 24, the show began on Saturday instead of Sunday as has been the custom. The Majestic has been following the Saturday opening plan for some time, also holding all its attractions for the full week, and has been meeting with fine success.

Little if any profit in business and the war tax paying day near made Old Man Gloom a popular character on theater row this week.

Salem Theaters Raise Prices.

Salem, Ore.—All the theaters here have combined to boost their prices for both matinees and evenings. The houses involved are the Bligh and Liberty, controlled by George Bligh, and the Oregon, operated by Geo. B. Guthrie, of Portland. The old prices of 10 and 15 cents have been raised to 15 and 20.

Few Exhibitors Refuse to Pay Tax.

Portland, Ore.—A canvas of the exchanges in Portland demanding the war tax discloses that very few exhibitors refuse to pay the toll outright. All complain vigorously, but eventually pay up under protests. The exchanges are referring the absolute refusals to the home office.

Malotte Gives Organ Concert.

Portland, Ore.—Albert Hay Malotte, the popular organist at the Liberty theater, was presented in recital November 28 by the Oregon chapter of the American Guild of Organists; E. J. Myrick, manager of the Liberty, giving the use of his theater for the occasion.

Mr. Malotte's work has done much to popularize the big Liberty, and his noon-day concerts are features of the theater.

Tacoma Theater Gets Big Organ.

Tacoma, Wash.—The Rialto theater, now under construction by Baker and Moore, will be equipped with a specially built Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra costing $30,000. The theater will be completed in about six months.

Serials Are Hard to Land.

Portland, Ore.—Film salesmen in this territory claim that selling a serial right now is about the hardest thing there is in the world to do. It wouldn't be policy to say which serials are going around begging for a first run, but there are several. One logical first run exhibitor is quoted to have said he wouldn't run a serial if he were paid to do so. After being placed on the shelf until a good first run is despaired of the serials are being put into the ten-cent houses, the vaudeville shows or any old place where they can find some kind of a decent berth.

H. H. Brownell Goes to Universal City.

Portland, Ore.—Hobart H. Brownell, well known in all the branches of the film industry in Portland from cameraman to salesman, has been called to Universal City to act as cameraman for the Universal company. Mr. Brownell has been on the job as cameraman at every Pendleton Roundup since 1912, and has done much to put Oregon scenery into the news and scenics of the country.

Exhibitors' League Ball Off.

Portland, Ore.—There is no exhibitors' ball in sight in Portland for some time. The exhibitors are having troubles of their own to contend with right now, and there does not seem to be anybody willing to take hold of the proposition. The ball was scheduled to take place at the Municipal Auditorium, November 28, but it now has been postponed indefinitely.

Portland Exchanges Prosper.

Portland, Ore.—Exchanges located in Portland are doing wonderful business, if the exhibitors that constantly crowd them are any indications. Much of Pathe's local business has been divided between Mutual, Universal, and General, who have exchanges here. George E. Jackson, manager for Mutual, reports that if ever a feature has a day's lay-over in Portland it is snapped up as an emergency show. Seattle exchanges, especially Triangle of late, sometimes miss shipments, and local lay-over shows are in big demand.

Fred Simonton with General Film.

Portland, Ore.—Fred Simonton, former manager of the Standard Feature Film Company, has been selected as road man for General, and made his first road trip under the new colors November 22. C. E. Waite, General Film branch manager, reports good business, but does not know whether to attribute it to the discontinuance of the war excise or to the general conditions.

Owing to the rush of local business and the great amount of office work demanding attention, Manager C. M. Hill has had his two road men, Sperry and Hunter, staying close to home.

New Mutual Road Man.

Portland, Ore.—Ted Johnson, former manager of the Idaho Amusement Company, and secretary and treasurer of the Idaho Exhibitors' Association, with headquarters at Boise, has been employed as road man for Mutual to work out of Portland. Mr. Johnson is very popular with exhibitors in the territory, and Mr. Jackson is considered exceedingly fortunate in getting his services.

Short Notes of the Film Trade.

Elgin, Ore.—The Elgin Commercial and city authorities have joined in erecting a concrete motion picture theater under the management of L. B. Tuttle, city recorder. New projection equipment was recently installed by the Service Film Company, of Portland.

Troy, Ida.—R. C. Spence has installed new projection equipment in the Jewel theater.

Burns, Ore.—C. B. Smith has bought the Liberty theater from Thompson and Klingham.

Portland, Ore.—Sidney E. Abel, executive office representative of Select Pictures, was a recent visitor in Portland.

Happenings in Buffalo Filmdom Last Week

Many Patriotic Benefits Given by Buffalo Theater Managers—New Theaters and Managerial Changes in the Territory—Business Notes.

By Joseph McGuire, 152 North Elmwood St. Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—“On Friday, November 30, the Star, Teck, and Majestic theaters, this city, held matinees for the benefit of the Red Cross fund,” said Valentine O’Grady, secretary of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers’ Association. “These were regular performances, and the gross receipts were donated to this worthy cause. This action was decided upon at a recent meeting of the association. The large theaters of Buffalo are collecting $750 to $1,000 a week in connection with the ticket tax, thereby contributing substantial amounts to help the Government defray the expenses of the war.”

Herman Lorence Enlists in Army.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The enthusiasm of local film men in actual military service must not be overlooked. Herman Lorence, former sales representative of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual, resigned Saturday to enlist in the U. S. Army. He decided not to wait for the draft. The Buffalo correspondent has just received a postal from Private Isadore Wartikowsky, former night shipper at the Mutual, Buffalo, who is now at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga. The young man wrote in an optimistic mood, and said the strenuous training at the camp was highly fascinating.

Service Stars Will Shine for Mutual.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Mutual Film Corporation is preparing a mammoth service flag for prominent display at its headquarters in Chicago. W. A. V. Mack, Mutual manager, Buffalo branch, says: “Each branch of our company is also being furnished a separate flag on which will appear the number of stars representing the men from that particular branch who have joined the colors.”

Other War Activities in Buffalo.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Shea’s Hippodrome recently showed the Buffalo boys at work and at play at Camp Dix. As group after group of the local soldiers were recognized on the screen the audiences cheered vociferously.

Through the board of commerce of Lockport, N. Y., four minute speakers are addressing audiences in that city on the reasons the Government entered the war to aid the allies. “Carrying the Message” is their slogan.

Local film men are heeding the War Department’s request for co-operation in an endeavor to secure all the photographic lenses possible. They have been informed that the war authorities at Washington are exerting efforts to secure as many of the lenses as possible for use on the photographic instruments with which aeroplanes are to be equipped for observation purposes in the European war.

Some of the film men helped the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce in a drive for 1,000 new members. Considerable enthusiasm was displayed by the various team captains in the campaign. Archer A. Landon, president of the chamber, emphasized the importance of increasing the membership, and declared that in times of war all forces of the country must be organized, and efficiency must be the watchword. To these statements the film men gave their hearty approval. They also helped in the national campaign to raise $35,000,000 for the Y. M. C. A.’s war fund. Buffalo’s contribution totaled $506,792.

New House in Binghamton Opened.

Binghamton, N. Y.—J. F. Small has opened the new Floral theater, Binghamton, N. Y. He is using the Mutual Star productions twice a week.

A. W. Newman, formerly connected with the People’s theater, Binghamton, is about to reopen the old Lyric theater, that city. For the past year the Lyric has been used for boxing exhibitions.

Buffalo General Film Jottings.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. E. Dickman has been appointed traveling representative of the General Film, Buffalo. R. E. Gallagher is manager of the company’s new branch in Albany. “Camille,” a general feature, is meeting with favor in Buffalo and western New York.

Samuel Carver Opens Globe Theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Samuel Carver, of Boston, has opened the Globe moving picture theater at Main and East Ferry streets, Buffalo.

Business and Personal Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Marsey, of 47 West Swan street, Buffalo, is busy getting contracts for the Hoffman Foursquare Pictures.

“The Sun theater, Buffalo, featured the Unicorn service last week,” said L. L. Hager, Unicorn manager, this city. “A children’s matinee at five cents on Saturday was crowded.”

G. I. Matthews, manager of the Veribest Pictures, Inc., Buffalo, has returned from a trip through the western part of the state, and reports good business on all the feature productions of the company. Mr. Matthews is handling to advantage “The Italian Battle Front” and “The Russian Revolution.” The Plaza theater, Buffalo, has had a successful showing of “Parentage” and “God’s Man,” Veribest productions. S. D. Matthews, president of the company, was a Buffalo caller.

Harry T. Dixon Needs an Aeroplane.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry T. Dixon is the new manager of the Frontier moving picture theater, Buffalo. He also performs similar duties at the Variety theater. The first-named house is on the west side of the city, and the other is many blocks away on the east side.

“No, indeed, I don’t use seven-league boots to jump from one theater to the other,” said Mr. Dixon. “I am quite contented to use the simple, old-fashioned aeroplane route.”

Gardiner Syndicate, Special Film Exchange, Opens.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Gardiner Syndicate has opened headquarters at 323 Chamber of Commerce, Buffalo. This firm reports that it has the exclusive privilege of displaying advertising and industrial pictures in fifty-three theaters in this city, and will shortly release a Western New York Weekly. The concern also supplies moving picture entertainments for homes and banquet halls, and has its own cameramen and other facilities.

Hippodrome in Marietta, O., Burns.

Marietta, O.—Fire, which is thought to have started from defective wiring in the main hall of the building, completely destroyed the Hippodrome theater early Saturday morning, Nov. 23. The roof and the entire interior of the theater were demolished by the flames, and nothing but the fire-proof walls remained standing when the fire was finally extinguished. The blaze was discovered shortly after two o’clock this morning by a patrolman.

The complete equipment of the theater, including scenery, mirroroid screen, curtains, drops, seats, picture machines, orchestrian, pianos, and stage equipment, were destroyed in the blaze. In addition to this the entire wardrobe and scenic effects of Zarrow’s Little Bluebird Company, which was filling an engagement at the theater this week, were destroyed.

In speaking of the fire, Manager Seybert stated that the loss to the C. & M. Amusement Company would probably total $25,000.

Of this amount only $6,700 is covered by insurance.

“Just as soon as the wreckage can be cleared away and equipment placed on the spot work will be started on a new Hippodrome that will be bigger and better than ever,” Manager Sybert stated.

Trade Notes From Quincy Ill.

ESSANAY.

THE FABLE OF THE BACKTRACKER FROM THE HOT SIDEWALKS (George Ade Fable—Two Parts).—Once there was a farm dwelling on a knoll that served as the home for a foundling who was getting his board and keep. Being a relation, he only had to crowd fourteen hours of labor into each day. He slept in an apartment just under the rafters, with the seed corn and medicinal herbs, and was up at four a. m. without a call.

The county seat was a boob settlement, but to the adopted waif it looked like four European capitals welded together until he got a book of travel views, and then he was taken with a sudden yearn to zip away in a day coach with his head out of the window. The call could not be downed, and soon the sturdy specimen was on his way for the Incandescent Pitfalls determined to take up some vocation that could be practiced while seated in a rocking chair.

He started in a livery stable, but in three years we find him employed in a department store in the very heart of the city, and twenty years later was a perfectly good floorwalker, with nearly $80 piled up awaiting investment.

He decided to backtrack it to the jungle and let the poor flatheads have a look at his palm beach suit while they were washing up for dinner. But times have changed, and instead of finding the muscle bound yeomen tilling the soil he is informed that the family is just going to the links, and is rebuked with, "You should have brought your clubs along."

MORAL.—It must be dull for the people away out in the country without any fire engines passing in front of the house.

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—A TRIP THROUGH THE GREAT PLAYGROUND OF CANADA (One-reel Scenic).—This scenic reel shows the wonders of the 2,000 square miles comprising the Rocky Mountain Park. The enchanting Bow River valley, its falls and rapids; the climb up the Cascade mountains, country where the buffalo still roams the haunts of ancient days. You will also see the precipitous Mount Rundle, poking its frost-bitten nose 9,788 feet into the sky, and other famous and wonderful peaks, including Mount Field and Snowpeak avenue, between Field and Emerald Lakes. Boating and fishing in the Yoho valley, including Takakawa falls, higher than Niagara.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

ONE DOLLAR'S WORTH (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Judge Derwent (W. L. Rodgers); Bob (Chet Ryan); Kilpatrick (Jack Pierce); Rafael Ortiz (Willie Calles); Rattlesnake (White Cloud); Nancy (Frances Parks). Directed by David Smith.

Judge Derwent, of the Rio Grande border district, found a letter in his mail one morning signed "Rattlesnake," in which the writer set forth that four years before he had been sent to the pen by the Judge, who, in the course of his remarks, had called him a "rattlesnake." That a year later his daughter had died of poverty and disgrace, and that it was his intention to make the Judge, who also had a daughter, "know how it feels to lose one." And he paid his respects to the district attorney, whom he also intended to get. Neither the Judge nor Bob Littlefield, the district attorney, paid particular attention to the threats further than to hazard a guess that the writer might be Mexican Sam, whose four year term had just expired.

Court was in session at Brownsville, and one case was that of young Rafael Ortiz, who had been caught passing a counterfeit silver dollar. The day before the case was to be tried, Nancy, the Judge's daughter, and Littlefield's fiancée, appeared at the office to get Bob to go plover shooting with her. While they were talking a beautiful, dark-eyed girl entered and began to plead in Spanish for young Ortiz, saying that she had persuaded her lover to pass the silver dollar for some medicine, and that the medicine had saved her life. Nancy was touched, but to the district attorney it seemed like an old story, and the girl left murmuring, "If the life of the girl you love is ever in danger remember Rafael Ortiz."

Littlefield slipped Exhibit A, the counterfeit coin, into his pocket, and soon he and Nancy had forgotten the incident in the excitement of plover shooting. On the way home they were confronted by Mexican Sam armed, and with the evident intention of carrying out his written threat. With his rifle he played with them as a cat with a mouse, always keeping out of range of their bird shot. Crouching behind a wounded horse, the words of the Spanish girl came to Littlefield, and with them inspiration. Presently he rose on one knee, took careful aim, and fired. The ruffian fell from his horse—dead. The next morning when the case of Rafael Ortiz was called the district attorney moved that it be stricken off, as there was not sufficient evidence for conviction in the hands of the government.

That afternoon a deputy asked Littlefield what on earth he shot the Mexican with, saying that the body looked as though nails had been used. "With Exhibit A," said the district attorney. He had sliced the coin into slugs with his pocket knife, and loaded his gun with them.

"THE LAST LEAF" (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Behrman (Bernard Siegel); Johanna (Mildred Manning); Sue (Patsy De Forest). Directed by Ashley Miller.

At the top of a three-story building in New York's old Greenwich Village, Sue and Johnsy had their studio—Johnsy a frail, tiny girl from California, and Sue from Maine. It is November and pneumonia stalked about the colony, touching finally the little woman with blood thinned by California zephyrs, and Johnsy lay scarcely moving on her iron bedstead, looking through the small Dutch window-panes at the blank side of the next brick house. The doctor had told Sue that Johanna had one chance in ten, "and that chance is for her to want to live." But she had made up her mind that she was not going to get well, and as she counted the leaves drop one by one from an old ivy vine on the brick wall she became weaker and weaker.

Convinced that when the last leaf falls she will go, too, she makes no effort to live. Sue, heartbroken, tells old Behrman, the painter on the floor beneath them, of Johnsy's fancy. Behrman, always scoffing at tenderness, has constituted himself personal guardian of the two girls. Always about to paint a masterpiece, he is now past sixty and has never yet begun it. That night a cold, persistent rain falls and when morning comes Johnsy, with dull wide-open eyes, asks Sue to pull up the shade. Drearly she obeys, but lo! after the beating rain and fierce gusts of wind one leaf is still visible against the pane. And then Johnsy begins to realize her wickedness in waiting to die and asks for some broth. That day old Behrman is taken to the hospital with pneumonia. He was found by the janitor with his shoes and clothing wet through, with a lantern still lighted near by and a palette with green and yellow colors. Behrman had painted on the window pane his masterpiece the night the last leaf fell from the vine.

A HERO FOR A MINUTE (Two Parts—Dec. 5).—The cast: Kid Camerage (Bobby Dunn); The Chief (S. Kennedy); Mrs. Chief (Katherine Young); The Maid (Peggy Provost). Produced by Bob Kerr.

Kid Camerage, the Chief's chauffeur, was secretly married to the maid. She had promised to take good care of him before he married her, but everything was different now, for he was made to do the menial work and became a full-fledged kitchen mechanic to meet the high cost of living. The Chief and his wife were happy. They had a battle every other minute. The Chief gets an order from the Mayor, advising him that all blackhanders must be clean-shaven. This aggravates one of the blackhanders, who picks himself out a well-fed bomb, and wends his weary way to the office of the Mayor.

Kid Camerage, whose duties varied, was lining up the cuspidors, when he spied the bomb nesting in one of them. Every one looked on to see the Kid's finish, but picking the bomb up he flung it out of the window, hitting the blackhanders, and saved the day.

"You're fired!" said the Mayor to the Chief. "You're hired!" said the Mayor to the Kid. "You're chauffeur!" said the Kid to the Chief, and so the Chief became the chauffeur, while the chauffeur became the chief. Returning home, the ex-chauffeur and the maid took possession of the Chief's house. Kid Camerage fell asleep in Mrs. Chief's room. The maid tried to detain the Chief by fainting in his arms. Friend wife, seeing her husband's arms full of maid, entered her room, and she found the Kid trembling in her clothes closet. Thereupon she, too, fainted. The ex-Chief's bullets send the Kid to the roof, but they all drop through the skylight and land back where they came from. Explanations are in order, and the Kid relinquishes his right to Chieftom.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 8—"The Lair of the Beast"—Two Parts—Dec. 8).—The cast: Virginia Dixon (Marie Walcamp); Patrick Kelly (Bobby Mack); Dr. Hirtzman (Harry Archer); Sergeant Winthrop (Larry Peyton); Steele Heffern (Charles Brindley); Pierre Fouchard (L. M. Wells); "Dutch" Kate (Miriam Selbie); Red Fawn (Yvette Mitchell); Little Bear (Noble Johnson).

Try as she could, Virginia was unable to regain her position in the saddle. When the horse finally did stop, it was in her own yard, and Little Bear, who had escaped from his pursuers, released her from the saddle.

In the meantime, three important things had happened. First, Winthrop had been rescued by three mounted policemen, who, with Bobby, had been making all possible speed toward Lost Lake. Second, Bertha Schweir, whom we last saw in Virginia Dixon's Washington home acting as Virginia's maid, had arrived at Lost Lake. She registered at the inn after giving the secret sign of the foreign service which employed her, and upon being admitted to the hidden room, presented a note to Dr. Hirtzman urging him to make all haste in taking over the Dixon mine. In the third place, Steele Heffern discovered how Virginia had escaped, and turned his hand back toward her house.

At that moment a cry went up in the inn. "The mounted police are coming!" Pandemonium reigned as charges and counter charges of treachery flashed back and forth between Fouchard and Winthrop. But Winthrop was too nervous about Virginia to remain long there. He left the cleaning-up of the trading post to his companions, and took a man with him to Virginia's cabin, where he found Virginia reading a letter from the Du Pont Powder Company to her father, demanding that he send them the amount of platinum contracted for. Virginia regards this as a sacred duty, and starts out to obtain what platinum she can, using her secret entrance to the mine. She and Bobby start work in the river-bed.

But in the meantime the enemy forces have completed their secret tunnel into the same mine, and when Virginia's back is turned the terrible man-ape jumps upon Bobby and drags him away without a sound. Before Virginia has discovered his absence even, the beast is back and has grappled with the girl. Virginia is dragged through a long passage and into an underground dungeon, where she is left. Through an adjoining entrance she sees several shadowy forms. They turn at the noise, and four flashes of light are directed at the girl. As she becomes accustomed to the darkness she realizes that two lions are pacing back and forth in the next room. As things grow plainer to her, she discovers a skeleton, which, upon investigation, proves to be that of her father. Again the demand is made upon her to decipher her brother's letter, telling where the hidden platinum can be found, and again she refuses. This last refusal is the signal for the door to be lifted. Virginia screams as the two lions leap through the door, and she summons all her strength as one of the lions attacks her.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Episode 2—"The Grip of Hate"—Two Parts—Dec. 8).—The cast: Miles Gaston, Jr. (Ben Wilson); Betty Lee (Neva Gerber); Harry Russell (Duke Worne); Betty's Aunt (Elsie van Name); Jack Fay (Kingsley Benedict); James Lee (Nigel De Bruillier).

Miles Gaston aboard his yacht, watches the effect of the gunshot he fired on the ship carrying Betty Lee. Betty's aunt has to carry her to her cabin. But Gaston does not remain unpunished. In the height of the storm a bolt of lightning strikes so near as to stun him. Jack Fay carries Gaston below. Neither Gaston nor Betty are seriously hurt.

There is a stowaway on board of Gaston's yacht, known to the police as The Phantom. San Francisco headquarters suspect he is on Gaston's yacht and wireless to hold him. Meanwhile the man who is "wanted" eats the meal of the sleeping Gaston and hides again.

Betty's captain conceives an idea: Two sailors are to be put on a raft and have themselves saved by Gaston. Betty instructs the two men to disable the engine when they are picked up. Meanwhile, Gaston succeeds in cornering the stowaway at the point of a revolver. He promises not to turn him over to the police. The two sailors are saved.

The next morning Gaston's yacht is still in close pursuit of Betty's boat. The two sailors enter the engine-room but are put out by the engineer. Then they conclude that there is but one chance left; they will throw Gaston overboard. They watch their opportunity, and Betty, horror-stricken, sees Gaston drop into the sea. While Jack Fay, in a motorboat, tries to locate the missing Gaston, the two sailors sneak into another boat and are later picked up by Betty's crew. She berates them, as they were not sent out to kill. Fay returns empty-handed. To his surprise he finds Gaston aboard. Gaston explains that the stowaway had overheard the plotting of the two strange sailors and in gratitude had taken Gaston's place, dressed in his great coat. The stowaway is not lost, but swims ashore in the distance. Within an hour Gaston, thoroughly roused by the attempt on his life, says he will be in possession of the map, locating the treasure; and he will have his revenge on Betty. Gaston fires the deck gun with telling effect. Betty's boat is struck below the water line, and is fast sinking. Betty faints.

the automatic sprinkler, with which the warehouse was equipped. They rescue Ilma as Stayne and Mason watch them from a distance.

Mason and Stayne arrive at their lodging and find there a distinguished Oriental, who presents credentials and orders from the Sultan telling Perry to deliver Ilma in Canada, where the Turk's yacht is waiting. The next morning Ilma finds a box marked "pianoplayer" in her apartment when she returns from a walk. She calls Harry on the phone and tells him about it and he warns her it must be some trick of Mason's, and to take good care of herself. As she hangs up the receiver the end of the box opens and Mason leaps out and captures Ilma. He binds her and gets into the box with her. A girl about Ilma's size, who had been in the box, dresses in Ilma's clothes and leaves the apartment. The men who left the pianoplayer box in Ilma's apartment return for it and carry it away on a truck.

Kismet and Harry go to Perry's old hiding place and find there some carrier pigeons. Harry says they will lead him to Perry and consequently to Ilma, and the next morning the pigeons are released and Harry and Kismet follow them in an aeroplane. The pigeons lead the men in the aeroplane to a little farm house near Niagara Falls. Perry and Stayne see the aeroplane as they shove the box in which Ilma is a prisoner on an auto truck. Harry and Kismet see Perry in the truck and follow it. Perry throws the box in which Ilma is a prisoner into the river above the Falls and Harry and Kismet abandon their chase to rescue Ilma. They rush to a bridge across the river and Harry is lowered from it by a rope around his chest. He carries another rope with him and manages to put the noose around the case. As the men on the bridge, whom Harry and Kismet enlisted in the rescue, attempt to pull up the case, the noose slips and the case falls back into the stream. Harry is pulled up to the bridge as the case starts over the Falls to what looks like Ilma's certain destruction.

THE HIDDEN HAND (Episode No. 3—"The Island of Dread"—Two Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Doris Whitney (Doris Kenyon); Verda Crane (Arlene Pretty); Dr. Scarley (Sheldon Lewis); Jack Ramsey (Mahon Hamilton).

The mystery of the explosive packet is about to be solved at the opening of this episode. The Hidden Hand has Doris Whitney a prisoner in his den and has taken the locket from her neck. He is about to insert it in its proper place on the packet and reveal the contents. The false Ramsey releases his hold upon Doris as he bends forward to see what the packet contains. Doris seizes a flaming retort, tips it over on the wooden table, setting the den afire. In the excitement she secures the packet and escapes but leaves the locket in possession of the Hidden Hand. She is pursued by the Hidden Hand and his followers and rescued by Ramsey, and the police, whose aid Ramsey has secured.

Abner Whitney, who will secure the estate of his brother Judson Whitney if Doris is not proved to be the latter's daughter, takes steps to prevent Dr. Scarley, Doris' fiancé, from handling the money of the estate. Doris shows Scarley the explosive packet and he takes it. Ramsey enters and snatches the packet away from Scarley, showing by his action that he is suspicious of the physician.

Trask, Whitney's lawyer, phones, saying that he has located the witnesses to the will and that he will visit the Whitney home to tell where the will has been deposited. Verda Crane, Whitney's ward, informs the Hidden Hand of Trask's intended visit and he sends his henchmen to kill Trask. They do so. Ramsey persuades Doris to go to her summer home on Whitney Island. On the way to the island, overtaken by a storm, Doris and Ramsey seek refuge in a fisherman's shack on a small island.

The Hidden Hand and his followers capture them, but before he is captured, Ramsey has thrown the packet in the bushes. Ramsey is left bound on the island, while Doris is carried to a boat by the Hidden Hand and his men. On the way to the main land, Doris dives overboard and manages to conceal herself from her captors under an overturned rowboat.

WAR PRICES—Going Down

The well-known "Orpheum Collection" consists of melodramatic music almost exclusively, and is one of the best collections of agitatos, hurries, mysteriosos, short plaintives, etc., on the market. Particularly useful in serial pictures for bringing out the dramatic points. My last edition is printed from the same plates as the first, on a good quality of paper, and sells for these reduced prices: Piano (solo), 1st, 2d or 3d series, 35 cents each; Violin (1st, 2d or 3d series), 25 cents each; Cornet (1st, 2d or 3d series), 20 cents each; Flute, Clarinet, Trombone, Drums (1st or 2d series), 20 cents each.

He goes to the organ grinder's room, gets his organ and monkey and returns to the reception. He enters the ballroom, and when the monkey sees his master, makes one leap on top of his chest and cries "Popper." Billy, having established that Tony is an impostor, is lionized by all. At the height of his enjoyment the cook, to whom he is engaged, appears upon the scene, and in a fit of jealousy she grabs him by the coat collar and drags him off to the kitchen.

HER SILENT SACRIFICE (Five Parts—Nov.).—The cast: Arlette (Alice Brady); Richard Vale (Henry Clive); Prince Boissard (H. Peyton Gibbs); Sarthe (Edmund Pardo); Countess Coralie (Mrs. Blanche Craig); Chupin (Arda LeCroix).—From the play "The Red Mouse" by Henry J. N. Dam. Scenario written by Eve Unsell. Directed by Edward Jose.

In the town of Savenay dwell Arlette and her grandfather, Chupin, the proprietor of the inn. Arlette's mother, having brought her into the world without benefit of clergy, Arlette's pathway has been far from smooth, the village gossips making her life intolerable in one way or another.

Richard Vale, a young American, on a sketching tour, makes his headquarters at Savenay, setting up his artist equipment in the attic of an old mill house. He meets Arlette and induces her to pose for him. She falls in love with him, but his impersonal manner holds her off and she hides her feelings carefully.

Vale's cash runs low, and in time he is reduced to the starvation point. Prince Boissard, a noted patron of the arts, an accomplished libertine and a leader in the night life of the capital, comes to the little town for a period of rest and recuperation. He stops at the inn and begins to lay siege to Arlette. She repulses him until he offers to finance Vale. For reward he claims her as his mistress. Arlette wavers, but finally agrees to the bargain, stipulating that he fulfill his side of it first.

Vale is introduced to Boissard, who stimulates an interest in his work. He leaves to continue his education in European art centers. Arlette, also, is sent away in the care of a companion. She is taught the fine arts and graces of the up-to-date Parisian beauty and blossoms into an exquisite butterfly. Always in the background of her consciousness, however, is the shadow of her approaching sacrifice.

The Prince lives up to his word. After a time, Vale, educated by celebrated masters, gains renown. His painting of Arlette as a pagan nymph wins the grand prize at the spring salon. Boissard insists that Arlette pay her debt. At a ball given in his chateau he demands that she publicly acknowledge him as her lover. Arlette complies and Vale, who is present, leaves the banquet hall disillusioned and broken.

Sarthe, the Prince's Hindoo servant, who is devoted to Arlette, seeks out the artist and tells him the real state of affairs. Together the two rush back to Arlette's aid. In the struggle that ensues between Vale and Boissard the latter is mysteriously stabbed and dies. Vale, believing Arlette the slayer, accuses himself to the authorities, and she, in turn, attempts to assume the guilt. Both are exonerated by the dying confession of Sarthe, who commits suicide. Sarthe for years had borne his master a grudge, and in order to save Arlette had sent him to his grave. Arlette and Vale are reunited.

A BRANDED SOUL (Five Parts—Nov. 25).—The cast: Conchita Cordova (Gladys Brockwell); John Rannie (Lewis J. Cody); Juan Mendoza (Colin Chase); Dona Sartoris (Vivian Rich); Dolores Mendoza (Gloria Payton); Pedro (Willard Louis); Neil Mathews (Fred Whitman); Adolf Wylie (Barney Furey). Scenario by Franklyn Hall. Directed by Bertram Bracken.

Conchita Cordova, loved by Juan Mendoza, makes her living by singing in the choir of her native cathedral. She lives happily in the little Mexican village, until there comes into her life John Rannie, millionaire oil man.

Rannie plots to get her under his thumb. He learns of her love affair with Juan. He sets men to watch Juan, and he discovers that the youthful Mexican is a paid spy in the employ of the German secret service bureau.

Rannie gains possession of papers which incriminate Conchita's lover, and then threatens to expose the boy unless Conchita herself comes to his home.

Scarcely knowing what she is doing, the girl goes. The revelation of Juan's true character has disillusioned her, and she realizes that she does not care for him. But she instinctively feels that she must save him from being revealed to the populace.

The simple faith of Conchita has a strange effect on Rannie. As she stands in his room, and takes the cross from about her neck he realizes at last that he has met a good woman. Meanwhile the people of the little village have become incensed against Ranne. They set fire to his old fields. As he rushes forth to drive them back, they throw a halter about his neck and threaten to kill him.

But the power of Conchita have their effect and the men are allowed to live. Among the ruins of his wealth, he meets the girl again. She is praying for forgiveness for this man who had sought to harm her. And he kneels by her side.

GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM.

"THE DREAM DOLL" (Essanay Perfection Picture Film, Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: Ruby (Marguerite Clayton); The Toy King (John Connor); A. Knutt (Bobby Bolder); Ruby's Fiance (Rodney LaRock).

A cracked-brain chemist, appropriately named A. Knutt, in a big toy factory, claims the discovery of an elixir which will bring dolls to life. Ruby, the beautiful daughter of the toy king, is overcome by the fumes of the fluid while the chemist is out summoning others to witness the work of his discovery. A doll the chemist has given life to seizes the elixir and pours it on Ruby. She is changed into a doll. Together the two leave the shop. The chemist, the toy king and Ruby's fiance rush into the place and are horrified to find Ruby missing. They summon the police and a search is instituted.

Meanwhile, the dolls journey to the display room of the factory and, with more elixir, bring a doll justice of the peace to life. He marries them and they speed off in a miniature automobile. After the honeymoon trip they select the kennel of Sherlock, the watchdog, as their home. The dog likes the dolls and keeps them supplied with food. Then, one evening, while strolling through the plant, they discover a bomb set by striking workmen to destroy the building. The dolls realize their peril but it is too late to escape. The bomb explodes and—Ruby comes to life. She is puzzled, then realizes that all was simply a dream, inspired by the ravings of the cracked-brain chemist.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE RAGGEDY QUEEN (Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Tatters (Violet Mersereau); "Crazy Anne" (Grace Barton); Hugh Tillson (Donald Hall); Tom Brennon (Robert F. Hill); Lem Braxton (Charles Slattery); Father Andre (James O'Neill); David Grant (Frank Otto).

Tatters holds court in a little rundown village at the mouth of the main shaft of the Tillson iron mines. The court consists of children of the miners. Tatters firmly believes that she is descended from royal blood, for had not "Crazy Anne" told her that her mother was a queen, and that her father was a king? In the days of prosperity Anne had been the maid of Tatters' mother, but all proof she had of Tatters' royal lineage was a trunkful of regal gowns, and a newspaper clipping. Old man Tillson was so busy with other matters that the little iron mine which bore his name interested him little, and the complaints and pleading of his manager, Tom Brennon, interested him still less. It was not until he received a frank letter from the village priest that he even condescended to send his secretary, Daniel Grant, to make the best terms possible with the men who had been incited by Lem Braxton to threaten a strike.

Braxton was a sorehead, and had vowed to get even with the whole outfit for fancied wrongs. His first meeting with Grant resulted in a combat, and Grant was speedily added to Braxton's list of undesirables. In fact, he went after him first, and while Grant was fishing in an interval of work at a stream which had been pointed out to him by Tatters, Braxton stole up behind him, and after a fight threw him over a cliff. Little Tatters found the secretary more dead than alive, and with Crazy Anne's help she brought him to her own little hotel and nursed him back to health.

In the meantime, Grant's disappearance had alarmed Tillson, and he had come on personally to search. Braxton soon found an opportunity to revenge himself upon Tillson and Brennon together by undermining the shack in which the iron mine's office was located, and allowing it to drop two hundred feet into the mine below. Just as he was about to pull this terrible trap, Tatters and Grant come up behind him, on their way to the office, and Tatters engaged the giant long enough for Grant to warn Tillson and Brennon of their danger.

Though badly hurt she made her way to Anne's home, and Anne put her to bed. Tilson and Grant visit the hotel to thank the little girl for her brave deed, and what is Tilson's surprise to find on the little trunk over which Anne has erected a ridiculous throne, the word "Corinne."

Like a flash his memory goes back to the actress wife with whom he had quarreled, and he rushes into the bedroom to unravel the gnawing tangle which his memory has conjured up. To his amazement he discovers in the little child a replica of Corinne Tilson, his wife, and he explains to the surprised priest and his secretary how it was possible for the little girl to think that she was of royal parentage. The newspaper clipping declares Corinne to be Queen of Bohemia, and Tilson, King of Finance.

THE DOOR BETWEEN (Five Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: Heloise Crocker (Ruth Clifford); Anthony Ives Eckhart (Monroe Salisbury); Archibald Crocker (George A. McDaniels); Sir Robert (W. H. Bainbridge). Prepared for the screen by Elliott J. Clawson from "Anthony the Absolute," the novel by Samuel Merwin. Produced by Rupert Julian.

In a Geisha house in Japan Sir Robert, an English tourist of the roue type; Archibald Crocker, a young business man addicted to drunkenness; and Anthony Ives Eckhart, a scientist devoting his life to the study of Oriental music, meet. Anthony has brought along his phonographic instrument for making records and attempts to get a Geisha girl to sing a Japanese scale, but is embarrassed when she makes love to him, and disappointed when she persists in singing off the pitch.

Seating himself at a table with Crocker, with whom he exchanges cards, he endeavors to persuade Crocker to straighten up, but the latter scorns the advice and gives vent to his feelings by striking a Japanese waiter. In the excitement Anthony seeks the assistance of Sir Robert, who declines to interfere.

Anthony succeeds in getting Crocker out of the house and takes him to his own hotel, where the next morning Crocker apologizes for his conduct and explains that his wife, sacrificing everything to an opportunity to study music, has eloped with another man, that he is looking for them and that he is going to kill them both.

A week passes. Anthony is settled in his hotel room in Pekin, when he hears a beautiful voice singing a perfect D in absolute pitch. The voice plainly comes from the room adjoining and, forgetting all else, Anthony forces the door and confronts a lovely young woman named Heloise. The situation is embarrassing, and after explaining his scientific purpose, Anthony starts to leave the room. Heloise becomes interested in the phonograph while Anthony becomes suddenly infatuated with Heloise, and the intruder tarries a while longer. They become friends, work together, for two weeks making records, and find that they are in love.

Sir Robert has arrived at the hotel, has heard Heloise singing and has recognized Anthony's voice mingled with hers. He meets Anthony, calls him a sly devil and leads him to the hotel register where he points out the name, "Mrs. H. Crocker." The truth dawns upon Anthony. He later learns from Sir Robert that Crocker has arrived in the city and is registered at another hotel.

Sir Robert doesn't care to witness any killing, so he obtains an interview with Heloise and tries to persuade her to leave with him. This Heloise declines to do, but Anthony, seeing them together and misconstruing the purpose of the interview, becomes jealous and determines to leave the place. Returning to his room, he smashes his records. After all this damage has been done, Sir Robert explains his conversation with Heloise and informs Anthony that Heloise, finding that the purposes of the man whom she had been persuaded to leave her home, were anything but altruistic, compelled her to leave her before the ship sailed.

Anthony goes back to talk with Crocker, and although he finds him drunk, admits he loves Heloise and intends to give her up, as he insists Crocker shall also do. Crocker agrees to give his answer in an hour. True to his word he comes to Anthony's hotel, armed with his Japanese knife. He is met on the stairs by Anthony and a desperate struggle ensues in which Crocker meets more than his match. His leg broken, the pain brings Crocker

THE SUDDEN GENTLEMAN (Five Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Garry Garrity (William Desmond); Louise Evans (Mary McIvor); Count Louis Caminetti (Jack Richardson); Mrs. Hawtry (Margaret Shillingford); Geo. Douglas (A. Hollingsworth); Edward Douglas (Donald Fuller); Mrs. Burns (Alberta Lee); Rafferty (Walter Perry); Old Miles (Percy Challenger). Scenario by Jos. Anthony Roach. Directed by Thos. N. Heffron.

Garry Garrity, a rollicking Irish lad of twenty-five, is the beloved brother of the little Irish village where he makes his living shoeing horses. Then comes a letter from America telling Garry that his uncle, Denis Garrity, died, leaving him vast properties in Chicago and making him guardian of Denis' stepdaughter, Louise Evans.

Garry arrives in Chicago to take over his estate. In the meantime Louise, believing she is the sole heir of Denis Garrity, visits the lawyers and learns that she has been cut off with but twenty-five thousand. She had dreamed of an alliance with Count Caminetti, a title fortune-hunter, but $25,000 doesn't seem enough to the Count. Mrs. David Hawtry, Louise's friend, also had visions of being countess, and this is the situation which Garry Garrity finds when he meets his ward in the Chicago mansion of the late Denis Garrity.

At first Louise is humiliated and angered by Garry's plebeian manners, but soon she sees a real man underneath and knows Garry for a diamond in the rough. They fall in love and become engaged. In the meantime the Count and Mrs. Hawtry are scheming to win part of the Garry fortune, and live together in ease on the proceeds of their venture. Mrs. Hawtry is to force Garry into a compromising position, so that he will have to marry her. Then there will be a divorce and the Count and Mrs. Hawtry plan to live on the alimony.

Garry falls an easy victim to the scheming pair, and when the story is whispered at the exclusive country place where he is spending the week-end with Louise, the enraged girl insists that he right the wrong by giving Mrs. Hawtry his name. Garry protests his innocence, but to no avail. As he is leaving Louise he hears from the innkeeper that it was a frame-up planned by Count Caminetti. Garry rushes to confront the Count. As he is choking a confession from Caminetti Louise enters and overhears all. She rushes to Garry and begs forgiveness, and again Garry Garrity is made happy.

THE SHIP OF DOOM (Five Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Martin Shaw (Monte Blue); Clara Gove (Claire McDowell); Jeff Whittlesey (Arthur Millet); Mate (Aaron Edwards); "Sundown" Shattuck (Frank Brownlee). Story by Wyndham Gittens. Directed by Wyndham Gittens.

Clara Gove, belle of the little fishing village, was in love with Martin Shaw, and they were to be wed. She liked to coquette, and that is how Jeff Whittlesey met his death. He was the town bully and had kissed Clara and then boasted of it in the presence of Martin Shaw. There was a fight on the verge of a cliff and Jeff's body was washed ashore by the tide.

Before the fishermen could place the guilt Clara and Martin fled in a little fishing boat. Their engine had been disabled, but the staunch little craft was still afloat when they were picked up by "Sundown" Shattuck, a notorious black-bird, and his crew.

Shattuck had an eye on Clara, and so he rescued them and then married them out of pure irony. But after he has disposed of Martin and was ready to have his way with Clara two things happened. The ship's crew mutined and the ship caught afire. All took to the boats, and Clara's sweetheart was driven from the boat by Shattuck. It was a case of one man overboard or the entire boatload would perish. But the three met again on a deserted island, where they were cast by fate, and the quick sand saved Shattuck from the naked hands of Martin Shaw. The same kind fate also restored Clara to the man who loved her better than life itself.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE TENDERFOOT (Five Parts—December 2).—The Cast: Jim (William Duncan); Cynthia of the West (Carol Holloway); Ellen of the East (Florence Dye); "Smiling" Jack Douglas (Joe Ryan); Mr. Rogers (Walter L. Rodgers); Rogers' Partner (Charles Wheelock); Mrs. Rucker (Hattie Buskirk); The Exhorting Evangelist (Fred Forrester). Directed by William Duncan.

"The Tenderfoot," from a novel by the same name, is the story of the young man who came west because the eastern girl would not return his love. She also comes west, and he shows his worth by saving her life and her reputation, but she is incapable of appreciating his honest devotion. Meantime a true western girl has come into his life. He admires her and she secretly loves him.

The eastern girl, to arouse the jealousy of the Tenderfoot, invites the attentions of a young Indian brave, and he, scheming to win, sends ponies to the white folks' camp. Innocent of the Indian custom she accepts them, and thus is bound to marry the redman. She appeals to the Tenderfoot to save her, promising to marry him if he will. The Tenderfoot kills the Indian in a rifle duel only to be again put aside by the girl.

In Wolfville's saloon the bad man sits with the western girl, waiting for the Tenderfoot to come in so he can kill him. Pretending an affection for the bad man, the western girl plies him with liquor and exchanges the cartridges in his revolver for harmless charges. Knowing nothing of this, the Tenderfoot enters and, unscathed by the first shot, closes in on the bad man and drives him from town. As the western girl is confiding to the dazed Tenderfoot what she did because she loved him her rival is riding away from Wolfville into the east.

WORLD PICTURES.

HER HOUR (Five Parts—Nov. 26).—The cast: Rita Castle (Kitty Gordon); Tom Castle (George Morgan); Ralph Christie (George MacQuarrie); Dick Christie (Edward Burns); Alicia (Lillian Cook); Phidias Trent (Eric Mayne); Mrs. Trent (Yolande Brown); their daughter (Jean Wilson); Val Clement (Frank Beamish); Mrs. Duggan (Justine Cutting). Story by Raymond Shrock. Directed by George Cowl.

Rita Castle, who lives in a squalid East Side tenement with her mother and brother, Tom, works as a clerk in a department store. Mrs. Castle is an invalid, and Rita, after her day's work at the store, has to help her mother with the housework. The floorwalker in the store makes Rita a proposition which so infuriates her that she gives him a tongue-lashing which results in her losing her position. On the way home she is accosted by her dissolute brother Tom, who demands money. She refuses as their mother is ill. When she reaches home she finds that mother has died. At this juncture the police arrive and arrest Tom. Later Rita learns from the newspaper that Tom has been sentenced to five years in State prison.

Rita gives the furniture to a neighbor, Mrs. Duggan, who had been kind to her mother. With the money that her mother has left her Rita, fulfilling her mother's wish, moves into better quarters, buys new clothes and applies for a position as clerk in a law office, in answer to a newspaper ad. She acknowledges that she knows nothing about typewriting or stenography, but Mr. Trent, the employer, offers to teach her.

One day Rita mothers a little lad who has cut his hand in play; he tells her his name is Dick. Later she meets his father, George Christie, who is a widower. Trent tells Rita that he wishes her to dine with him. A few days later she receives an exquisite gown from her employer, who asks if her secretary will not accept it as a token of his esteem and wear it to their little dinner tomorrow night. Rita wears the garment, but refuses the wine which her employer presses her to drink. A few nights later Rita and Mr. Trent have dinner in his apartment. Trent, who is drinking freely, presses her to taste liquor. He promises to marry her, and Rita's thoughts the next day are on their coming marriage. A paralyzing fear overcomes Rita in later days, and she imparts the news to Trent. He casts her aside and she goes to Mrs. Duggan, who now lives in the country. She is received with welcome arms, her baby girl arrives, and is placed in a convent.

The following summer, Rita, who is still at the Duggan home, runs across Mr. Christie, who happens to be working on a contract near her home. The result of the meeting is the marriage of the two. They move to Mr. Christie's palatial home, where they are very happy. Trent learns where Rita is living, calls upon her and forces her to introduce him to Mr. Christie. Trent continues to call, and as Rita is repulsing his advance, he remarks, "You weren't always so particular with your kisses." Christie appears, orders Trent from the house, and asks his wife what Trent referred to. Rita says that it was to her past, and that she had tried to explain at the time of their marriage but he would not listen. Christie orders her from the house.

Years later Trent, now an advocate of social and political reform, is happily married, while Rita has become a political cat's-paw and lobbyist, prospering under the name of Pauline Barnett. She overhears that if Trent is elected, she will be put out of business. Trent is nominated, and the papers say that his spotless life was one of the decisive factors. Rita, and her brother Tom, who has been released from prison, contrive to defeat his election. He learns that Rita is arrayed against him. Trent confers with his campaign manager, Hal Clement.

Rita is notified by the convent that her daughter has completed her education and is prepared to leave. The mother meets her daughter in Hot Springs. Alicia, although chaperoned by a nun, has made the acquaintance of a young man, Dick Christie by name. At luncheon, Hal Clement comes to Mrs. Barnett's (Rita's) table and suggests that she return and remain under his surveillance until after election; that if she refuses he will tell her daughter the story of her life as Rita Castles. So Alicia and her mother go to New York and occupy the apartment provided for their use. Trent is elected. Clement, who has been attracted by Alicia's beauty, has a decoy note sent to Rita that her brother is dying and wishes to see her at once. Rita, leaving Alicia in charge of the maid, hastens to her brother to find when she gets there it is a ruse. When she reaches home she finds Clement attacking her daughter, and kills him.

Trent, who is district attorney, is notified that the Barnett woman, who is in the Tomb, has sent word that she wants to see a lawyer. He demands that they be brought before him at once. When Rita and Trent face each other he tells her that he has the upper hand now; that if she doesn't plead guilty at the trial he will uncover enough of her past to prove to the world what she and her daughter really are. To which Rita replies: "Then you will prove that Alicia is not only my daughter but yours."

Trent is stunned. The mother then goes on to say that Dick Christie loves Alicia, but with her shame upon her she can never become his wife. And then Rita makes the supreme sacrifice when she says: "Before it is too late, I want you all to know that Alicia is not my child but the daughter of a fine, old friend, Mollie Duggan." With that, the mother falls back and in a few minutes is dead.

Raffles, the amateur cracksmen, educated, with entry into the best society circles, just steals for the love of stealing and for the excitement of the chase. His greatest enjoyment consists in outwitting the police and amateur detectives who seek to capture him and reveal his identity.

As the early part of the story unfolds Raffles is seen in pursuit of an international swindler, who has come into the possession of a priceless ruby. The swindler takes passage on a steamship for abroad, and Raffles does likewise. When miles from land Raffles finds that the swindler has hidden the ruby in the cavity in his shoe. Raffles manages to get into the stateroom of the international swindler and steals the ruby. Being certain that there will be an outcry on ship-board over the theft Raffles empties a cartridge from his revolver of the powder and bullet and substitutes the ruby in place of the bullet. There is an outcry. Raffles is searched, and the ship officer deliberately breaks the gun, releasing all the cartridges, including that containing the priceless ruby. Raffles, intent upon finishing the theft he started, grabs the cartridges from the table, puts them in his mouth and jumps overboard, and swims to land. He saves the ruby.

But in leaving the vessel he is seen by Mrs. Vidal, an English society woman. Later Raffles reappears in London and mixes with the upper ten. In that exclusive set he again meets Mrs. Vidal, who recognizes him. She falls in love with him, and by threatening to tell of his past attempts to force him to love her. Raffles, however, is in love with Gwendolyn, and he defies Mrs. Vidal. About this time the famous Melrose jewels, the property of Lady Melrose, disappear. Raffles is a guest at the house of Lady Melrose. Mrs. Vidal, knowing of the theft of the ruby on the boat, immediately suspects that Raffles is the thief. She again threatens to expose him. He laughs at her.

At this point in the story Captain Bedford, an amateur sleuth with an international reputation, becomes active. He declares that he will find the thief responsible for the Melrose robbery, and even makes a wager with Raffles that the thief will be arrested. Raffles takes the wager. Captain Bedford is certain that Raffles is the thief. Raffles is certain that Captain Bedford is sure that he is the thief. From that point the center of interest in the story is the ingenious methods used by Raffles to get the famous Melrose jewels out of his possession and at the same time have them at his disposal whenever he desires them. Finally, but not until after he loses his bet, Captain Bedford proves that Raffles took the Melrose jewels, and likewise Raffles proves that he took them to keep a professional thief from stealing them.

Tooker); Marcita Blein (Camilla Dalberg); Belgian Child (Baby Ivy Ward); Italian (Sidney D'Albrook); Nicolo Reisso (Robert Anderson); Kaiser (Edwin Boring). Directed by William Christy Cabanne. Written by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis.

Mary Alden lives with her mother and two brothers, Matthew and George. She and Matthew, and also her sweetheart, John Graham, are employed in a department store. Mary is a patriot, while Matthew is a "soap-box" orator. He neglects his work for his speeches against the government to such an extent that he loses his position at the store. Their father was killed in the battle of San Juan Hill.

John Graham urges Matthew to enlist in the army, but he scoffs at the idea, and gives all his time to his street-corner speeches. These are broken up by the police, and a German agent, under the guise of Socialism, takes quick advantage of Matthew's indignation to invite him to join their meetings and address them. Matthew is taken at once to Van Bierman, a banker, who is the master spy on this side of the ocean in the employ of the enemy.

At Washington the draft board has met, and has drawn the now historic number 258, calling to the colors the men holding that number. A humble Italian, who is caring for a little Belgian child orphaned by the war, anxious to serve the country of his adoption, thanks God because he holds the number 258. George Alden is also called, but he has no such patriotism, and fails to go before the local draft board for his examination. Mary takes his papers herself to the draft board and offers to go in his place, as women in Russia have done.

While the board cannot accept her offer, her bravery and spirit arouse the latent manhood in many present who have been trying to claim exemption. Finally George Alden becomes imbued with the same spirit to the great joy and pride of Mary and her mother.

Van Bierman and his associates have succeeded in inciting the workers at a munitions factory to strike, and have otherwise impeded the government in response to instructions received by wireless from Germany's war lords. Matthew is being drawn deeper into their net, and Mary, hoping to make him see the light, attends a meeting he is to address. She gives them a stirring talk on patriotism.

Mary reminds her hearers of the glorious deeds of the nation's history—of the heroism shown at the battle of Bunker Hill, at San Juan Hill and at the Alamo—when the immortal Travis asked those who were on the side of right and honor to step across the line, even though it was to certain death. She calls upon those who love the Stars and Stripes to stand beside her. One or two men venture over, but Van Bierman and his assistants overpower George, and the meeting breaks up in a wild fight.

Van Bierman hurries Mary into an automobile and drives her to an aeroplane factory he and his fellow spies are planning to blow up. George learns of her whereabouts and rushes to the encampment of cavalry troops. John Graham is among them. With victory apparently within their grasp the German agents throw dissimulation to the winds and speak frankly before Matthew of the atrocities they are planning and the atrocities already committed. Matthew, seeing them for the first time in their true light, tries to protest. Fearing he will expose them they bind him to a chair so that he will perish when the fuse is lighted that is to demolish the aeroplane factory. Van Bierman promises to save Mary if she will accept his loathsome advances. She refuses, and he takes her in his arms.

John Graham, at the head of the cavalry troops, arrives in time to cut the wire that is attached to the fuse, saving Matthew and the factory, and then searching the building for spies rescues Mary from the master spy. The traitors are brought to justice. Matthew hurries to don a uniform. Mary marries her soldier lover, and she and Mrs. Alden bid a brave farewell to their boys bound for the front.

A Lamp that means better Pictures and Decreased Operating Costs

IT'S not often that you can improve the quality of your pictures and at the same time lower your operating costs. But that's just what this new Edison MAZDA C Lamp does.

The focus is permanent. The light is of an even intensity—no flicker.

There is less heat; the absence of all carbon ash means less wear and tear on machines and film (carbon and carbon troubles are eliminated).

The results are better pictures, a better show. And don't forget that operating costs are greatly reduced by a marked reduction in current consumption. Get in touch with our nearest distributor. Send for Bulletin containing full information.

Science Monthly, has animated for the Paramount-Bray Pictographs drawings portraying the operation of the gasoline motor in all its various functions.

Mrs. Edward Stockbridge Gushce devised trench torches some months ago, and since then thousands of them have been sent over to France, where they have been accepted as the best substitute for lanterns and infinitely superior to candles. They will burn to the last inch and yield a light equal to six candle power. Millions of these trench candles are wanted in the trenches and battlefields of France.

A SOCIETY SCRIMMAGE (Black Diamond Comedy—Nov. 12).—Michael Brogan is a retired bricklayer, whose wife has a strong ambition to enter into society. She wants Maggie, her daughter, now known as Margarette, to marry a count. Maggie loved Sammie, who brought flowers. In the bouquet was a bee, however, and Sammie is ejected.

Mother receives a telegram from the Count telling of his arrival. Maggie learns that the Count will arrive and sends for Sammie to help her. Sammie goes to the station and recognizes the count. He follows him through a field, where he knocks the Count out, drags him to a blacksmith shop, changes clothes with him and goes to the house disguised as the Count.

Sammie intends to disgust mother and father with his actions. He is invited to dinner, and, much to the surprise of mother, he eats his soup reading a sheet of music, after which he pulls the chicken apart, serves it with his hands and throws it around the table. Mother and father start after Sammie again, Sammie pulls down the curtain and swings on the chandelier, pulling plants, lath and dirt down, burying mother, father, daughter and himself in the debris. Sammie makes his getaway, leaving the family by themselves. Mother, after all this, is cured of her society craze.

THE SECRET GAME (Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Nara-Nara (Sessue Hayakawa); Major Northfield (Jack Holt); Kitty Little (Florence Vidor); Miss Loring (Mayme Kelso); Dr. Ebell Smith (Charles Ogle); "Mrs. Harris" (Raymond Hatton). Directed by William C. De Mille.

"The Secret Game" is a romance of the Secret Service in which Nara-Nara, a Japanese detective, works to save from destruction the American transports that are secretly carrying American troops across the Pacific to surprise the enemy on the Russian front. Japan has guaranteed safety to these transports, and it is for the honor of his country that Nara-Nara is put on the job.

It has become known to the Secret Service that there is a leak somewhere in official circles and this leak has been traced to the office of Major Northfield, U. S. Quartermaster of the Pacific Coast. The American Secret Service has declared Major Northfield to be above suspicion, but, nevertheless, Nara-Nara resolves to watch him.

The truth of the matter is that Kitty Little, a stenographer in Northfield's office, is the real "leak" through which important news is reaching the enemy. She is a girl of German parentage, who has a brother in the German army. She is working under the direction of a so-called Dr. Smith, who, under the cloak of being a physician, sees his agents as patients.

It is Dr. Smith who procured the position for Kitty in Northfield's office. He it is also who invites Kitty and Miss Loring, Northfield's private secretary, to a little dinner, during the course of which he so drugs Miss Loring's coffee that she loses consciousness. Kitty is promoted to Miss Loring's position where she has access to all the important documents.

At about this stage in affairs, when Nara-Nara does not know whom to suspect, but still believes Northfield himself to be the traitor, the latter falls in love with Kitty and declares it. Kitty then wants to resign, but Dr. Smith will not permit it. He tells her that if she turns traitor now Miss Loring's "illness" will end disastrously. Dr. Smith obtains the date of the next transport order. This he telephones to Kitty when it happens that Northfield is in Nara-Nara's office and standing near the microphone which permits him to hear all that is said in his own office. He learns that Kitty is a spy, albeit a reluctant and broken-hearted one.

When the transport order comes through, he gives Kitty a blank sheet in an envelope to mail if she is honest, or to give her confederates if she is the spy he now believes her to be. Nara-Nara follows her with it to Dr. Smith's house and sees her deliver it. Thinking only of his country's honor, Nara-Nara springs upon Dr. Smith as soon as Kitty has left him in search for Miss Loring.

Dr. Smith is killed by Nara-Nara. The Japanese meets Kitty and realizes his great affection for her in spite of everything, but sacrifices himself for her, committing suicide rather than betray her to the police or prove false to his high principles.

Northfield enters and, not knowing that a letter from her brother in which he tells her to forget about this "righteous" war and to thank God she is not in Germany, has made Kitty turn with all her heart to the United States which has received her with open arms and which is, after all, her country, turns her over to the police who, by this time, have been sent for. The blank order saves Kitty, and the last we see of the two, they are saluting the flag which they see through a glass is being run up on the transports which are steaming out of the harbor to safety.

THE ETERNAL TEMPTRESS (Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The story deals with the situation in Italy at the outbreak of the war. Princess Cordelia Sanzio is a widow of far-famed beauty living in Venice. She is a siren whose smiles have drawn into her toils many men, among them Harry Althrop, son of Colonel Althrop, American diplomatist in Venice on a special mission for the United States Government. Young Althrop loves the Princess sincerely. Among those who, for political reasons merely, hover in her train is Prince Estezary, an Austrian nobleman. He realizes that Althrop may be of use to him and directs Count Rudolph Frizl, his secret aide, to rouse Althrop's jealousy by paying marked attentions to the Princess. This scheme is in furtherance of the Prince's purpose to reduce Althrop to such financial straits as will induce him to agree to any proposition by which he may secure funds.

The Princess drains Althrop financially, the plan of the Prince being to bribe him to steal from his father a political document of value to the Austrian Government. Before this can be disclosed to Althrop, Count Rudolph buys a necklace for the Princess—the very one she had vainly begged Althrop to purchase and present to her. When Althrop hears of this, he becomes furious and forges his father's name to a check for a large amount, and with the funds purchases another necklace. On learning of this transaction, the Prince and Count confront Althrop with proofs of his crime and threaten to expose him unless he consents to steal the political document. Stricken with shame and remorse Althrop permits the Prince to put him on board a train for Rome.

Meanwhile, real love for Althrop has awakened in the heart of the Princess, and she follows him to a villa on the outskirts of Rome. Althrop carries out his bargain and receives the gold that was stipulated to be paid. He discovers the Princess in the villa where she is living with her maid, and tells her the story of his shame.

Determined to save Althrop the Princess steals to the apartment of Count Rudolph and begs him to return the stolen document to her. He refuses to do this. On learning that he alone knows the secret of the document, she leads him to the point of revealing the hiding place of the paper, but when he comes to his senses and seeks to prevent her from appropriating it, she stabs him to death. She then escapes, but in her haste she leaves her gold bag as evidence pointing to the perpetrator of the homicide.

Althrop's crime is discovered and he is tried in the library of his father's home. Given the choice of suffering punishment for his crime, or meeting out justice to himself, he decides to slay himself with a revolver handed to him by his heartbroken father. Just as he is about to carry out the sentence of death by shooting himself, the Princess enters and pleads for the life of her lover. The Princess wins her point, and when Althrop's father learns that none save herself knows the contents of the stolen document, nor ever will know, Althrop is pardoned. He has lost his love for the Princess, however, and, turning from her disdainfully, plans for a hunting trip. She returns to her villa, where she learns that the murder of Count Rudolph has been discovered, and she suspected of the crime. She resolves upon suicide, and commits the fatal deed just as Althrop, his love revived, goes to the villa to rejoin her. She dies happily in his arms.

TITLES and TITLES

There is no choice : either bad ones or GOOD ONES.

We make nothing but the latter. Why do you insist in paying for the former, Mr. FILM-EXPORTER ?

When you produce a film for American consumption you procure the services of a specialist to make your captions. But when you try to sell the same film to Latin people, you hand the titles to ANY ONE.

BE FAIR TO YOUR CUSTOMERS and BE LOGICAL WITH YOURSELF. Good titles are essential for ALL FILMS.

We make GOOD TITLES.

Our organization, based on a ten-year experience here, in Paris and in Barcelona, is forceful combination of brains and machines with the maximum of efficiency.

Our translators, for instance, are in a class by themselves. Each one of them is a SPECIALIST selected among a hundred, and making the translations according to the SPIRIT and MEANING of the original and NOT LITERALLY.

The impression of the title itself on cardboard first, and then on the film proper, is accomplished through the use of two wonderful machines that turn out the work with the maximum of speed and perfection.

The first machine is a LINOTYPE insuring a daily output of 500 impressions, which, owing to the constant renewal of type, renders CLEAR, PLAIN, NEW AND PERFECT IMPRESSIONS.

The other machine, constructed according to the modern principles of cinematography, is as much of an improvement over the common methods of reproduction as the linotype over the obsolete setting of type by hand. This machine produces titles which are at the same time clear, luminous and contrasting. Besides, as a result of the principle on which this patented machine is based, double exposure titles can be made upon the positive film DIRECT, thus making the cost of such titles ten times lower than those made through the ordinary methods.

And it is just such a perfect organization that enables our PERFECT TITLES to be, at the same time, CHEAPER TITLES.

IF you read this and are not already a subscriber to the

why not send in your subscription this very minute?

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is a better trade paper today than ever before and it has always been away ahead. It has the largest and most experienced editorial and reviewing staff and, in addition, a staff of over thirty correspondents in all the principal centers. The service rendered by this paper to the industry is, beyond comparison, making a year's subscription the biggest possible bargain for those interested in any branch of the trade, but more especially the exhibitor and theatre manager. The text of its many exhibitor departments contains more instructive information than can be gathered anywhere else.

Exhibitors

What are YOU doing now?
What have YOU done in the past?

To Support a National Fraternity of Motion Picture Exhibitors?

For about eight years,

Exhibitors of this country
As a very general thing Have Not
Given their whole-hearted support
To any National Organization of Exhibitors

National Organizations lived from funds raised by a few officials,

By giving Balls, Expositions, Trade Shows, Trade Papers and on propositions where mostly the film interests gave freely to these affairs.

Now mostly

You GET what you PAY FOR,

As you individually did mostly nothing,
Therefore you individually receive mostly nothing,
And furthermore, what could you expect under the circumstances?

Yes - -

All Motion Picture Organizations should work for the best interests of the entire Industry. Agreed

But - -

Sometimes—yes, oft times—questions arise whereby there must be decided

What shall be rendered to the Exhibitor?

What shall be rendered to the Film Producer?

At such a time

A National body of Exhibitors
Must be free from entangling alliances.

If a National Body officially
Owns a Trade Paper

That lives by the advertising of Film Producers

Can that Body protect the interest of the Exhibitor, first, last and always or—

Give the Exhibitor the benefit of the doubt?
A Fraternity that lives entirely by the aid of its membership can protect. To have such a Fraternity

A few weeks ago the American Exhibitors' Association
was organized.

This new Body of Exhibitors
Have no entangling alliances
No one man controls our destiny

No Official receives a cent of salary
We allow only Motion Picture Theatre Owners or Accredited Managers to become members.

Every Exhibitor is welcome and requested to join.

Every Local Body is invited to affiliate.

The moment you join you at once become a power for your own good.

This Organization will do big things for you and the Industry.

When the majority of Exhibitors are enrolled in our membership.

The reason of past failure

Was because so few took any interest in National affairs.
An organized few are doing much for themselves
While an organized majority struggle blindly
A large Organization of Exhibitors will do the right thing
Because it is large.

Now is the time to join the AMERICAN EXHIB-ITORS' ASSOCIATION. WE ARE ARRANGING TO KEEP A REPRESENTATIVE IN WASHING-TON ON THE TAX QUESTION. That is why you should HURRY.

We want you to join now because we want to know what you want

So as to give you just what you want.

FILL THIS OUT AND SEND TO

AMERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION, NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS:
INDIANA TRUST BUILDING,
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.

Gentlemen:

The undersigned Exhibitor desires to become a member of the AMERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSO-CIATION. Please send full particulars.

Carbons Capable of Carrying High Amperage Must Be Used

To obtain the intense white light so necessary to clearly project present day pictures, a very high current must be carried by the projector carbons. The heavily plated Silvertips can carry the heaviest currents without undue heating. At the same time their small diameter holds the arc steady and insures perfect screen definition.

This is only one of the desirable features which have helped make Silvertips the standard direct current negative projector carbon.

For alternating current operation the White A. C. Special Carbon gives a pure white, noiseless light—it eliminates entirely the objections which have hitherto been raised to the use of alternating current in motion picture work.

We have several booklets covering the operation of each of these carbons. Send for them today.

Movie Patrons Appreciate Good Projection-

There is no strain on the eyes where Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipments are used.

Projection is steady, pictures clear and definition perfect.

The owners of the Dale Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., and hundreds of others, have found—

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipment

—a paying investment—and you will also.

When you select your electrical equipment, remember the position WESTINGHOUSE occupies in the electrical field, and the years' of experience that have made that name your best guarantee.

Furthermore, Westinghouse Engineers are at your service to help solve your electrical problems to your best advantage.

A Black Eye

You hang a black eye on your theatre every time you run the wrong kind of a picture. Your patrons demand a certain class of productions—if you give them something they don't want you will lead them to believe that their likes and dislikes don't matter a hang to you. Your excuse is that you can't get information on the pictures. You can, if you subscribe for

"Screen Opinions"

The Independent, Comprehensive Reviewing Service

You can know all about any picture—story, reviews, cast, reels, star—everything you must know to figure out whether or not a picture is the right picture for your theatre. No exhibitor, who is really interested in the welfare of his theatre can get along without "Screen Opinions."

Nicholas Power Company,
90 Gold Street,

Dear Sirs:-

After giving two Powers Machine Heads seven successful years of continuous use thirteen hours daily at the above Theatre we are at last desirous of replacing them with new "Power 6A Heads".

Our business has been heavily solicited lately by several machine salesmen of other standard makes who knew we were contemplating the purchase of new machines. After giving the matter careful consideration from all angles we have decided that if we can duplicate our good fortune for the next seven years as we have experienced the past seven, we will be entirely satisfied. Our present machines have given us excellent satisfaction at a low cost of up-keep and we have always been prided that we were getting superior projection.

Kindly forward me catalogue and price lists together with other information covering the purchase of two new "Power 6A Machines" complete with all mechanism.

All information will be greatly appreciated by

Yours truly

And EVERY BOY AND GIRL will be in it, because there are no conditions. The Contest is free to anyone 15 years of age or under.

This means the whole Grammar School population of your town! Think what it will mean to you to have all those boys and girls among your best patrons, for matinees as well as evenings, INTERESTED IN YOUR SHOW—YOUR THEATRE, for 18 weeks.

The Contest Will Be Conducted as Follows:

Millions of large illustrated Heralds, the size of four pages in the "Moving Picture Weekly," with pictures of some of the tremendously exciting scenes of "The Mystery Ship" and the Rules of the Contest, will be furnished free to exhibitors when "The Mystery Ship" is booked.

You don't have to do a thing but hand out the circulars, advertise the Contest on your screen and in your regular newspaper ads. Think what will happen, when your boy and girl patrons learn of the Contest! One single circular handed out at your box office will start all the kids in the neighborhood—and in other neighborhoods where there isn't any "Mystery Ship"—in the direction of your theatre.

TO BE DISTRIBUTED

The whole vicinity of your theatre will be in a ferment over "The Mystery Ship." Every household—fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters—will be thinking about your show and working to help some boy or girl earn one of the awards.

Principals and teachers of Grammar Schools will be interested in it. Here's an exercise in English Composition, not dull and dry, but very entertaining—Play, instead of Work, with real awards for inventive ability and imagination.

It's bound to mean a lot of NEW PATRONS many of whom probably never went to a movie show before. They will go to see "The Mystery Ship"—and get the habit of GOING TO YOUR THEATRE.

Don't fail to be THE CENTER OF THE INTEREST that this Contest is going to stir in your neighborhood. Don't miss THE VALUABLE ADVERTISING the Contest will give your theatre.

Don't lose the PROFITS you will make on "The Mystery Ship."

Tie YOUR House up to This Nation-wide idea

The PULL of the smashing, nerve-rending endings to "The Mystery Ship" episodes will be equaled by the PUSH toward your theatre of eager, excited boys and girls in every household among your patrons. Don't let your competitor beat you to it.

IN
- BY CHARLES KENYON -

—and this is a quality picture

A splendid example of the silent drama. There is a pretty romantic vein throughout the vigorous action.

—New York Herald.

The outdoor scenes are magnificent, and the whole picture is wonderfully well produced, but the sub-titles deserve special comment. They stand out as an example of what titles should be. They are virile, forceful, and concise. In fact, they are classics, and whoever wrote them will please write some more.

—New York Tribune.

Hart rides, shoots, and throws a lariat with all the convincing assurance which made him so popular as a type of the old frontiersman.

—New York Globe.

Thomas H. Ince Production

The crowds that besieged the Rialto (N. Y.) and the glowing tribute that the papers pay to all of Mr. Hart's pictures are positive proof that his work "will stand up" under a "long run." They are excellent opportunities for the exhibitor to prove the profitableness of the "long run policy."

Since playing your timely and appealing patriotic feature "For the Freedom of the World" in two of our towns (Canton and Youngstown) it is my firm conviction that it is the biggest box-office life-saver of the hour. I cannot see how any live exhibitor can fail to get big returns with it anywhere.

In the face of strong competition and the prevailing general slump in picture receipts, this feature of yours has completely smashed all of our attendance records in these towns for the current calendar year.

"For the Freedom of the World," in my opinion, outclasses—in the various dramatic essentials that make for success—all of the other patriotic features that I have seen. It possesses a master scenario, tuned so true to the current vibration of an awakened American patriotism that it simply "gets" an audience, in spite of itself.

Its play upon the human emotions of a vast audience has proved a revelation to me and has proven the real powers of a photo-play to move crowds of people from all offices of life to the profoundest depths of feeling one moment and to the spontaneous outburst of applause in another. It is, indeed, a dramatic masterpiece in every sense of the word, and I am now seriously considering breaking over my ironclad rule against playing repeats, by arranging with you for return engagements in all of our towns.

WILLIAM FARNUM

LES MISÉRABLES

A WILLIAM FARNUM DE LUKE PRODUCTION
 NOW TURNING THOUSANDS AWAY AT THE LYRIC THEATRE NEW YORK

READ THE MESSAGE OF THE CRITICS

"Les Miserables" is from the Fox Laboratory and it is quite the best picture that has been seen hereabout for a considerable period. The film is distinguished by noteworthy performance on the part of William Farnum who depicts Valjean with skill and understanding.
New York Times.

Naturally such a classic as "Les Miserables" required skillful treatment, but Mr. Farnum has brought the play to a high degree of kinship with the story itself with its touching incidents and heroic endeavors of the principal actor.
New York Globe.

The production of such pieces on the screen is worthy of every encouragement. Excellent music accompanied the play.
New York Post.

William Farnum is more than a pleasant screen personality. He is a great actor. There are people who are continually crying for better pictures. To them we would say see "Les Miserables."
New York Tribune.

It is Fox's crowning achievement in pictures. "Les Miserables" has a heart throb, a heart sigh, almost a sob—it is fine, deep, human. In short this new Fox presentation of "Les Miserables" goes beneath the surface. It appeals straight to the heart.
New York American.

The contrast of Jean—in his failing but brighter hours—the kindly, the benevolent, the transformed was a delicious piece of character work. It was a triumph of art for Farnum.
Evening World.

At the Lyric Theatre yesterday, lovers of Victor Hugo's masterpiece "Les Miserables," rejoiced to find that this great work has been transferred to the screen by Mr. William Fox, with all the power and vividness of the original story faithfully retained and adequately expressed. Moreover the film is of such popular character that it will hold the absorbed attention of the most avid movie fan.
Evening Telegram.

A blaze of film glory. As close an approach to literature as has been accomplished on the screen. Tensely vivid.
Herald.

Reflects the true spirit of Victor Hugo's humanity. An excellent example of what the movies can do for the classics of literature.
World.

A visualized work every bit as strong as the printed word. Mr. Farnum's acting an outstanding feature.
Morning Telegraph.

Scores a success, a triumph of art for William Farnum. A delicious piece of character work.
Evening World.

A masterly picture. Acting that has never been excelled. William Fox's greatest achievement in pictures.
Journal of Commerce.

To Independent Producers:

I will procure in the United States and Canada the maximum worth of your productions within a reasonable time.

To State Right Buyers

I will offer only those attractions that are of positive box office merit and at prices that will insure you at least a reasonable profit.

To Both Independent Producer and State Right Buyer

I offer a sale and exploitation policy that will build a permanency of business relations and permit of your continuing because both will be doing business on a reasonable return and no inflation of values and no "bunk."

I shall no longer confine my activities to a single producing concern.

I have opened offices and am now actively engaged in the exploitation and selling on a States Right basis, of independent productions of merit.

As THE PIONEER State Right producer I pride myself in a reputation for thorough knowledge of pictures, box-office values, territorial worth and advertising and exploitation necessities, acquired through active connection with the industry as a producer, supervising director, advertising, publicity and State Right Sales manager.

With my organization I MEAN TO STABILIZE AND STANDARDIZE VALUES AND CENTRALIZE THE SELLING END OF STATE RIGHT PRODUCTIONS. I AM GOING TO DO WHAT HAS NOT BEEN DONE BEFORE.

What productions ARE WORTH, NOT WHAT THEY COST will be the basis of my sales and exploitation policy.

When I agree to exploit an attraction it will of itself be a hallmark of distinction.

I will actively and personally assist each buyer of a production to "PUT OVER" the attraction in his territory.

I will personally supervise the advertising and arrangement of advertising matter in connection with each attraction placed with me for distribution.

Mine is not merely a selling organization, it is a clearing house and service bureau.

I will do business with and for reputable concerns only and I know them all. Ask any of them.

The independent market demands an institution such as mine.

TRIANGLE

TRIANGLE and Mutual Confidence

Sound business is built upon confidence.

The motion picture business is no exception to this rule.

The picture business, to be a success, must be founded on a relationship of confidence between the public and the exhibitor—likewise between the exhibitor and the distributor or producer.

The exhibitor who maintains a standard of quality in the pictures he shows, who provides a comfortable and attractive theatre for his patrons and whose advertising is a truthful statement of his coming attractions soon builds a reputation for his house which is a big factor toward success.

Triangle is endeavoring in every possible way to so conduct its business with exhibitors that mutual confidence will be the only possible result.

Here are some evidences of Triangle's policy.

Triangle is convinced that the program method of booking pictures offers exhibitors the best service at the least expense. It assures the exhibitor a regular supply of film at a uniform price, as well as saving his time and money in shopping and bidding for open market productions. We make this statement with full appreciation of the fact that the success of a program is largely dependent upon the maintenance of a high standard of quality. The past high standard of Triangle will not only be maintained but will be improved. You can feel absolutely assured of this.

Better pictures, better stories, better service to exhibitors, equitable prices—these are some of the goals towards which Triangle is working.

Another evidence of Triangle's desire to serve exhibitors is shown in the Hart and Fairbanks reissues. Here are pictures of the highest quality, pictures that every exhibitor knows are box office attractions. Triangle is offering these pictures to exhibitors at prices that enable any exhibitor to make money. Any Triangle exchange will quote you prices.

Are you taking advantage of the opportunities that Triangle is offering you of increasing your business and of making more money? Do you know that Triangle gives you a seven-reel production each month at no extra expense? Do you know that Triangle is not charging the war tax to exhibitors?

Every exhibitor not using Triangle service should get in touch with the Triangle exchange nearest him at once and get full information on Triangle service and Triangle prices.

A Message to the Exhibitors of the United States from

Mr. C. L. Dooley

Managing Director of the Regent and Garden Theatres of Paterson, New Jersey

The present salvation of the exhibitors of this country is in booking pictures at prices that will give us a fair return on our investment.

These are precarious times. There is a natural slump in our business on account of the approaching holidays. For the past fifteen weeks the Regent and Garden Theatres, the most successful theatres in the State of New Jersey, were operated for rent alone. We did not make one penny of profit.

Bad management was not the reason because formerly we did make a profit. A careful analysis of our daily business convinced me that we were not making any money because of the increased cost of film rental.

It was a question of either discontinuing expensive productions that do not bring sufficient revenue, or of going out of business. We have thrown off the shackles. The Regent and Garden Theatres are not going out of business.

I believe that there are thousands of other exhibitors in the country in the same position. My advice to them is to do what we have done—throw off the shackles and book pictures at prices that give them a chance to make a living. No star is big enough to earn a profit for the exhibitor if the picture is too costly. My opinion is that entirely too much attention is being paid to the star, and entirely too little attention to the story. Audiences demand good stories.

We exhibitors cannot support fabulous priced stars by paying for these pictures more than is justified by our box office returns.

President Motion Picture Association,
Paterson, N. J.

Mr. Dooley Has Thrown Off The Shackles. Have You?

It has been conservatively estimated that two thousand motion picture theatres have been forced out of business in the past eight months. Many more are slated to close if they do not wipe out the evil which is hanging over them.

Increased cost of film rental is the reason.

Mr. L. C. Dooley, President of the Motion Picture Association of Paterson, N. J., is one of the most successful exhibitors in this country. Mr. Dooley found that it was unprofitable to pay the ridiculous rental prices demanded by two or three well known distributors.

Mr. Dooley is in business to make money—so are you. When he found he could not make money with these particular pictures, he cancelled thirteen star series. Are you going to do like him or be one of the next batch forced to close their houses?

Mr. Dooley states that the only salvation of the exhibitor today is in pictures that will give a fair return on the investment.

This is the fundamental policy of the Pathe Company. It is the reason of our success. That is why we are bringing Mr. Dooley's statement to the attention of the exhibitors of the United States.

Our Pathe Plays present some of the greatest stars in motion pictures. These pictures are being booked at prices that assure a profit.

Now that Mr. Dooley has shown the light, will you follow or will you close your theatres?

THE distinguishable feature of the Shorty Hamilton series is that each picture is a complete story of human interest, interspersed with plot, love and adventure, situation, thrills, climaxes, abundant in clean and wholesome comedy and introducing one of the most original and unique personalities known to the screen. Because of the increasing demand for comedies and the decrease in the production of consistently funny photo plays the W. H. Clifford Photo Play Company announces at a most opportune moment a monthly release of a five reeler, each written along original lines and with a view to fitting the fun-provoking peculiarities of Shorty Hamilton, the comedian with the "pep."

THESE pictures will be artistically perfect as to direction, photography, development and printing, the staff now enrolled under the W. H. Clifford banner consisting of some of the most efficient men in the motion picture field. The Shorty Hamilton comedies will be marketed on a state right sale basis either for individual pictures or under a franchise for the entire series and on terms and conditions which will stamp them ONE BEST BUY.

A MOST effective advertising campaign has been arranged and with each release there will be available a full line of posters, heralds, cuts, stills and press matter.

THE first release is entitled "DENNY FROM IRELAND" and depicts the adventures of a "devil-may-care" Irish boy, first in the atmosphere of his native land, followed by a most strenuous existence in our own wild and woolly West.

FROZEN WARNING"

Moving Picture World says:

One of the surprises in store for the screen public is the splendid manner in which the famous skater, Charlotte, has succeeded in her first attempt in the moving picture drama. The photography of the picture is clear and the locations and settings are unusually artistic and pleasing. But, after all is said and done, the drawing card of the production is contained in the scenes in the new Chicago Arena, where Charlotte, untouched by camera-shyness, performs the wonderful skating feats for which she is famed over two continents. To those who have or have not witnessed the skating of Charlotte these scenes alone are worth the price of admission.

It is only fair to say that there are numerous dramatic stars who have not made good on the screen as pleasingly as the little skater, Charlotte.

The picture is clean and wholesome in quality, spectacular and otherwise interesting, and should be one of the best box-office attractions on the market.

The Dramatic Mirror says:

Points of Interest: The Skating of the Star, the Beauty of the Exterior Scenes, and the Scene in Chicago's Hugo Skating Rink.

Irrespective of the merit of this production, as yet unnamed, which marks the first screen appearance of Charlotte, who is, unequivocally, the foremost female exponent of the art of skating, the valuable publicity that lies in her name is an asset that must at once be appreciated. At the time of her appearance at the New York Hippodrome and on tour, Charlotte's fame spread to all corners of the country, and, being still fresh in the minds of the public, should prove to be a certain drawing card.

The director has given the picture scenic investiture of the first order. The interiors are attractive and every one of the outdoor scenes has a beautiful background that appear to have been photographed on an extensive country estate.

The name of the star is a certain box office attraction.

Douglass Natural Color Films score tremendous hit!

Read what they say:-

DOUGLASS NATURAL COLOR FILM CO., Ltd.
San Rafael, Cal.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 5, 1917.

Gentlemen: The generous applause of the thousands who saw your natural color pictures on the Imperial screen at the first public run in San Francisco last week proves the complete success of your invention. The people who pay are the ones that decide.

It was the unanimous opinion of the Public that your process will revolutionize the motion picture industry, and that it is the final requisite necessary to make motion pictures seem actually to live for the audience. We believe that it enlarges immeasurably the possibilities of the motion picture art.

IMPERIAL THEATRE,

J. A. Taulington Mgr.

A FEW OF THE THOUSANDS OF PRESS NOTICES.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER:

The flaming red of the rose and the delicate pink that lies along the cheek of a woman have at last been caught by the movie camera. Leon F. Douglass demonstrated that colored photography, so long sought in vain, has finally been perfected. The demonstration was, in the opinion of many persons present, an epochal event at which a new wonder was given to the world. Artists, poets, judges, professional men and women and others were present.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO CALL AND POST:

The lens of the moving picture camera has been endowed with the ability to transfix in a flash of its shutter all the colors of nature with the minuteness of detail not possible for the limited technique of paints and brushes. Leon F. Douglass is ranked today among the foremost scientific geniuses of the age, in the opinion of the group of artists, lawyers, business men and newspaper men who sat before the screen. Douglass has discovered the secret of transferring to the film the most delicate graduation of color, faithful to the hues of the photographed object down to almost imperceptible shading of tints.

FROM ST. LOUIS STAR:

To show the power of detail possessed by the new color scheme, a picture of the Yosemite Valley was shown. Across the valley stretched a misty rainbow. The faithful reproduction of the color delicacy in the pictures caused much comment. The large audience, thoroughly familiar with the realism of moving pictures, was astonished by the ultra-realism of the colored pictures. Waterfalls seemed so lifelike as to cast their freshness over the heads of the watchers. Natural tones, whether bright or drab, were held by the screen in perfection never before attained in pictures.

Western newspapers called the pictures one of the wonders of the age.

TO THE PRODUCER:

Other than for demonstration purposes, it is not the intention of this Company to engage in the business of making motion pictures but our project is to arrange, for the use of the process, on a reasonable basis, with those now engaged in producing photo plays.

TO THE EXHIBITOR:

We are now ready to make dates for 5,000 feet of natural color film. The pictures are made by a three color process and no attachment is necessary on the projecting machine. The colors are in the films; making it a simple, practical commercial success.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE:

The blush of the rose, the ruddy glow of the sunset sky and all the colors of nature in their infinite variety have been made to live again on the moving picture by Leon F. Douglass of San Rafael.

A marine scene, taken from the Marin shore, with all the countless shades of sea green caught with the motion of the waves, was another cause of astonishment.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO BULLETIN:

Apparently the inventor has discovered that colors leave a definite imprint on the photographic film and that by chemical treatment they can be brought out and reproduced perfectly. Repeatedly last night he displayed an ordinary black and white picture and then followed it with a colored film of the same scene, in which the natural hues were presented in a manner that defied the cunning of the painter to emulate.

FROM CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE:

The orchestra hall demonstration showed it is possible with the process to transfer delicate shades to the film. Yosemite Falls were shown bathed in rainbows. Faces were thrown on the screen in natural flesh tints. A yellow dog and a leopard with its coat of tan and black were objects of wonder. A bald headed eagle fluttered across the screen in front of a waving American flag, the banner showing in full color all of the markings of the eagle.

FROM MARIN JOURNAL:

This great throng paid for permission to enter, and therefore was privileged to accept or reject. With heads touching and in whispers, husbands and wives, mothers and daughters, fathers and sons, voiced their genuine approval of these pictures.

Announcing the Hodkinson Exchange Plan

Of course I could have opened new exchange offices, and piled additional expense upon the already overburdened exhibitor, but in keeping with my policies of utilizing the elements already existing in the business, I have arranged to use the finely equipped offices of a great exchange organization as the means for bringing the products I handle to the door of the theater, UNDER AN ARRANGEMENT WHICH GIVES US THE LOWEST DISTRIBUTION COST IN THE INDUSTRY, through the General Film Company's new policy of placing its exchange facilities at the disposal of other national distributors.

THIS IS THE FIRST STEP IN MY PLAN FOR SHARING THE DISTRIBUTION PROFITS, NOW HELD BY THE PRODUCER, WITH THE EXHIBITOR.

I am pleased to be able to announce that I am utilizing the exchange system of the oldest organization in the motion picture industry, the GENERAL FILM COMPANY, with its twenty-eight offices and six hundred employees, as the service offices of the distribution system of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Beginning at once, the PARALTA PLAYS, and all other product handled by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, will be available for bookings through the following offices of the General Film Company, where SALESMEN OF OUR COMPANY WILL BE INSTALLED TO SERVE AND SUPPORT OUR DISTRIBUTION PLANS AND IDEALS IN THEIR ENTIRETY:

GENERAL FILM COMPANY.

TO MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS, MANUFACTURERS AND DISTRIBUTERS:

Effective at once, the General Film Company takes the initiative in a tremendous reform in the motion picture industry. In association with the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation, which distributes Paralta Plays and other high class feature productions, GENERAL FILM COMPANY includes in its vast exchange system the merchandising of the Hodgkinson productions. In this expansion the brilliant constructive genius of Mr. W. W. Hodgkinson, originator of the most logical and consistently successful methods in the industry, indorses and reinforces GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S highly intensified organization for the conduct of advanced merchandising of motion picture film.

Mr. Hodgkinson's decision to avail himself of this exchange service is thoroughly consistent with his well-known principles. Living up to an axiom long championed by him, he chose the short cut to results by refraining from establishing another duplicate exchange machine with its added saddling of overhead expense upon the trade. He chose instead to send the Paralta and his other product, personally directed by his methods, through the already comprehensive and smoothly running GENERAL FILM COMPANY machinery without waste or needless new expense. This product comprises such gilt-edge feature releases as "A Man's Man" with J. Warren Kerrigan, "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, and other Paralta Plays featuring these stars, as well as Henry B. Walthall. These two pictures are now ready for immediate bookings at all GENERAL FILM COMPANY Exchanges.

A colossal advance in the plans and scope of GENERAL FILM COMPANY is only now disclosed. It is a revival of its traditional leadership in a new direction. For the present announcement is the first shot that is to break up the stagnation in the industry that has long been baffling; it being in fact the shot that is to do away with the ruinous duplication of service and the wasteful overhead in distribution and all other practices that have been so opposed to real business principles. It is the beginning of progress and efficiency in motion picture merchandising, with distribution cost restricted to basic sales necessity and economy applied to the moving of product of all manufacturers.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY is destined to be the Union Station of the Industry, providing plain, logical, sane and sound Union Station facilities to its clients, to the exhibitor, and to the public—becoming the routing headquarters of the bulk of worth-while motion picture films and operating as a huge efficiency unit.

With one of Mr. Hodgkinson's vision and inspiration approving GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S service as the logical nucleus of motion picture exchange service for working out his advanced ideas for the industry, the other progressive elements in the trade can easily see the importance of its position. And upon its part GENERAL FILM COMPANY for a year past has been studiously preparing its facilities to deserve such approval.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY has dedicated itself to the scientific and comprehensive merchandising demanded by the times as the inevitable salvation of the industry. It is ready.

Very truly,

GENERAL FILM COMPANY (Inc.)

Judge Brown took the platform at the Odeon Theater literally as well as figuratively. A man of wonderful energy, no pent-up nook confined him. He moved about the whole time and held every listener fascinated and enthralled. He carried the great audience with him first to lust, moving them at will to roars of laughter or to tears. The audience cheered to the echo or gave applause that in many cases only partially concealed tears.

Detroit Free Press

Judge Brown is an informal speaker, but an eloquent one; with an eloquence all his own. He is an actor one minute, a prosecuting attorney the next, a criminal lawyer and orator in turn—a master of hearts at all times. He is unique. No wonder he is popular with the boys, he is one himself, with the clairvoyant boyhood that follows mature wisdom humbly and observantly.

Facts and Comments

GUSTAV SCHRAPLAN, of Prescott, Arizona, writes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of a discovery made in his own town recently. It was a double discovery, in fact. The first was on the part of A. R. Dikey, seventy-two years old, a miner and prospector, who dropped into Prescott and for the first time in his life looked on a motion picture. The second was on the part of Mr. Schraplan, who became aware of the presence in his house of such an unusual visitor. "I wonder if there are any more?" asks the exhibitor. Those of us who dimly recall our sensations a couple of decades ago when for the first time we looked on the crude beginnings of the coming cinematographic art may be pardoned a desire to know what passed through the mind of this Disciple of the Great Silences as he took his initial view of the finished motion picture of 1917. Was he regretfully thinking of the things he had missed all these years he had spent on bleak mountainsides and in canyon bottoms? Mr. Dikey's first impressions of the screen should make interesting reading.

REVISION—"Not reduction"—with this caption as an anchor to windward, the Ochs organ made its appearance last week. It evidently has realized that its attitude as the exhibitors' champion on the war tax controversy had about as much chance of being upheld at Washington as there is of the war ending this week. The self-styled mouthpiece of a few exhibitors felt the necessity of preparing the minds of its readers for a probable disappointment. What a farce—but we have said something before about the impossibility of fooling all the exhibitors all the time.

YES, sure we are going to Washington. We are going just to see if the factions in the industry will dare present themselves before the Government in their effort to get the best of each other. Is the Government of the United States going to be compelled to believe that all our great promises of support and co-operation of a few months ago were mere empty words? We think not, because we know and believe that they were not, and that no group of scheming politicians and self-seekers should be permitted to make them seem otherwise.

In a short conversation a few evenings since with a prominent individual in the picture business, an expression was voiced in regard to the present condition of the trade that contained food for thought. The claim was made that all lines of the industry are now clogged with non-progressive, unimaginative, unbusinesslike individuals who expect maximum results from the minimum of brain and effort. Further, that the war tax and other testing conditions would clarify the atmosphere and really improve conditions eventually. This is strong doctrine and may appeal to the magnates, but might not a little diluting with the live and help live policy be an improvement? Too much concentration in either the manufacturing or the exhibiting ends of the business will see the pictures very much less of a popular entertainment than they are and have been. Contraction of business is bound to follow concentration of interest.

THE war tax has certainly produced a liberal crop of would-be champions of the exhibitor. We are afraid that most of them, however, will prove to be broken reeds, if exhibitors in general attempt to lean on them. In this, as in most other things, the individual exhibitor must work out his own salvation and we believe he will be able to do it with mighty few exceptions.

WHAT are the best pictures to make and exhibit? What are the film productions that are successful, financially and every other way? Not necessarily the films with a famous star from the legitimate or operatic stage, if the work of the artist is familiar only to a dozen of our large cities. Not necessarily the work of some author who stands high in the literary field but may not have an appeal for the millions. The pictures are the people's entertainment in a wider and more comprehensive sense than ever has been true of the opera or the stage or any other form of amusement, consequently the successful pictures will be those that have in them, star, story or whatever it may be, that broad human touch or point of contact for the people, the common people if you will.

Educational Pictures—Information By Louis Reeves Harrison

JUST as they are now shown, moving pictures are helping to make us the best informed race on earth.

No pen could picture our tremendous undertakings in the cause of Liberty. We would have but a dim idea of what is going on, of how our soldiers look, act and feel, but for the ever-welcome views accorded us on the screen. What a pleasure it is to actually see them, our finest examples of young manhood! Such clear and animated views of them are unobtainable through any other medium. We know what they are and what they mean; our hearts are warmed by the sight of them marching, our best impulses stirred by their courage and enthusiasm; they are teaching us all.

Simply to watch an animated reflection of vitally interesting events in various parts of our country, and of the world, does not compel mental training, but this direct method of gaining knowledge, whether of events, or of truth in nature and life, is in itself educational, and it leads to intellectual effort. We get ideas of what goes on, and even why, the how of it all is reasoned out unconsciously. Educational information imparts knowledge to all, and especially to those who need it, and the training takes care of itself according to growing individual capacity. When the mind is once stored with truth it lends itself more readily to acquiring methods of utilizing knowledge.

Of all kinds of educational motion pictures, those reflecting the moods and products of nature are most easily grasped by the minds of children, and even of grown people who do not find printed descriptions particularly entertaining even when they are comprehensible. To appreciate the difference we have only to contrast the wearisome, nerve-straining attempts to portray Nature in print with the beautiful views Ditmars and other naturalists are showing on the screen. The latter, like a good dinner, have the substance and a flavor besides.

Who does not recall the brain-flagging attempts at school to pass examination in various branches of natural history by memorizing a long string of difficult names having no immediate value or significance? Who has not attempted to write those names on cuffs and secreted papers in order not to incur the odium of being called "backward?" It made little liars and thieves of us all, those educational efforts to cram our unwilling craniums with terms Nature herself would have indignantly rejected. When we were through, when exams were passed, nothing remained but the fatigue, not even the ability to tell one tree from another.

All that could be easily taught on the screen and much more. We may soon delve into mysteries understood only by a few, such as those of microscopic botany, where there are undreamed of marvels. How beautiful it would be to have the processes of artificial selection shown, that wonder of the world which would prove to the unthinking that there is always and ever something new under the sun. If we could only see for ourselves how flowers are made more beautiful, how cereals, vegetables and fruit are advantageously transformed by man's agency, be shown how they are made to yield at the same time richer flavor and finer substance, it would be both entertaining and edifying. We can thus open a gold mine of fascinating truth which has thus far been known to a privileged few. Knowledge becomes power in proportion to its distribution.

Motion pictures are democratic, are free from the inequality of magazines and the servility of newspapers, and their tendency to inform the uninformed causes them to be a means of intelligence for all having a natural capacity for it. To prevent miserable inequality of advantages the surest method is that which the screen offers—the equality of knowledge. There are a thousand ways of showing attractively on the screen how the use of natural forces produce results advantageous to the individual and to society. Presented in this manner the things of importance are as easily acquired as those of no practical value.

From man's artificial adjustment of Nature's products has come what we have learned to enjoy as "civilization." Human design and invention can be as vividly illustrated as the principles of selection in agriculture and horticulture. The farmer has a growing importance as one, but more decidedly as one who exercises control over natural forces and materials through scientific knowledge of them. If a comparison could be made between the scientific farmer of today with those who followed the route of primitive mental effort, it would be seen that we have progressed more in the past ten years than during the previous ten centuries in the relation of result to effort.

The tremendous social value of widespread information on practical subjects, including significant business principles, is beyond estimate. This form of education should not be technical. It deals entirely with a knowledge of things, the ways of doing them belong to another department. The end in view is to distribute information of a kind which enables the possessor to better perform the duties of his life, and to enjoy that life in the full, a supreme aim of society.

The uninformed man may think logically and rationally on ordinary subjects—so may a blind man find his way through crowded streets. The informed man, the one who gathers knowledge from all sources to suit his objects, can think just as logically and rationally with the advantage of foresight and full consciousness of what he is about. The real difference between rich and poor is not so much that of capacity for absorbing information as of the enormously disproportionate amount of information supplied to those engaged in hard work to make a living. They have little time to read, but they get time to go to the picture show.

We find out very little for ourselves—discovery is rare and confined to a few individuals—so that practically all the information we acquire is second-hand. Through what others communicate to us are we enabled to make our way through life with any degree of success. Thus the important question for the majority relates to a suitable means of communicating with facility what is already known. The simplest method seems to be that which the mass of people most readily accept, and motion pictures appear to present a method which is easy, and therefore attractive, whereas others are difficult and therefore repugnant.

We can safely assume that there is a sufficient amount of intellectual capacity among people to fit them for some highly-organized social system. The vital question of today is that of accelerating development and the rational answer seems to consist in supplying legitimate material for the human mind to work on. Intelligence depending on information, why not utilize motion pictures to rapidly distribute the great body of knowledge already extant and enable our people to lead the most advanced races on earth?

Time to Think By Sam Spedon

Always a Silver Lining.

THE present lull and general atmosphere of the industry makes us feel that there is a heap of thinking being done by everybody in it. They are thinking as they have never had the occasion to think before. We are optimistic enough to believe this concentrated thought will bring about many good results. Already it has stimulated a desire for co-operation among the different branches of the industry and called forth many outspoken ideas by persons who have heretofore been too modest or timid to mention them. The pervading disposition to get together may presage a united industry. Common dangers are conducive to closer fellowships and interests.

Waste.

It almost seems like a waste of words to talk about waste in production. Anybody who has had any experience in the producing end of the industry knows all about it unless he was like a great many other obsessed with the idea that money did not enter into the making of pictures and thought that it was only a fulfilment of the old axiom, "come easy, go easy." Many of us at the studio used to say we wished we had five per cent. of the waste for our salary and we wouldn't ask for a life job either. We are not practically as conversant with studio matters just now as we were two years ago, but judging from the publicity of expenditures, in taking some scenes and the building of new studios, we are led to believe they are not much different than they were. Experience in the publicity and advertising end of the business prompts us to take much of this publicity with a grain of salt. Some day we are going to look into present expenditures more fully. We are of the opinion that the increased cost of everything has increased the cost of production and there is no wilful waste indulged in by the producers, reports to the contrary notwithstanding. We attribute much of the waste referred to editorially by our contemporaries, to a lack of management, knowledge and force of bad habits acquired from past associations and precedent.

"Amalgamation."

In the Moving Picture World of March 24th, 1917, we published an article entitled, "Will This Merger Ever Come to Pass?" in which we spoke of centralization, amalgamation if you wish, of the distributing of films. This is what we wrote:

The next and most vital of all questions which now presents itself is how can all these pictures be distributed at the least possible cost and through the most direct channel? This question has led to mergers and rumors of still greater mergers. This question is a very important one, and a centralized and concentrated mart in a specially erected building in every film center seems to be inevitable and the only solution—one great market or exchange under one supervising head, where the exhibitor may secure such pictures as his patrons want and his needs suggest, without the necessity of running all over town and creation to find what he wants. By this means the general managers and assistant managers of each individual company's exchange, as now conducted, might be done away with and the overhead be brought down to a minimum.

There seems to be a general tendency toward this centralizing of distribution. We read every now and then of exchanges doing away with purchasing the pictures outright and releasing on percentage, which appears to be another indication pointing toward a big merger.

The advantage of such a merger of exchanges is the estimated reduction of overhead, meaning a greater revenue to the producers and a reduction in cost of distribution to the exhibitors. It would not necessarily mean that the producer would not retain his own method of rental. He might continue the program plan, deposit or open booking system. It would mean, however, an elimination of all unnecessary trouble and expense in getting what you want.

This centralization under one great roof may not be realized today, but it does seem probable in the evolution of the industry when it reaches an established basis of business procedure and cooperation.

During the past week we have read in the trade journals and daily papers, articles on this same subject by different "magnates." We are not a "magnate," which may explain why our article was not taken seriously at the time. We thought it somewhat chimerical then and it may be a dream now. Let us tell you what led us to write the article. During President Wilson's candidacy for re-election, we were selected by the Democratic Campaign Committee to arrange the distribution of the motion pictures used in the West. We did it satisfactorily and efficiently through our individual distributors at a minimum cost, minus the expense of a multiplicity of employes. It was from this experience that we thought centralization or amalgamation might be practical.

Show the Public Your Checks.

It would be a good idea for all the exhibitors to frame and display in the lobby of their theaters the check sent the Internal Revenue Department in payment of their admission tax for the month of November. Each succeeding month's check could be added to the previous ones in the frame.

Another suggestion is to have slides made from photographs of their checks and show them on their screens. These displays would educate the public and awaken a keener interest in what it and the exhibitors are doing to help win the war.

That's Different.

We heard of a splendid position in a new film company that was open to a capable business man. We mentioned the matter to a gentleman looking for a job, whom we knew possessed all the necessary business qualifications, also of good appearance and address. We told him to apply, but said nothing more until he asked us our opinion as to his chances of landing it. We then gave him our honest opinion. We told him; he had the ability, could do the work, but he lacked the assets needed most; a big name and well-known success in some other big line of business. He wouldn't add sufficient importance to the company and the position to land it. In short, he didn't have the front, which was needed most; ability was secondary. To take the edge off our frankness we told him to make application anyway and he might land a job on the strength of his merits, even if he didn't get the position. They will pay you if you get the job and give you a salary if you get the position.

CANADIAN FILM VISITORS.

President T. A. Hubley and General Manager J. F. Clancey, of the General Film Company, Limited, of Montreal, were New York visitors at the home office of General Film Company last week. They reported that the film business in Canada is in a very interesting condition. The "O. Henry" pictures, in particular, are proving to be great favorites with exhibitors throughout Canada, according to Mr. Hubley.

"Marrying the Right Man"

By EDWARD WEITZEL.

STAGE convention has long been the bugaboo of a class of critics whose constant attendance at the play has given them that familiarity with the laws of the drama which is said to breed contempt. Forced by their calling to view, over and over again, combinations of the thirty-six situations classified by Gozzi, many of them arrive at the point of satiation where they are ready to advocate any sort of dramatic structure that is built contrary to what is known as "a well made" play. The best cure for them would be to produce, in succession, a round dozen of dramas made without regard to the rules, and let them behold the dire results. The conventions that excite their weariness have a positive value in building up an acceptable play for the average theatergoer, and it is for this order of patrons that the majority of producers exhibit their wares.

Occasionally one of these lofty gentlemen, whose mission it is to tell the average theatergoer that he is constantly being entertained by plays it is his duty to find anything but pleasing, condescends to dash off a little drama of his own, in which he demonstrates his conception of practical play building. So long as his play is not subjected to the test of a stage production, all goes well. Printed and autographed copies can be read by admiring friends without betraying the work's greatest weakness—its inability to appeal to a theater audience, through lack of the conventions at which its author scoffs. Once in the hands of an experienced stage director, the piece either undergoes a radical return to a "safe and sane" respect for the William Archer formula of play construction or its creator is in a position to insist that it be put on in all its artless innocence, and it meets the fate reserved for such misguided efforts.

In one case a critic-dramatist of this ilk gained a wholesome lesson on the subject, by sadly watching the limited number of performances given his play and more sorrowfully contemplating the equally limited number of spectators that attended these performances. However, he had the courage to come out in print and acknowledge his error, so there is still hope for him.

The screen is young and ingenuous when compared to the stage; but during the fifteen years of its existence it has acquired a goodly crop of conventions of its own; also a much larger number derived as a family inheritance from a long line of ancestry. The creators of the earliest form of drama learned the worth of many of these conventions, and the actors on the traveling stages of Greece and the Paris of Victor Hugo's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" were also familiar with their utility.

Among the conventions shared by the screen and the stage is the one which gives this article its title. "Marrying the Right Man" is of supreme importance in securing happiness and contentment in real life; it is of the same significance in rendering the plot of a photoplay or stage drama acceptable to the average spectator. Youth should wed youth and the young chap should show a higher percentage of virtues than any man in the cast, if he is to get the indorsement of the paying public. The other persons present do not count, even when contributing to the war tax.

In seeking for novelty, the screen has been known to disregard this convention. It can seldom do so with artistic profit to itself or financial profit to the producer

JOE BRANDT BACK ON THE JOB.

After several days of serious illness and a brief stay at a New Jersey rest cure, Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Corporation, has returned to his desk looking greatly improved and full of "pep."

Chaplin Secures Injunction

Justice Manton in United States District Court Continues Restraining Order Against Fake Chaplin Pictures.

THE injunction against the Film Exchange, Inc., the King Comedy Film Company, Inc., Emanuel S. Manheimer, manager of the Crystal Hall Photoplay Theater, Fred Beck, Louis Weiss, George Merrick and Samuel Berliner restraining the defendants from producing, releasing and exhibiting spurious Chaplin comedies will be continued indefinitely, Judge Manton of the United States District Court decided on Dec. 7.

Nathan Burkan, counsel for Charles Chaplin, had made a motion for an injunction pending the trial of the action and presented another motion to have some of the defendants adjudged in contempt of court for failing to comply with the restraining order temporarily enjoining them from dealing in spurious Chaplin comedies, but as the defendants failed to interpose a defense the motions were marked off the calendar.

"The release for exhibition of these inferior photoplays is not only unfair, injurious and causing great and irreparable damage, loss and injury to the plaintiff but in addition to all this it is a cheat and fraud upon the public and the motion picture exhibitors," Attorney Burkan recited in an affidavit filed in court.

Affidavits were also submitted setting forth that Attorney Burkan received a letter from J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., which has a contract with Charles Chaplin to pay the comedian $1,075,000 for eight films, containing a complaint against the Union Film Company.

Mr. Williams inclosed a letter from Lee D. Goldberg, a motion picture exhibitor, of Louisville, disclosing the information that the Union Film Company was offering spurious Chaplin comedies including "Charlie Chaplin" in "A Son of the Gods," "Sentimental Charlie," "Musketeers of the Slums," "Charlie's Nightmare," "Charlie in the Trenches" and "Charlie's Picnic" to exhibitors.

Mr. Burkan also recited in affidavits that he made a visit to the Crystal Hall Photoplay Theater on the evening of October 14, when he saw the alleged spurious film entitled "Charlie in the Trenches" exhibited. He set forth that the film contained scenes from original Chaplin comedies, but also showed many scenes in which an imitator of the film comedian appeared.

The failure of the defendants to oppose the motions is understood to be the result of a gentleman's agreement reached outside of court whereby the defendants consent to discontinue the production, release and exhibition of alleged spurious Chaplin comedies.

Soldiers Want Better Pictures

Film Man Soldier Pleads for Better Y. M. C. A. Pictures—Wants Comedies and Westerns.

THIS paper is in receipt of a letter from a soldier now in training at one of the big camps in the West who thinks that the Y. M. C. A. is not showing programs quite adapted to the best entertainment of the men in training. He writes a clear and intelligent letter and we will quote one or two paragraphs from it.

"After a strenuous day of the Bear Walk, Double Time and Kitchen Police the men are not satisfied to spend the few short hours they have watching a commonplace subject. What they want are comedies, slapstick and otherwise, Westerns, topicals and scenics. Patriotic pictures would also be fine. The age of the picture would not make so much difference provided it was clear and interesting, as hundreds of the men have never seen them.

"The program should be composed of short-length subjects; because the men are coming in at all hours. The exhibitors in cities near the camps need not fear this competition, if you could call it that; because the men have only one full day and two half days a week in which to visit the cities, and, at that, many are not so strong film fans as a moving picture enthusiast would like them to be. Here is an opportunity for the film manufacturer to step in and make a host of new friends of the photoplay and win back those whose interest might have lessened."

There is no reason why the camps should not be furnished with the best of the up-to-date film productions suited to the requirements of that particular service. No doubt experience with the Y. M. C. A. shows will result in a better choice of subjects for the men and that the shows will grow better with time. But the best care and intelligence should be put to use to modify the first programs to fill the special needs.

Distributors Appeal to U. S. District Attorney

Law Firm Representing Them Charges Brooklyn Exhibitors Contemplate a Boycott on Fox and Vitagraph Productions

AS A RESULT of the recent action on the war tax taken by the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn eleven distributing companies affiliated with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have employed Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, a firm of prominent New York lawyers, to take care of their interests in the controversy. The lawyers have written a letter to Melville J. France, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, charging that the Brooklyn exhibitors contemplate a boycott on the productions of William Fox and the Vitagraph company and asking the district attorney to investigate the complaint.

The Brooklyn exhibitors reply to the charges contained in the letter, which was by the distributors furnished to the daily and trade press, saying they do not intend to try the case in the public press, but that they will welcome an investigation by the proper authorities provided the complainants are put under oath. The theater men also declare they will be glad of an opportunity to present their side.

As an offset to the employment by the distributors of eminent counsel the exhibitors say they probably will be represented by Harvey Hinman of New York. Mr. Hinman, it will be recalled, was counsel for the legislative committee which last spring made an exhaustive investigation of the film industry.

The letter of the distributors is as follows:

Melville J. France, United States Attorney, Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Sir: We are directed by certain distributors of motion picture films to complain to you in regard to a boycott which the members of an organization known as the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn are threatening to put into immediate effect against two of the distributors with the purpose of subsequently using a similar boycott against the other distributors, in order that by concerted action and the unlawful means of a boycott they may coerce the distributors to their ends. The distributors who request us to make this complaint are the following:

Aircraft Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, International Film Service, Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Select Pictures Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Vitagraph Company of America, World Film Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation.

The two distributors against whom the boycott is about to be instituted are Fox Film Corporation and Vitagraph Company of America.

In this letter we shall give you the salient facts, and we shall be pleased to amplify this statement in a personal interview at your convenience.

The concerns above named are engaged in interstate commerce in distributing motion picture films throughout the United States, the total business aggregating many millions of dollars annually. That this is an interstate business within the Sherman Act has been held by the Court in United States vs. Motion Picture Patents Company (225 Fed. 800).

By the War Revenue act of October 4, 1917, Congress imposed three taxes affecting the motion picture business, namely, (1) a tax of one-quarter of a cent per linear foot on film which has not been exposed; (2) a tax of one-half a cent per linear foot on film containing a picture, and (3) a tax on admissions to theaters.

The tax upon admissions, as the exhibitors have arranged, is paid by the patron of the theater when he purchases his ticket.

In order to determine how to apportion the tax of three-quarters of a cent per linear foot on films, an exhaustive examination of the subject was made by Price, Waterhouse & Co. at the request of some of the distributors. As a result of their examination certain of the distributors determined to add to the rental charge for a reel (which charge ranges from $1 to $100 per day, according to the character of the subject and the reputation of the actor) a charge of fifteen cents a day per reel (each reel comprising approximately 1,000 feet) on the assumption that the average life of a reel is fifty days. In this manner something less than the amount of the tax will be collected by the distributors. As each exhibitor rents on an average six or seven reels a day, the average daily additional cost to the exhibitor is about $1 per day. On the other hand, if the tax were borne by all the manufacturers or distributors in the United States it would amount to a tax upon them of about $100,000 per week, which, in the minds of many of the distributors, would be ruinous. Accordingly, it seemed to the distributors above named (who, however, comprise only a portion of the total manufacturers and distributors in the United States) that just as the exhibitors had passed on their tax, so the producers or distributors should pass on the tax imposed upon them, and that the method recommended by Price, Waterhouse & Co. was a fair and equitable method of accomplishing this purpose.

We direct your attention to the fact that the collection of this fifteen-cent charge has no relation to prices, for the reason that the daily rental charge on reels ranges from $1 to $100 and upward per day, and is based, among other things, upon the character of the subject, the quality of the picture and the popularity of the actor. The rental charges of the distributors above named are all different. There is no uniformity between them in this respect, and there is no agreement of any kind as to prices or rental charges, for they are all in the keenest competition.

Association have united in order to boycott our clients in the following manner:

On November 18 there was a meeting in Brooklyn at which, we are informed, over one hundred exhibitors were present. At that meeting it was decided that two of the distributors should be singled out and that all exhibitors should cancel their contracts with these two distributors and thereafter restrict their business to the other distributors until the two distributors singled out had been brought to terms. This was to be done regardless of whether or not the other distributors charged fifteen cents to meet the tax. In this manner the exhibitors hoped to force the two distributors to terms and then to proceed to apply the boycott to the other distributors until all had been brought to terms.

At this meeting on November 18 a Committee of Fifteen was appointed with two powers: (1) the authority to select the two distributors whose contracts should be canceled by all of the exhibitors, having contracts with them; (2) the authority to obtain the signatures to such cancellations of all Brooklyn customers of such distributors.

The committee so named held a meeting on Monday, November 19, and by vote singled out the productions of the Fox Film Corporation and the Vitagraph Company as the ones first to be canceled by the members of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn.

In substantiation of the charges herein made we direct your attention to the following reports of the proceedings contained in trade papers: Moving Picture World, December 1, 1917, p. 1309; Moving Picture World, December 8, 1917, p. 1466; Exhibitors' Trade Review, December 8, 1917, p. 25.

The committee reported at a meeting on Thursday, November 22, that thirty signatures of customers had been obtained for cancellation of the productions of the two concerns just named, and on Saturday, November 24, it was further reported that many additional signatures had been obtained, comprising practically all the Brooklyn customers of the two distributors.

On November 19, William Brandt, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Brooklyn, called on the telephone one of the principal officers of the Vitagraph Company and requested a conference, stating that the exhibitors of Brooklyn had selected the Vitagraph Company for their cancellations, and that cancellations from exhibitors all over Brooklyn had been placed in the hands of the Committee of Fifteen, to be served on the Vitagraph Company, and that such cancellations meant that the Vitagraph Company would be shut out of Brooklyn. Similarly the officers of the said Brooklyn exhibitors' association and the Committee of Fifteen have waited upon the officers of the Fox Film Corporation and have stated that they have obtained signatures from practically all, if not all, of the customers in Brooklyn of the Fox Film Corporation, consenting to and authorizing cancellations to be made by the Committee of Fifteen of their contracts with the Fox Film Corporation, which cancellations, if effected, would destroy the business of the Fox Film Corporation in Brooklyn.

These announcements have been made in the form of threats and with the declaration of an intent to bring about concerted action on the part of all the exhibitors and customers of the Vitagraph Company and the Fox Film Corporation, in order by their united action to destroy the business in Brooklyn of those corporations.

We have advised our clients that such concerted action is in violation of law and is a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade, and accordingly our clients have considered it their duty to direct us to present the matter to you for your consideration, with a request that you inquire into the matter, by grand jury proceedings or otherwise as may seem to you advisable.

It has been stated by the officers of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association and by the members of the Committee of Fifteen, at the conference above referred to, that the singling out of the two corporations named is but one step in a plan which is directed against all the distributors. For the reason that they are all equally affected by the scope of this combination and boycott, all of them join in this complaint.

In view of the fact that the boycott may become operative at any moment may we respectfully request your early consideration of the matter.

Very respectfully,

CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM & TAFT.

Reply of the Exhibitors.

The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn have issued the following reply:

The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island is being charged by the combined and concerted action of the Distributors' Branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with a criminal offense. Evidently, the felony charged is of such serious character as requires the employment of the most eminent counsel to represent them. Notwithstanding the usual method of first presenting the case to the authorities, it simultaneously gave such complaint the widest publicity in the public press. The reason for doing this is manifest, and no doubt apparent to everyone. The exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island do not intend to try the issues in the public press, and therefore will welcome an investigation by the proper authorities provided that the complainants be put under oath, to ascertain the facts, and the exhibitors will welcome at the proper time an opportunity to present their side.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was originally organized and incorporated for the purpose of bringing about a better understanding among its various branches and to adjust, if possible, any differences that might arise between the various branches therein. A nationwide complaint has been filed against the Distributors' Branch of this industry, and instead of meeting it as real proper business men they find it necessary to hire the most expensive counsel obtainable to secure the machinery of the United States Government to help them compel the exhibitors to accede to an illegal demand. The United States Government is certainly busy enough conducting this world war without being asked to indulge itself in patching up internal differences of this industry. The fifth largest industry of the world must certainly look ridiculous. This proceeding on the part of the Distributors' Branch will tend to create an unfortunate breach between the exhibitors of this country and the distributors and has torn away the foundation of an organization that was built for the purpose of unity in the industry.

Ex-Senator Harvey Hinman of New York, who was counsel for the New York Legislative Investigation of the Motion Picture Industry, probably will present the exhibitors' side of this issue.

Hodkinson and General Film in Combination

Former Will Use the Machinery of Old Distributing Organization with Own Salesman at Each Branch—General Announces Other Modifications.

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will use the exchange organization of the General Film Company as the service end of its distribution plans, it was announced at the offices of the two companies last Friday. Under the arrangements made, the Hodkinson Corporation will have its own salesmen in the twenty-eight General exchanges, where the actual shipping, inspection and other services will be handled at a lower cost than, as the announcement states, is now enjoyed by any distribution plan. The Hodkinson Corporation saves the wasteful cost of opening and operating new offices, while the General, with its finely equipped organization, is thrown at once into the great field of feature program distribution.

The first product to be handled by the new channel will be the Paralta Plays, two of which, "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan, and "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, are ready for immediate bookings through General Film exchanges.

In addition to the announcement of United States distribution, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation also announces this week that the world rights, exclusive of Canada, for all its product, including the new "Motion Picture Plus," have been arranged with the Inter-Ocean Film Company. Announcement is also made that the Canadian rights to all the Paralta Plays have been sold to the Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto.

There has been much talk of the advantages of exchange consolidation and the elimination of waste, but not until the news of the Hodkinson move was announced Friday, did the industry have any visible sign of a tendency in this direction. The Hodkinson-General arrangement, it is pointed out, is the first step in that elimination of waste and the plan to return a share of the distribution profits to the exhibitor, which Mr. Hodkinson announced last week.

The General Film Company announces, in co-operation with the Hodkinson Plan, that it is prepared to offer its exchange facilities to other national distributors, on a basis similar to that which it has now arranged with Mr. Hodkinson. As indicated in the announcement of the General Film Company, a broad extension of the Hodkinson plan of co-operation of such elements as already exist in the business is involved—an idea which has been Mr. Hodkinson's motive for innumerable moves in the past. As he expresses it in his announcement this week:

"I have in the past, I am today, and I shall in the future use every force that is available for the furtherance of the solid organization which I am building, not only for myself and my associates, but for the industry as a whole."

In the General Film Company announcement that it is linking with the Hodkinson organization for the distribution of the Paralta Plays and the other product which Mr. Hodkinson will handle it also states that it is accepting the Hodkinson ideals in its distribution channels, opening its magnificent plant as a sort of Union Depot for the purpose of eliminating the duplication of exchanges, and the consequent frightful waste of present distribution methods.

Says an official of the General Film Company:

"The exchanges operated by the General Film Company represent the greatest and most comprehensive distributing agency in the world. General Film Company, the oldest organization of its kind, was organized in 1910, and was the dominating figure in the moving picture business until producers began concentrating upon big features, while General Film continued a steady flow of regular program attractions.

"During the last twelve months a systematic and sweeping plan of reorganization of its machinery has been worked out, and now the organization possesses facilities the equal of any distributing agency in the world. A dozen different manufacturing concerns have been producing pictures for General Film distribution, ranging from one picture a month to five or six a week, the whole making a considerable bulk, which was handled with ease. This product we will continue to handle. It is just as easy to handle large pictures as small ones in the mechanics of distribution. We are now beginning a series of activities which will result in other important additions to the product to be distributed through General Film."

Exchanges are maintained by General Film Company at New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Washington, St. Louis, Kansas City, New Orleans, Atlanta, Minneapolis, Denver, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Buffalo, Albany, Columbus, Dallas, Indianapolis, Memphis, New Haven, Omaha, Pittsburgh, Bangor, Seattle and Wilkes-Barre.

The readjustment of the machinery of the General Film Company to meet the tremendous changes of the present is a far-sighted appreciation of the coming trade crisis. The creation of a new type of exchange organization, discussed from so many angles, into an actual working reality, marks a common ground of thought with that of Mr. Hodkinson.

That the General Film Company is now lending its system to full co-operation with the Hodkinson plan is a sign of the great converging movement in the progressive development of the industry.

Amalgamation in the Air

Exudes in Large Chunks from Hotel Lobbies and Restaurants When Big Film Men Foregather.

THAT there is a large economic readjustment looming on the horizon, which may result in a consolidation of considerable size and importance, and which exceeds in fact the mere vaporings of idle rumor-mongers, seems well established. The many meetings and caucuses at the Hotel Astor and the Hotel Knickerbocker the past week, whereat a majority of the various heads of the different film manufacturers and leading representatives of other organizations affiliated with motion picture interests in one way or another, even though much of the conversation has taken place across the seemingly innocent dining table, has led to much speculation by those not "in on the know."

Significant is the remark made by officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that a move for amalgamation is most certainly under way. One certain party has even permitted the publication of the statement that every executive of such manufacturing interests with whom he has been in conversation, has been in favor of effecting an amalgamation, in order that a better ratio of profits may be conserved with the important sequel of more satisfactory dividends for the stockholders. In fact, the official whom we thus quote goes even further in his remarks and states that the only members of the organizations thus far consulted, who have placed any opposition in the path of an economic realignment, have been wholly employed on a salary basis, and, naturally enough, for reasons of self-consideration, do not care to see the proposed plans materialize.

Significant also is the large number of franchise holders in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, who "happened" into New York and joined in the dinner parties and informal caucuses above referred to, though it has been related that there were no regular meetings of this body called, neither for the directors or shareholders.

BRANDT TAKES PATRONS INTO CONFIDENCE.

In order that his patrons of the New Albany Theater in Brooklyn might have a full understanding of what they are doing toward the support of the Government by their contributions of one and two cents war admission taxes, William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' League, on the evening of December 2 threw upon his screen the following announcement:

"War tax on admission paid by patrons of the New Albany Theater in November was $420.79. This sum will feed over 1,000 soldiers (a war battalion), one full day."

The New Albany is a 600-seat house in a residential neighborhood of apartments and dwellings. Prices of admission are 10 cents afternoons and 15 cents evenings. The appearance of the announcement on the screen was greeted with applause.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Texas Managers Support Government

Will Send Representatives to Washington Meeting, But Will Not Support Protest Against War Tax Schedules.

AT THE meeting of the Texas Theater Managers' Association, held at Dallas on Monday, December 3, P. C. Levy, of the Hippodrome and Strand theaters, Ft. Worth, and treasurer of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, with Herschel Stuart, representing the Hulsey interests, have been named as representatives of the Texas organization to the tax conference at Washington, December 11, 12 and 13. Twenty-five per cent. of the Association membership was represented at the Dallas session.

It was voted not to affiliate with either the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League or the American Exhibitors' Association until the amalgamation of the two was accomplished, the latter organization, however, was favored by a majority of the Texas men. Secretary Campbell was instructed to proceed at once on an organization tour for the state.

Instructions to the delegates to the Washington meeting carry no note of protest against war taxes levied by the Government. On the contrary it was the unanimous voice of the convention that every possible assistance should be given the Government.

Various committees for the year were made up of the following well known Texas amusement men:

Reception—S. Von Phul, manager Majestic theater; W. D. Neville, Washington theater; Holger Jorgensen, Best theater; Chas. Hartman, Garrick theater; John DeStefano, Queen theater.

Organization—C. J. Mussulman, Paris; B. C. Bell, Palestine; C. M. McFarland, Houston; W. F. Box, San Antonio; E. L. Dye, Plainview; W. J. Wilkie, Wichita Falls; Ben B. Lewis, El Paso.

Finance—Otto Englebrecht, Temple; N. Lewis, Tyler; W. J. Lytle, San Antonio; V. J. Grunder, Cuero; T. M. Hervey, El Paso; Chas. Kimball, McKinney; L. M. Ridout, Denison; A. A. Chouteau, Jr., Dallas.

Legislative—P. C. Levy, Fort Worth; W. E. Weatherford, Dallas; E. H. Hulsey, Galveston-Dallas; Ross D. Rogers, Amarillo; E. W. Robb, San Angelo; J. B. McCue, El Paso; Ben S. Meyer, Tyler; Hugh Henry, Denison; W. J. Lytle, San Antonio; Karl Hobletzelle, Dallas.

Labor—O. F. Gould, Fort Worth; J. F. Green, Cleburne; Leon S. Gohlman, Dallas; H. G. Cotter, Fort Worth; Ed. Raymond, San Antonio; H. S. Ford, Canyon; L. Lavine, Corsicana; Adolph Dittman, Brownsville.

Grievance—John R. Fanning, Mineral Wells; John Sayeg, Ennis; Jas. T. Hatch, Kaufman; H. H. Keller, Mart; W. O. Williams, San Marcos; W. A. Stuckert, Brenham; F. R. Newman, Greenville; Robt. Pratt, Denison; Jos. Phillips, Fort Worth; Chas. W. E. McCormick, Austin.

Publicity—Lou Bissinger, Dallas; W. S. Crosbie, Fort Worth; W. A. Byar, Terrell; Mrs. Eva Vernon, Texarkana; Miss Gussie Oscar, Waco; Paul Barraco, Houston; J. P. Everett, Waco; H. C. Norfleet, Dallas; Jas. Wilson, Sherman.

Resolutions—A. R. Gwynn, Terrell; Tom Gaines, Hillsboro; Sam Lucchese, San Antonio; Ed. Foy, Jr., Dallas; Will Batsell, Sherman; J. W. Courtney, Weatherford; D. F. Prall, Longview; Chas. Dorbandt, Athens; Miss Eva Johnstone, Houston; W. S. Sonnomen, Waco; C. E. Sherley, Honey Grove; M. Wicks, Jr., Houston; J. N. Stewart, Denton.

Iowa Exhibitors Get Together

National Organizer Rogers Forms Local League at Waterloo—Will Hold Meetings in Other Towns.

DAVID ROGERS, national organizer, sent a call to the exhibitors of the state of Iowa for a meeting to be held in Waterloo, Tuesday, Nov. 27. In answer to his call a small group of exhibitors around Waterloo responded and a couple of exchangemen from Des Moines went over. Mr. Rogers succeeded in winning for himself the friendship of every man who came to the meeting; by his straightforward friendly personality and the small meeting was sincerely voted as the most successful yet held. Mr. Rogers has given up all hope of bringing the exhibitors of Iowa together and is planning now for from eight to ten local organizations to be formed over Iowa. One has already been formed around Davenport and exhibitors from this suggestion attended the Waterloo meeting to aid in the formation there.

The new Waterloo local organization will include exhibitors in that city, Cedar Rapids, Waverly and the surrounding small towns. And following is a list of the theater managers present and who joined the local organization:

H. J. Lego, Majestic, Fort Dodge; N. C. Rice, Call Opera House, Algona; Frank Hegerman, of Waverly; A. J. Diebolt, Palace, Cedar Rapids; C. C. Clifton, Lyric, and William Hemspeke, Crystal, Cedar Rapids; F. Witt, of Shell Rock; H. Kelly, Iris, Independence; Guy Curtis, Independence; W. A. Middleton, Rex, Iowa Falls; Edward Awe, Strand, Fort Dodge; Sam Greenbaum, Gardenin, Davenport; W. L. Myers, Palace, Waterloo, and Mr. Martin, of Waterloo.

Mr. Rogers plans to arrange for many more similar local organizations over the state, until the whole state of exhibitors are some way joined together, then perhaps it will be possible through the local organizations to arrange for a state league.

Maine Exhibitors Protest

Say War Tax Is Inequitable and Burdensome—Will Send Delegate to Washington Meeting.

THE Maine Motion Picture Exhibitors League, at a session held in Bangor, Dec. 4, voiced its objection to the what it terms unjust war revenue taxation on small moving picture theaters. The league claims that the present system of taxation places a burden upon exhibitors which cannot be long sustained, and if the government desires revenue from the motion picture theaters, the distribution of taxation shall be such as to permit the theaters to run without loss and thereby provide a revenue for war purposes.

Maine theatres, in common with others throughout the country, are now subjected to double taxation, paying a tax on the films and a seat tax, the latter being graded according to the seating capacity without reference to the size of the city or town in which the houses are located. This, the exhibitors say, is unjust. The war tax on admissions is also declared inequitable. The houses which charge a maximum admission fee of five cents pay no tax on admissions, which is declared to be wrong, as the league believes the five cent houses should pay something in the way of taxes.

The Maine league was organized last spring and comprises about 50 per cent. of the number of exhibitors in the state at present, with a steadily growing membership.

It was voted to send a committee from the league to the national convention of exhibitors in Washington, D. C., when it is expected that action will be taken by the latter body in representations to Congress.

President Alfred S. Black, of Rockland, presided, and 30 exhibitors were present.

Association Headquarters Open

New Offices Established at Indianapolis, With Pettijohn and Rembusch in Charge.

ALTHOUGH not yet fully equipped, the new headquarters of the American Exhibitors' Association, recently removed from New York City, has been opened in the Indiana Trust Building in Indianapolis, with Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager, and Frank J. Rembusch, general secretary, in charge. The offices occupy two spacious and well-lighted rooms on the fourth floor, and present a very attractive appearance.

The establishment of the organization's headquarters in Indianapolis makes them more centrally located than they were in New York, and no doubt will enable the organization to maintain them at much less expense.

Secretary Rembusch has been on the job continuously since the offices were removed, and has been devoting the greater part of his time in the effort to get things lined up in Indiana for the meeting at Washington, when the exhibitors will appear before the Congress and endeavor to get that body to amend the war tax law.

Charles C. Pettijohn and his wife, formerly Miss Belle Bruce, arrived in Indianapolis the latter part of the week after a short honeymoon in New York and Washington, and are now at home in a beautiful residence at 3744 North Meridian street. Mrs. Pettijohn says she has abandoned screen life forever and desires nothing so much as the home life she is entering here in Indianapolis.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS MEET.

At the last meeting held by the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia President J. O'Donnell read a communication sent by the National President, Lee Ochs, urging that a representative committee be formed and sent to Washington, D. C., to attend the convention to be held there on December 11, 12 and 13. H. C. Kliehm reported the death of G. W. Schnier of Pittsburgh, who died last week, and a motion was passed by the members expressing their regrets.

A motion to have the admission fee of $10 raised to $15 remained unsettled and was laid on the table. Members of the League were again warned not to play the music published by the American Society of Authors and Composers at their theaters.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS WILL CONTINUE FIGHT.

Cleveland exhibitors, at their regular weekly meeting, December 4, passed a resolution to continue the fight on the 15-cent charge which is made by exchanges, and the attorneys for the exhibitors were instructed to proceed as they see fit.

There was a long discussion, in which every exhibitor of the fifty odd present took part. All but two or three were for continuing the fight. The attorneys were instructed to look into the chances of bringing the matter before the county grand jury under the Valentine anti-trust act.

The exhibitors also named two delegates to go to the coming convention in Washington, the week before Christmas. They are League President William J. Slimm and Sam Bullock.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING AT MINNEAPOLIS.

One of the best attended meetings of the Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation in many moons was held at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Friday afternoon, November 30. War tax, music tax and license laws were discussed at length, and the session was a lively one. The resolution thanking the Mutual, Triangle and General exchanges for their willingness to pay the war tax on film reels, prepared by C. H. Hitchcock, Otto Stelzner and W. G. True, was adopted. Members of the exhibitors' body were urged to book, whenever possible, films released by the Mutual, Triangle and General exchanges. Several prominent Twin City exhibitors told of their experiences with the war tax on tickets and reels. A majority of the exhibitors expressed themselves as pleased with the willingness of their patrons to pay the war tax, but a majority condemned the exchanges charging the war tax on reels.

Bell & Howell to Be De Vry Agents

Will Handle Projector in Its Los Angeles and New York Offices.

AMONG the recent agents secured by the De Vry Corporation, for the De Vry projector, is the Bell & Howell Company, which will handle the machine in its New York and Los Angeles offices. Negotiations were closed after a thorough investigation of the market had been made by Bell & Howell, and in selecting the De Vry projector the firm feels it has secured a machine that has stood the test and proved itself a distinct success.

The De Vry is used by a number of large automobile manufacturers, such as the Ford, the Packard and the Dodge. A recent order from the latter increased the total amount purchased by that company to seventy-five machines. The De Vry projector is also doing service in various departments of the United States Government.

The De Vry Corporation also reports its recent affiliation with the Arcus Lamp and Appliance Company, of Cleveland, and in the future will distribute the latter company's product in Chicago and vicinity. F. H. Cudmore, general manager of the Arcus Company, was in Chicago on Friday, November 30, when the arrangements were completed.

SCREENING HIMSELF.

FRANCISCO G. ORTEGA, who edits Cine Mundial, tells the following: Recently one of the picture theaters of Merida, in the state of Yucatan, Mexico, was showing a duped and dilapidated film of "Joan the Woman." The projection was even worse than the condition of the film, and the audience became restive. As long as the expressions of discontent were confined to utilizing the screen for a target the operator continued calmly turning the crank, but when a few tributes of esteem, in the shape of empty bottles, came sailing through the man's size observation port the picture vanished, to be followed in remarkably quick time with the following explanatory slide, in shaky handwriting:

"The projection is awful. I know it, but I am not responsible for it. I have told the manager a dozen times to buy _____ carbons, but he won't spend a cent to save his life.

"JUAN GONZALEZ, Operator."

How It Is Done at the Strand

Manager Edel Analyzes His Program for the Benefit of Moving Picture World Readers

Foreword.

NEW YORK'S Strand has become known throughout the entire country as an institution in the world of the American cinema art. The presentation of high-class screen entertainment augmented by exceptional musical programs rendered by a large orchestra, together with individual solos by accomplished artists, established a new clientele in the amusement field. New ideas in lighting, house management, advertising and the presentation of screen subjects as well as musical numbers are constantly being introduced at New York's largest film temple under the management of Harold Edel, one of the most youthful as well as progressive, exhibitors in the country. Despite the fact that he is still well within the draft age, Mr. Edel has had many years association with motion picture exhibition. As directing manager of the Strand he has established himself an enviable standing in the trade. His characteristic initiative has resulted in many departures in the presentation of a film entertainment and his daily mail always has letters from brother exhibitors out-of-town asking for information on new productions and suggestions for their exploitation. With the idea of giving our readers suggestions that will tend to enhance their own work, Mr. Edel will contribute weekly articles on his current shows, giving the why and wherefore.

Favors a Limited Use of War Subjects.

It is up to every exhibitor in the country to bend every effort toward "doing his bit" whenever and wherever possible. The exhibitor is a very potent factor affecting that all-important thing, public opinion. I do not mean by this that he should clutter his program with war films and news pictures of soldiers; in fact, it is just as important that he take the minds of his patrons away from the war at times as it is for him to bring them directly back on the subject. Each week I endeavor to present a patriotic feature in connection with my entertainment, a little something of special effectiveness in addition to my regular films bearing on the war.

For last week's "bit" I accomplished a two-fold purpose at the very beginning of my program. Every audience has become accustomed to the usual overture as a curtain raiser; during this overture the audience fusses about and usually it is not before the opening number has well advanced that the people settle down and begin to enjoy it. My opening number was the Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 2 with an original piano Cadenza by William Lowitz. To further enhance the presentation of this number I engaged several special musicians. It was quite evident that I would have to have the entire attention of the audience from the beginning in order to fully appreciate the efforts of the orchestra. In order to bring about this condition I placed my special patriotic "bit" first on the bill, as a prelude to the overture. The house was darkened and the audience, expecting the usual overture, continued the customary fidgeting. However, as the curtain rose slowly the stage gradually displayed the largest silk American flag ever disclosed in a theater, simultaneously the orchestra burst into "The Star Spangled Banner," and immediately the entire house from orchestra to roof came to attention. The ushers in their military uniforms stood at attention and with the conclusion of the number the effect of the whole presentation brought forth a great outburst of spontaneous patriotic applause with the psychological switching on of all the lights.

Following the overture came "Tonic Towns in England," a beautiful scenic showing the famous watering resorts in natural colors. The Strand Topical Review came next with its varied assortment of news, patriotic and zoological pictures. A cello solo by Helen Scholder followed and was duly appreciated.

A Stunt for "Nearly Married."

Then came the feature picture, Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married." In introducing this production we offered one of the most effective novelties yet presented at the Strand. The house was dimmed in the usual way preparatory to throwing the film on the screen and the curtains parted as the organ played the wedding march, but in place of the screen there appeared an immense church window covering the entire screen space. With lights streaming through the many-colored window, the display drew many whispers of surprise from the audiences. To the left of the window stood the bridegroom dressed in his wedding clothes. A little flower-girl entered, followed by the bridesmaids and then the bride, with little girls holding up her veil. The procession filed across the front of the big window, the bridegroom took the arm of the bride and all passed off to the opposite side of the stage as if entering the church. Then the lights of the window faded and the picture itself appeared on the screen. The characters in the prelude were dressed exactly as those appearing in the film. At every performance this introduction received considerable appreciative applause.

After the feature came a duet from "Hamlet" by Rosa Lind, soprano, and Yon Colignon, baritone, followed by our exclusive presentation of "The United States and Allied Fleets on Their Recent Visit to Rio Janeiro." A Mutt and Jeff comedy cartoon, "The Hunters," was accorded much laughter and an organ solo by Arthur Depew and Ralph H. Brigham concluded the performance.

C. B. Burkhart a Record Subscriber

WE hear quite a little from time to time in regard to the instability of the moving picture trade and the changes that are continually taking place in the producing and exhibiting ends of the business. That there is plenty of ground for such criticism no one realizes better than the publishers of the Moving Picture World, for it keeps several of our clerks busy a good part of their time taking care of the changes in addresses alone. There is a brighter side to the question, however, and our lists also contain the names of many firms and individuals who have been advertisers and subscribers since the foundation of the paper over ten years ago.

We are publishing herewith an engraving of C. B. Burkhart of the Pastime theater, Homer, Ill., from whom we received our tenth annual subscription a few months since. Mr. Burkhart is an old timer in the exhibiting game, for his experience dates back to early in 1904. Another remarkable record held by Mr. Burkhart is that in the thirteen years or more that he has been exhibiting pictures he has only missed two weeks, when the Board of Health closed his theater due to an epidemic. Our readers who possess a copy of our Tenth Anniversary Number, dated March 10th, of this year, will find in that issue an interesting account of his early experience.

We extend to Mr. Burkhart and the many other old readers and subscribers of the World our sincere appreciation and esteem for their confidence and support during the past decade. May their shadows never grow less, as Richardson would say. It is the oldtimers, who did so much in the early days, that are surely entitled to their reward from the industry.

Lamberger Enlarges Activities

The Motion Picture Field Owes Much to This Pioneer, Who Has Championed Its Struggles Since the Early Days.

WILLIAM HUMPHREY, Edmund Lawrence and F. J. Grandon are the directors who, in the coming year, are counted upon to carry the standard of Ivan Film productions into the very front ranks of the industry. Each one of them has an organization of his own, which, as regards perfection, leaves nothing wanted.

One of the important branches in the producing organization of the Ivan people is the installation of several "Readers," whose duty is not only to read submitted scripts, but every play, novel or romance of any standing in literature, be it in foreign or native tongue. This department is under the supervision of Oscar I. Lamberger, Ph.D., who, having been professor of comparative literature, possesses the qualifications to direct the efforts of the "Readers" in proper channels.

Unquestionably the united efforts of the organizations under the excellent management of I. E. Chadwick more than augur well for the future of Ivan Film productions.

Dr. O. I. Lamberger, Ph.D.

At this time it may well be noted that although Ivan Abramson is in no manner connected with the company the firm will continue to do business under the name of Ivan Film Productions, and the various state right distributors handling Ivan product may go the limit in heralding the standard output which these Ivan distributors will be able to send to their trade.

At this point it might be well to devote a few lines to the splendid career in behalf of the country-wide acceptance of the motion picture that this forceful figure has all too silently and modestly carved with his accustomed unselfishness. Pioneers in the business will remember him as a devout friend and a far-sighted diplomat, as it were. As far back as 1906 Dr. Oscar I. Lamberger, then a member of the lecture staff of the People's Institute, of which the late Charles Sprague Smith was the presidential head, championed the cause of the screen, then a distrusted and despised business of a supposedly nondescript character. Lamberger grasped the future efficacy of the motion picture, and was selected to lead an investigation into the conditions of the East Side of Manhattan, with a view of improving the social conditions of the inhabitants of this quarter. He chose as his main vehicle of accomplishing his object the motion picture, and put it to the first use of this kind that it had received. In time this led to the doctor buying an interest in the Avenue C Theater, in the heart of the Ghetto, which was thereafter conducted as a model house for other exhibitors to learn from and copy after, not only as to conditions of hygiene, but particularly as to types of offering.

As a corollary to this work the doctor soon found that he could materially assist his efforts by appealing to the early manufacturers for the making of classic photoplays and other subjects more worthy than the then all-to-frequent crude type of cheap dramas and comedies. It was through his persuasive efforts that Shakespeare's works were first committed to the camera, as well as other of the first productions of other standard literary volumes, which served as the forerunner of the current vogue of visualized literature. To further encourage productions of this kind Lamberger formed the Ecclesia Entertainment Society, an exchange which purchased over eighty single reel standard subjects, and released them to the nickelodeons on the East Side. As many of his purchases were made after the films had lived their supposed booking life, it is noteworthy that the Ecclesia rental price was maintained at $5 per reel.

At this period the theaters were suffering from the unjust political intrigues of the McClellan administration. One Christmas period every picture show house in New York City was closed down by the police. This furnished the energetic doctor with new and more important fields of activity. Swinging the full power of the People's Institute behind him Lamberger worked to the end of preventing censorship from falling into the hands of the police department. A meeting was called in the Avenue C Theater, which was attended by the first exhibitors' association, a local body; members of the People's Institute and manufacturers, which resulted in the formation of the National Board of Censorship, with three members, Dr. Lamberger representing the exhibitors, John Collier representing the Institute and Dr. Theodore Shay representing the public schools. At this first meeting one thousand dollars was subscribed toward the new body's maintenance. The further development of this organization is known to all. As a result the campaign slogan of the doctor, "Mayors may come and mayors may go, but motion pictures will go on forever," was far and wide adopted as the cry of the business.

Next we find the subject of this article directing the earliest five-reel productions (in 1916)—"The Life of John Bunyan," or "Pilgrim's Progress," in which he co-starred Ethel Clayton and Warner Oland. This film is still doing duty in churches, schools and religious lodges throughout this continent.

The next six years finds this fighter out of the film circle, devoting his time to civic movements of large proportion. The early part of this year marked his re-entry into the business with a deeply laid plan that will not come to fruition until Dr. Lamberger feels that he has mastered the numerous situations that are embodied in his future plans. In order to accomplish his studies, and being a great admirer of the ability and breadth of vision of Isaac E. Chadwick, head of the Ivan Film Corporation, he assumed the chair of publicity head with the Ivan concern, and has just enlarged his activities with this manufacturer, as the forepart of this article apprises.

Suffice it to say that Dr. Oscar I. Lamberger will be heard from importantly in the near future.

FORMERLY AMERICAN FILM ACTOR COLONEL'S ORDERLY.

A. A. Bonnard, formerly manager of the automobile department of the American Film Company studios at Santa Barbara, California, has been appointed Colonel's orderly at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington. Young Bonnard went to the training camp with the first batch from Santa Barbara and gained his promotion for personal merit as well as because of his proficiency in French. Sidney Alger, former assistant to Edward Sloman, has been made acting Lieutenant and is in charge of a rookie squad.

Australian Notes

By Thomas S. Imrie.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, Oct. 30, 1917.

THE Clement Mason Super Films announce that they have secured the Australian rights to all Essanay subjects, and beginning next month will release one feature weekly. The first production will be "The Misleading Lady," featuring Henry B. Walthall. The series "Do Children Count?" is also scheduled for early release.

The announcement that Goldwyn Pictures are shortly to be presented to the public here has caused much interest in film circles. J. A. Lipman, who represents Goldwyn in Australia, says that the first release will be made during the next few weeks at one of the biggest Sydney houses.

A new arrival in the picture producing field in Australia is G. L. Gouday, who starts on a four-part feature next month. The theme of this subject has not been disclosed, but it is understood that it is of topical interest, though not dealing with the war.

Australian Feature Films, Ltd., distributors of Paramount and Arctcraft productions, have secured very commodious premises in Pitt street, Sydney, and will move into them next week. Practically nothing was saved from the disastrous fire that gutted their offices about six weeks ago, and so the future home will be entirely fitted up with new stock.

A new series of Repatriation War Films has been completed, and will be presented by Australasian Films at the Sydney Theater Royal on Saturday next. A unique advertising stunt has been arranged in connection with their presentation. The Governor-General will view the films on a special screening in the morning, and a Sydney aviator will fly over Sydney dropping circulars advertising the film and also the Liberty Loan. The pictures are about ten thousand feet in length, and deal chiefly with the work of the Australian forces in the battle line in Flanders.

The Progressive Film Service, distributors in this country of Mutual films, have within the last few days extended their operations to our Northern state, Queensland.

A branch has been opened in Brisbane, with H. J. Hawkins in charge. Mr. Hawkins is a very well-known figure in Brisbane film circles, having been one of the "heads" with the General Film Company of Brisbane, and later with Birch Carroll of the same burg.

It is a noticeable fact that J. A. Lipman, now handling Goldwyn productions here, was, in conjunction with O. G. Sudholz, responsible for the presentation of Paramount pictures in Australia, and later introduced the Mutual Program, which is being exploited by Mr. Sudholz through the Progressive Service. Lipman and Sudholz have probably a more extensive knowledge of film conditions in Australia than any other men engaged in the business. Starting out years back with a Kalem production, "From the Manger to the Cross," they traversed the whole of the continent with the subject. Following this they exploited individual features until the Famous Players and Lasky Productions became available when they contracted for the entire output to those companies, continuing to handle them until a year ago when they sold the controlling interest in their company to the producers, and started the Progressive exchanges.

John F. Gavin is now busy on the filming of "For the Term of Her Natural Life," a story of early convict days. It is expected that when finished the film will run about six reels. A cast of well known screen and stage artists has been secured, and includes Ethel Bashford and Charles Villiers, who had prominent parts in "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," shown in America about a year ago. Villiers has appeared in almost every Australian picture made, usually in "heavy" roles.

"For the Term of Her Natural Life" is to be presented in America during the beginning of next year, and Mr. Gavin is making every effort to produce a picture that will compare favorably with the best American features.

John F. Gavin is one of the pioneer Australian picture producers, having been in the business for over eight years. His first picture was a dramatic story of the life of the bushranger Thunderbolt, in which he played the lead. After eight years this picture is still being screened in the backblocks. At this time the average dramatic film was about 800 or 900 feet in length, while the usual comedy was seldom more than 400 feet. Gavin decided that he would make nothing but features, and when the firm of Cricks, Findlay & Gavin came into existence shortly after, a series of features were made, including "Benn Hall and His Gang," "Keane of Kalgoorlie," "Frank Gardiner," and also a mining drama of the early convict days, "His Assigned Servant."

The success of these pictures was so great that it was decided to change the partnership into a company, and so the Australian Photoplay Company was formed, with a capital of £20,000. Under this brand many features were produced, in spite of active opposition from other concerns.

Gavin later drew out his interests from the company, and since then has been working on his own. His latest production is a drama from an original scenario entitled "For the Term of Her Natural Life," a story of the early convict days, and this film will probably be in five reels.

Gavin intends this to be the best he has ever done, as present arrangements are to sell the American rights. He says that the picture will compete with the best American productions.

The Fox Film Corporation announce that their big feature, "Jack and the Beanstalk," will be released in Sydney at the Theater Royal during December, and will in all probability be the Christmas attraction there. The same company's production "A Tale of Two Cities," which was released at the same theater some time ago, is playing a very successful return visit at the Strand theater this week.

MANUFACTURERS, ATTENTION!

Wells Hawks, formerly special publicity man for Mary Pickford, as well as for Arctcraft, but now an enlisted lieutenant in the navy, writes the following letter, which deserves the attention of every manufacturer:

"Subject: Navy Recruiting and Motion Pictures.

"It has been suggested to this bureau that a fine advertisement can be given United States Navy recruiting by the use of posters in scenes of moving pictures.

"In many film productions there are street scenes where posters appear in the reproduction. If in making up these scenes United States Navy posters are used their display would be of great advantage to the service and add to the realism of the scene.

"If this meets with your approval we will be glad if you will forward to your director.

"Suitable posters will be mailed on application. The United States Navy posters are artistic and effective, and are the work of the best known American artists."

WILLIAM HARVEY WEARING SERGEANT'S STRIPES.

The actor who recently finished a part as a German spy in "Draft 258" will go after Boches with specially fervent jabs when he gets a chance. He is serving with Company F, 305 Infantry, at Camp Upton. He received an invitation as guest of honor at the recent Screen Club ball, held at the Astor, Saturday, November 17.

John F. Gavin.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

MAY MACLAREN, American film actress and star of two successful productions still being exhibited at the Philharmonic Hall, London, is shortly expected to appear in British film productions.

Occasionally managers of moving picture theaters in different parts of the kingdom have complained to me of the petty pilferings bred of the souvenir habit. One picture theater, which shall be nameless, has a reputation for its decorative tapestry and lace, but every night when the manager makes his final rounds one, two and sometimes more pieces are, thanks to light-fingered patrons, invariably missing. "It's the souvenir habit," he remarked, "more than an inherent desire to steal. Some patrons when they come into a nicely furnished lounge or lobby seem to imagine that any little trinkets or ornaments employed in the general decorative scheme of the lounge are there to be picked up with the handbills." I have often heard of the retention—in the temporary absence of the attendant—of the metal tickets issued by the automatic ticket issuing machines and here the motive is quite apparent. But to managers who are troubled with souvenir hunters I would commend the remedy of the one quoted above and fasten loose effects down to some substantial fixture.

The mention of metal tickets reminds me that a York exhibitor has had one of his sent to him by a soldier on a tive service who found the metal disc in the ruins of a German fortress at Thiepval.

The Ideal Film Renting Co. is not to abandon the project it had under negotiation at the time of Winston Churchill's appointment to the Ministry of Munitions. This was the production of an imposing spectacular war picture entitled, "How the Great War Arose," and Mr. Churchill was to write the script and superintend the production. Should this yet be done, or a suitable substitute for Mr. Churchill be found, it is likely that the picture will be sponsored by the Allied Governments as an official statement of their cause in going to war. Apart from this the Ideal Co.'s diary of production is a full one. Versions of Fielding's "Tom Jones" and Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice" are near the completion stage, while "The Bachelors' Club" (Zangwill), "Shirley" (Bronte) "Quinneys" (H. A. Vachel), "Kipps" (H. G. Wells), and revised adaptations of "Nicholas Nickleby" and "Westward Ho" are well under way.

"The Manxman," a London film company's creation after Hall Caine's novel, already shown in the States, made its appearance in London at the New Galley Kinema.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson sails for the States in a day or two to fulfill his engagement with the newly constituted Hyclass Producing Corporation of New York City to appear personally in his greatest dramatic success of the spoken stage, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," by Jerome K. Jerome.

The principal contribution from America to the trade shows of the week is perhaps the third of the Kitty Gordon subjects, entitled "One Week." While undeniably within the category of vampire plays, it unfolds its story upon original lines and amongst those exhibitors with audiences of an appetite for strong meat it is assured of an extensive showing. It is handled here by the Apex Film Co.

The past few days have seen the removal of one of the landmarks of moving-picture development in London, the closing down of the old King's Hall in Commercial Road, East End. Time was, now nearly a dozen years ago, when the Old King's, as it was familiarly known, was the cradle of moving pictures on London's most densely populated side. It kept well in pace with the times and before competition in the East End became keen always showed an attractive program.

Considering the nature of the ground and the prices charged for admission it is no exaggeration to say that the Commercial Road area of eastern London offers the most remarkable record of cinematographic development in the whole of the Metropolis. There are theaters in this district which carry specialization to a fine art, the Polish Jews' kinema, for instance, has a set of Russian titles made for every film shown there. In design and furnishing, while not comparable to the best West End theaters, I know of many in central London which fare worse.

Effect of Picture Depends on Exhibitor

Raoul Walsh Says Operators Who "Monkey" with Tempo of Action Undo Work of Careful Directors.

THE director may labor like a trojan; but the ultimate effect of his picture on the screen depends on the artistic integrity of the individual exhibitor. That is the belief of Raoul A. Walsh, the American director who has used his short leisure before beginning work on his first Goldwyn production to make a tour of some of New York's moving picture theaters.

"Frankly," says Mr. Walsh, "I have been very much disturbed over the way I have seen many of my own pictures run. The Twentieth Century Express is a horsecar beside some of the speed I have seen careless operators or short-sighted house managers put into their films. In my opinion, such haste is nothing short of criminal. It is unfair to the director who has timed his action as closely as possible to the right tempo. And any manager who thinks he will profit by crowding in an extra show by such methods is making a big mistake. He is ruining good entertainment, and when he ruins good entertainment, he is making disappointed audiences, audiences that won't come back."

"I have been just as much impressed by another mistake in projection. It isn't a case of mistaken avarice. It's really well meaning. But it's stupid and criminal just the same. This is the trick which some operators have of kitting up the speed of the machine when big, swift, dramatic scenes flash on the screen. Their intention is right. They want to make a distinction in tempo between the scenes of quieter action and those with punch in them. In the early days, it was often necessary for the operator to do this, because the director had failed to provide the proper tempo himself."

"My own practice is to watch this matter of tempo very closely indeed. I take the bulk of my straight scenes at 13 or 14 exposures a second. When it is swift comedy or big melodramatic action—a chase or a fight or a raid, for instance—my cameraman slows down to 11 or 12. And then, of course, when the complete film is run through the projector at a normal, constant speed of 14, all the tempo runs true, the quiet scenes at a quiet pace, the melodrama with a rush."

"But all this is—and should be—the director's business, not the operator's. Sometimes it takes some very difficult manipulation of lights to keep the exposures right; but there is no difficulty here that a competent director cannot solve. Unfortunately, the maker of a film is at the absolute mercy of the man who shows it. And perhaps he is to be congratulated that so many managers and operators do appreciate their responsibilities."

BUSINESS GOOD IN EMPIRE STATE.

Lewis D. Brown, owner and manager of the Moving Picture Machine Company of Binghamton, New York, was a caller in the New York office of the World last week. He is moving to a new address at 28 Henry Street and states that he has built up quite a little business in machines, repair parts and theater supplies in his vicinity. Being an expert electrician he is in a position to make installations and covers a considerable section of the northwestern part of the Empire State, where his services are in demand. Most of the theater managers he has visited recently report good business that has not been effected by the war tax to any appreciable extent.

MORE METRO MEN ENLIST.

Dwight Begeman, cameraman, is the latest Metro employe to enter the service. He has left for his home in St. Louis, to enlist in the navy, and he hopes to be assigned to the work of taking motion pictures for the Government. Jack Lamond, another of Metro's photographic force, is already engaged in taking pictures of naval manoeuvres.

Irving Flisser, formerly a member of Metro's electrical force, under the supervision of Frank Detering, is in the navy.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

FIRST I must mention our new picture house, the Castle Square, which has been done over to the queen's taste, and with music playing an important part, under the direction of Jarvis Jocelyn, so well known in theatrical and musical circles. This is distinctly high class in every detail—and such a clean program! The stage is a delight to the eye, with no tawdry decorations (?), like artificial flowers and the like, but done in cream, with corinthian columns at the side and latticed panels. Harvard red velvet makes a rich curtain. There are attractive girl ushers, and an air of hospitality on entering the house. I went over especially to see one of the "Country Life Series," featuring Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton and the children, their location being their estate at Oyster Bay, where they are neighbors of the only "T. R." The short subject called "Satin and Calico," picturing both, is thoroughly enjoyable. In the cast we get Donald Brian as a society man and country lout in overalls. Can you picture him? In the tennis scene I recognized Mr. Blackton, who directed the series, and also saw the venerable Charles Kent. Splendid offering of Greater Vitagraph. On the program we had good comedy with "Fatty" Arbuckle, Mutt and Jeff, and that excellent picture, "A Tar Heel Warrior," featuring Walt Whitman in a role suited to his dignity. A typical southern play with music was a strong feature, as rendered on the new choralelo by Mr. Jocelyn.

That evening I saw "The Mark of Cain," and failed to enjoy it, though well cast with "Tony" Moreno, J. H. Gilmour and John Sainpolis, who all deserved better. It was melodramatic and unconvincing. Mrs. Castle does better work in this than in her serial efforts, and her dancing dog gave delight to the youngsters in front.

Commend me to pictures like "Draft 258," which was shown at the Park Theater before many guests, including about 500 sailors. It was a splendid gathering of young manhood, and great discipline was displayed, for we noted that they did not applaud in any "spread-eagle fashion" and all kept silent during the story, well pictured and a credit to Metro and all concerned. A feature was the presence on the stage of the Pier Band, which rendered selections before the program opened. I like this new picture in every way, and it certainly doesn't do a thing to the pacifist and spy element but show them up convincingly. Little Taliaferro makes good, baby Ivy Ward is most promising, and Tooker does the villain in great shape. Splendid picture for any community.

On the same program we saw another Metro, "The Eternal Mother," with Ethel Barrymore in a strong part, one of the best yet seen for her. They gave Jack Johnston some work to do as the cad of a husband, who was allowed by the author to live. Here we get a child well worth while in Maxine Elliott Hicks, who has a remarkable face for the camera. Of course Frank Mills is liked by all fans, and it was good to see the regeneration of his mind on the child labor question. The factory scenes were unusually good, showing up a great evil too frequently existing. There were ornate scenes as well as degrading ones, made so by the evil of child labor and discontent.

Not having seen "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" I went to the Exeter Theater Sunday evening, and how we did laugh! Mrs. Ayer had already shown "Two Bit Seats" and "Fools for Luck" so we were prepared for some fun in this the first picture done by Taylor Holmes. I saw two pretty strong pictures there in "Indiscreet Corinne," with dainty Olive Thomas doing some daring things all for fun at the outset and cleverly executed. Then we had a chance to see her dance barefooted, too. My neighbor nudged me and asked who she was. I said Mrs. Jack Pickford in real life, but she would not believe me, so there you are. Pauline Frederick has a splendid offering in "The Hungry Heart."

Tom Forman did a good thing in writing "The Trouble Buster" just before going to the front with the colors. Long ago I called attention to the lad Paul Willis, and now we get him featured along with Vivian Martin in a splendid picture for old and young, and natural at every turn. Here we get the near gutter life, the villain, the homely street rows between newsboys, a wonderful dog, some pathetic touches around the two kids, with no place to go except to their home in a piano box; the lure of the crook, the rescue and incidental blow, causing blindness of the lad defender, and all the rest with its touch of upper class and developed genius sculpture leading to fortune.

Within a week I have seen the three first releases of Select—"The Moth," "Magda" and "Scandal," and believe me they are some pictures and great pace setters! The Exeter Theater was filled by delighted patrons, many coming in from Brookline, which has no picture house, though called the richest town of its size in America. Then, too, more and more the exclusive set in the Back Bay are waking up to the value of this form of amusement at so little expense. Long lines of autos are seen nightly. No longer is there shown the "silencer slide," urging quiet, as it is unnecessary, the pictures compelling attention and concentration. It was a treat to see the Talmadge screen stars in such settings, and we are glad to see Clara Kimball Young back. Having seen all the big stage players do Magda I wondered how it would go over on the screen. Strikes me this is her best work, and greatly distinguishes her. There was no "out" discernible; better still, the ending was more satisfactory than the stage version. The close-ups were great, and how the women raved over the gowns!

"The Moth" had plot to burn, and was another lesson on playing with fire. They gave Norma Talmadge great support, notably Donald Hall. I was glad to see the location, showing the star's lovely place on Long Island, perfect in all its appointments. A most satisfying picture all through.

"Scandal" went strong. Why not? It certainly had action enough and fine scenery, picturing the Commodore Benedict estate on the water's edge at Greenwich, Conn., another palatial place, to say nothing of the Benedict yacht, in commission for the players. There were one or two breaks on the titles, like "Allegance" and "well spend" instead of "spent."

Why such pictures as "When a Man Sees Red"? It certainly is red and very "yaller," points no moral and tells a wicked story of beast vs. innocence; the sex in this being highly offensive, and I am no prude. It is regrettable that William Farnum is cast in such a wicked picture. Two prize fighting advocates near me went wild over the pugilistic episodes—too many and too prolonged, even if the hero did "get" the villain. There was excellent scenery and photography, but the picture is far from wholesome and not to be commended.

I made some calls yesterday at the exchanges and found Charles W. Perry in the Pathe office, and in an optimistic frame of mind. J. D. Levine, of the General Film, told of the success in booking the O. Henry pictures, and this was gratifying to one who likes them so well. Met with much courtesy at the Metro building, as usual; also at the Goldwyn's new place, in charge of Manager Bradley, now here after his fine work for this firm in Washington. Saw one or two good pictures at run-offs, and congratulated Manager Clark of the Kleine office on the advent of an heir that day; told Sam Bernstein what we thought of "The Little Princess"; looked in on Manager Roth of the Mutual, and shook hands with Harry Asher. Some day, that! Molly Pearson, who makes her debut with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in the screen version of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," is a favorite around here, and many will turn out to see her in the forthcoming picture. She spoke the first and last lines in the stage version and is sure to make good before the camera.

Score another for "Our Mary" in her latest, "The Little Princess," perfectly presented under the direction of Marshall Neilan, and apparently flawless. I do not recall all the Pickford pictures, only those seen the past five years; but it strikes us over here that this ranks with her "The Poor Little Rich Girl" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." These are likely to linger longer in memory, unless it be "Tess of the Storm Country." Watch Zazu Pitts, for she is a coming star. This picture must be seen to be appreciated, for words are insufficient to do it justice in its various details. On the same program we were taken to the "Land of Mme. Butterfly" by Burton Holmes, who has done his best work right here.

"The Womanly Art of Self-Defense" (Paramount-Bray).

A N attractive subject appearing in the 97th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph strongly suggests the usefulness to women of a knowledge of boxing. Miss Vera Roehm, one of our finest feminine exponents of boxing, describes before the camera the technique of each individual blow. Here we learn what is meant by the kidney blow, the solar plexus blow, and the various other important movements necessary to a proper knowledge of the art of self-defense. Miss Roehm also gives a forceful illustration of how with such a knowledge a woman may maintain her right to sit on a park bench unmolested.

"Along the Varder" (Pathe).

One of the most beautiful rivers running through European Turkey is the Varder. It is a winding stream running through a large territory of marshy country, and at various points is crossed by the quaintest of bridges. The Pathe Exchange presents some interesting and beautiful views of this river in a current release, which will be a welcome adjunct to a refined program.

"Nikko in Snow Time" (Paramount-Holmes).

In this offering many interesting views of the numerous temples in Nikko are shown, to which the religious Japanese make pilgrimages. One scene shows the celebrated monkeys of Nikko carved above a temple door, illustrating the precepts "Hear No Evil, See No Evil, Speak No Evil." Mr. Holmes was particularly fortunate on this visit to Nikko, as it was late in the season and the pilgrims were already arriving, when, on April 10, there was a very heavy snow storm, and the next morning, all the temples, trees and other objects were thickly covered with snow, presenting a beautiful appearance. The condition of the weather, however, did not deter the pilgrims, who continued to go from temple to temple; many of them walking through the snow barefooted.

"The Chain Gang" (Educational-Bruce).

In addition to showing how pack trains are conveyed in safety over the steep heights of the mountains of Washington, Robert Bruce has given us in a one-reel picture entitled "The Chain Gang," a beautiful scenic treasure. Again the Great Dane, friend and property of Mr. Bruce, adds materially to the artistic atmosphere of a picture, trotting along behind the horses with easy canine nonchalance, the only privileged member of the four-legged group who is at liberty to wag his tail unhampered. By way of explanation the reader must know that the pack horse in the more dangerous passes of the mountains is forced to travel with his tail roped to the horse behind him. This mode of travel is all right, according to the horse's description of it in a sub-title, "provided your tail doesn't weaken." The picture, which is unusually entertaining as well as instructive, provides wonderful views of Mount Ranier and other mountains in that region, and lakes and rivers presenting delightful reflective studies.

"The Sport of Sports" (Universal).

An interesting exhibition of fancy skating will be found in the fifty-first issue of the Screen Magazine. Among those who exploit the difficulties of this health-giving sport are Bror Meyer, a well-known world champion, Emmy Bergfeldt of St. Moritz, Switzerland, and Frieda Whittaker.

"Training Police Horses" (Universal).

Much space in film has been given to the training of the policemen themselves, while little light has been shed on the training of the police horse. In the fifty-first release of the Screen Magazine we are given a splendid illustration of how this is done. Here we learn that a veterinary looks over each horse intended for the service, and not until he is pronounced perfectly sound is he admitted. Having been pronounced fit for duty he is put through a remarkable course of training. With a dummy jockey he is made to describe circles and various other forms of motion which teach him ease in obeying the rein. This illustration, well detailed, will be found very interesting.

"The Pig Club" (Universal).

A timely subject found in the fifty-first release of the Screen Magazine is an inspiration to the pig raiser. We learn through the subtitles that all over the country are being established among the young men and boys pig clubs intended to help out the meat situation during the war. These young agriculturists, according to the picture, take great pride in the rearing of a fine grade of pig flesh, groups of which are shown in the picture, which is attractively subtitled with the scenes arranged somewhat in story form.

"Scientific Sweetmeats" (Paramount-Bray).

In the ninety-seventh release of the Pictograph will be found a nicely illustrated lesson on the making of sweetmeats by machinery. We learn that in some of the largest candy factories in the country delightfully sanitary methods are employed. In the plant in which the pictures were taken four million a day of a certain kind of confection of the "Life Saver" variety are turned out. For the making of this candy, sugar is purchased in car load lots, and emptied from the original barrel into the pulverizers, where it is reduced to a fine powder by great grinders, after which it is flavored, mixed, molded, counted and wrapped by automatic machinery.

"Me and My Dog"

Masterpiece of Photography and Artistic and Appealing Construction—Moving Picture Essay
by Robert C. Bruce.

ONE of the most artistic of the Robert C. Bruce series is entitled "Me and My Dog," and is not only a beautiful tribute to man's most faithful friend, but glimpses beautiful bits of scenery in Montana, the Cascades of Washington, in the Rockies and Southern Alaska. The scenic part of the picture, however, has been treated merely as an artistic setting for the pictured wanderings of the man and his dog; and so impressive is this picture with its splendid sub-titles that it may find a place side by side with Maeterlinck's essay from "The Double Garden," entitled "My Friend the Dog." Both are beautiful appreciations of the canine kind, and each in its way is a masterpiece. The picture abounds in silhouettes suggestive of the friendship between the man and his dog. It abounds also with sub-titles of strong appeal and splendid logic. For instance, "Here is the Motto of My Life Boat's Log, God Grant That I May Be Worthy of My Dog;" and later reminds the spectator who has become impressed with the silence, the solitude, and with the mutual interest between canine and man, that he who has never known the friendship of a dog has never felt the full measure of friendship. "Me and My Dog" might be classed as a moving picture essay delivered in nature's simplest and most beautiful language. It is a masterpiece of construction and photography.

Funny Bobby Bumps

Bobby and His Dog Give Entertaining Exhibition of An Unsuccessful Christmas Shopping Tour.

ONE of the best loved cartoon characters is funny little Bobby Bumps, who by way of explanation is, along with his dog Fido, a pen creation of Earl Hurd of the Bray studios. Bobby has also the further distinction of being periodically tacked on to the educational reel known as the Paramount-Bray Pictograph; and for his Christmas offering has decided to go shopping and get his arch friend and playmate into trouble.

Bobby's Christmas adventure, entitled "Bobby Bumps—Early Shopper," will be found in the ninety-seventh release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. The opening scene shows an alarm clock in front of Fido's kennel doing duty at an early morning hour of a day shortly before Christmas, on which Bobby and Fido have decided to steal a march on the rest of the family and make a visit to toyland. As Fido throws the clock madly over the horizon and out of sight, the sun makes his appearance, blinking sleepily, reminding the faithful little dog that he had better waken the other son. A rope tied to Bobby's big toe and hung from the window is forthwith pulled vociferously by Fido and that young man, making a wondrously hasty toilet, starts off with Fido at his heels, to see the toys. A family servant, bent on the same mission, finally comes face to face with Fido who quickly steps in line on the toy shelf and shortly finds himself a wrapped up parcel on its way to Bobby's home. After bathing the street with tears Bobby hurries home to release Fido, and is forced to shed more tears at circumstances which follow. A fine Christmas offering.

The Famous Players Company of New England, 814 Shawmut street, Boston, Mass., are following a policy of advertising educational and other short subjects which are handled by them in a dignified and useful manner. This is done by means of a small booklet entitled "The Blue Book of Short Subjects," which should be of unlimited aid to those looking for short educational subjects, or groups of such subjects as contained in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. In this booklet will also be found listed individually the Bray animated cartoons, which, by the way, are second to none. Here also will be found the Burton Holmes travel pictures fully listed.

In addition to the pictures for the Christmas season suggested in last week's Educator we find that Raymond L. Ditmars is preparing a special animal picture to be released through the Educational Films Corporation of America. This promises to be a delight to the children, a picture in which various animals dressed in Christmas garb, including rabbits and monkeys, will do all sorts of amusing stunts. Then there is the O. Henry story to be released by the General Film Company, entitled "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," a two-part offering. And what could be more enticing by way of comedy entertainment than the Paramount "Tom Sawyer," a five-part adaptation of the famous Mark Twain story.

Commenting on the large part that the moving picture is to play in maintaining the morale of nations during the war at the annual meeting of the National Board of Review, held on Monday afternoon, November 26, Orrin G. Cocks made the following interesting statement: "The humble movie is going to have a mighty large part in maintaining the morale of our soldiers and civilians in this war. In the first place, it is going to help in keeping up the morale of the civilian population. Usually war is followed by a destruction of morale at home. Here in New York the increase in juvenile crime already has been 33 per cent. In London the motion picture has been found a useful means of meeting the situation caused by the absence from home of the heads of the household, and many of the women folk who are engaged in gainful activities for the support of their families. The motion picture has also proved to be of major service in sustaining and stimulating the morale at the front and in the cantonment. The National Board is sharing with the industry in this work. Many of its members have taken their place in activities connected with the successful prosecution of the war. Among them are Cranston Brenton, in Y. M. C. A. war work; J. K. Paulding, who is the executive head of a base hospital unit in France; Jonathan A. Rawson; Lee F. Hammer, of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities; and Clarence A. Perry, who is now a Captain attached to the Quartermaster's Department at Camp Upton. These are all members of the National Board and leaders in social welfare work."

Four subjects of interest are treated in the Pathe Argus Pictorial No. 3, which opens with views taken of coral limestone rocks, located on a tropical island. The rocks are of a tough, porous composition and are sawed into building blocks and shingles for trade purposes. An interesting study of crystallization follows, showing the action of sulphate of zinc, nitrate of silver and other fluids upon a plate under the microscope. Prof. E. J. Thatcher of Columbia University gives a short demonstration of "tied dyeing," a process for fancy designing. The last subject pictures Helena Dayton Smith's clay figures around the banquet board.

WHARTONS' "PROP" EXPERT INVENTS PAPER BULLET.

While preparing the properties for some of the exciting scenes of gunplay which will be featured in the early episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," written by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service, Leroy Baker, head of the Whartons' mechanical department, worked out a new method of manufacturing paper bullets which may revolutionize the science of sham warfare, making it possible to secure realistic effects hitherto unattainable.

The facts as above stated are vouched for by experts in the employ of the Remington Arms Company, who have carried out Baker's suggestions with unusual results. It is said that immediate steps will be taken to manufacture the new bullets on a large scale, so that they will be available for military spectacles and plays in which firearms are featured.

Baker gained his effect by doing something he was told could not be done. He made a rifle shell of mixed black and smokeless powder, the two kinds of explosive being separated in bullet and shell containers, of hard paper. The result is a peculiar kind of combustion, which causes the paper bullet to disappear entirely within a space of fifteen feet, while the black powder gives a highly effective smoke effect.

The new ammunition is suitable for both rifle and machine gun use, this being the first time that paper bullets have been found practicable for use in the latter manner.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD ENTERTAINS ON THANKSGIVING DAY.

Harold Lockwood, Metro star, was host at a Thanksgiving dinner given to the members of his company at the Hotel Randall, North Conway, N. H., near which place the exterior scenes of Mr. Lockwood's forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Avenging Trail," are being staged under the direction of Francis Ford.

In the party were Mr. Lockwood, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Ford, Miss Sally Crute, Miss Cecil McLean, Miss Jo Feeny, William Clifford, Walter P. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Poppe, Tom Blake, Johnnie Waters, Tony Audio, Harry Cabot, Art Ortego, Warren Cook, Louis Wolheim, Robert Carson, Frank Bates, Harry Russell, Austin Beattie and Edward Draham.

Mr. Lockwood was a most excellent host and his co-workers readily forgot that they were spending the holiday away from their respective homes.

FRANK CRANE ENGAGED TO DIRECT PETROVA.

Announcement was made this week by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, that Frank Crane will direct the third starring vehicle of Madame Olga Petrova. Mr. Crane will start work on "The Life Mask," which is the title of the vehicle chosen for the third picture, immediately. His services were secured following his completion of the Goldwyn production of "Thais," starring the operatic prima donna, Mary Garden.

"JOHNNIE" WATERS JOINS COLORS.

Yorke-Metro this week contributed another of its forces to the service of Uncle Sam when "Johnnie" Waters, assistant director in Harold Lockwood's company, left the organization at its location in New Hampshire, where the exterior scenes of Mr. Lockwood's forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Avenging Trail," are being made under the direction of Francis Ford, to return to New York, where he was ordered to report for military service on December 7.

KELLARD IN THE "LEGIT."

Ralph Kellard, former Pathe star of "The Shielding Shadow," "Pearl of the Army," "The Precious Packet," etc., is now leading man in "Eyes of Youth," where he has been playing since August 22, on which day the play opened at the Maxine Elliott Theater, New York City. Mr. Kellard expects to return to the screen at the close of the dramatic season.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Handling the Tax.

EVERYONE lately has been wrestling with the new tax on tickets. This tax was so generally commented upon in the newspapers that the public was ready for it, but there is always a difference between a tax in the newspapers and a tax in the box office. Cleveland exhibitors handled the situation very nicely. The exhibitors got together and named a committee, and this committee framed the campaign for the city. It recommended that exhibitors use this text as the basis for slide and lobby material:

War Tax.

The schedule of war taxes which the Government has fixed on the sale of theater tickets, according to section 700 of the law passed October 3, 1917, to be paid by persons buying such tickets, is as follows:

Uncle Sam gets it—we don't.
Ticket	Tax	Total
10 cents	1 cent	11 cents
15 cents	2 cents	17 cents
25 cents	3 cents	28 cents
Children's tickets, regardless of price, 1 cent.

Uncle Sam gets it—we don't.

That last is an excellent line to play up. Drive it home that this is a tax and not an increased cost of admission. This cannot be stated too plainly, nor too often. It was also recommended by the committee that space be taken in the Cleveland dailies to the extent of a quarter page, giving the text of paragraph 700, followed by

No advance in the usual prices will be made to cover this and other war taxes. You pay this tax and nothing more.

The advertisement goes on to show that already the theater has been burdened with three taxes; the war tax graded according to capacity, the footage tax on raw stock and on finished footage. It closes with a scale of prices as above.

But Add No Bargains.

About the only thing left to be said is that while the tax is one cent for each ten cents or fractional part, it applies to each ticket and not to the total of purchase. This should be driven home, for the man who purchases two twenty-five cent seats and is assessed six cents for taxes is apt to argue.

It should also be hammered home that the language of the law requires that the tax be paid by the purchaser. In some isolated instances the prices seem to have been shoved up five cents all the way through the schedule in an effort to make the new tax cover the advance in admission fees, but we think that this will be found to be an error.

In England, and we believe in Canada, exhibitors sell ticket books which cover the cost of the tax. The ticket books are sold at their face value and the house deposits ten per cent. on the face in lieu of the usual added tickets. How that will work in the case of the Federal law is something for tax collectors to decide, but if it is declared to be feasible, then considerable confusion can be saved by printing up books to be sold at face value with the tax as a consideration for the lot sale. It would help the house and patron alike.

It will probably be necessary to keep up an advertising campaign for a little while to habituate the patrons to the idea. Put up a sign directly over the box office window. Have it large enough to be easily read and letter it:

Over the top.

In addition to our prices of admission we are required to collect of the purchasers for the Government a sum equal to ten per cent of the face value of the tickets, in accordance with the Tax Bill of October 3. The schedule of taxes is:

One ten cent ticket.....	One cent
Fifteen and twenty cent tickets.....	Two cents
Twenty-five cent tickets.....	Three cents

Please have your pennies ready.

We are not taxing you—we are merely collecting. It all goes to wage the war.

Doing Your Bit.

Here is the way the Fenray, Martins Ferry, Ohio, advertises the war tax. Evidently the house raised its prices and deducts the tax from the advance. Where this has not been done—and we do not think it is within the letter of the law—the lower line can be altered to "The ten per cent. tax goes direct to the Government":

HELP YOUR COUNTRY WIN THE WAR
by enjoying yourself!

Even if you can't fight or can't buy Liberty Bonds, you can still do your share by attending the "movies."
WE PAY WAR TAX ON ADMISSIONS!

And speaking of Fenray advertising, we note that someone with a sense of humor has persuaded a local savings bank to drop its appeal to patrons to save and "help win the war for ourselves and our allies." As the bank was the German Savings Bank, the text was a bit confusing. And that same Fenray has a new twist on the mailing list. It runs the appeal to hand in the names of your friends if they are not on the list. The idea is worth noting.

Give the Text.

A number of theaters have given the text of paragraph 700. The Fenray, Martins Ferry, Ohio, goes further. It gives a talk on the law on the front cover and inside gives the text of paragraph 700 and 600 as well; the latter relating to the tax on raw and finished stock. If you are still advertising here are some catchlines that may be useful:

It all goes to Uncle Sam.
No advance in prices—the tax is not ours.
Tax collectors for Uncle Sam.
You pay one tax—we pay three.
It costs more, but we charge no more.
Don't be a business slacker—pay the tax.
Is there any tax you'll pay more willingly?
We MUST win. Do your bit, too.
We don't charge a penny more.
We're not even paid a commission.

These catchlines should help to suggest the general trend of your stories. Make them brief and to the point. How about this:

The Government requires each amusement seeker to pay a tax of ten per cent. of the value of his ticket. It has made us its unpaid collectors. The entire sum must be turned over to the government. We might raise the prices and pay the fee ourselves, but that would cost you more. We collect only the tax with no collection charges. One cent for every ten cents or fraction.

Doubtless a few persons will stay away from the theater for a time because they resent the tax. If they do, don't figure that your business is permanently ruined. Give them time and they will come back, for it is in times of stress such as this that people most eagerly seek amusement and the photoplay offers the cheapest and most interesting form of entertainment. Doubtless there will be a drop in business for a few weeks until the patrons grow used to three cent postage and other taxes, but once they get over the tax the theater tax will be the smallest of their troubles.

Where It Can Be Seen.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, put its tax announcement where it could be seen. It moved the days around a little and put the new schedule right where the eye could not overlook it. The text is clear, not much Argues It Out.

The Crystal, Flandreau, S. D., takes a full page to meet the new war tax proposition. Boiled down, it amounts to this: That they will pay the tax five days a week, but advance the price on Saturdays, and asks, "If we stand this loss five days a week, don't you think it would be doing the fair thing to allow us an extra nickel on Saturdays? The prices have been reduced from 10 and 15 cents to 9 and 13 cents for regular shows, which will give the ten and fifteen-cent prices as before, or, in other words, they pay the tax except on Saturday nights, when they raise the price five cents and make a couple of pennies on the tickets." The advertisement is ingeniously laid. The centre is given to an advertisement for "Womanhood." At the bottom is a comparative table of expenses for now and in 1913, showing the advances and extra taxation. Down either side run wide columns of headed items, each completely cut off with rule, and each dealing with one phase of the situation. The top is an eight line:

TO HELP LICK THE KAISER

This is the amount the Government expects to obtain through the theaters of the United States between November 1, 1917, and November 1, 1918. At the present rate of attendance our share of this amount will be about $1,500.

We think that most patrons will stand the tax without a raise, but where it is evident that they will not, such a handling of the situation is well worked, and the Crystal takes occasion to have a heart to heart talk with its patrons about conditions in general. It admits that some big town houses sell the same subjects for less money, but points out that other big town houses charge more. It recalls the former ten-cent-three-reel days, and points out that for half as much again more than twice as much is given. Full pages cost money even in small town papers, but this page clears the air of many more things than the tax. It just sits down with the patron and talks the entire situation over, and that is just about the best thing to do in any situation. Take the people into your confidence. You can't fool them in the long run. Don't try to.

Mr. Bleich's Way.

George A. Bleich, of the Empress and Grand, Owensboro, Ky., seems to be doing things differently from the rest. Instead of raising his prices, he has lowered them. He sells coupons good for nine ten-cent admissions, plus tax, for 99 cents. The coupon ticket is a strip about two by eight inches, with nine coupons. Each coupon states that "The value of this Coupon is ten cents." There is nothing on the coupon to show that the tax has been paid. He takes two sixes in the daily papers for this announcement:

New Prices

at the EMPRESS

No Burden

The War Tax Won't Hurt.

Let us see if it will. Let us presume that you attend fairly regularly. The cost heretofore could be figured this way:

Two shows weekly at the ordinary price of 10c, totals...20c

One show weekly at the special price of 15c, totals....15c

Total cost of three shows.....35c

Effective November 1st, with the imposition of the new Federal War Tax, we will sell a new form of coupon book, same containing nine admissions, costing 99c, which includes the Government tax.

The cost of each coupon is 11c, and as one of same will be received for any attraction not priced in excess of 15c, it will be readily seen that the same three shows mentioned above can now be seen for 33c.

Certainly those who do not advantage themselves of the coupon plan will have to pay more, as 15c is charged for single admissions, and from this Uncle Sam will receive 2c.

There is no "profiteering" in the prices I am compelled to institute at my theatres by reason of the war tax. Lowering the charge to 4c for children, and averaging the several admission figures charged gives me very little, if any, excess, over old prices. Then it must be considered that I have abandoned an extra charge for the big pictures formerly shown at 15c, and must stand the war tax on the films themselves, imposed by the Government on the film people who have in turn placed it on the theatres.

—BUY COUPON BOOKS AND SAVE MONEY—

—GEORGE A. BLEICH.

We are inclined to think that if fifteen cents is the box office charge for seats for an attraction the tax will be two cents on those seats whether the patron purchases a fifteen-cent ticket or uses a coupon. Certainly it would seem that "twin" tickets, good for two admissions for 22 cents with a wax tax of three cents should be four cents, since the law does not contemplate duplex tickets. But the tax-paid coupon sold with the tax paid is a valuable idea and one that will make for business. We trust that Mr. Bleich will report on the success of the scheme when he has had time to try it out.

Tax Talk.

This copy is taken from the program of the Fenray theater, Martin's Ferry, Ohio. With figures adapted to your own house, it can be used for program material or you might coax the local editor to make a news note of the computation. But it would, perhaps, be better to add to the last line make it read, "by swelling our war tax without feeling it."

IF

one thousand people attend the Fenray each night the United States Government will receive over Six Thousand Five Hundred Dollars in taxes in one year from this theater alone.

DO YOUR BIT

by swelling our "war tax"!

Try for other pieces of copy along these lines. Make the patron feel that the tax is not an imposition, but a public duty.

Real Goods.

The Empire theater, Tientsin, and the Pavilion, Pekin, under the same management, have begun the issue of a weekly house organ, the paper being gotten out in Tientsin with a special edition for the Pekin distribution. Marshall Sanderson is the editor. The sheet is a sixteen page issue, 9½ by 12 inches. There is a week's program—advertisement on the third page, but the rest of the sheet is along the lines of the usual English weekly, with special stories and two or three pages of chatty editorial. This news-editorial style is peculiarly useful for advancing the interests of the house and it has always been a matter of surprise to us that so few American sheets have followed this English form. The value of this editorial comment would alone justify the issue of the entire sheet, but the specials are well selected and mainly hold to picture topics. The initial mailing list was one thousand copies in Tientsin and five hundred in Pekin, but the sheet should grow in circulation. It has good advertising patronage from local firms and should be self supporting, or very nearly so. North China houses have to hustle to keep going, but we cannot imagine a better medium of publicity than this, for it gives really readable matter, well edited and well made up. The house organ, as we have always said, is about the best possible local advertising. If it is well done there is nothing better for making and holding friends. The Revue, as it is called, even has a tint block heading, the tint changing with each issue apparently.

Guessing Contest.

This from a recent program of the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa.:

EYES—NOSE—LIPS.

Do you think you could recognize people by their eyes, nose or lips? You will have an opportunity to test yourself. Watch for further details in this program and the daily papers.

Probably this is some variation of the half picture, either cuts divided to show only the lower half of the face or with the top portion burnished down. In either case the stunt makes a good foundation for a guessing contest and really is more baffling than one would suppose. If you do not want to saw the cuts, take any rounded surface (the bolster of a jack knife will do at a pinch) and work the top stipples together so that they print black or nearly so. The Third Street has been a bit quiet—for them—through the summer and we are glad to see them commencing again.

Jay's Program.

For a wonder Jay Emanuel got out a program on stock that will permit it to reproduce. Jay's program form is worth looking at, and we don't blame him for using colored stock if he wants to, but he does persist in picking out the yellows and buffs that will not photograph as they should. The thing we particularly like about this program is the manner in which the days are dated. Most printers are apt to get the date too prominent, letting it share the prominence with the title line. Jay uses a clear letter, but a small one, and gets just as good a result from an advertising point of view for the date and ten times as much prominence for the title. Where a greater prominence is desired, the use of one point rule for underline will work as well as a larger face and save not only space but the title.

Plays Up the Music.

The Orpheum, Terre Haute, Indiana, makes a special drive on its music. It not only features the program, but it prints a list of the new music to be played and makes an effort to get the new stuff as it comes out. This may seem to some to be only a source of added expense, but half the world thinks it can sing and nine-tenths of the others think they can, and so the Orpheum has a double attraction in pictures and music. People may come just to hear the music and look upon the pictures as incidental until they become confirmed picture fans through association. It may not pay all houses to go to the expense of getting new music constantly, but most assuredly it will do no harm. The program is a slightly affair with a special panel cover permitting the insertion of any portrait desired and there is plenty of good chat in its pages, but we think it would pay them to take a page or a half page for the formal program. Now the first half attraction is advertised in display on the first inside cover page and the two titles for the second half of the week are on pages 5 and 11—too far apart to do each other much good. It would be better to give the formal program on page two or three (preferably three) and then use the display spaces as additional punch. It would pay to rewrite some of the paragraphs, for they use clips from the press sheets, and most press sheets are not worth clipping from.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be critized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Adaptations.

WHY do they use so many adaptations," asks a correspondent. That's an easy one. The answer is not "Because they do not know any better." That is only part of the answer. The real reply is that they are cheap. But it might be objected that an adaptation may cost several times the price of an original story. Few originals command more than $1,000 if a five-reel feature. A producer will pay five times that for the right to put on a book or play, well advertised and known to have been a success. He regards the other $4,000 as advertising. In reality he gets a better story and pays for it. It may be that the story will react. You have seen the great Jane Jenkins in "Hounded by Hamlet." Your interest in the play is as much due to Miss Jenkins' interpretation of the role as in the story. You go to see the film version. You are disappointed. It is not a bit like the play. The equally great Hortense Holligan has an idea of the role wholly different from Miss Jones. You know the play was good. The photoplay version must be poor. You do not realize that the story is as good as ever, but that it does not now conform to your ideal of the character. In the case of a book this is even more true. You form mental images of the story characters. It is seldom that the visualized story offers people who are your people. The visualization must be all wrong. Again the company loses an adherent. The real reason companies prefer to buy play and novel rights is that they get better stories than they can from the free lances, AND the reason the stories are better is that the author has been paid a decent price for his work by the producer of his play or the publisher of his book. Just as good, if not better, stories could be had from authors if it were really true that companies pay decent prices for original material. But they don't. They advertise that they will, but this too often is merely press work. The company announces, through its press agent, that no price is too great, and when a trusting author comes in to find out about it, they drop him out of the window if he asks more than $200 a reel. There is no use in buying advertising if it works with reverse English, but manufacturers have not yet found this out. Some day someone will. He will offer and pay decent prices, and his stories will be so good and so well fitted to the screen that he will make a fortune before the other fellows even begin to puzzle it out.

There Are Others.

Just because you happen to think of an idea, don't suppose that no one else in all the world can think of the same idea. Only the other day a correspondent had doubts as to the honesty of a company because she sent them a story title "The Spider and the Fly" and they returned it and later made a story with that title and even used her device of a spider web. We were turning down that same idea, web and all, in 1910 and it was not new then. The man who used that idea first is probably back for his fifth or sixth time on earth and may be springing it again, along with the rest of them. There are few ideas so unusual that they cannot be duplicated. Lately someone dug up a prophecy of air warfare that dated back to 6000 B. C., and there was a picture of a safety bicycle in the church at Stoke Pogis, in England, that antedates even the generally accepted first model of the velocipede.

The Proper Climax.

Nothing is more vexatious than a story in which a deal of labor brings forth a mouse of a climax. Such stories are machine-made at best, and generally they are hack work, but they are turned out by the inexperienced as well. You cannot work up to a gigantic climax and then drop. You cannot introduce a lot of people and events that have no ultimate bearing upon your story. If you want your hero to go down the street and meet a lady, do not have him meet a total stranger. Let him encounter someone essential to the rest of the story, or presently we will all be wondering what became of the lady Henry met on the street. We have carefully noted her for future reference and she has no future, wherefore we are disappointed in her and in the story. A lot of the screen stories we see are irritating because the director ran over his footage and in cutting down to length had to cut out a lot of the story, but even if you see them that way, do not write them in the same fashion. Get your start before your climax if plotting comes easier that way, but before you start on the final draft be certain what your climax is to be and do not permit the action to swerve from that climax nor to exceed the climax in interest. Only the perfectly proportioned story can really interest, and a story with a weak climax is like a Venus with curvature of the spine.

Rightly Placed.

Have faith in yourself, do not trust to the judgment of your friends.

Keep It Bright.

Work is the key to the locked door of Success—but the lock will not yield to a rusty key.

Patience.

It hurts often to be patient and persevering—but it pays.

Deliver the Goods.

The script room is not a branch office of organized charity.

Conserve Your Energy.

Ever notice someone learning to swim? They fight desperately to get along and generally they hold their hands so high out of water that they suggest the aquatic efforts of the turtle. As a result the novice tires quickly and has to stop for a rest. The practiced swimmer takes a long, easy stroke that gets him through the water and not over it. Most students of writing suggests the swimming pupil. They work so desperately that they do not last. They start off strong, but they finish weak and tired before they reach their goal. Sometimes they work so hard on the start of a story they get sick of the tale before they are done, but generally they set too hard a pace; a pace they are unable to maintain. The biggest bang should come at the finish, just as the musical composition should end with a crash of instruments. If the composer uses the bass drum to open with he has to stop and go back to a more quiet passage and from there again work to the tympani. He cannot start with the drums and wind up with a single flute. That might work once, as a novelty, but it will not serve as a permanent model. Save your strength for the effort at the finish, and do not burn up in a few fast scenes.

All your friends think your story is great. That's all right. When you have fifty million friends, their opinion will amount to something and be worth catering to. In the meantime the man who makes films is more desirous of pleasing a majority of the fifty million than your little handful of acquaintances. Don't blame him if he does not agree with your own opinion.

Olives and Plots.

Once we knew a man who detested olives. He tried to eat one once and it was years before he could be coaxed to make a second attempt. Then he liked them. All those years no one suspected that he had found the one spoiled olive in a dish of good ones, and he could not know, from comparison, how poor that olive is. Why write "a" (one) play and set up as a critic of all productions?

Two Mottoes.

Write "Do it now," on your plot book, but "Hasten slowly" on the lid of your stamp box. Both mottoes will save you money.

Have Them Punched.

Someone wrote the other day that he would start a loose-leaf book were it not for the almost prohibitive cost of the sheets. That's easy. If you live in a town you can find some printer with a punching machine who will punch paper for you at ten or fifteen cents a thousand holes. Get a book that will take the standard typewriter size and take your own paper to the printer with one of the press board strips most books contain, and the stock can be punched in a jiffy.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Importance of Lining Objective Lens Correctly.

Our old college chump, George F. Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, New York, hands us the following, for which he has our thanks:

Just read another article in last issue of department concerning trouble some brother is having with focus (must mean friend Lenney's letter, page 383, October 20 issue, I think. Ed.). From the description, as well as from having observed the same difficulty in several theaters, I believe the trouble can be laid to the objective lens being out of alignment. It is absolutely essential to the best result that the entire optical system, as well as the elements of the projection lens, have one common principal axis, which same must pass through the precise center of the film picture or aperture, and at the same time be at right angles to the film plane. Moreover, for ideal projection results the screen plane should, as a whole, be precisely at right angles to this axis, since otherwise there will be the inevitable keystone and distortion. The usual type of projection lens is the Petzval portrait, or some of its modifications, having a relatively large lens aperture, but a very saucer-shaped field of focus, although it still might be called a flat field as applies to the film picture it covers (one inch by three quarters) when the principal axis of the lens hits the precise center of the film picture, or the aperture, as intended. With this type of lens, owing to the tremendous magnifications of the projected picture, absolute accuracy of adjustment is essential. If your lens be off center laterally, or if it be tilted, you will encounter astigmatism, which may be one reason for the shaded letters and blurriness of same in titles. It is therefore of the utmost importance that operators pay close attention to the precise centering and exact lining of their projection lens, and the best way is to judge by screen results. To do this when the film is running is, however, impractical. It cannot be done with the same degree of accuracy as when a still picture. Rule a perfectly flat piece of mica—an old chorus slide of this material will answer—with lines of ink up, down, and crosswise, so that the surface is divided into about 1-16 inch squares. Cut this the width of a film and clamp it over the aperture under the tension spring, or shoes, the same as you would the film. Next prop up the automatic fire shutter, and, for convenience, remove the revolving shutter. Now strike your arc, and you have your image of squares on the screen. Now, being careful to look at neither the spot or arc, using a pair of opera glasses if you want fine results, move the focusing screw slowly back and forth, throwing the picture in and out of focus. If the lens is out of center with the film picture—off the principal axis—then the side the lens is off on will come into focus first, showing on the opposite side of the screen, of course. Next the center will focus, and by the time the opposite side is sharp the first side is "off" again. Let us presume that the principal axis hits the side of the film picture, and that we have the center of the picture focused sharply. Now that portion of the picture through which the principal axis of the lens passes stands beyond the conjugate focal points and is blurred. The opposite side of the picture being in the extended field (the lens being off center) is not only out of focus to the conjugates at this side, but we are in a field where we encounter astigmatism, which may account for the shadow effect on the letters at the extremes of titles.

As to cleaning lenses a too great use of alcohol is bad on account of the danger of removing the dead black on the interior of the tube. The removal of the lenses at every cleaning is also bad. The outer surfaces of the lens is the main thing. Remove dust with a camel's hair brush, and then breathe on the glass and polish with a soft, clean cloth. This is usually sufficient.

The lining of the optical system is of the utmost importance, as has been repeatedly set forth in the department, and is dwelt upon in the handbook, pages 112 and 113. I believe brother Deutsch's method for lining the projection lens could not well be improved upon. As to the cleaning of lenses, the removal of the elements to clean their inner surface should not be necessary oftener than once in six months. I do not regard the use of a mixture of half wood alcohol and half water as objectionable, if it be used with ordinary intelligence. But you should not slop around as though you were cleaning kitchen utensils at the family sink.

A Good Idea.

Edward Marshall, Vancouver, B. C., writes:

Please let me know whether or not you see merit in attached. It may be that the idea is so old that it has whiskers.

In Figure I we look down on the rewind spindle carrying the reel from which the film is to be rewound, C being the spindle, and A the pulley shown in Figure III. B is top of standard B, Figure III. In Figure II we see switch shown in Figure III. This switch is designed to be installed in a metal box, and attached to rewind table as shown, its blade being held down by the tolerably stiff coil spring K. The operation is made clear in Figure III. The weight is made heavy enough to hold up the switch blade and supply sufficient braking power to the reel to cause film to be tightly rewound. The device in effect does two things, viz.: it supplies a brake for the reel and stops the motor when the tail reel stops, which will occur either when film breaks or when the rewinding is finished. The switch is placed in one side of the rewinder motor circuit.

Good stunt, it seems to me. Brother Marshall says he has had one in use for a month in a twelve-hour-a-day house, and it has never once failed to work. Well, I don't see why it should. The thing is simple, and accomplishes the stop-the-motor-when-the-film-breaks-or-is-all-rewound stunt; also it does it without the necessity for either the objectionable roller running on the film or a delicate magnetic device. In the name of the fraternity, using the musical language of the Spaniard, muchas gracias. Incidentally, my best to the Vancouver men, including friends Gordon and Oswald of the Examining Board.

Crater Temperature Again.

Our old friend, John Griffith, shies his chapau into the ring again with the following:

With reference to the various remarks concerning high amperage, by Brothers Bowen, Phillips, Martin and yourself, guess I will kick in with a few myself. First with reference to Phillips argument, in which he cites evaporation, or volatilization from a pan of water. His contention is good as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough to explain the action of high amperage at the arc, though the action of the two are very similar with regard to temperature of the water at vaporization point and carbon at point of volatilization. Let he then continue his argument, using a kettle of water instead of a pan. If we apply just sufficient heat to counteract the radiation of heat from its cooling surface the water will continue to volatilize at 212 degrees F., but if we add more heat the water will boil furiously.

Now the question is, does the violence of action have any effect in raising temperature? In order to reach an intelligent answer to this query we must first know whether or no the rapidity of escape of the steam into free air operates to produce increased pressure at the surface of the water. If it can be shown that pressure is increased, then it may be taken for granted that water temperature rises with increase of evaporation or volatilization.

In considering this problem we must first understand that for every force there is a counterforce. If we hold a five-pound weight in one hand, we must exert a force of five pounds in order to sustain it. If we force steam into free air it must be forced against the counterforce of atmospheric pressure bearing upon the surface of the water. It may be argued that free atmosphere offers no resistance to the steam, therefore there is no counterforce. But this is not true. There is counterforce in exact proportion to velocity of steam and area of opening. The sky rocket is an apt example of this counterforce. The gases from burning powder rushing into free air raises the rocket with considerable force. Were the rocket cap pierced, and the charge also fired at that end, then the rocket would not rise, because one counterforce would counteract the other. Consider these things carefully and I believe it will be seen that as volatilization is forced increase of pressure is set up at the water surface with consequent rise in temperature, which would hold true of the crater surface of an electric arc. Again, place a drop of water on a glass plate and it will slowly evaporate (volatilize), although it has never reached anywhere near 212 degrees, showing that the rate of volatilization is very largely related to temperature.

Merely as a side thought, a large copper ball placed in a gas flame will not become red hot, whereas one only one-half that diameter will probably become dull red and a very small one will become almost incandescent. Why? The answer is very simple. The large ball radiates heat faster than the flame will supply it, the second cannot radiate so great a proportion except at very much higher temperature—a temperature, in fact, at which radiation becomes forced to an extent which will just counterbalance absorption—while the small one in its effort to radiate from its insufficient surface may actually become incandescent and finally volatilize. Applied to carbon there is no reason to assume that this acceleration of radiation discontinues when the point of volatilization is reached. On the contrary, our little experiments show the opposite to be true.

The same thing applies to the electric arc. Up to a certain point we may increase current flow without increasing the crater temperature. Up to this point amperage increase merely results in increase in crater area, the surrounding atmosphere being quite capable of absorbing the crater heat radiation. But when we reach about thirty amperes we also reach the limit of ability of the air to absorb the heat radiation, which then must be forced into the surrounding air, the same as steam is forced into the free air, with result that a larger residue of the heat remains in the crater, the same as a larger residue of heat is left in the water when the steam has to be forced out. The greater the force or pressure of steam the greater the heat of the water; the greater the force of radiation the greater the heat of the crater. Blondel was, like Phillips, right as far as he went. It is easy to prove that Brother Phillips' argument only applies insofar as there is no forced volatilization of the water. Fortunately it is just as easy to prove that Blondel's theory is only applicable under the point where there is forced volatilization due to inability of the air to absorb the heat fast enough. As an example to show that Blondel's theory is not correct, suppose we have a 30 ampere d. c. arc and that we supply an additional 30 amperes without making any change in the optical system, making it a 60 ampere arc. Will there be a difference in screen illumination? Of course there will. What caused it? Certainly not increased crater area, since we are still utilizing precisely the same crater area we were before. It therefore follows that crater brilliancy has increased per unit of area. To what extent this added brilliancy per unit of area may be carried I do not know, but am sure the added brilliancy per unit of area due to increase of amperage is not imaginary, though beyond certain limits it is not so plainly noticed. A change from 30 to 60 amperes produced a big change to the eye, but from 60 to 90 the increase in brilliancy is not nearly so noticeable, though it does not necessarily follow that the added brilliancy is not there. I venture the opinion that one ninety-ampere arc will produce as brilliant a screen as would one sixty and one thirty-ampere arc, each in a separate machine, but with both lenses illuminating the same screen. I would suggest that such a test be made and that the result be photographed. Such a test would settle the question as to whether or not there is an efficiency limit to amperage outside of optical difficulties.

The test you suggest is excellent, except that the result should be measured by photometer instead of by photograph, and I have arranged for it to be made. It will be interesting. Brother Griffith adds a P. S. in which he remarks: "Better spike your guns, Old Boy." Nothing of the sort! If I am in error I want to know it. Only the fool is always right. It is by just such discussions that we learn, and that one who is too old or too wise to learn belongs, as I have always said, in Heaven. He is altogether too super super for association with us sinful mortals. I have set forth the matter as I have seen it, the same being based purely upon optical laws, the presumption that pressure did not and could not increase in the open air, and that Blondel was right. Griffiths is the first who has advanced an argument which makes me concede the possibility of error in my position. However, that has yet to be proven; also if I am wrong it will be conceded, I think, that my error has served to bring out the truth and thus advance our knowledge. I will add that the comparison of a screen illuminated by a single 90-ampere arc and by the combination of a 60 and 30-ampere arc would not be entirely conclusive, because there would be the losses in the second lens system to be reckoned with, and they could hardly be measured. As the matter now is I still stand by my 36-centimeter iron throwers and declare that beyond 60 or maybe 70-amperes d. c. there is but slight gain in illumination at the screen, and mind you it is what the eye can discern that counts.

Before publishing the foregoing I submitted it to Brother Griffiths, so that he might check up any misinterpretation I might have placed on his writing. Returning same he offered the following:

My postscript was not intended to apply to your opinion as to the general efficiency of high amperage. I am myself still "on the fence" with regard to that question. It merely refers to the statement that any increase in amperage merely results in increased crater area. In that you are in error. With reference to not being conclusive (the proposed test), why should the extra 30 amperes through a separate lens system cause greater absorption than through a system already working at what has been considered its capacity? Personally I think the advantage, if any, would be with the 60-30 combination.

Concerning Fans.

A. R. Newcombe, Dallas, Texas, asks:

Will you kindly advise me as to the horsepower required for exhaust fans of different diameters and the speed of the fans per minute?

For direct connected, motor driven exhaust fans the General Electric Company gives the following data:

Diameter.	Horsepower d. c.	Horsepower d. c.	Speed d. c.	Speed a. c.

Great Scott! He Seeks the Sun for an Argument.

Carl Stromberg, Toronto, Canada, travels to the center of the universe in search of data concerning temperature of crater. He sets forth his ideas thusly:

Have noticed in the department various articles regarding the relative effect of increase in amperage and screen illumination. Some of the articles seem to be written by men possessed of authoritative information. The writers, among them Lester Bowen, New York City, John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., H. R. Edgecombe, Chief Engineer, National Carbon Company, Samuel E. Wishank, Brooklyn, N. Y., and others the honor of mention of whom is denied by space limitation, seem of the opinion that increased crater illumination is dependent upon increased crater area, after a certain point has been reached. This point seems very generally conceded to be between 60 and 70 amperes, say 65.

Now I trust you will understand that I merely use the foundation these various gentlemen and the editor have built up, from which I conceived the thought embodied in this article. In nowise do I mean to ridicule or to pose as an authority. As you know, light is intense in proportion to the activity of or the disturbance set up in the surrounding ether by atomic motion, regardless of what the actuating energy may have been. Keeping this fact in mind, I would like to examine into certain views expressed by these writers, and I believe also by yourself. It seems the belief is held that when the volatilization point of carbon is reached, further progress in light value per unit of area of crater is not possible, hence the light emitted by such a source has reached its maximum when the carbon begins to volatilize, unless the crater area be increased, yet your remarks would seem to indicate some degree of uncertainty. You (and others) say: "A further expenditure of current would not justify itself because of the very small proportional increase in light at the crater. (Screen, not crater.—Ed.) The view is not taken dogmatically by Bowen. He takes a slightly more liberal attitude and favors a comparatively high amperage.

Following the line of thought let me submit the following concerning temperature of carbon as it exists in the sun. It is thought that carbon exists in an incandescent state in the sun at from 8,000 to 10,000 degrees C., whereas the temperature of the electric arc is less than 5,000 degrees C. The value of the foregoing is as showing possibility of higher temperature, with consequent greater amount of light from a given area. You will, I think, agree that a greater amount of light is given off as crater area is increased, for the reason that a greater number of carbon atoms are involved as area is added. Now the point I wish to make is that the number of light rays depend directly upon the number of carbon atoms involved and the brilliancy of these rays depends upon the degree of heat to which the atoms are subjected.

Stromberg continues at some length further, but did not set his ideas forth in such form that I could follow his argument. His general idea is that brilliancy depends upon degree of heat, which is quite true. The contention has been that increase in heat was impossible after the volatilization point is reached. Griffiths is now trying to kick that particular pot of beans over, and I don't know but that he has succeeded. I have printed Stromberg's letter because of his far-fetched argument—the sun. Prove to us that temperature can be increased in an open electric arc and we will—well, just do it, that's all, friend Stromberg.

Insert in Next Issue.

J. Robert Sherman, New York City, sends in a communication with request: "Kindly insert the following in your next issue." How many times must I tell you that "insert in the next issue" is an utterly impossible demand, insofar as concerns this department, because it, the department for the next issue, is either on the press or at least printed when such a request is received. Getting out a publication such as the Moving Picture World has grown to be, is a task of rather colossal magnitude, when one considers that it is, except for some of the smaller advertisements and the department headings, torn all to pieces and made over entirely new each week. I do not believe there is a firm in all this great city which would undertake the task of getting the Moving Picture World out and agree to hold the forms of all its departments open to within five days of date of publication. Once and for all let me again say that this department is actually printed fully a week before the main editorial and film review forms are closed. Also there is always enough matter in type awaiting publication to fill from five to ten weeks of the department, to say nothing of dozens of pages of Mss in process of correction—being gotten ready for placing in type. Matters which demand early publication are put through special and usually can be gotten into the department the issue following the next issue after their receipt, thus: suppose I receive in today's mail, Monday, November 12, a letter which it is, from some reason necessary to rush into print. The "next issue" is already printed, folded and ready for the stitcher. I grab my trusty typewriter, rattle the thing into Mss form, mark it at the top "RUSH" and give it to Keyser, the villain who manhandles my copy. He gets busy and the article will be found in the issue which goes forth the following week—if we are lucky, otherwise then the next week following. And that is the best that can be done. I set this forth fully because of the many demands for "publication in the next issue." Of course the correspondent does not have to wait for his reply to questions, since the carbon copy takes care of that.

Friend Sherman says:

Being interested in the moving picture industry, at least as much as a "movie fiend" could be, it is but natural that scarcely anything connected therewith escapes my attention. In November 3 issue, one, Brother Feiman, permits himself to acquaint the public at large with a few "inside facts" as to the troubles of the operator and disadvantages under which he labors. Generally speaking his remarks are well founded in fact, but he is, nevertheless, quite too pessimistic. In the same issue, in fact on the same page, we find the report of a banquet given by the American Projection Society, at which Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, managing director Rialto theater, New York City, announced that his chief operator, Lester Bowen, was scheduled to receive a salary of $5,000 per year. Naturally, Mr. Rothapfel being a sound business man, it follows that he considers Bowen's services to be worth that sum. In other words, where there is merit there must be appreciation. Of course the appreciation of the public contributes a large share to the success of the movie operator. A recent incident witnessed by the writer evidenced the fact that appreciation by the audience will stimulate the operator and inspire him with added energy and enthusiasm. During the week of October 15 the Eighty-first Street theater, to which I often go, presented its entire house staff, including manager, stage crew, ushers and last but not least, its chief operator, in motion pictures. They were all warmly applauded, but the greatest enthusiasm was shown for the chief operator, whom I afterward learned was I. H. Lobel. The house programme of this theater shows the names of the entire staff. I for one can tell when a production is properly projected and interpreted on the screen, and I appreciate good work in the operating room.

I heartily wish your statement that "where there is merit there must be appreciation" were true. As a matter of fact it was a long, very hard and steeply uphill pull to get friend manager to discern between ordinary and artistic work on the screen; also it was a difficult matter to educate the public to differentiate between high class projection and ordinary, and the education of both manager and public in the matter of interpretation of the photoplay on the screen is as yet hardly begun, this department being the pioneer in that hugely important matter, even as it has been the pioneer in almost every movement for better projection. Even Mr. Rothapfel has yet to give that matter the attention its great importance merits. As a matter of fact, instead of appreciating high class work it is a lamentable fact that a very large percentage of managers do not themselves know more than enough to distinguish between very poor projection and excellence in that direction. They are utterly unable to differentiate as between high class work and ordinary, and insofar as concerns interpretation of the screen drama, why they would look at you in sheer amazement did you but mention it. There are, of course, isolated cases where the operator gets his due, but as a whole under present conditions. I cannot agree that Feiman was more pessimistic than facts warrant.

Three Hundred Pictures Per Second.

Eberhardt Schneider, New York City, builder of experimental apparatus, whose services are much in demand by inventors and experimenters in the motion picture field, is the inventor of an elliptical movement for special motion picture cameras which enables the taking of pictures at the wonderful speed of one hundred and sixty per second—in fact a little in excess of that figure. Those who may wish to examine this movement can get the patent description and drawings by sending ten cents to the Commissioner of Patents, Washington, D. C., asking for specifications and drawings on patent No. 1,165,629, granted December 28, 1915. In connection with this movement is a plan, also Mr. Schneider's invention, for eliminating static by blowing a strong air current crosses the film at the aperture.

Mr. Schneider is now perfecting a plan and constructing the necessary apparatus to take pictures at the rate of five hundred (500) per second. Oh yes, I said "second" alright! This scheme is being worked out to enable the government to study more intelligently shell action in some of its phases. The seemingly impossible feat is to be accomplished by constructing a special triplex camera having three of the aforesaid rapid movements. The movement is a modification of the continuous moving film idea and, as before set forth, enables a speed of about 160 pictures per second. The camera will be so geared that each of its three films will be exposed alternately, there being three negative films in the camera. The impressions thus made will be printed in their proper order on one positive film and we will thus have a standard film upon which are impressed photographs taken at the rate of 500 per second. This film will be projected to the screen in the usual way, and its projection at normal speed will have the effect of slowing down the shell flight, or its impact, as the case may be, about twenty times, since, whereas, 500 pictures are taken per second, only from 16 to 20 will be projected in that period of time. But even so, the action of a shell is at such tremendous speed that one-twentieth will, I think, be plenty swift. The chief interest, however, centers about the taking of pictures at such terrific speed, and Mr. Schneider is to be complimented on having found the answer to such a problem.

Boylan Even Tension Reel.

The editor is just in receipt of a communication which conveys information that the Boylan Even Tension Reel will be placed on the market in the not distant future. We are especially interested in the marketing of this reel, because it will do away with all tension troubles, relieving the operator of much trouble and the film from much very unnecessary and damaging strain and will do all this in an extremely simple and effective way, without excessive cost or added complications to the machine.

Interesting Travel Photography.

Herford T. Cowling, formerly an official photographer for the United States Reclamation Service, started last spring on a tour of the South Sea Islands and the Orient with Burton Holmes, photographing for the Burton Holmes Travel Talks and the Paramount Burton Holmes Travelogues.

Mr. Cowling's work in picturizing various Government activities in the West has received several notices in the past in the World, as well as in many magazines and newspapers. He has favored this department with many novel post cards and some very interesting letters while on his trip. A few quotations will probably be interesting to our readers. The first is from Katoomba, Blue Mountains, New South Wales. He says:

"I have just developed my film taken in Australia, and have projected the negative. I had very fine luck and I am very proud of the film. The Bell & Howell camera is heavy, but it does the work. I would not do without it. I am wondering how the war will effect my work, especially after my return. I have a good contract for two years with Mr. Holmes, and I am working hard to justify keeping the contract. Of course, developing on the road, in the field, or anywhere is not like having a good laboratory, and considering these things I am well pleased with my results so far. Am leaving here for China next week and thence through Manchuria, Korea, Japan, etc

"My panchromatic film gave me very fine results on flowers and color subjects. In fact, I am so well pleased with the result that I would like to use it all of the time.

"This is in July, which is the middle of winter here, and very cold. I just returned from the big caverns in New South Wales. You will remember what a complete outfit I told you I was taking with me, but I have found out that I can do away with about three-fourths of the junk I started with and never miss it."

His next letter is from Kyoto, Japan, and among other things, he says:

"Just a line to let you know I am right side up and working hard. I am going on into Korea and China from here. Photographer Horton of the Prizma Color Process and Dr. Salisbury has just left Japan to return to America. They spent six months in Japan and China, traveling about in an automobile. It must have cost a great deal of money. Before visiting Korea and China I still have considerable work to do in the interior of Japan and some of her more savage island possessions, and on my return expect to do the Philippine Islands and perhaps Hawaii.

"I am anxious to know about the developments in the different color processes, for Japan would be an ideal place for color effects, especially in the spring, when the cherry trees are in bloom. When I finish here I will have made a most comprehensive tour of this country, all of which has been under ideal conditions up to the present time, and I now know where the most effective scenes are to be found for color stuff, and the best way to get it. I have made many friends here who would assist me in arranging any future pictures, and I can think of nothing that I would enjoy more than recording this quaint and beautiful country in its natural colors.

"I have found Mr. Holmes to be a prince to work with. Indeed, I have never worked under pleasanter conditions than with him. I am sorry to say that he is leaving me next week to return to America to fill his lecture dates, and I must proceed alone for a while. The experience gained from Mr. Holmes personally has been invaluable, an experience which I could not have gained in any other way.

"It is only once in a while that I am able to get my copies of the World, but I assure you that every copy that I do get is almost as good as a short visit back to old Manhattan. With best wishes to you and the department, I am

"Yours sincerely,

"(Signed) HERFORD COWLING."

Pasted together from fragments of other letters and post cards Mr. Cowling says that he has exposed over 80,000 feet of negative, 95 per cent. of which has been very fine indeed; all of which is yet to be released through the Paramount Travelogues. He took with him two complete moving-picture outfits, a Bell & Howell and a Universal. The Universal for traveling light when making difficult trips across desert country or into mountains, where transportation facilities were meagre and difficult; with the motion-picture outfits he carried a full complement of different lenses of different focal strength and a number of filters for color work and mountain pictures and a large supply of film stock, both ordinary and panchromatic.

In addition to the motion-picture outfits, he and Mr. Holmes both operated a number of still cameras, taking both black and white and Autochrome photographs, to be used by Mr. Holmes for making slides for his travel lectures.

I have seen several thousand feet of very beautiful western scenics made by Mr. Cowling when he was in charge of the work for the United States Government, and know that what he has been making in the Orient will be a treat for the American public. As they say in the East, "May his shadow never grow less."

The Correspondence Club.

The following members have been added to those already listed as members of the Correspondence Club. Many of the members formerly listed below have written, telling of the benefits they have received from corresponding with those who have written to them, thus learning wrinkles which they could have learned in no other way, and others have made acquaintances of kindred interests in their own neighborhood, where they had not suspected that there were any other cinematographers within many miles of their own balliwick.

If you see a man's name listed from your part of the country look him up; your mutual interests will benefit you both:

Frank W. McDonald, 645 Cadillac avenue, Detroit, Mich., owns an Ernemann camera.

A White Deposit on Film.

A sample of exposed and developed film, as submitted to the Eastman Research Laboratory, had the appearance of a negative made on white or opal celluloid. On scraping away a portion of the image it was observed that the milkiness existed only in the gelatine layer, while the support was perfectly clear. It was considered that the milkiness was due to a colloidal precipitate of sulphur within the gelatine, and this opinion was confirmed when a similar effect was obtained by precipitating sulphur in a film of gelatine by alternately placing the same in a solution of hypo and then in a 5 per cent. solution of hydrochloric acid. The milkiness in question was probably caused by bathing in an alum solution either before or after fixing, or the film may have been left in the fixing bath while the same was depositing sulphur.

Rialto-Rivoli Chief Finds Manufacturers Marking Time—Rialto's November War Tax Approximately $10,000

THREE weeks to a day was the time S. L. Rothapfel devoted to a vacation. For that is what the western trip of the Rialto manager really was. He says that it was taken more for purposes of a rest than for any other reason. Mr. Rothapfel returned to the Rialto on Thanksgiving Day, refreshed for a stiff winter's work holding down his "regular" job at the Rialto and to take up his new big one in conjunction with it—the operation of the Rivoli, at Forty-ninth street and Broadway, which it is expected will be ready to receive the public some time during the holidays. The director makes no attempt to conceal his enthusiasm over the things he will be able to accomplish in the way of entertainment in his new temple.

Mr. Rothapfel made two stops in his trip—Los Angeles and San Francisco. To be sure, on his way home he laid over at the Grand Canyon, and admitted it was more than worth while; that what his eyes had beheld there had filled him up. In Los Angeles Mr. Rothapfel visited the studios and visited old friends, and he sized up conditions. He had a long and quiet talk with Charles Chaplin, just about finishing his new studio, which the manager said would be something fine. There was a dinner with "Dug" Fairbanks. There was a moment's hallo and shake-hands with "Mary," discovered in the balcony of the Orpheum Theater, looking at a picture. Also the manager met many of the prominent stars.

In San Francisco, as was told in the Moving Picture World last week, Mr. Rothapfel was given a dinner at the Press Club on November 21, the hosts being Turner & Dahnken officials. The exhibitor was full of enthusiasm in his recollection of this function. "It was remarkable in its spontaneity in the way my fellow exhibitors rose to me," he said. "They perked right up. Eugene Roth added five men to his house's orchestra as one outcome of the talk I made. I saw wonderful results of my trip of two years ago—in San Francisco, in the California Theater, and in Los Angeles, where two big theaters are building.

"I noted one condition about which I warned exhibitors two years ago—they have not made the theaters the institution. They depend entirely too much upon the star and the picture. They have not done the big thing to do: Make the theater come first of all. Success will come on general averages rather than in depending on any one or two units.

"I did notice a great improvement in music among the theaters I visited, although I felt the organ was very much overdone. This latter condition may be attributed to the high price of musicians' salaries, but I would suggest as a remedy the employment of one or two musicians, the injection of a bit of the human element to take away the mechanical impression.

"It seemed to me I found a number of imitators in lighting, but only physically. Somehow they didn't seem to know just what they were doing, but there was an honest effort to try. Those who heard me this time will have a better idea the next time.

"On the physical side, many of the houses I saw are beautiful. I noted among managers a sort of fear of charging higher prices. I don't know why this feeling prevails, why there should be this hesitancy, unless it be due to the fact that their theaters are not institutions; that they lack the stability to meet a crisis like that precipitated by the war tax.

"I found the manufacturers in Los Angeles not doing much. Practically all of them are marking time; no one doing anything very big. Everybody is working close to the line, with ears to the ground. Do you know I think there is going to be a decided change among the manufacturers? We are coming to the time when the story really is to be the thing; when we are going to make pictures not so much for the star, but the story is to count.

"I think the day of the belief of the producer that the audience is not as intelligent as is the man who makes the picture is past. The sooner the producer realizes this the better for the industry. The time has come—is here—when situation and subtlety are greater assets than are the obvious, the materialistic and the spectacular. I don't think it is necessary to go to the expense of building tremendous sets, to employ great mobs, but it is necessary to make pictures human; it is necessary to put into them heart throbs, above all, until such time as the conflict with the Central Powers is over; it is necessary to keep the corners of the lips turned up, to get away from the tragic, to try to make things bright, to make the sun shine as much as is possible. And it should be easy for producers in California to do that last thing.

"Did I bring away any impressions of theaters? Yes, a lot! I visited in San Francisco and Oakland, for instance, the T. & D. houses among others. The Imperial impressed me as one of the most interesting theaters on the coast and one of the best managed. Another house with extremely good atmosphere was Midgely's American in Oakland. The music, while perhaps a bit too long, developed more psychology, brought out more enthusiasm than I noted on any audience on the coast. As it appeals to me the picture should always dominate, the music supplement."

Just as the World man arose to take his departure from Mr. Rothapfel's snug Rialto sanctum, the walls covered with photographic souvenirs of many epicurean and oratorical battles, the phone interrupted before good-bye was said. The caller was a representative of the advertising department of one of New York's dailies. The conversation brought out the remark by Mr. Rothapfel that the management of the Rialto and the Rivoli would annually expend in local newspaper advertising a quarter of a million dollars. That means approximately $5,000 a week.

In the course of the talk over the wire, which the manager agreed might be printed, Mr. Rothapfel explained to the man at the other end why Rialto rates had been increased, so that now the prices of admission are 20, 30 and 60 cents instead of the former 15, 25 and 50. The manager said that his records showed net receipts remained just about the same figure they were an appreciable period ago, and said that the increased cost of running a theater now had, with the war admission tax, eaten up the extra price charged, and therefore justified the added sum.

"I want to ask you a question which you don't have to answer if you think it too personal," said the World man as the telephone conversation ceased. "You are contributing for the Rialto a pretty big sum to Uncle Sam for the month of November, are you not?"

"I rather think so," was the unhesitating response. "Approximately ten thousand dollars. Sounds big, doesn't it? Well, last week, with Bill Hart, we took in $21,000. We hit the same figure the week before with Fairbanks. The average has not gone below $16,000 in many weeks. It just goes to show what can be done with management and efficiency."

The manager drew from his files his daily reports, which made clear in detail how these remarkable figures were totaled, with their big Saturdays and Sundays and the Thanksgiving, the latter, if the World man recalls, in the neighborhood of four thousand dollars.

A NEW ARRIVAL IN FILMDOM.

Director Lynn Reynolds, of the Triangle Culver City studios, is celebrating the arrival of a baby son at his home in Hollywood. Reynolds now sports a wide, "pleased with himself" smile, and says the boy is "one wonderful chap."

Essanay to Discontinue Program Releases

George K. Spoor Announces Special Features of Six Reels or More Will Be the New Policy, with Certain Exceptions.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of the Essanay Film manufacturing Company, during an interview last week informed me that he will henceforth devote his chief energy and that of his organization to the production of special features of six reels or more. This statement immediately followed the announcement that he will discontinue all program releases.

The new policy will take effect January 1, when the first special feature will be released. This is entitled "Uneasy Money," the script of which has been adapted from the story of the same name by P. G. Wodehouse, which appeared some time ago in a popular magazine. In this comedy drama Taylor Holmes will be the star, and he will be supported by Virginia Valli and an exceptional cast.

It is, of course, understood that this and all the following special features produced by Essanay will be distributed through the George Kleine system.

"Uneasy Money" will be followed by a series of special features the first of which will be of seven-reel length, with Mary McLane, the noted author, in the leading role. The screen story has been adapted from her books. "I, Mary McLane," and "Men Who Have Made Love to Me." The production will be unique from the fact that Mary McLane will be supported by six leading men, apart from the interest created by the author's first appearance in moving pictures.

Taylor Holmes will follow in "Ruggles of Red Gap," adapted from the successful play of that name. Here Mr. Holmes will be supported by such notable players as Lawrence D'Orsay, Fred Egbert and others. D'Orsay's "Earl of Pawtucket" is still fresh in memory, though it is many years since he made his overwhelming success in the character at the old Manhattan theater, on Sixth avenue, near Thirty-third street, New York.

In addition to these forthcoming productions Mr. Spoor said the successful Cohan & Harris plays, "Hawthorne, U. S. A.," and "Young America," are now in preparation, and that numerous other successful comedies and comedy dramas, which have scored big successes on the dramatic stage, will also be produced, with stellar celebrities—men and women, in the leading roles.

In addition to his customary publicity in the trade press Mr. Spoor has completed arrangements for a nation-wide billboard campaign for each of his big special features. The billboard campaign will give a thirty-days' showing to each of them. Attractive twenty-four-sheet stands will be used, and it is estimated that the billboards will reach a total of 20,000,000 people for each special feature, during the thirty days' showing.

Mr. Spoor explains that the billboard campaign will be of twofold value: first, because it draws attention to the star and the play, and, second, that it furnishes publicity which will directly bring patrons to the exhibitors who are showing the pictures. Besides, Mr. Spoor adds, the billboard campaign will be intensive, because the publicity will be concentrated for several weeks, in each case, on the star and the play, so that the attractions offered by Mr. Spoor under the new policy will be constantly before the people's eyes, throughout the entire country.

A facsimile of the twenty-four-sheet stand to be used in the billboard campaign for "Uneasy Money" is shown on Page 1571 (advertising section), in the issue of December 15 of this paper. There it is seen that the name "Essanay" is omitted and that the words "George K. Spoor presents" are used instead. Then there is a large colored picture of Taylor Holmes, with his name and the title in large letters. The lower line, "At all first-class picture theaters—Ask when" is of direct benefit to the exhibitors who have booked the special feature in that section. Each film, of course, will bear the Essanay trademark.

Mr. Spoor at this point advised me that it is not the intention of Essanay to eliminate altogether the five-reel productions, excepting only the regular weekly release which obtained heretofore, as that company will intermittently supply exchanges of the George Kleine system with an occasional five-reel feature, such as the little Mary McAlister productions and those of other favorites.

The weekly release of the one-reel comedies for the General Film Company and also the weekly release of "Wonders of Nature and Science" for the same company will be continued, Mr. Spoor assured me.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Co., returned Monday, December 3, from Santa Barbara, where he spent about three weeks. Mr. Hutchinson stated that he found everything in fine shape out there and that he is well satisfied with the prospects for the coming year. The technical department of the Santa Barbara studios has been largely augmented and improved, and the American stars are hard at work on productions which have stories that are sure to please, Mr. Hutchinson stated.

W. P. Clement, owner of the Jackson Park Theater, Sixty-seventh street and Stony Island avenue, made a call at this office last week and renewed his subscription for the World. Mr. Clement reported very good business. He charges 20 cents for adults and 10 cents for children, paying the war tax out of these amounts. Mr. Clement views all the pictures on his programs, selecting them on the open market plan, and he knows the desires of his patrons so well that he very seldom fails to please them. The Jackson Park runs continuously, daily, from 2 P. M. until closing time. It seats 1,500 people. The house was opened about a year ago, and has, therefore, all the most modern appointments and equipments. A nine-piece orchestra and a large Kimball organ furnish the accompanying music. The demand at the present time, Mr. Clement finds, is for pictures which have the comedy tinge and highly entertaining qualities.

Joseph Hopp, George T. Hopkinson, of the Hoyburn theater, Evanston; William C. Heaney, William J. Sweeney, Peter J. Schaefer, Robert R. Levy and Morris Reuben, of Joliet, left Sunday, December 9, to attend the national convention and conference at Washington, December 11, 12 and 13, when the war taxes on film and admissions will be discussed.

The report that five million pennies were on their way from the west to Chicago to relieve the strain of the lack of pennies, recently, was in slight (?) error, seeing that it should have read five thousand instead of five million! The error in the report caused much trouble in the banks and the Sub-Treasury department here. The five thousand pennies were received from Denver, but the demand still greatly exceeds the supply, although the mints are working night and day to relieve the situation. The cashier in the Chicago Sub-Treasury department believes that paper pennies will become common before the war is over, as was the case in the Civil War. The taxes on theater tickets, railroad tickets, etc., have made the demand for the copper penny very great.

The Government having failed to furnish blanks for making out returns for the war tax at picture theaters, Chicago Local has had blanks printed for that purpose, which have been approved by the Chicago internal revenue department, and which are being furnished gratis to members of the Chicago local.

The meeting of the M. P. T. O. Association was changed from Friday, November 30, to Friday, December 7. Luncheon was served. At the meeting, the advisability of sending messengers to Washington to fight the reel tax was considered.

Ed H. Phillippi, sales manager of the Rothacker Company, was recently appointed a director of the Advertising Association of Chicago. Mr. Phillippi is also serving on the committee of entertainment and on the committee of general business affairs of the Chicago Club.

Gail Kane, who has been one of the prominent stars of the American Film Company for a year past at Santa Barbara, passed through this city on her way to New York, Wednesday, December 5.

Jacqueline Saunders, popularly known by her appearances in Balboa productions, made a brief stopover in the city, Wednesday, December 5, on her way from Los Angeles to New York City. Her husband, F. D. Horkheimer, accompanying her, entertained several friends at luncheon in her honor while here. It is said the Balboa star will close a new contract which already awaits her signature in New York.

The ninth annual ball of the moving picture operators of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., which was held Wednesday evening, December 5, in the Coliseum Annex, was the most successful, financially and otherwise, ever held by the members. Sousa's band from the Great Lakes naval training station, furnished the music for an assemblage of about 2,000 people. The grand march was led by Clarence Rowland, manager of the White Sox; Mrs. Rowland, Nell Craig and Jack Meredith. The profits will be used to assist enlisted members of the organization and their families. The local has eighty-one members now in the different branches of the service.

A dispatch from Washington states that the Creel committee on information is establishing branches of its moving picture bureau throughout the country. A middle western bureau will be established at Chicago and similar headquarters are being established at Kansas City, San Antonio, Minneapolis and on the Pacific coast. A New England bureau, with headquarters at Boston, has also been organized. The various state councils of defense throughout the country will co-operate with these bureaus.

Major Funkhouser has denied that he ever made the statement that a permit had been refused the "Rose of Blood" (Fox), because the committee on public information had requested that the permit be refused. The report made to Washington concerning the film in question, according to the major, was in the form of a telegram which was shown Judge George A. Carpenter, of the Federal Court, before it was filed. Major Funkhouser explains that the permit was refused because the committee of censors which had seen the film decided that there were too many bomb explosions in it, and that it should not be shown at a time when the federal and local authorities were endeavoring to avert bomb outrages.

The censorship hearing before the sub-committee of the Chicago council's judiciary committee on Tuesday, December 4, was devoted chiefly to reviewing certain pictures on which Major Funkhouser had placed his ban, and in viewing cut-outs which had been made by the Chicago board of censors.

Two more big, modern moving picture theaters are about to be erected on Sheridan Road, near Wilson Avenue, and in close proximity to the Lakeside theater, owned by the Ascher brothers. One of these new houses, together with the value of the site and the building in which it will be located, will represent an investment of about $900,000, while the cost of the other, with site and surrounding building, is figured at about $585,000. The first mentioned theater will be erected by Barney and A. J. Balaban and Morris and Samuel Katz, the owners of the Central Park theater which excited so much comment when it was opened recently. The architects, C. W. and George L. Rapp, are now working on the plans and it is expected that ground will be broken early during the ensuing year.

The other theater will be erected by Walter W. Ahlschlager, and the cost of the theater itself will be about $325,000 and the seating capacity will be 3,050. This theater will be known as the Pantheon.

The meeting of the city council license committee was held

Thursday, December 6, to consider the increase of moving picture theater licenses for houses seating over 400 people. About sixty-eight exhibitors were present and after the matter had been discussed for some time it was resolved the meeting should be postponed and final action taken at a meeting to be held Friday, December 14.

War Quickens Public's News Sense

Jack Cohn Says the World Tragedy Has Increased Its Perception of Dramatic Values.

LOOK at a news reel on the screen today, and then cast your mind's eye back to the news reel of 1912—the days "before the War." There's a difference, isn't there? Not the war pictures—that, of course—but the regular run of pictures dealing with the doings of the day. Then there was a plethora of views, a paucity of news. Now the motion picture theater public demands something more than mere motion in a news picture. They don't look for acting in it, but they do demand action. The scenes presented must be news in fact as well as in name—big news, news that's worth while.

"Yes," agreed Jack Cohn when questioned on the subject, "there has been a big change in the news pictures, and I attribute it largely to the war."

Now, Mr. Cohn is manager of Universal's three news services, "The Animated Weekly," "Current Events" and "The Screen Magazine," and was the first American "editorial director" of news reels, having taken President Wilson's first inauguration. So he is accepted as the recognized authority. That he has positive genius for the work has often been demonstrated during the last five years.

"The war," he continued, "has brought every mind into close touch with big events. It has forced a quickening of the public news sense, developed a keen perception of news values. I am not speaking now merely of war pictures. They are important, of course, but the public are not interested in them alone. They also want the pictures of the doings of the day, but they want only the important doings, and they want those presented in a dramatic way. They want life, character, action."

"When Universal put out its exclusive pictures of Pershing's reception in France the people were wide awake to their news value. Oh, yes, they know a big scoop on the screen when they see it. And then there were aeroplane pictures, where the eyes of the audience went up in an aeroplane with the cameraman and were right among the fliers, observing their every movement at close quarters—not on the ground looking up at specks three or four thousand feet above them. Oh, the people know good pictures when they see them—well made, live, newsy pictures. And when they go to see news reels these days they expect to find the word News on the screen as well as on the poster outside."

"The cameraman who works for the news reels now," continued he, "must have the instinct of the newspaperman. He must know what is worth taking and know how to seize the vital moment. And the news reel director must have editorial judgment. He must be able to sense the public's demands and the enterprise to get it for them. And, as with the editor of a big newspaper, his work is largely that of selection, the work of editing, the cutting out of many hundreds of feet of film to present the few hundreds the public see."

"Producing a news reel is every day becoming more and more like producing a newspaper. In fact, that is what the news reel is going to be—just a newspaper, giving the news in pictures instead of in type. Only with this significant distinction, the screen is a power greater than the press because it has the undivided attention of the public, and, for thousands who read any particular newspaper, millions see every release of a news reel. 'A power greater than the press,'" repeated Mr. Cohn, "I like that line and believe I will adopt it as a catch line for our announcements."

DU QUESNE ARRESTED ON INSURANCE CHARGE.

Fritz Jaubert Du Quesne, thirty-seven years old, has been locked up in New York Police Headquarters charged with presenting false proof of loss in support of a claim on a fire insurance policy amounting to $33,000. He is also charged by the police with claiming to be Frederick Frederick. Other allegations by the police against Du Quesne are that among his effects were found the outfit of a captain of Australian cavalry and that in the uniform he had appeared at New York hotels; that he delivered Liberty Bond addresses. At one time it is said he was a reporter on a New York paper.

Metro Studios Active

B. A. Rolfe Announces Plans for Increased Productions—Several New Companies to Be Brought Out from New York.

B. A. ROLFE, western representative of the Metro Pictures Corporation, expresses satisfaction with the progress made by his organization at the newly acquired studios in Hollywood, where productions starring Edith Storey and Viola Dana are being made.

"The studios," said Mr. Rolfe, "have been practically rebuilt. The original stage has been enlarged and now has a floor space of 90 by 180 feet. The new stage under course of construction will measure 75 by 125 feet. Both stages will be convertible—either open air or inclosed. I have O. K.'d the plans for completely inclosing both stages in glass. Our laboratory has been equipped with every modern device, and the negative and positive film is being handled by men who are considered experts in this line.

"The special feature, in which Edith Storey will make her initial appearance on the Metro program, has been completed under the direction of Tod Browning. This is the long-heralded production of 'The Legion of Death,' by June Mathis, in which effort has been made faithfully to portray the recent revolution that shook Russia and proved the forerunner to the formation of the 'Battalion,' composed of Russian women, that has so valiantly upheld the integrity of their country. This will undoubtedly prove a distinct box-office success, not alone from the historical value, but because it is an intensely interesting story, which carries a love theme and an abundance of heart-interest situations.

"This week saw the completion of 'The Winding Trail,' which is the first production starring Viola Dana to be made on the West Coast. This feature, filmed under the direction of John Collins, is from the story by June Mathis and John Collins. It will present Miss Dana in an entirely new characterization.

"Actual filming has started on the second Storey and Dana productions. Miss Storey's vehicle is 'Revenge,' an adaptation from the novel 'Hearts Steadfast,' by Edward Moffat. Miss Dana's second production is now being filmed under the direction of John Collins. The story is an adaptation by William Parker from the colorful romance, 'A Weaver of Dreams,' by Myrtle Reed.

"While these productions are in the making the studios are being prepared for the arrival of several more Metro companies from New York. And because Southern California is such an ideal location for picture-making it is my intention eventually to build on adjoining property and thereby equip the Metro West Coast studios so as to be able to handle several companies at one time."

Lyons and Moran Return from East.

Those popular Universal comedians, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, returned a few days ago from a long vacation spent in New York and other cities of the East, including a visit to their home town. They had been working strenuously through the summer months and the rest was well deserved and welcomed. But they are glad to get back and eager to go to work again.

"The boys" will start shortly on a series of one-reel parlor comedies, and the pictures will be released under a special brand. Lyons and Moran are bubbling with original ideas. They will direct the comedies themselves.

Captain Leslie T. Peacock has been engaged to write exclusively for the "gloom-killers."

"Spirit of '76" Confiscated by Government.

Declaring that the twelve-reel photoplay, "The Spirit of '76," is German propaganda masked by the pretense of emphasizing a national tradition, Federal officers have suppressed the film, which has been showing at Clune's Auditorium.

United States District Attorney Robert O'Connor, his assistant, Gordon Lawson; Burritt S. Mills of the American Protective League and Chief Deputy Marshal Albert C. Sittel descended upon the theater, exhibited a search warrant and brought away with them every foot of the twelve reels.

It is charged by the Federal officials that though he was ordered by the local police to privately show his picture to representatives of the Government, Robert Goldstein, producer of the cinema, refused to exhibit it as he had promised and only projected it on Tuesday with reluctance.

Eliminations which were ordered by Assistant Attorney Lawson and Mr. Mills of the Protective League because they tended to create inimical feeling between Americans and Englishmen to the detriment of their combined war aims were made, it is said. But when the picture was publicly shown it is alleged all the objectionable features were present.

Mr. Goldstein, the producer, declared that he had not tampered with the picture after he had shown it to the officers, except to "shorten it." He denies having reinserted the objectionable parts and said he was sure a conspiracy was on foot against him.

The day following the confiscation Goldstein was taken into custody under a warrant issued by the Assistant United States Attorney. He was immediately arraigned before United States Commissioner D. M. Hammack and charged with violation of the espionage act, but was released upon furnishing $5,000 bail.

Monstrous Benefit Given by Film Stars.

The great heart of the film folk poured out a bounty of more than $7,000 for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Yuletide fund at the benefit at Clune's Auditorium and through the proceeds of the program snare sale. Charlie Murray acted as stage director for the affair. Scores were turned away from the auditorium and about two hundred persons were seated on the stage.

Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin were unable to be present, but "Little Mary" sent her check for $100 and Charlie bought back his derby for a like amount. Johnny Powers, the Angels' president, was the high bidder for an album of autographed photos of cinema stars. He paid $225 for the book.

Ruth Roland, the Los Angeles picture favorite who recently took to vaudeville, appeared in a song series which delighted the audience. George Behan gave his famous "Story of the Rose." Henry Walthall, Mary Charleson and Jo Harris gave a scene from "The Great Divide." George Hupp and Dorothy Love Clark offered a minuet. Leo Domke gave his pianolog. Edward Qually sang, the Remick Quartet harmonized, Hughie Mack cracked jokes, Alice Maison danced her butterfly creation and Harry Booker and Toto the Clown were on hand with clever "singles."

Doris Baker, the child dancer, had a kiltie effort that pleased; Bill Desmond spoke briefly, as did Douglas Fairbanks and H. Guy Woodward, all in humorous vein. Bryant Washburn appeared and Norma Gould danced an Egyptian conception.

Will Garroway gave a piano solo and assisted Miss Grace James in the latter's soprano solos, and J. Robinson Hall, the aviator, spoke of war conditions.

Marie Dressler was a hit in the burlesque she offered of a famous poem and the three arts, the dance, grand opera and the drama. Louis Gottschalk directed the orchestra for Miss Dressler's effort. A character dance by Dorothy Lyndall, Bertha Wardell, Carolyn Crane and Helen Moore was exceptionally clever.

Gettinger Goes to Camp Lewis.

Last Monday big Bill Gettinger, one of the most popular among the aggregation of cowboy players at Universal City, left Los Angeles to do his bit under the Stars and Stripes. Gettinger departed from the southern city with other drafted men for Camp Lewis, at American Lake, Wash.

For the past four years Gettinger has been employed at Universal City, and he has appeared in numerous plays of the West and in many jungle and railroad pictures. When he received his orders to report for service he obtained permission to visit his mother in San Antonio, and made a flying trip to the Texas city to bid her goodbye.

More than half a hundred of the Universal cowboys with whom he has been associated for the past few years were present at the railroad station when the train pulled out for the north.

Ben Wilson in Another Accident.

An accident which might have proved fatal to Miss Claire Du Brey except for the presence of mind and timely action of Ben Wilson occurred during the filming of the tenth episode of "The Mystery Ship" at Universal City.

Miss Du Brey, playing the role of a villainess in the episode, was in grave danger of being seriously, if not fatally, burned when her clothing caught fire. She was attired in a gown of lace, bedecked with jet beads and spangles and the flimsy material ignited when a bomb was exploded near her.

Ben Wilson quickly tore off the big overcoat he was wearing and wrapped it about Miss Du Brey, smothering the fire. Miss Du Brey was burned slightly about the body and Wilson's hands were scorched.

Charles Christie in the East.

Charles Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, is visiting eastern cities in stimulating booking of Christie Comedies. Contracts have been signed by Mr. Christie with the Consolidated Feature Film Company for the regular weekly release of Christie Comedies in the territory surrounding Denver, Colorado.

Vernon Playing with Christie.

Bobby Vernon is now under contract with the Christie company, and has already finished a number of important scenes of his first picture, in which he is supported by Ethel Lynne. Vernon has had years of laugh-producing experience in musical comedy and on the screen. He was starred by the Universal and recently was a headliner in Keystone productions. He claimed merited attention in such releases as "In His Father's Footsteps," "Nick of Time Baby," "Caught in a Harem," "Whose Baby?" and many others.

Hamilton Stars for Triangle.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton of the Triangle studios has started work on "Captain of His Soul," an unusual story, which is the screen adaptation of "Shackles," by Eleanor Kinkade. Working with Hamilton is an all-star case, including such favorites as William Desmond, Charles Gunn and Jack Richardson. Others who will appear in the picture are Mitzi Gould, a recent addition to the Triangle playing forces; Gene Burr, W. A. Jeffries and Walt Whitman.

Triangle's Scenario Staff Busy.

The scenario department at the Triangle's Culver City studio is working overtime on some exceptionally good stories, including continuities on some well-known magazine stories and original plays by the staff writers. Jack Cunningham has just completed picturization of Meredith Nicholson's story, "The Hopper," published some time ago in Collier's Weekly. Frank S. Beresford, scenario editor, writing the continuity on "The Innocent's Progress," by Frances Quillan, recently published in "Snappy Stories."

Perhaps He Walked in His Sleep.

Arthur G. Hoyt, casting director at the Triangle Culver City studio, has been confined to his home for several days suffering from a broken bone in his foot. Hoyt is unable to explain the accident. He went to bed one evening and awakened the next morning with his foot so painful that it would not support his weight.

Get Ready to Welcome Fay Tincher.

Again is Fay Tincher shaking the moth balls from those famous black and white frocks and things, for Miss Tincher is starting on her first two-reel comedy with her own company. She has three capital comedies prepared for her by Tom Gibson, and Al Santell, her director, has issued the first call for work. Leo Pierson, Mollie McConnell and Leota Lorraine head the capable supporting cast, while Lige Zerr assist. Robert Phelan is behind the camera and R. C. Godfre has charge of the technical end.

Will Ritchie Takes Charge at San Barbara.

Will M. Ritchie, a scenario writer and editor of ability, has been engaged by President S. S. Hutchinson to take charge of the American Film Company's scenario department. Mr. Ritchie's acquisition by the American promises increased activity in this department. "High-class stories is the American's slogan," stated Mr. Hutchinson. "And I believe with Mr. Ritchie in charge, with orders not to consider the cost in choosing suitable vehicles for our stars, the American stories in the future will be even better than in the past."

Mr. Ritchie already has taken charge of the American's staff, which is composed of Charles Turner Dazey, James E. Hungerford, Chester Blinn Clapp, Elizabeth Mahoney and Myron M. Stearns. In the near future other screen authors of prominence will be added to the present efficient staff.

Kenyon at Work at Fox Studio.

Charles Kenyon, the well-known playwright, whose successful works have appeared on Broadway and throughout the country, has joined the William Fox forces as scenario writer at the western studios at Los Angeles. Mr. Kenyon's first work with Fox was the writing of the scenario for George Scarsborough's story, "Cupid's Round-Up," which Tom Mix is using as his first starring vehicle. He is now engaged in writing the scenario of a new work, in which Gladys Brockwell will be the star.

Jewel Carmen Working as a Star.

"A Soul for Sale," a brilliant William Fox picture, in which Jewel Carmen begins her career as a star, has been completed at the Los Angeles studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The company returned early in the week from a trip in the mountains, where some of the most effective portions of the picture were taken. It is a tale of the Klondike. In the cast are L. C. Shumway, Robert Milton, Genevieve Blinn, G. Raymond Nye and Richard La Reno.

Mena Photographs Crucifixion Scenes.

The crucifixion scenes for the photodrama of the ages, now under production by the Mena Film Company, were photographed in the Hollywood hills during the past week. The hour of sunset was used and timed very carefully that the description of the clouds, as given in the Bible, might be obtained. Director Gaye watched and timed the scene for several days before its making.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Miss Mae Murray's third Bluebird photoplay, "The Eternal Columbine," is rapidly nearing completion under the direction of Robert Leonard. Kenneth Harlan and Albert Roscoe are in Miss Murray's support.

Tom Mix is in his glory as the star in his new play, "Cupid's Round-Up," where he has the opportunity not only to make love in the most rapid fashion, but also to show his ability as a horseman and cowboy. The story of his play was written by George Scarsborough, and the scenario was written by Charles Kenyon.

Percy Stanley Pembroke, formerly of the Metro, where he played heavy leading parts, has joined the Balboa players and is cast in Director Sherwood MacDonald's company, featuring Jackie Saunders in "The Hoyden," by Lee Arthur.

Henry Otto is once more a member of the Balboa directing staff. He began his picture-making career with Horkheimer Brothers four years ago, when they first opened their studio. At that time he put on Jackie Saunders' first starring vehicle. After working at various studios in the East and West, he is back at Balboa. This time he will preside over the company headed by Kathleen Clifford.

Reaves Eason, popularly known as "Breezy," is producing a seven-reel picture, on the Balboa stage, of which he is the author. The piece is called "Little Roughneck" and features Mitchell Lewis, who played in "The Barrier." Jimsy May is his leading woman and little Breezy Reaves, Mr. Eason's twenty-eight-months-old son, plays the title role. Mr. Eason will be seen in the heavy part of Red Adair.

Manager Al Nathan of the Superba Theater has gone to San Francisco to open the Alhambra Theater. Mr. Nathan is managing director of a chain of theaters, which will eventually extend from Coast to Coast.

The management of the new Kinema Theater at Seventh and Grand avenues, apparently not being superstitious, decided to open its new picture house on Thursday night, December 13. The opening of the largest photoplay theater in the West was the occasion for the presentation of Artcraft's "The Woman God Forgot," featuring Geraldine Farrar.

Mrs. Phillips Smalley was a witness in Judge Finlayson's court in the suit of the Universal against J. Warren Kerrigan to recover $8,500 damages for alleged breach of contract. It is asserted Mr. Kerrigan left the company before the picture he was engaged for was finished. Mr. Kerrigan contended his contract had expired and he did not recognize any liability on his part under an alleged verbal arrangement to stay until the completion of the film. E. G. Patterson, studio manager of the Triangle, who was with the Universal when Mr. Kerrigan was starring, was another witness called by the Universal.

Film folk are being congratulated upon the success of the benefit performance given at Clune's Auditorium in the National Defense Committee's campaign for gifts for the Southern California boys in the service, and especially are the compliments being handed out to Mack Sennett, who was chairman. Charlie Murray and John A. Waldron also are coming in for their share of verbal bouquets. The benefit netted $7,500 clear of expenses.

It is understood Eddie Foy has become reconciled to the perils of the motion picture set and is to have his own company, backed by New York capital. Mr. Foy announces he will start making his pictures upon the completion of his present Orpheum tour, which ends in February, and will then come to Los Angeles and rent a studio where he will produce feature comedies.

Clarence G. Badger, who has been directing Mack Sennett comedies, and before that Keystones, for several years, has been signed by Goldwyn to direct Mabel Normand. Mr. Badger will change his residence to New York.

Illuminating Engineers To Meet

Subject of Main Paper of Evening Will Be Motion Picture Projection with Tungsten Filament Lamps.

ON the invitation of L. N. McChesney, manager of the Edison Studio, 2826 Decatur avenue, New York City, the New York Section of the Illuminating Engineering Society will hold a meeting at that studio at 8 o'clock Thursday evening, December 13. The meeting is open to readers of the Moving Picture World as well as to members of the society. The subject of the main paper of the evening is "Motion Picture Projection with Tungsten Filament Lamps."

The paper will describe the introduction of incandescent lamps for motion picture projection and will discuss conditions which must be fulfilled by the light source and optical system. The questions of shutters, lenses, screens and theater illumination are to be treated as well as the essential requirements for electrical control equipment. Points of comparison with arc systems now in use (with special attention to the applicability to A. C. circuits) are to be presented. Two or three films will be projected with commercial incandescent lamps and apparatus after the conclusion of the reading of the paper.

The Edison studio may be reached from the Grand Central Station by the New York Central Railroad to the Botanical Garden station or it may be reached by subway to One Hundred and Forty-ninth street and transfer to the elevated to the end of the line.

Courtney Ryley Cooper

The Man Who Will Write the Scenario of Chief Flynn's Serial Expose of Imperial Germany's Secret Agents.

IN selecting Courtney Ryley Cooper to prepare the scenario of "The Eagle's Eye," Chief Flynn's widely-heralded secret service serial, exposing the activities of Kaiser Wilhelm's agents in America, the Whartons are being congratulated upon securing the services of one of the most talented of contemporary American fiction writers.

Born in Kansas City, Missouri, October 31, 1886, Mr. Cooper has spent most of his life in the West, his career embracing many varied chapters as "character juvenile" in a barnstorming repertoire company; clown in the old Harris Nickelplate Circus; reporter and member of the editorial staff of the Kansas City Star; press agent for the late Col. W. F. Cody during his affiliation with the Sells-Floto Circus; business manager of the same organization; and incidentally, during the past seven years, contributor of over three hundred short stories to the leading magazines of this country. Throughout the year just closing Cooper's name has appeared on the table of contents of such well-known publications as Collier's, The Ladies'

Courtney R. Cooper.

Home Journal, The Popular Magazine, Everybody's, Short Stories, Hearst's, The Pictorial Review, The Woman's Magazine and Ainslee's. His series of circus stories, published under the general title of "Shoestring Charley," were advertised as the most popular of adventure tales printed in the Red Book Magazine during 1916.

During his earlier years, Cooper wrote a lurid melodrama known as "The Gulf Between," which ran for a week in Kansas City. At the end of that time, his list of friends, willing to accept free tickets, had given out. "And I've been running away from the thought of the thing ever since," he now declared.

Nevertheless, Cooper has an unusually well developed sense of dramatic values, and has written several successful screen stories for Joseph M. Schenck and the Whartons, prior to his engagement to arrange Chief Flynn's powerful expose of the Imperial German Government's propaganda and spy system within the borders of the United States. Government officials who have examined Cooper's scenarios of the first six episodes, now ready for production, declare them to be masterly in their handling of the various momentous acts leading up to the severing of relations between this country and Imperial Germany.

LANG IN MEXICO.

According to the last communiqué (delayed by censor), Captain Arthur J. Lang, of Guatemala and Nicholas Power Cameragraph fame, entered Mexico City without mishap several days ago. From this vantage point he will direct the projection machine invasion to the different states of the neighboring republic, excepting those under the unhealthy shadow of Villa, Zapata, Genovevo de la O. and other unpleasant patriots. Captain Lang expects to eat turkey in New York on Christmas Day, providing, of course, that there are no counter orders from the Nicholas Power Company, and it is to be hoped that this turkey-eating boast, present prices considered, does not prove as hollow as the Kaiser's.

Brooklyn Men Suggest Canadian System

Delegates to Washington Will Ask Convention to Suggest to Congress That Government Print Tax Tickets.

THE Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn held a regular meeting on Sunday, December 9, at the Triangle theater in that borough. In spite of the storm of Saturday evening there was a good attendance, and the session held until 5 a. m. President William Brandt was in the chair.

The privilege of the floor was given to Supreme Court Justice-elect Edward Lazarsky and Magistrate Geismar, who pleaded for subscriptions for the Jewish War Relief Committee—and they got them to the extent of $655. The exhibitors present, without regard to creed or racial extraction, responded to the appeal.

As a result of the troubles with the operators in the Ridgewood section the meeting decided to take steps to form a new operators' union and a committee of three was appointed to look into the feasibility of the project.

A committee was appointed to visit the Edison Illuminating Company and see what could be done in the way of securing a rebate on the shortened hours of street lighting in front of theaters. In accordance with the ruling of Fuel Commissioner Garfield the exhibitors have shut down their street illuminations at 10.30. Under their contracts they are entitled to the lights until 1 o'clock, but in spite of the fact that current has been saved for two and a half hours, it is said no rebate has yet been granted and the exhibitors are curious to know why.

On the question of instructions to the delegates to the war tax convention in Washington, it was decided the only request the local had to make was the suggestion to Congress that it adopt the Canadian system—i. e., that the Government print the tax tickets and sell them to the exhibitors, allowing the theater men 10 per cent. for the expense of collection and handling generally.

The meeting voted to hold no public ball this year. In case any social function of this sort is undertaken it will be restricted to the trade.

Our Foreign Film Business

How the World War Has Affected Picture Trade Between This and Other Countries.

THE effect of the war upon the moving picture studios of Europe is quite graphically shown in statistics compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, showing American imports for the first nine months of 1917.

During the nine months' period of 1915, there was brought into the United States from abroad, 6,508,916 feet of positive film, valued at $211,280. The same period of 1916 saw a dropping off in these imports to 4,125,726 feet valued at $189,016. The value of the importations for the first nine months of the present year was but little below the latter figure—compared with the nine months of 1915, footage saw more than a fifty per cent. decrease, but not so the price, the figures being 3,070,697 feet valued at $187,492.

Footage figures for the first nine months of 1915 on negatives are not given, but the value of our importations during that period was $156,717. The importations during the first nine months of 1916 were 757,246 feet valued at $237,061, and for the first nine months of the present year, 622,448 feet valued at $290,892.

On the other hand our purchases abroad of sensitized, unexposed, motion picture films have jumped quite considerably this year as compared with 1915. During the first nine months of the latter year, there was brought into the United States 37,755,756 feet valued at $489,314. During the nine months of the following year the importations dropped somewhat—to 30,200,326 feet valued at $444,811, increasing again (greatly) during the first nine months of 1917 to 50,761,136 feet, valued at $756,522.

While we have been buying large quantities of film stock abroad, at the same time we have been selling both exposed and unexposed films to the European distributors and studios. Taking the raw stock we find that during the first nine months of 1915 we exported 108,676,981 feet valued at $2,368,009. During the first nine months of the next year these exportations were cut in half, to 53,041,595 feet valued at $1,675,269, while a further slump is noted in the first nine months of the present year when we sold abroad 48,100,268 linear feet valued at $1,064,056.

Of exposed film we exported during the first nine months of 1915, 57,558,849 feet valued at $2,834,163; during the nine months of 1916 these figures jumped to 128,362,032 feet valued at $5,571,613, dropping this year, during the first nine months, to 87,878,068 feet, valued at $4,786,613.

It is rather interesting to note where these films go. The United Kingdom is America's best customer, although her purchases have decreased at an alarming rate as the war has progressed. During the first nine months of 1915 her importers bought 34,901,608 feet of film valued at $1,409,328; in the same nine months of the next year these purchases amounted to 75,692,219 feet valued at $3,247,390; but this year the footage totals 23,259,426, for the first nine months, and the value is given as $1,794,627.

No U-boat interference to our commerce exists with respect to Canada, so our exportations of films to that country have increased somewhat. For instance, during the nine months of 1915, Canada bought of our producers 8,565,159 feet valued at $655,038; during the nine months of 1916, 9,418,691 feet valued at $706,623, and during the first nine months of 1917, 11,070,394 feet valued at $837,841.

Evidently a great deal of the cheaper grades of films have been going to Italy of late, for although her purchases in this country during the first nine months of the present year exceeded the purchases of Canada for a like period, totaling 11,405,765, the value thereof was but $280,108. The first nine months of the year before showed 7,698,938 feet, valued at $193,516, and of the year 1915, 397,680 feet valued at $27,589.

Even war-stricken France is laughing at American comedies, is interested in scenics, entertained by our dramas and buying all other varieties, for in spite of the horrors that nation has faced she is quite a heavy purchaser of films. During the first nine months of 1915 France had her own studios at work, so that she was dependent upon America only for 1,937,994 feet of film, for which she paid $85,949. During the nine months period of the next year, the demand in France for films was greater than her studios could produce, with the result that we sold her 14,708,901 feet valued at $412,336. This year our sales during the nine months ending with September were not as great, but at that they totaled 9,627,550 feet valued at $236,338.

Newfoundland and Labrador are also among America's customers—these two countries bought 1,023,150 feet valued at $71,102 during the 1915 period; 1,368,320 feet valued at $71,184 during the 1916 period, and 1,149,600 feet valued at $44,439 during the first nine months of this year.

Australia's purchases totaled 4,429,947 feet valued at $314,165 in 1915, 5,701,498 feet valued at $430,347 in 1916, and 6,902,467 feet valued at $462,401 during the first nine months of 1917.

The rest of the world came to our doors with orders for films to be exported to them, in 1915, for 6,303,311 feet valued at $270,641; in 1916, for 13,773,465 feet valued at $510,217, and, this year, 24,462,866 feet valued at $1,130,809.

Maritime Theaters Center of Relief

After Halifax Disaster Offers of Help Come from Leading Theater Men—Keith House in St. John Offered for Full Week.

ALL the Dominion of Canada is appalled at the disaster which has overtaken the city of Halifax. The Academy of Music is thrown open to shelter those who are homeless and many have taken advantage of this offer.

F. G. Spencer, of St. John, was in the office of the Strand theater, Truro, on his way to Halifax when the explosion occurred. It made a terrific noise and people rushed out to see what had happened. Truro is 62 miles from Halifax, but the noise of the report was very great. Mr. Spencer said he never heard anything like it. He returned to St. John on Thursday.

The Opera House and Imperial theater, St. John, have put their theaters and the staff of each at the disposal of any relief committee. This was made known by a large advertisement in the morning papers. It is stated that the theaters in Halifax are all out of commission. The glass was shattered in every building in the vicinity and other damage done; yet theaters and managers do not seem to have suffered very materially in a physical way. All business is, of course, suspended and the Academy of Music was one of the very first places to open for the shelter of homeless sufferers. The very fine ornamental plaster work in the Academy was ruined and all glass was shattered in every building.

The Princess theater, Truro, is to be used for the reception of the many destitute families who are pouring into Truro. It is estimated that there are at least 20,000 persons homeless or injured so that the neighboring towns will have to shelter them.

Associated Theatres to Meet

First Meeting of Stockholders of Exhibitors' Booking and Exchange Organization of the Northwest.

THE first big meeting of stockholders of Associated Theaters Incorporated will take place at the West Hotel in Minneapolis Monday, December 17, to elect a board of five directors and adopt the franchise and information blanks after discussion, and also make any corrections decided upon.

This is the organization of exhibitors which incorporated October 16 for $100,000 under Minnesota laws to operate booking offices and film exchanges in the following cities of our states: Minneapolis, Duluth, Milwaukee, La Crosse, Sioux Falls, Aberdeen, Fargo and Minot. Six hundred theaters was the goal to be reached before starting actual operations, and according to General Manager Hamlin, in a statement issued December 1, the five hundred mark had just been passed.

The present officers are: President, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; vice-president, W. S. Smith, Menominee, Wis.; chairman, C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; treasurer, H. P. Greene, Minneapolis, Minn.; secretary and general manager, T. H. Hamlin, Minneapolis, Minn.

"Although our plan is a radical departure from the present expensive methods of marketing and distributing film, supplies and equipment we do not expect to revolutionize the motion picture industry in a single day," declared Mr. Hamlin. "At the start we will not be able to serve all our members all of the time, but we can start serving part of our members all the time and all of our members part of the time.

"In the meantime they will continue dealing with the individual exchanges direct as under the present system. When we have the film that each member desires for every day in the week at a price which he feels he can individually afford to pay, then and only then will we be able to serve the entire membership every show. While this evolution is going on the members have no dues or assessments to pay, so there can be no dissatisfaction. We do not expect to play grand stand politics to retain the loyalty of our immense membership. No, indeed. There is only one thorough method of completely satisfying such a large organization and that is to actually save each member money every week and render him service, with courtesy and rapidity.

"Our sole aim is to eliminate the middleman's enormous expenses. We want each producer and parent distributing company to realize more net profit on these four States and our members under our plan of distributing will be able to obtain better film at a lower film rental.

"Our weekly sales sheet eliminates the expenses of traveling salesmen and saves approximately seven thousand dollars a week in these four States.

"The seven inspection points to be established in the different localities will save our members express charges to the same amount weekly because of the shorter hauls.

"It is just eleven hundred miles across our zone from Sheboygan, Wisconsin, to Beach North, Dakota, and it is a losing territory for the producers and distributors.

"We will either play film on a percentage or buy exclusive rights and pay for our own prints. Associated Theaters, Inc., is not in the business to make a cent of profit from anybody. It is here to give the best service to its members at the very lowest cost.

"If there is very little film handled at the start our overhead expenses will be correspondingly low as they can be made very slight," concluded Mr. Hamlin.

PRINCE GHOSH AFTER PATHE, BY GOSH!

Prince Sarath Ghosh, author and dramatist, has filed an action in the United States District Court against Pathe Exchange, Inc., alleging that his rights have been invaded upon through the production of "The Iron Claw."

The plaintiff asserts that previous to the production of the Pathe serial he adapted a similar serial from a series of short stories written by him and published in Pearson's Magazine. The author's serial was christened "1001 American Nights" and he alleges the Pathe serial is a modified adaptation of the Ghosh product.

The short stories upon which Ghosh based his serial were "The Rajah's Knight's Move," "Slowly Hanged," "The Avenger of the Gods," "The Rajah's Dungeon," "The Garland of the Goddess," and "The Playful Way of the Rajah," which the author asserts were especially well adapted for presentation on the screen and written with that object in view.

The author asks injunctive relief and an accounting of the profits which have accrued to the producers.

Artcraft Wins Wm. S. Hart Case

Judge Goff Denies the Application of the New York Motion Picture Company for an Injunction.

JUDGE GOFF in a lengthy decision handed down yesterday denied the application of the New York Motion Picture Company for an injunction pendente lite restraining Artcraft Pictures Corporation from distributing the first Wm. S. Hart production, entitled "The Narrow Trail," and vacated the temporary stay granted pending the argument of the injunction.

Judge Goff at the close of an elaborate and painstaking review of the affidavits submitted on both sides said: "Upon an examination of all the papers submitted upon this motion, and the extensive briefs and arguments of counsel for both sides, I am of the opinion that there is not such certainty or even probability of the plaintiff succeeding upon the trial of this action as would warrant the granting of the relief sought herein. Nor is there any such preponderance of creditable evidence as would justify the plaintiff's assertion of ownership of the scenario of the picture "The Narrow Trail," or even its assertion that its rival producing corporation induced the employees of plaintiff to leave its employment. The defendant served in this action, Artcraft Pictures Corporation, is not reasonably chargeable with any act of the William S. Hart Production, Inc., so far as appears by the evidence before me to justify the restraint sought for before the determination of the issues in the action. The claim of ownership by the plaintiff is sufficiently refuted and upon his claim alone there appears to be no reasonable ground for granting the relief sought herein. The unique and extraordinary services alleged by the plaintiff are as I have heretofore indicated not such as would justify the granting of a restraining order. Upon these considerations I am constrained to deny the motion for an injunction pendente lite and to order the temporary stay granted in the order to show cause vacated."

Giebler to Write Scenarios

St. Louis Member of the World Staff Has Moved to Los Angeles and Will Give More Time to Imaginative Writing.

READERS of this paper have remarked the unusually interesting human quality of the Giebler stories of trade happenings in St. Louis. There is a touch of homely humor in him and on several occasions his comment on men and facts in his district has made a column the equal of any special column in the country. We have known that there was a literary side to Giebler and though sorry, we were not surprised when he reached a point where he could devote a large part of his time to imaginative writing pure and simple. He has sold enough stories to magazines and enough scripts to the film companies to make it a safe move now, and so he is off to the Coast to be near the studios and in touch with the needs of the different companies. He won't need to depend entirely on the film script market, though he is awake to the possibilities of the screen and he may eventually come to specialize on that alone. Mr. Giebler has not entirely severed his newspaper associations. The staff of the Moving Picture World wishes the best of success to him and we feel sure that he will make a hit.

Leopold D. Wharton in Harness

Senior Member of Well-Known Firm of Producers Returns from Battle Creek to Assist in Direction of Chief Flynn's Serial.

LEOPOLD D. WHARTON arrived in New York last week from the Battle Creek Sanitarium where he had been for three weeks, resting up, at the advice of his physicians. He came east at this time in order that he might assist his brother, Theodore, in the direction of the first episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," the Whartons' new serial, written by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service.

Mr. Wharton was met in New York City by his brother, who has been in charge of the preliminary New York scenes, and with the principal characters in the production, they left for the Wharton Studios at Ithaca, New York.

Leopold Wharton was author and co-director of "The Great White Trail," a five-reel feature which the M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Foursquare Exchanges rate as one of their best distributing assets. This same company will have charge of the distribution of "The Eagle's Eye."

Ambassador Gerard's Story in Pictures

"My Four Years in Germany" to Be Transferred to the Screen by Mark M. Dintenfass.

FOR the first time in history, History is being visualized for the generations to come by the motion picture. I wanted to contribute something to this important record. I did not want to reproduce war, for while Americans of the future might appreciate war scenes, I believed other scenes would be better liked by the audiences of today. About the most important single contribution to the literature of the war by an American is Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany." This we are filming. It exactly fits my idea of what a big motion picture suited to the times ought to be.

So said Mark M. Dintenfass, president of the Mark M. Dintenfass Productions, Inc., 220 West 42d street, New York City, who will shortly present "My Four Years in Germany," in the company's first official statement to the press and industry. Old timers in the trade recall that Dintenfass, who is a film pioneer, was one of the earliest makers of patriotic pictures, and to such his tackling of the Gerard picture, based on the most patriotic book of the day, is no surprise.

"Yes, I suppose I can be classed with the early producers of patriotic films," said Mr. Dintenfass to the Moving Picture World. "I made Civil War photoago at the Dintenfass-Champion Studios at Coytesville, New Jersey—the oldest moving picture studio in that state, with the exception of Mr. Edison's original one at Orange. Coytesville is on the edge of Fort Lee, famous today as the greatest home of studios in the East. And to think that such a comparatively short time ago I was all alone there!

"I am spending more money on the smallest studio scene of the Gerard picture than an entire play cost when I went into the business. Director William Nigh has not spared expense, and when you know the entire foreign localities had to be built for the majority of the scenes, you will appreciate what that means. For instance, we are taking just five times as much footage as we expect to actually use. That will give you an idea of the scale on which we are producing. We are going at it as though we expected the finished production to be the most important film of a decade and that is what we absolutely expect."

Mr. Dintenfass entered the business as all the pioneers did, via the exhibitors route. He opened the first motion picture house on Market street, Philadelphia—Market, which now has a dozen of 'em. That was back in 1905. The startling change in exhibiting conditions is manifest in the admission, by Mr. Dintenfass, that he operated the projecting machine as well as bossed the place. The elaborate "topical weeklies" of local events that are a program feature of the best theaters today were not in use at that time, but Mr. Dintenfass somehow sensed their value, and though he did not show such views as a regular weekly thing at his Market street house he did project them whenever he found time to photograph any. This limited venture as a producer made him sigh for the big producing field—then New York—where he became interested in the Cameraphone Company.

Next he launched the Actophone Company, which was his own, and what he can tell about trailing by Patents Company detectives would seem like a chapter out of the Gerard reminiscences. Finally, though, the independent producers won the day, bringing the reader to the birth of Mr. Dintenfass' Champion Film Company, which, free from the menace of patent litigation, had a most successful career until purchased by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the merger of the "Independent" interests in 1912.

Mr. Dintenfass was a prime mover in this merger, as well as in the organization of the Universal Exchange, of which he became secretary and treasurer, and managing director. He has since parted with the majority of his interests in the Universal, and except for financial participation in a comedy producing company, has been in virtual retirement. Mr. Dintenfass was a Single Tax candidate for Mayor of New York City in 1912.

Tucker Finishes "Cinderella Man"

American Director With Wide English Experience Now One of the Goldwyn Fixtures.

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER is by no means a recent acquisition to the Goldwyn force of directors, but he remains a cause for congratulation. His artistry is again made manifest in Mae Marsh's production of "The Cinderella Man" and bids fair to bring him additional honors in the new Mabel Normand drama. In the first mentioned play his opportunities began when the script of the stage version was handed to him and did not end till the picture had been assembled, cut and titled. Mr. Tucker's continuity of the Mae Marsh story might well serve as an example to every writer who aims adaptation of another's play or book. Not only was every point in the Carpenter play brought out by means of visualized action, but scores of contributory causes, focusing around the high lights in the story, were translated into action, surely and steadily, with a minimum of "spoken" titles. As a result, the finished film takes on the completeness of a novel in its opportunities for character portrayal.

Mr. Tucker's past achievements equipped him for his work at the Goldwyn Studio, and when it is recalled that he produced the widely discussed "Traffic in Souls" before transferring his activities to England for a long period, it will be seen that handling difficult subjects is nothing new to the young director. His capital direction of Albert Chevalier in "The Middleman" has not been forgotten by those who study the screen, nor have his other pictures passed out of mind. The English version of "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Rupert of Hentzau," the sequel; "Called Back," the great Wilkie Collins drama, and the W. W. Jacobs stories all were given life on the screen by George Loane Tucker, to say nothing of the big patriotic spectacle produced for the British Government, "England Expects."

It was Mr. Tucker who convinced Hall Caine that of all the great novelist's stories, "The Manxman" was the one he alone should produce. The result is seen today in his memorable conception of "The Manxman," and to those who know the circumstances it is a milestone in his character development as well.

After a long period of English work, Mr. Tucker returned to America last spring, with a number of productions, including "The Manxman," in his baggage. The director took deliberate time to get his bearings, market the films he had brought, and make many inquiries and personal investigations of the various producing companies in the field before allying himself with any. Ultimately he came to Goldwyn to make "The Cinderella Man" for Mae Marsh. The result of the mutual acquaintance gained by the director and Goldwyn was so satisfactory to both sides that Mr. Tucker is now engaged on a new vehicle for Mabel Normand, "Dodging a Million."

EMPIRE ALL STAR MOVES OFFICES.

The offices of the Empire All Star Corporation have been moved from the Glendale Studios to the Empire Theater Building, Broadway, New York. The telephone connection is Bryant 7761. It is announced that the company has abandoned the Glendale (L. I.) studio and will make future productions in California.

Government Disagrees With Funkhouser

Creel Committee Passes "The Rose of Blood," Without Change, After Chicago Censor Had Raised Issue.

THE United States Government, through the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is chairman, has stamped its approval on "The Rose of Blood," the William Fox Standard Picture which depicts the efforts of revolutionists to overthrow the Government of the Czar.

This approval has been given in the face of the statement of Major C. L. M. Funkhouser, Chicago film censor, that he had refused a permit for showing the production in Chicago because the Committee on Public Information, which exercises much the same sort of supervision over motion pictures that it does over newspapers, had requested such action.

As a matter of fact, according to Mr. Creel, Major Funkhouser was responsible for calling the attention of the Government to the film. He wired the Department of Justice requesting assistance in preventing the production from being shown, his telegram being referred to Mr. Creel, who turned it over to Director L. M. Rubel, of the Division of Pictures.

For the purpose of co-operating with federal authorities to the extent of its ability and to give them first hand knowledge of the scope of the picture, the Fox Film Corporation sent a print of "The Rose of Blood" to Washington. It was reviewed by the Division of Pictures and by representatives of the War Department. After seeing the production, Mr. Rubel wrote the following letter to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox corporation:

"The picture, 'The Rose of Blood,' has been reviewed by this committee and representatives of the War Department and is released for exhibition without cuts or changes."

Injunction proceedings now are pending before Judge Carpenter in Chicago to prevent Major Funkhouser from enforcing his mandate against the exhibition of the picture.

"The Rose of Blood" is a Russian play and was written by Richard Ordynski, stage director, of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, who played opposite Miss Theda Bara, the star.

The picture has been released since November 4 and has been shown in most of the large cities of the country, including Washington, the seat of National Government, but encountered no opposition until it reached Chicago.

WAR TAKES FIVE FOX PUBLICITY MEN.

Five former members of the general publicity bureau of the Fox Film Corporation now are serving the United States Government, either in the army or the navy.

Arthur B. McGinley, formerly editor of the Exhibitors' Bulletin, one of William Fox's publications, is a private in a machine gun battery, being stationed at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass.

Jay Voorhies, who until his enlistment covered the Fox Eastern studios for the publicity department, is a chief yeoman in the navy, at present being attached to the cable censor's office in New York City.

Robert Houghton, who was connected with the publicity bureau's photographic division, is now at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y., as a private in the heavy artillery.

Two other members of the publicity staff have departed within the last week. A. B. Bernd, engaged in special work, and Gerald B. Spiero, who prepared the mimeograph and clipping sheet services, have enlisted in the quartermaster's corps of the army and will be stationed within a short time at Jacksonville, Fla.

FILM ORGANIZATION SECURES INSURANCE REDUCTION.

Through the efforts of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California a marked reduction has been secured in the rate of compensation insurance on the employees of moving picture houses. Formerly the owners of moving picture theaters were discriminated against in the matter of compensation insurance and were compelled to pay the exorbitant rate of $1.04 on each $100 of payroll, as compared with a much lower rate prevailing for vaudeville and other similar houses. The new premium rate is 41 cents per $100, meaning a substantial saving to theater owners in this territory. In its complaint against the former rate the local organization of film men brought out the fact that employees in moving picture houses were exposed to no more hazards than the employees of other theaters, according to past experience, and that modern moving picture houses were setting standards for safety.

Norman Eisner, secretary of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California, left recently on a business trip to Chicago.

Eugene O'Brien

EUGENE O'BRIEN, who will appear as leading man with Norma Talmadge in "Ghosts of Yesterday," her screen adaptation of the Rupret Hughes drama, "Two Women," soon to be released, was also seen with the young screen star in the leading male roles of her recent successes, "Poppy" and "The Moth." He has also been engaged for the lead in the next Talmadge production on which work will soon be begun. In addition to his work on the screen Mr. O'Brien has been filling a long engagement in that Broadway success "A Country Cousin."

As soon as the youthful Eugene O'Brien decided to leave the little Colorado university town out in the Rocky Mountains where he was born and had studied medicine, his thoughts turned to the stage and he determined to go to New York. His dramatic debut was made with a vaudeville sketch and later he appeared with Irene Bentley. Then Elsie Janis, still in her early teens, discovered him and engaged him for a part in "The Little Duchess." A disappointment awaited the young actor, however, when Miss Janis decided to appear in New York. He was, unfortunately, too young for a Broadway appearance, or so at least his managers decided. However, Harry Woodruff had already seen him and took him with him in "Brown of Harvard."

It was his "Brown of Harvard" experience which gave O'Brien an introduction to Daniel Frohman and made him a member of the cast of "The Thief" with Margaret Illington and Kyrle Bellew. Then followed engagements with Kyrle Bellew in "The Builder," with Ethel Barrymore in "Mid-Channel" and "Trelawney" and with Fritz Scheff in musical comedy. Later Mr. O'Brien played with Irene Fenwick in "The Million," with Frances Starr in "The Case of Becky" and Molly McIntyre in "Kitty Mackaye." This last production led to his screen debut with the World Corporation in "The Moonstone." He was with Clara Kimball Young in "The Rise of Susan" and with Olga Petrova in "The Scarlet Woman." In Chicago he was with Essanay for two pictures with Edna Mayo, "The Chaperon" and "The Return of Eve." Marie Tempest and Laura Hope Crews were responsible for his return to the stage, but he was given an opportunity to return to the screen when Miss Talmadge decided upon the production of "Poppy" and "The Moth." Recently in Philadelphia Mr. O'Brien was favorably received by the critics for his performance in Booth Tarkington's and Julian Street's "The Country Cousin," which is now having a long and successful run on Broadway.

PATHE BONUS COMES AS XMAS GIFT.

With the Christmas spirit already well in the air, it is appropriate indeed that Pathe should have just distributed another big bonus for the September-October period and a large number of men in Pathe's efficient sales force will find their names neatly inscribed in printer's ink below. Among "Those Who Smile," as a result of having earned the extra Pathe Christmas present, are: L. E. Kennedy, A. M. Holah, W. W. Kofeldt, R. Junet, C. W. Perry, G. W. Fuller, L. A. Sheridan, R. V. Anderson, G. L. Hanes, B. H. Bogart, C. D. Hammer, D. C. Stearns, E. A. Helouis, L. A. Samuelson, G. Laundra, J. B. Dumestre, J. Sievers, J. Fontaine, M. Come, L. Adler, W. J. Busch, T. F. Holden, E. E. Heller and J. F. Toner.

Important Changes at Select Branches

New Managers in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver—Sales Manager for Kansas City.

A NUMBER of important changes have taken place during the current week in several of the western exchanges maintained by the Select Pictures Corporation. Harry H. Hicks, formerly branch manager at Los Angeles, has been appointed branch manager at San Francisco. Bernard E. Loper, for the past five years Pathe's manager at Los Angeles, has gone over to the Select organization, to be branch manager in the same city.

H. L. Knappen has become manager of Select's Denver exchange, thus returning to scenes of his first activity, where he had at one time been manager for Pathe Freres. Charles S. Goetz becomes sales manager at Kansas City, where he will be under W. H. Bell, branch manager at that city.

The appointing of Mr. Hicks to be executive over the San Francisco branch is in the nature of promotion and recognition of the exceptionally fine work which Mr. Hicks has done for Select in Los Angeles, at which place he has been for some time past. The San Francisco territory gives Mr. Hicks a larger field, and one with which he is equally familiar, as, prior to becoming Select's branch manager at Los Angeles, he had charge of the General Film exchange at San Francisco.

Bernard E. Loper, who becomes manager of Select's Los Angeles branch, was the oldest manager in point of service in the entire organization of Pathe Exchanges, Inc. Mr. Loper joined the Pathe forces in March, 1914, and for the past three years has made a wonderful success in the Los Angeles office, which he personally established. Loper is one of the pioneer exchange men of the Southwest, where he was associated with J. D. Wheeler in Houston and San Antonio.

H. L. Knappen, who becomes Select's manager at Denver, has had the interesting experience of changing the scene of his activity from West to South and back again to the West. Mr. Knappen achieved a great success as salesman and then as manager for Pathe at Denver and in San Francisco, and also under the banner of the International in the latter city. Until last Saturday Mr. Knappen was manager of the General Film Company at Atlanta. He leaves this position to accept Select's Denver post.

Charles S. Goetz, the new sales manager at Kansas City, was until recently with the General Film Company as manager of its St. Louis branch. Prior to that he had opened both the Cleveland and the Detroit exchanges for the International. When the latter company was merged with Pathe Freres Mr. Goetz went to the General. Before going to International he had been with Artcraft, having assumed charge of its New York exchange when that business was opened. Mr. Goetz opened a number of offices for William Fox in the Middle West during the past, and he was at one time sales manager for the World Film Corporation, in charge of all branches.

Another change during the current week in the Select branches is the moving of the Des Moines office to Omaha, Nebraska. Mr. C. W. Taylor, who has been Select's manager at Des Moines, retains charge of the exchange, which will be located at 1512 Howard street, Omaha. Mr. Taylor feels that on account of express service and resulting carriage charges it is possible to obtain better results by distributing from Omaha than from Des Moines.

Still a further change in Select exchanges occurred in Washington, D. C., when V. P. Whitaker, branch manager in the capital city exchange, moved his headquarters from the old "E" street location to 525 13th street, N. W.

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, continues on his trip throughout the Middle West. During the ensuing week he will turn eastward, however, and visit exchanges at Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo.

ALFRED HICKMAN IN NEW BRENON PICTURE.

Alfred Hickman has been added to the cast of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, which is rapidly progressing at the Brenon studios on Hudson Heights. He will be seen in the role of the slavey's father, a part which has been developed in the screen adaptation of Jerome K. Jerome's famous play.

Mr. Hickman has long been a favorite on the stage. During the past few years, in common with many actors of note, he has been devoting the greater part of his time to screen work. The new role gives Mr. Hickman an interesting vehicle for his art and he will add much to the picture.

National's Executive Committee Meets

Formation Is Announced of Class C Producers, Under Chairmanship of Joseph A. Golden.

THE members of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, as recently appointed for the ensuing year by President William A. Brady, met for the first time on Monday, December 3, and transacted considerable routine business. The meeting was presided over by Chairman Walter W. Irwin, with the following members in attendance: President William A. Brady, J. E. Brulatour, P. A. Powers, Arthur S. Friend, William A. Johnston, Louis F. Blumenthal and Louis L. Levine. The following officials representing producing and distributing companies, members of the association, were also in attendance by invitation: W. R. Sheehan, Fox; R. H. Cochrane, Universal; W. E. Atkinson, Metro; Felix Feist, World Film, and William Wright, Kalem.

Reports of several committees were read, indicating widespread activities on behalf of the various divisions of the organization which they represent showing good results accomplished in every direction.

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott reported the formation of a new branch comprising members eligible as Class C producers and the following companies actively assisting in the organization of this branch, of which Joseph A. Golden, of Crystal, is chairman, with L. Abrams, of Craftsman, as secretary: Biograph Company, Craftsman Film Laboratories, Crystal Film Company, Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., Erbograp Company, Kalem Company, Evans Film Manufacturing Company and Paragon Films, Inc.

The following companies and individuals were elected to membership: Ogden Pictures Corporation, Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., Arthur H. Jacobs Photoplay Company, Craftsman Film Laboratories, Biograph Company, Paragon Films, Inc., Greater New York Slide Company, Carl Anderson, Studio Director, H. C. Segal, state rights buyer, and Albert H. Cormier in the General Division.

The committee went on record in advocating the appointment of Grant W. Anson as commissioner of licenses through a letter which is to be addressed to Mayor-elect Hylan by President Brady, indorsing Mr. Anson's candidacy for this important post in the new administration.

It was decided to issue a call for the quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors to be held at the headquarters of the National Association in the Times Building on Friday, December 14, at 11 o'clock.

FAIRBANKS PICTURE TO OPEN RIVOLI.

Douglas Fairbanks' next picture to be released by Artcraft, "A Modern Musketeer," has been selected by S. L. Rothapfel, to open the new Rivoli theater at Broadway and 49th street, New York City. This marks the third time that a Douglas Fairbanks picture has been selected by Mr. Rothapfel as the opening attraction of a new theater, the Knickerbocker and Rialto both having presented Fairbanks productions as the initial attraction.

Immediately upon the completion of "A Modern Musketeer," Director Allan Dwan will make a flying trip across the country to attend the New York premier of this photoplay at the Rivoli. Mr. Dwan will return to California promptly with his wife, professionally known as Pauline Bush, who recently recovered from a serious illness.

The Fairbanks company has just returned from the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where the major part of "A Modern Musketeer" was staged and will produce the remainder of the film at the Hollywood, Cal., studio. When asked for his first impression of the Grand Canyon, Fairbanks said: "I was disappointed in the Grand Canyon. I couldn't jump it."

A PROFITABLE NOT A PEACEABLE THANKSGIVING.

"If I don't make any money I have peace; and when I do make money, I nearly get killed."

This was the complaint voiced by Manager Davidson, of the Dante theater, Central avenue and East Fourteenth street, Cleveland, following the Thanksgiving holidays, when he appeared at the exchanges badly banged up.

"I have been wishing for a good crowd in my theater ever since I bought it. Well, I got the crowd last Thursday night—every nationality. A drunk started trouble and I started to put him out. He and his friends put me out, after biting my arm, blackening my eye and kicking my back. It's a terrible world, boys, especially where I do business."

Tax Exemption for Army and Navy

Bill Offered to Lift the War Tax from Tickets Sold to Officers and Enlisted Men.

MORE trouble for the exhibitors of the nation is contemplated in a bill introduced into Congress by Representative Nicholas J. Sinnott, of Oregon, to exempt officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces of the United States from payment of the war tax on tickets of admission to places of amusement.

The motion picture exhibitors of the country would be the last persons to oppose any move to better the condition of the men who are to fight for Uncle Sam, yet they fear that if Mr. Sinnott's bill is enacted into law the book-keeping incident to keeping a record of admissions will become so intricate as to leave open opportunities for errors and the exhibitors to fines or perhaps imprisonment. The exhibitors now feel that it will require an expert accountant to figure up the amount they monthly owe Uncle Sam under the provisions of the law of October 3, 1917.

The Sinnott bill (H. R. 6551), which has been referred to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives for consideration, reads in full as follows:

"That commissioned officers and enlisted men in uniform of the military and naval forces of the United States shall be exempt from the provisions of this section when purchasing a ticket for his own admission." "This section" is that which requires the payment of one cent on each ten cents or fraction thereof of the admission paid to any place of amusement.

HAS TROUBLE COLLECTING WAR TAX.

Moving Picture World, New York City.

Gentlemen: I am taking the liberty of giving my experience and views on the much discussed 15c. reel tax. My theater is one of the small theaters seating 386 located in working class residential district. The following are my experiences:

In trying to raise prices, my regular prices are adults, 10c., children 5c. Some months ago I tried to charge adults 15c. and children 10c. for the extra big attractions about once in two weeks. The result was absolute failure. Since Nov. 1 I added the 1c. Government tax, charging adults 11c. and children 6c. The receipts for three weeks after Nov. 1 averaged $15.00 per week less than three weeks before Nov. 1. The weather for the three weeks after Nov. 1 was ideal, so I can not blame it to the weather. To attempt to increase prices about 11c. and 6c. will surely prove ruinous, so it is impossible for a theater like mine to pass the additional 15c. reel tax along.

The producers claim that they can not pay the tax and stay in business. The question arises, can the small exhibitor who is unable to increase prices pay that tax and stay in business? Just as sure as two and two are four the additional $7 a week that the 15c. per reel will cost most exhibitors would drive a great number of the smaller exhibitors to bankruptcy.

It would seem to me that in the case of a small exhibitor who is unable to pass that tax on to their patrons that the producers ought to share the burden of that tax with the exhibitor, each paying half of the tax. I for my part would be willing to pay half of the present 15c. reel tax, feeling reconciled to the loss in the knowledge that the producers are sharing the loss with me, and I feel certain that the majority of exhibitors would willingly agree to share the burden of that tax equally with the producers.

Yours very truly,

J. E. Stocker.

Detroit, Nov. 30.

ALLEGED DUPERS GET BILL OF PARTICULARS.

Judge Augustus N. Hand in the United States District Court on December 4 overruled a demurrer interposed by Fred Beck, Lewis Weiss and Leo Singer to an indictment charging them with conspiring to infringe upon the rights of the Cardinal Film Company, which owns a copy-right to the feature film entitled "Joan the Woman."

However, the defendants were afforded whatever benefit they may derive from a bill of particulars which Judge Hand directed the government to furnish the accused men in order that they may prepare a defense to the charge against them. The bill of particulars will virtually give the defendants a synopsis of the government's case.

Theater Managers Warned

Disregard of Fuel Commissioner's Rules for Electric Signs May Bring More Drastic Regulation.

THERE seems to have been an inclination on the part of theater men and merchants to get around the recently announced electric sign order issued by the United States Fuel Administration—at least reports are reaching headquarters at Washington that in some cities the order is not being closely obeyed. Apparently they are hiding behind the exceptions to the general provision requiring the "dousing" of the lights at eleven P. M.

As a result further instructions to State fuel administrators as to the regulation of electric display signs have been sent out. These officials are warned that unless the spirit of the limitation order is strictly enforced the Fuel Administration will withdraw all exceptions to the order and prohibit the illumination of all electric signs except between 7:45 and 11 o'clock in the evening.

As the order now reads directional signs and the name of the theater and of the performance may be lighted at an earlier hour. It is understood that exhibitors and others thought that all of the display lighting on the exterior of the theaters was "directional" lighting in that it served to attract the attention of prospective patrons to the site of the theater. This has led to the announcement of what "directional lighting" actually is. It is expected that every one interested will hereafter observe the sign requirements.

The order provides that directional signs and the name of the theater and the name of the performance can be lighted from one-half hour after sunset until one-half hour after the time scheduled for the commencement of the performance. In the case of moving picture theaters with a continuous performance, directional signs may be lighted from one-half hour after sunset until one-half hour after the beginning of the last performance. Display advertising on theaters can only operate between 7:45 and 11 P. M.

Directional signs, the Fuel Administrative states, are signs over the door or extended over the sidewalk, which give the name and nature of the business.

LATEST FILM TAX RULINGS.

A number of additional decisions have been made by the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue upon moving picture films. A synopsis of these, just published for the information of revenue officers and others concerned, is as follows:

Printed or hand-lettered titles or subtitles used in connection with a complete picture production, constitute a part of the film and should be included in the length of the film upon which the tax is to be computed. If these projections are in the shape of slides or announcements, no tax will attach.

Blank films are taxable only when sold by a manufacturer, producer or importer.

The tax is not upon the manufacture of the film itself, but upon its sale or lease.

A distributor of films, pure and simple, is not subject to tax under the war emergency revenue law.

There is no floor tax on films.

SEAT TAX RECEIPTS INCREASED LAST YEAR.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, according to the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, just presented to Congress, motion picture and other theaters, museums and concert halls paid into the Treasury, under the special taxes placed upon them based upon the seating capacity of the place taxed, $1,027,927.63. This exceeds the payments made during the preceding twelve months by $13,016.35.

Figures are not yet available showing how much money the Government will obtain from the admission taxes which were included in the war emergency revenue law of October 3, 1917, and which became effective on November 2, of this year. It is expected that perhaps during the forthcoming twelve months the seating tax collections will be lower than last year because of the large number of small houses that have been closed.

OLIVE THOMAS EXPECTS TO VISIT NEW YORK.

Olive Thomas, who is working on "Limousine Life," her latest picture under Triangle colors, is planning an eastern vacation. Miss Thomas hopes to leave Los Angeles for New York on December 17 and plans to spend Christmas with her mother in Pittsburgh.

George Backer

Type of the Successful Business Man Who Is Coming Into the Business.

THE fact that the motion picture industry has begun to attract men who have gone far in other business is a most encouraging sign. It proves, for one thing, the nearness of the introduction of business methods which are indispensable to progress and stability. Right now, when for its welfare the motion picture industry most needs the strengthening, steadying touch of men who instill confidence, the entry of George Backer into the field means a very great deal. How much it already has meant is shown in the accomplishments of M. H. Hoffman, Inc.—of which

George Backer.

Mr. Backer is president—and the effect upon the industry as a whole resulting from upbuilding policies to which Mr. Backer is pledged.

Not quite six months old, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., occupies a position among distributing organizations which could scarcely have been gained without wisest planning and administration. Its pre-eminent place among independent concerns reflects the application of business procedure as yet too little practiced in the motion picture field.

Merchandising methods similar to those to be found in institutions like United States Steel, National Cash Register, United Cigar Stores and American Telegraph and Telephone have prevailed with M. H. Hoffman, Inc., since its inception. Existing practices in the motion picture industry, which have been frowned upon by the ablest men in it, have been put under the heel of this concern.

From the beginning, this young concern has proceeded to get only the best pictures; to distribute them at the lowest prices consistent; and to co-operate with the exhibitor, after each picture was booked, in securing the greatest number of patrons possible to see them. Throughout M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has done business on big business lines, and all along its traveled course it has left nothing save what was constructive and based upon fair dealing.

George Backer acquired his fortune through his own unaided efforts. His holdings are perhaps the most eloquent tribute to his industry, his capacity, his integrity. When he decided to engage in the marketing of motion pictures—which he did because he foresaw possibilities through a rightly administered organization—his first step was to invite as his chief associate and executive officer a man who had the confidence of the industry.

This man, M. H. Hoffman, recognized in Mr. Backer the one capable of accomplishing those things awaiting the attention of an exceptional individual. So Mr. Hoffman became a large shareholder in M. H. Hoffman, Inc., assumed its vice-presidency, and undertook the task of administering its affairs in accordance with basic principles on which all large commercial achievements rest.

What George Backer has done in the building industry it is more than likely he will do in motion pictures. In New York City, Mr. Backer is held to be one of the best of builders, which means that he is one of the ablest builders in the world.

In 1917, when the panic was at its height, Mr. Backer refused to swerve from his standard of "the best always, nothing less." He bought the finest of materials when he might have gotten along with others not so expensive; paid top prices for labor in order that the workmanship should be flawless, and completed what he had begun in a way that earned confidence of those with whom he dealt—and a substantial profit on his sagacity and investment.

The Chatham Hotel, just completed by the George Backer

Construction in association with the New York Central Railroad Company, is held by experts to be the finest example of its kind in any country. The Godfrey Building, at 729 Seventh avenue (the only building in New York devoted exclusively to the film industry), is considered the model. The many huge business and apartment structures erected by the George Backer Construction Company, under Mr. Backer's supervision, are known as "Backer buildings," each perfect in utility, as well as in simplicity of design, workmanship and materials used.

The George Backer studio, now nearing completion in West Thirty-eighth street, near Broadway, is another example of the Backer foresight for what is needed; the last work in motion picture studios and in which will be made, the few big features which the George Backer Film Corporation (of which Mr. Backer is head) is to produce each year.

All of which would seem to indicate that the industry is fortunate in gaining a worker in its midst with the capacity for developing confidence; whose business vision enables him to see what a growing commercial unit most requires, who will not rest content until those matters have been supplied and, after that, push ahead for further achievements.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 9 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Eternal Temptress" at the Rialto.

MME. LINA CAVALIERI made her photographic debut at the Rialto the week of Dec. 8 in a Paramount production called "The Eternal Temptress," written by Mme. Fred De Gresac. The story deals with the ticklish situation in Italy just prior to that country's decision to enter the present world conflict, its scenes being laid in Venice and in Rome. Elliott Dexter plays opposite Mme. Cavalleri, and the supporting cast includes Allen Hale, Hallen Mostyn, and James Laffey, as its principal members. The picture was directed by Emile Chautard.

The latest news, animated cartoons, educational films, a scenic feature and a comedy were also shown.

The singers were Signor Bonelli and the Rialto Male Quartet.

"The Land of Promise" at the Strand.

The principal photodramatic attraction at the Strand was "The Land of Promise," in which Adolph Zukor presents Miss Billie Burke. W. Somerset Maugham, the author, chose Canada to represent this land, but under the sparkling surface of the photoplay one is made to see that each individual has a "Land of Promise" in his or her own heart and that happiness lies waiting for us as our very doors. Miss Burke has been given a capable cast, including Thomas Meighan, Helen T. Tracy, J. W. Johnson, Mary Alden, Margaret Seddon, Walter McEwen, Grace Studeford and John Raymond. It is a Paramount Picture. Scenic studies, a Bray comedy cartoon, and the Strand Topical Review, containing the latest American and European news pictures, were also shown.

"Blood Stained Russia, German Intrigue, Treason and Revolt," photographed by Donald C. Thompson, war correspondent for Leslie's Weekly, was a special feature.

The soloists were Rosa Lind and Herbert W. Waterous.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater, Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon" was the picture attraction for the entire week.

BROOKLYN OPERATORS ENJOINED.

Justice Walter N. Jaycox, in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn, on December 6 made permanent an injunction previously granted in a temporary form restraining Sam Kaplan and others, representatives of the Moving Picture Operators' Union Local No. 306, from conducting an alleged boycott and taking steps believed by the Ridgewood Amusement Company, the plaintiff in the action, to be injurious to its interests. The Ridgewood company asserts the union held meetings opposite its theater and caused men to march in front of its house carrying signs charging the company was employing non-union labor, etc., in the effort to compel its operator to join the union. The injunction is to remain in effect until the trial of the action of the Ridgewood company against the union.

Meeting the War Tax in the Studio

Economy in Production Without Decreasing Quality Will Solve Problem, Says Scardon.

ACCORDING to Director Paul Scardon, the Federal war tax on motion picture films can be made up in the studio by everyone "doing his bit." Mr. Scardon has studied the problem from the angle of the studio and in an interview on the subject said:

"I believe from personal experiments in facilitating production that the tax imposed upon the production of pictures can be made up to the producing companies in their own studios, if all directors and heads of departments, who are given a free hand, will inject a little patriotism and a deal of system into their work. If they do," says Mr. Scardon, "the war tax will not only be met, but the business efficiency of the studios will be increased as well.

"A company of players remaining idle for one day, as a result of the failure to plan the work ahead, results in the loss of enough money to pay the war tax on at least thirty-five reels of film. This loss can be avoided if the director is given his script in time and the work is intelligently planned, and if the errors in system are corrected as a result of the present emergency, the war tax will eventually be classed as a blessing in disguise. The average age in the personnel of the producing forces is hard-working and conscientious, but improvement is always possible, and if we all get right 'on the job' with a firm resolve to 'do our bit' by increasing efficiency, the present menace to the industry will be met and conquered at its source. Delay exists in all studios and all efforts should be directed to eliminating the evil.

"Many difficulties that beset the director are beyond his control, such as the indisposition of the star, the inclemency of the weather, the lack of studio space for his sets, or the failure of lights. But even these obstacles may often be surmounted by a quick change of the plans for the day—other scenes that are possible under the circumstances may be taken or work started on the next script if available. To meet just such difficulties, I recently started work on three different subjects, going back to and finishing each one when the cause of the delay had been overcome. The war tax was not a consideration at that time, but the cost of production on each subject was held at a minimum.

"The war tax must be paid, and the money with which to pay it must come from some source. The public will not tolerate a decrease in the artistic or the dramatic value of the pictures and so, without taking into consideration the business office viewpoint, but speaking solely from the viewpoint of the director, I suggest system and greater efficiency as a possible and practical solution of the problem.

"As a concrete example of my ideas, I may mention a recent time-saving emergency. I had planned to work on a big set on a specified day, but when the time arrived all of the studio floor space with the exception of a strip about ten feet wide was in use by other directors. All of my exterior scenes were made and only interiors remained to complete. The script called for some important action in a hallway that I had planned to do last, but to meet studio conditions as I found them I had a hallway set placed in the available ten feet of space and so saved a day's time.

"It is now recognized that the conservation of our resources and the preservation of our industries are vitally important to the success of our arms. Everything that we save helps the cause indirectly and ourselves directly. To help meet the war tax is a patriotic duty and if it is met by increased efficiency its benefits will last beyond the successful termination of the war."

Methods in Mexico

Exhibitors Give Promissory Notes as Change and Translate Titles in Record Time.

THERE'S a marked scarcity of copper coins in the United States, but it isn't a marker to what it is in Mexico. Down in Chihuahua, in the state of that name, in the district where Pancho Villa is being man-hunted by Mexican federal troops, a Mexican silver dollar is about the smallest metal coin a fellow sees, and the girls in the ticket windows of the moving picture theaters make change with printed promises to pay. The Carranza government has come to stay, and will make good if Villa can be caught and put where he will not throw any more bricks into the machinery.

So says J. de la C. Alarcon, manager of the Alcazar Theater at Juarez, and who, with his associates, is interested in other theaters located at El Paso, Juarez and Chihuahua. One of his partners is Francisco Aldareti, American citizen and member of the registration board for El Paso county.

"Despite the rather chaotic condition that the dispatches picture in Mexico," says Senor Alarcon, "business is on a much better basis than one would suppose. We are conducting our theaters in Chihuahua in much the same fashion as you do in the United States. The great difficulty is finding small change. There is a marked scarcity of metal coins of a value below the Mexican peso. For some reason there is an apparent hoarding of such coins, and practically all of them have been withdrawn from circulation. Our admission charge is 30 cents in Mexican money, and we make change by issuing a sort of 'promise to pay,' which is redeemable at a local Chihuahua bank, or in the shape of additional admissions when the moving picture devotee cares to witness a subsequent film."

American films are used, just the same as folks see in any American city; but by an ingenious bit of mechanism the "editing" is changed, so that along with the American inserts there goes a translation into Spanish. The Mexican audience, therefore, keeps right up with the trend of the picture, just as do those who read English. Senor Alarcon's concern maintains a staff of translators, and the "script" is rendered from English into Spanish in rapid fashion. Full translations of an ordinary five or six reel film can be made within a few minutes.

The Spanish rendition of the script is typewritten on to a small film, which, passing through a projecting machine, is shown in one corner of the picture roll, simultaneously with the regular script in English. This obviates the necessity for changing the original films, which are returned to distributing houses in just the same fashion as is done in the United States.

"Transportation facilities are another problem at the moment," said Senor Alarcon. "Every business man in Mexico—theater men, as well as all the others—will welcome the day when Villa, the trouble-maker, is finally eliminated."

And, by the way, the senor pronounces it "Vill-ya," sounding the l's with the "i" and vowel "y" sound.

C. W. BUNN GIVEN BIG POST WITH PATHE.

C. W. Bunn, formerly manager of Pathe's Chicago Branch, has been appointed special sales representative. Working under the direction of Sales Manager F. C. Quimby, he will visit the various Pathe exchanges.

Mr. Bunn got very excellent results in Chicago because he realizes that the highly efficient Pathe system is of great importance in the successful operation of an exchange. Mr. Bunn was selected for the important position of special sales representative because he appreciates fully the value of this system and because he has demonstrated his ability to put it into successful operation. His first stopping place on a long tour in the interests of the Pathe organization is the Kansas City office.

DE MILLE WILL TAKE COMPANY TO MISSISSIPPI.

The first of the Cecil B. De Mille series of Arctcraft super-productions will be staged around the Mississippi River, and an entire producing organization will leave California for that territory shortly. Miss Jeanie MacPherson is now working on the script of this production, which is to be an adaptation of Perley Poore Sheehan's novel, "The Whispering Chorus," a gripping story of the Middle West,

Among the Picture Theaters

California Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

Newest Picture House in Golden State Embraces Every Modern Comfort and Convenience Possible—Ground and Structure Involves Expenditure of $2,000,000—Periscope in Manager's Office, Room Devoted to First Aid Treatment and Largest Unit Orchestra Turned Out by Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones Company Among Its Features.

WHEN President William Howard Taft came to San Francisco to break ground for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition he unconsciously gave to the city by the Golden Gate a slogan for which it had long sought, when he said in a memorable address "San Francisco Knows How." Had he been present at the opening of the California Theater on November 1 he would undoubtedly have repeated this now famous statement, for the city which within a space of so few years has risen Phoenix-like from the ashes, and which has given to the world its greatest exposition, has likewise built and dedicated what is probably the most splendid moving picture theater in the country.

A happy choice, indeed, was made in the selection of a name for this beautiful theater. The name California is one to conjure with when moving pictures are considered, for more than half the films now being released are made in this State, with huge capital interested. It is fitting that the State which has taken such a lead in the producing field should likewise take a leading place in the art of moving picture presentation and give to the world a theater expressive of the highest ideals. Such a theater is the new California.

The California Theater is located at Fourth and Market streets, in the heart of the shopping district of San Francisco on a lot covering an area of one hundred by one hundred and seventy feet. This property was purchased by the Market Street Realty Company for $1,250,000 and the completed theater brings the total investment close to the $2,000,000 mark. Work was commenced on the project in October, 1916, and the house was completed and opened on schedule time. The building is of steel and concrete construction and the two beams that form the main support of the balcony are the largest ever made on the Pacific Coast, weighing about thirty-five tons each.

The theater was designed by Alfred Henry Jacobs, a local architect without previous experience in this line, who made wide use of the vast fund of ideas gathered by Eugene H. Roth in his long experience as a moving picture exhibitor. The architecture is inspired by the Collegiate Gothic, this style being followed in both exterior and interior decorations, with modifications to conform to present day conveniences. The exterior is finished in cream colored tile without any color relief, except under the overhanging cornices. The structure is surmounted by an electric sign of pure Gothic design, bearing the words "The California."

The entrance is marked by a beautiful marquis, which extends the full width of the sidewalk, and there is a similar marquis on the Fourth street side to mark the main exit at the end of the long foyer. The two sides of the main entrance vestibule have a high wainscoting of solid California granite and above this are decorative panels for the display of photographs and similar advertising matter. The ceiling is of oak, elaborately carved, and just below this is a frieze, seventy feet in length, painted by Ray F. Coyle. This frieze is not intended to portray a history of the drama and its figures are not arranged in chronological order. It is intended as a decorative feature, but all of its figures are more or less intimately connected with the development of the dramatic instinct. Incidents of the Greek festivals are portrayed, with Persian temple dancers, Harlequin, the troubadour, the dainty French ballet, the organ grinder, the modern Russian ballet and the moving picture man. One section of the frieze is given over to great characters from the drama, Job, Antigone, Falstaff, Lohengrin, and many others. In the center of the vestibule is the Gothic ticket booth, with space for two ticket sellers. The floor of the entrance is largely of tile and this decoration extends to the street curb.

From the vestibule entrance to the foyer is through a set of double doors which assist in keeping the temperature of the theater normal and prevent drafts. Off the foyer are rest rooms for men and women and the office of the house manager. The latter is equipped with a periscope which enables the manager to sit at his desk and have a view of the screen and the lower floor. Four aisles lead to the seats on the lower floor, while the raised boxes at the rear are reached through separate entrances from the lobby.

The balcony is reached by a broad gradient luxuriously carpeted and walled with Wisconsin marble. At the turn there is a small landing lighted by a beautiful window, and here there is a private entrance to the executive offices on the Fourth street side. At the head of the main gradient is the lounge room, one of the most attractive features of the theater. This extends the full width of the building, with great windows overlooking Market street. The room is finished in Caen-stone and is furnished with an eye to comfort as well as beauty. Upholstered divans, rich chairs and tables, great window boxes filled with flowering plants, hangings of gay printed linens and objects of art combine to make the place one of rare beauty. Between the deep rugs the rare tiling suggests baronial halls, and this idea is still further carried out in the lighting. The room is lighted by ten ceiling, ten wall and four pedestal fixtures, these being of wrought metal, with shades suggestive of olden times when lights shone through horn scraped to minute thinness. At one end of the room a fountain and a pool in which water plants are growing form an interesting decorative feature.

Off this room is one devoted exclusively to women, with details as carefully worked out as those of any boudoir. The color scheme is chiefly gold and green, with carpets of gray. The walls are of gold and gray, while the hangings are of gold, with a few touches of black. Here are to be found day-beds, easy chairs and couches, with a long row of dressing tables and mirrors. The decorative feature of this room, however, is an over-mantel painting by Ray F. Coyle, entitled "Flattery." In this an ancient and very ugly woman is shown gazing into a mirror where she sees herself transformed into a beautiful and sprightly maiden. Adjoining this room is a small one devoted to first aid, with hospital cots, full medical equipment and a nurse in attendance. At the other side of the incline is a retiring room for men, with drinking fountains, and adjoining this is a telephone booth with four free telephones.

From the lounge two inclines lead to the balcony, one on each side. At a short distance these branch, one leading to the loges and lower section of the balcony, the other to the upper section. Here is also a second lounge room, where smoking is permitted. It is from the balcony that the beautiful ceiling, ninety-eight feet above the orchestra floor, is seen to the best advantage.

The interior decorations of the theater are of the purest Gothic and are wonderful in their detail. The plaster work which adorns the proscenium arch is especially beautiful and reflects a careful study of the great cathedrals of Europe. Even the woodwork, which follows the general architectural scheme of the theater, is finished to simulate old age, the doors and casings of oak having been given a sand-blast treatment to give them a weathered appearance.

Music is furnished by a Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones orchestra, the instrument being the largest ever turned out by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, requiring fourteen months to build. The main organ and solo pipes are in two chambers on each side of the theater, nearest the floor, while just above these are the chambers for the diaphone pipes and the percussion instruments. The foundation and brass pipes are installed in chambers above the proscenium arch, while the echo organ is in the ceiling above the center of the theater. In the basement, beneath the stage, is the organ relay room, with walls of plate glass, to permit an inspection of the intricate working mechanism. This room has the appearance of a central telephone exchange and its functions are much the same, the mechanism controlling the operation of the apparatus in the various chambers as the organist plays upon the organ manuals.

One of the interesting features in connection with the installation of the organ is the movable console. This is mounted on a hydraulic elevator and most of the time is out of sight in the orchestra pit. When organ recitals are rendered the organist takes his position, presses a button and the console rises to the level of the stage, permitting all in the house to view its operation. At the conclusion of the recital a similar movement causes it to sink out of sight.

Farney Wurlitzer, of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, journeyed to this city from the factory especially to attend the opening of the California Theater and hear the big instrument. George H. Leathurby, manager of the Pacific Coast interests of this house, under whose direction the instrument was installed, was also on hand. The services of Bruce Gordon Kingsley, who gave a series of recitals at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915, have been secured as organist. In addition to the organ there is a symphonic orchestra of sixteen pieces conducted by William F. McKinney. The excellence of this may be judged from the fact that no less than seven of the performers are members of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra.

The lighting of the theater marks a distinct advance in this art. The exterior is illuminated by flood lights on the two marquis, none of which is visible. The interior lighting is semi-indirect from great wrought metal fixtures that form so attractive a part of the decorative scheme. Each fixture contains globes of four colors—white, amber, red and blue—controlled both from the operating room and the stage switchboard. Current for each of these four sections is supplied through a bank of motor driven dimmers, enabling any desired effect to be secured. Floor lights are used throughout the house to assist patrons in finding their seats, these being especially effective in combination with the Kompolith flooring used in the aisles. The effective lighting of the stage enables the display of the marvelous draperies to the best advantage.

The projection room is located at the rear of the main floor and so perfect is its construction and equipment that not a sound is heard from it. This room received the attention of the decorator the same as the rest of the building and is positively beautiful, with its walls in delft blue and floor of delft tiling. Three Motiograph machines of the very latest model, with special lenses, are installed, and in addition there are spotlights, dissolvers and rewind apparatus. The projection machines are enameled and finished in gold. The rheostats are in a chamber underneath the operating room and all the apparatus is concealed, where possible. Automatic fire shutters, designed by Chief Operator Walter White, have been installed, and these have won the recognition of the local fire commissioners. Mr. White has as his assistant Robert Sears, also an expert in his line.

The heating and ventilating equipment are located in the basement at the rear of the building. Air is drawn down from a high level by powerful electrically-driven fans, forced through jets of water and purified and distributed to various parts of the house, after being heated by steam when desired. Steam heat is purchased from the outside. In the basement is also located the blower for the organ, a music room and a large reviewing room. Another item of equipment, of which the management is very proud, is the screen. This is covered with glass in small round particles and permits the projection of a perfect picture.

The staff of the California Theatre, which is conducted by the Popular Amusement Company, which also operates the Portola Theater, two doors away, is as follows: Eugene H. Roth, managing director; Harry David, assistant manager and director of publicity; Sanford Walter, secretary; Irven Long, in command of ushers; Walter White, chief operator;

Spacious and Magnificent Lounge Room of the California Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

Robert Sears, assistant operator; Thomas Andrews, stage manager; Mrs. C. Franzoni and Miss Mabel French, cashiers; Joseph Haigh, doorkeeper; A. Schwartz, assistant doorkeeper; Dr. Henry Harris, house physician, and Julio Padilla, photographer. Many of these have been connected with the Portola Theater for years. Joseph Haigh has probably admitted more people into a motion picture theater than any other door man in the business here and is quite at home at his new post, as is Thomas Andrews, whose stage work extends back many years. Irven Long is also well known and is rapidly building up a highly efficient corps of ushers. Chinese maids in Oriental costume are being used in the new house and these are giving splendid satisfaction.

The scale of prices, to which the federal war tax is added, is as follows: Matinees, all seats, lower floor and balcony, 10 cents; loge seats, 20 cents, and box seats, reserved, 30 cents. For evening performances rear balcony seats are 15 cents; center balcony, 20 cents; loge seats, balcony or lower floor, 35 cents, and box seats, balcony or lower floor, reserved, 50 cents. The box seats are sold but twice daily, once for afternoon and once for evening performances. The purchasers for matinee have the use of them up to seven o'clock, after which time the holders of evening tickets may secure possession whenever desired. Evening prices prevail at Saturday, Sunday and holiday matinees.

The guiding spirit of the new California Theater is Eugene H. Roth, who has made the Portola Theater, a house with a seating capacity of but about 1,100, known throughout the United States. He began planning the recently opened theater years ago and has left no stone unturned to realize his ambition and his ideals. The California Theater, with a seating capacity of 2,780, and room in its lounges for hundreds more, is a monument to his business capacity and his vision.

New Fillmore Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

Enlarged Picture House Embodies New Ideas in Theater Construction—Seats 2,300 and Costs $200,000—Dome Seventy-five Feet in Diameter One of Its Electrical Features—Uses Three Simplex Machines.

THE New Fillmore Theater, at Fillmore and Eddy streets, San Francisco, Cal., is an eloquent answer to the question that is often asked of whether the popularity of moving pictures as a form of amusement is on the increase or not. Two and a half years ago the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit opened the New Fillmore Theater at this location, a house with a seating capacity of about 800, and at the time considered one of the finest residence district houses to be found anywhere. In the face of unusual competition the patronage of this house soon became so large that it was an impossibility to care for all who wished to patronize it, and early in October of the present year another New Fillmore Theater, erected alongside the former one, was opened.

lobby of the former house, but this has been entirely rebuilt, and even the façade has been improved by an ornamental addition and an immense electric sign. A dancing floor has been installed in the old house, which has been redecorated and transformed into a pavilion for private parties. Entrance to this is through the lobby of the new theater and also off a court between the two buildings. Thus it can be used as a place for accommodating the overflow from the new theater, should occasion require, or as a separate hall. This arrangement presents unusual possibilities, as it enables the management of the house to offer dancing to waiting patrons, and on other occasions permits those renting the assembly hall to offer moving pictures to their guests as a diversion from dancing.

The New Fillmore Theater has a seating capacity of 1,800 on the main floor and 500 in the balcony, where most of the space is taken up by roomy loge seats, for which no extra charge is made. It was erected at a cost of about $200,000 from the plans of Reid Brothers, and embodies many new ideas and refinements in theater construction. It covers a ground area of 137½ by 137½ feet and has a frontage on Eddy street, as well as an entrance from Fillmore. Intended for moving pictures exclusively, it has a shallow stage, with the curtain against the rear wall, but in case it should ever be desired to change it into a vaudeville or other type of theater there is space for an addition.

The interior is of striking beauty, the stage being flanked by great columns, while a decorative dome, seventy-five feet in diameter, makes the ceiling an interesting feature. The walls and ceiling are delicately tinted, and their beauty is enhanced by a careful use of indirect lighting. The opera chairs and the woodwork are finished in French gray, harmonizing with the general decorative scheme. On each side of the lower floor are four raised boxes, and only when the house has special guests are these reserved.

In the lobby and foyer are illuminated portraits of moving-picture stars and directors, a new system of lighting making these especially attractive. Here are also public telephones and a marble drinking fountain, where filtered ice water is served in sanitary individual cups. A women's waiting room, with a maid in attendance, is also to be found here, and there is also another at the head of the incline to the balcony, where there are more public telephones and a charming lounge overlooking the lobby.

As is the case in all the Kahn & Greenfield houses, special attention has been paid to the operating room and its equipment. This projection room is finished in spotless tile, with an interlocking rubber composition tile floor. All the wiring is concealed, and the motors that run the machines are mounted on marble supports, as are the automatic arc controllers. Three Simplex machines of the latest type are installed here, these being finished in cream enamel. These are automatically controlled, starting and stopping at the end of reels without the attention of the operator. Included in the equipment is an automatic voltage regulator, made specially by the Westinghouse Electric Company, and special devices made by the Butte Engineering Company, which installed the switchboard. A storage battery floating on the line insures current at all times. J. A. Morie is the operator in charge.

Adjoining the operating booth are washrooms and toilets for the use of the operators, a dark room and developing room for the making of slides and a private projection room for the inspection of pictures. Near at hand are the offices of Manager Joseph E. Levin, finished in mahogany, and enjoying a fine view and an abundance of sunshine; while adjoining are the offices of his assistant, William Moore, which are finished in oak.

Music is furnished by a symphonic orchestral pipe organ, one of the largest instruments ever turned out by the American Photo Player Company. This was built to order, and no contract was named, the instructions being to furnish the best musical instrument possible, regardless of cost. The pipes arranged on each side of the stage add to the decorative scheme. The big instrument is presided over by Organist Richard Comfort. Adjoining the stage is a large music room, where a large collection of music is stored, and nearby is a sign painting room. In the basement is the heating and ventilating plant and a machine shop.

The price of admission is uniformly 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents for evening performances, with the usual reduction for children. Changes of program are made three times each week, and performances are from noon to 11 p. m. Paramount service will be featured.

"Les Miserables"

William Fox Ten-Part Picturization of Victor Hugo's Powerful Story, with William Farnum as Jean Valjean, a Notable Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FRANK LLOYD, the adaptor and director of the William Fox ten-part picturization of Victor Hugo's famous story, "Les Miserables," has accomplished both tasks in a highly praiseworthy manner. Aided by William Farnum, in a forceful and sympathetic embodiment of Jean Valjean, and by the excellent acting of the rest of the cast, Director Lloyd has taken advantage of the many opportunities for dramatic situations of great power and has placed them in realistic settings that lack nothing which liberality and artistic perception could supply. "Les Miserables," with its wealth of strongly contrasted characterization and its human and humane theme, is the great heart-interest story of fiction. The purpose of its creator, to show that the spark of good is never extinguished in the heart of man, and to plead for the downtrodden, is set forth so convincingly that the story is for all time. In both novel and stage form Hugo's masterpiece has enjoyed a long and ardent popularity; its scenes are now made to live on the screen with a reality that adds new interest to the lives of Jean, Fantine and Cosette.

At this late day it is hardly necessary to recall the story of "Les Miserables." The history of the degraded galley-slave who is transformed into a man whose soul is touched with almost divine compassion and who lives only to do good is familiar to most people. The Fox screen version has been admirably planned. Opening with commendable simplicity and directness, it shows the figure of Jean Valjean returning to the cottage of his sister with the news that he has failed to obtain work and is unable to help buy her bread for her starving children. It then traces Jean's theft of the loaf of bread, his arrest, his prison term, his release, and his meeting with the good bishop. The Fantine incident is told at length; then follows the history of Cosette and its close connection with the life of Valjean, the parts played by Javert, Marius, Eponine, Gavroche and Thenardier and his wife in the working out of the fates of the two leading characters being given the requisite amount of attention. All the moments of unforgettable dramatic tension are retained, but it is doubtful if any of them make a stronger impression than the scene of the rescue of little Cosette from the Thenardiens. The picture of Jean Valjean leaving the inn with the ill-treated child in one arm and her new doll in the other will moisten many an eye. In the last episode the battle at the barricade, with the death of the heroic little Gavroche and the flight of Valjean through the sewers of Paris with the insensible Marius on his shoulder, are two of the best reproduced incidents of the story. To have condensed into ten parts so comprehensive a version of Hugo's work, with its numerous well-rounded characters and opulence of incident, is an achievement of uncommon worth.

William Farnum's performance of Valjean has the honesty of Hugo's hero. Meeting every physical requirement of the character, the actor exhibits a firmness of purpose, clearness of conception and general aptitude for the part that renders his work wholly satisfying. Hardee Kirkland, as the sinister Javert, might have stepped out from the covers of the book, and George Moss, as the bishop, is equally true to prototype. The Fantine of Sonia Markova is a figure of compelling pathos that never oversteps the bounds of artistic restraint. Jewel Carmen is a lovable Cosette, and high-grade impersonations are given by Edward Elkus as Thenardier, Dorothy Bernard as Eponine, Kittens Reichert as Cosette at eight years of age, and Mina Ross as Mme. Thenardier.

"Who Shall Take My Life?"

Selig's Seven-Reel Propaganda Special Has Thrilling Interest—Ablly Directed by Colin Campbell, with Thomas Santschi, Fritz Brunette, Bessie Eyton and Other Well-known Players in the Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IT is already widely known that the script of "Who Shall Take My Life?" was written by Maibelle Heikes Justice, the well known author of numerous short stories, special articles and photoplays. The father of Miss Heikes Justice was a prominent jurist, and, doubtless, through her close intimacy with his life work, the author had knowledge of several, if not many, cases where justice had miscarried and where the innocent were made to suffer for crimes of which they were innocent. Whether this be so or not is immaterial, as Miss Heikes Justice is an ardent opponent of capital punishment, and the story of this thrilling photoplay shows that she had her whole heart in the work, and that she has furnished a most convincing argument in favor of her belief.

The case of the state against "Big Bill" O'Shaughnessy becomes in the hands of the author clear and convincing, with not a single loophole for escape; and yet, when the condemned man, convicted by circumstantial evidence, has been electrocuted, there flashes over the wires to the warden of the prison in which O'Shaughnessy had just suffered the death penalty word that the supposedly murdered woman had been discovered in a Western city—alive, and following the course of an unrepentant Magdalen! This certainly, whether one believes in capital punishment or not, is a terrific argument against circumstantial evidence in certain cases.

Director Colin Campbell has furnished many realistic settings for this big, enthralling photoplay. The courtroom scene is especially dignified and lifelike, as is also the interior showing the meeting of a state legislature. The prison interiors, including the gruesome death chambers for prisoners who have left all hope behind, make one shiver to look at them. A view of the electrocution chamber has been wisely spared the spectator, but he is sobered to the point of solemnity as he watches the prisoner conducted toward it accompanied by his spiritual comforters and preceded by the warden and his staff and those invited to be present.

Thomas Santschi has given us a most intelligent impersonation of the brawny bridgetender, Bill O'Shaughnessy. He brings out very forcefully the bravery of this uncultured giant, confident to the last that his innocence of crime will prevent him from going to the chair. Even the pious confessor, who seeks a clear view of the condemned man's heart in order that he may administer the last rites of the church, is thrown aside by the strength that innocence gives. The final leave-taking between O'Shaughnessy and his wife, the latter being very sweetly impersonated by Bessie Eyton, is most affecting.

But the strong character of this powerful photomelodrama is Kate Taylor, one of the unfortunates whom circumstances and natural waywardness have robbed of a better life and nobler impulses. Weak where she should be strongest, and strong where she should be most lacking, this human soul works out her fearful destiny.

In this role of great possibilities, Fritzi Brunette positively electrifies the spectator. She has all our sympathy when her better woman's nature seeks the guardianship and the respect of "Big Bill" under the name of wife, and also when she is discarded for another. The mental and the heart agony suffered by Kate Taylor then are lived so truly by Fritzi Brunette that every heart is with her and every hope for her.

But what a revulsion follows as we watch the good swallowed up in a moment by the demon spirit that take possession of Kate Taylor! There's horror, and that is quickly followed by loathing and hate.

And what a scene is that after Kate learns that her silence has led to "Big Bill's" death in the chair! Here Miss Brunette simulates madness with such realism that one stares and becomes highly affected with nervousness. To see that little woman in her frenzy throw big, solid police officers around like straws convinces us for a moment that she is mad.

Other important characters are ably sustained by Ed. Coxen, Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer, Al. W. Filson, and Virginia Kirtley.

Distribution is being made on the state rights plan.

"Bucking Broadway"

Harry Carey and Molly Malone Appear in Five-Reel Number Telling Entertaining Story of Entangled Love.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PICTURESQUE Western locations are the first things to catch the attention in this enjoyable feature. The tale was written by George Hively, and deals with a stirring heart episode in the career of "Cheyenne" Harry. Jack Ford, who directed the production, again demonstrates his happy faculty for getting all out-doors into the scenes. The number is exceptionally well directed throughout, both in the opening Western part and the contrasting Eastern scenes. The cabaret setting, where the big hand-to-hand fight occurs, stands out prominently in the latter.

The story itself is amusing and contains a pleasing mixture of humor and sentiment. It opens with a unique declaration of love on Cheyenne's part. He takes the daughter of the ranch owner, Helen Clayton, to the new home he has built for her, and wins her consent to the marriage. They then combine forces to gain the father's consent, which is speedily forthcoming.

Up to this point the course of true love runs smoothly enough, but trouble begins with the appearance of a stock buyer named Thornton. The latter wears "store" clothes, and in the course of time induces Helen to elope with him to New York on promise of marriage. Cheyenne, considering himself beaten in the game of love, decides to take to his wild life on the trail again, but a message comes from Helen asking him to come to her aid. The rest of the yarn pictures graphically the manner in which Cheyenne and his friends go to New York and literally clean up a cabaret in which Thornton is dining with Helen.

The plot, as outlined, does not sound particularly new, but there are pleasing human touches which give it fresh appeal. The restaurant melee is relieved by some really humorous features, which bring the feature to a close in a laughable way.

Harry Carey appears in the familiar character of Cheyenne, Molly Malone is attractive as the girl, and Vester Pegg is strong in the part of Thornton. L. M. Wells plays the ranch owner.

"The Honeymoon"

Constance Talmadge Fine Ability in Five-Part Selznick Comedy Feature for Select Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AN amusing story of a troublous honeymoon written by E. Lloyd Sheldon has been converted into a thoroughly entertaining five-part film production by Charles Giblin, who has given the picture capable direction, with a cast quite up to the mark. The singular beauty and personal charm of Scene from "The Honeymoon" (Select).

Constance Talmadge in the role of the jealous bride, of course, adds much to the attractiveness of the production, but on the other hand the story presents situations carefully presented that will bring a laugh any time. The same style of story has been presented before in a manner more embarrassing than funny. This cannot be said of "The Honeymoon," for it possesses not one objectionable point, and suggests nothing but the comical side of the situation.

As the story runs the pretty bride becomes jealous of a friend (Lillian Cook) who unknown to her is about to become engaged to her brother (Harris Gordon), and as the bridal party is about to start on its honeymoon the said brother of the bride drags the bridegroom (Earle Foxe) into a secret alliance on his own account extracting from him a promise to look up a musical comedy star (Julia Bruns) whose company happens to be playing in Niagara during his honeymoon week. The object of his looking her up, by-the-way, is to buy her off from a foolishly contracted engagement to the bride's brother. What happened to the bridegroom in his endeavor to keep faith with his brother-in-law and with his bride is presented in a series of truly amusing incidents in the course of which the bride takes a room on another floor of the hotel to that on which her husband is located after visiting the theater behind scenes and discovering her husband with a scantily attired stage beauty. Further complications occur through the musical comedy star having rooms at the same hotel, and the outcome of the affair is that a hastily gotten divorce is granted just as the conflicting parties are making up their differences. A clergyman guest at the hotel quickly called into service manages to readjust matters.

This picture is not entirely free from inconsistencies, but will be thoroughly enjoyed by the average audience. It is well photographed, well directed, and presents many beautiful views of the great falls of Niagara.

"The Square Deceiver"

Harold Lockwood Is the Hero and Pauline Curley Is the Heroine and Both Are Mighty Well Adapted to These Roles.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE was a large block of the audience who fairly reveled in the pretty and quite romantic love story played by Harold Lockwood and Pauline Curley in "The Square Deceiver," a Yorke-Metro picture in five reels. It is a good, clear story, limited in its appeal to a certain type of youthful mind, found in grown-ups and the young alike, plentiful perhaps in most audiences, and especially plentiful in residential neighborhood matinees. The action is, shall we say, bolstered by much comic business, not new by any means; but it often made a laugh.

Such melodramas as this have their value. Their influence is in part good, for they tend to elevate the heart even if there is nothing for the mind in them at all. On this account, a too-steady diet of them is bad, for they do not really picture actual life at all. Of course, Harold Lockwood knows how to make love and, when playing opposite to him is a pretty heroine who also is good at this sort of business, it is no wonder the people who are finding the world not full enough of love to suit them are pleased and feel that they have got their money's worth.

The hero is a rich leader of fashion, and the director handles the people around him as though he were a prince. The heroine is a poor niece of a moderately well-to-do family with social aspirations. She is ill-treated. The hero finds her tinkering with the family automobile. He is smitten and takes a job as chauffeur to the family—well, the rest is romance, and in the end everybody, even the hateful cousin whose treatment of her was so rude, is forgiven, and everybody is happy; but especially the heroine, who is now not only rich but the leader of fashion, and her young husband is willing and ready to go to war as soon as he is called.

"The Tenth Case"

June Elvidge in Five-Part World Photoplay That Contains Quick Moving Events of Considerable Interest.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

EXPERT playing by the entire cast and efficient direction by George Kelson are among the merits of "The Tenth Case," a five-part World photoplay in which June Elvidge has the stellar position. The story is dramatic and, if the mental blindness of Jerome Landis can be overlooked, of considerable interest. The person just named is a man of wealth and more than average intelligence, who marries a young and beautiful woman and is quick to believe her guilty of infidelity upon circumstantial evidence. He turns her and his child from the house and then sues for absolute divorce. The judge who presides at the trial also has great faith in circumstantial evidence until the wife of Landis and a friend of hers convince the honorable judge how easy it is to be misled in the matter. The friend secretes himself in the room belonging to the wife of the judge, just as the nephew of Jerome Landis did in the room occupied by his uncle's wife. When the learned judge received a practical illustration of the value of circumstantial evidence it causes him to modify his decision. He grants the divorce but permits the mother to have her baby with her part of the time. Harry Landis, the nephew who caused the trouble, is killed in an automobile accident, but confesses before he dies, and his uncle and aunt are reunited.

There is an underplot involving an experienced vampire, who has entrapped the heroine's father and who also gets the nephew in her toils. The interest around the friend is also important, and some spectators will regret that he does not win the lady after the divorce. But she is only anxious to go back to her husband.

Mention has already been made of the excellence of the acting and direction of "The Tenth Case." June Elvidge as Claudia brings out all the attractive womanliness of the character, and John Bowers, George MacQuarrie, Gladden James, Eric Mayne, Eloise Clement and Charles Dungan are deserving of mention.

"The Marriage Speculation"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Written by Cyrus Townsend Brady Belongs to the "Strawberry Mark" Class of Fiction.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

STARTING with a highly improbable but none the less interesting theme, "The Marriage Speculation," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and directed by Ashley Miller, gets switched off on to a network of familiar complications, and ends as one of the brotherhood of the order of "strawberry mark" fiction. This brand of story still has its admirers, however, and the picture is well directed and acted. It opens most promisingly: An eccentric old bachelor who has worked all his life in a pickle factory and saved ten thousand dollars conceives the plan of educating some poor but attractive girl with his money so that she may make a wealthy marriage. In return she must see that he is taken care of during the rest of his life. The scheme is put into effect. Clara Wilton, who has been engaged to Billie Perkins, a shiftless young chap, grows tired of his want of ambition, and accepts the old man's offer.

When she finishes her education and the last of the money is being spent at a fashionable watering place to get her into society, Clara finds herself surrounded by suitors, attracted by the report that she is an heiress. The usual bogus nobleman is among them. In the meantime, Billie has not been idle. The loss of Clara wakes him up, he pitches in and earns a few dollars for himself and grows a mustache. Thus disguised he goes down to the watering place and poses as a man of title himself. Clara is able to penetrate his disguise, and finds that she still loves him. She feels it her duty to marry an Italian count in order that she may keep her agreement with her matrimonial backer, however; but Billie shows that his rival is only a waiter. As he points an accusing finger at the man one of the spectators notices a ring on his finger, and demands to know where he got it. Billie informs him that it belonged to his father, and has the tables turned most agreeably by being informed that his grandsire in England has just died and left him a title and a handsome fortune.

Charles Kent gives the character of the old bachelor just the right touch of eccentricity, and Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald are pleasing as Clara and Billie.

"My Little Boy"

Skillful Blending of Two Famous Works in Five-Part Bluebird Photoplay Written by Elliott J. Clawson and Featuring Ella Hall and Zoe Rae.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT was a happy thought on the part of Elliott J. Clawson to combine Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" and Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue" in a five-part photoplay for the Bluebird brand. Both story and poem are noted for their heart interest, and Elsie Jane Wilson, who directed the production, has handled it with sympathetic understanding. The entire cast show the same appreciation of their work, and a charming screen story, told with great charm, is the result. From "A Christmas Carol" has been borrowed the characters of old Scrooge and his nephew. They are brought down to the present, however, and the older man is turned into a "grouch" in place of being a miser. He is now known as Uncle Oliver, and refuses to have anything to do with his nephew when the young fellow marries against his will. Six years later Fred determines to ask his uncle to spend Christmas with him and meet his son, Paul, who is known in the family as Little Boy Blue. Oliver grudgingly consents, and is more grouchy than ever when he arrives on Christmas Eve. After trying to make everyone as miserable as possible he goes to bed and has a dream that makes a new man of him.

He imagines it is Christmas morning, and that he has been awakened by the shouts of little Paul over his presents. Growling his displeasure he prepares to go hunting with his nephew, and the party leave the house. Paul follows, and is accidentally shot by Oliver. The little fellow is brought home, and the family gather around his bed, but neither their love or the old man's remorse can save him. After his death, Fred and his wife drift apart, but are reunited by finding the little toy dog and the tin soldier in the closet waiting for Little Boy Blue. When Oliver is really aroused by the gleeful shouts of Paul he rushes down stairs in his pajamas and astonishes everyone by hugging and kissing them all and wishing them the heartiest kind of a Merry Christmas.

"My Little Boy" will delight everyone who has the Dickens love for Christmas in his heart and cherishes Eugene Field's tender regard for childhood. The even excellence of the cast

Tom Sawyer

A Notable Famous Players-Paramount Production of Mark Twain's Favorite Story, with Jack Pickford Very Acceptable in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AS A photodrama "Tom Sawyer" is bound to arouse high expectations, and it is on that very account no easy proposition, but the screen version has been constructed with skill; the handling is in fine harmony with the mood of the story, exquisite in some of its details, and Jack Pickford responds to his opportunities so creditably that he completely won a large audience at the Strand by his performance. This is saying a great deal when it is considered that a very large number of people in the average audience are familiar with the principal scenes in the story and have formulated some preconceived ideas of their own how it should be presented. Boy life in the middle of last century was fresh in the thoughts and sympathies of Mark Twain when he wrote the story of Tom Sawyer, and old boys of today keenly appreciate the truthfulness of his portraiture. Besides this, there is much that is still representative of that period in a boy's life of today, though times have greatly changed. The Boy Scouts of modern times are given a chance to gratify the native longing within them for life in the open, and even schools are becoming bearable to the young savage. Tom Sawyer will, nevertheless, long remain a classic, endeared to our hearts because of the author's kindly soul revealed therein.

The atmosphere of the story is most perfectly preserved in the scenes depicting the gatherings of townspeople at the meeting house. The selection of church and street; the care shown in costumes and the absence of theatrical exaggeration completes a delightful illusion. We are not looking at a screen story—we are transported to the time and place of an actual experience and are participants in the events. This is truly high art, the more creditable that it must have been difficult to preserve so perfect an atmosphere. Even genuine stern-wheel river boats are used when a search is made for the bodies of Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn, and a boon companion, at a time they were camping out on one of the low-lying islands of the Mississippi River. Besides fidelity and good taste in settings and exteriors, the director has added greatly to the general sum of values by amusing bits of psychology among the various types.

The types have been well-chosen as a rule, and Jack Pickford carries his difficult role by sheer force of personality. He rivals the bright subtitles in provoking laughter and is conscientious in every moment of his impersonation. It is true that interest centers entirely on the characterization of the lead, relegating the balance of an excellent cast to the background, but his chances for error are correspondingly great, and he sails serenely through them all. The entire production will prove a big winner wherever shown and give satisfaction to those who look for a revival of interest in what has come to be an American classic.

Sennett Comedy Features Conklin and Others, as Well as a Fish That's Strong on Large, Live Bait.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE'S a new brand of fish in "An International Sneak," Mack Sennett's Paramount comedy released December 2. This small inhabitant of the deep has the courage of a peccary, the grip of a bulldog, and the motive power of a whale. Hooked on a line it pulls a rowboat over the water with the celerity of a speedboat. The presence of the hook "in its midst" does not prevent it biting a hole in the bottom of the boat and sinking the craft, throwing its two would-be occupants into the water. Neither does the aforementioned instrument in any measure retard or handicap the action of Mr. Fish when he starts retaliation on the fisherman who initiated the intimate alliance between them. The adhesive, cohesive finny wonder sinks its fangs into the seat of the trousers of the drowning man and proceeds to shake its scaly body in a manner to reflect credit on a terrier performing with a rat.

Scene from "An International Sneak" (Paramount).

When the human is drawn up on the pier, Mr. Fish's grip remains unbroken.

Of course, the foregoing is but one of the incidents in the two-part comedy. It will make fun, however, while it is on, as will the subsidiary happening of the land fisherman whose far-flung hook collides with a perfectly good skirt, and carries that filmy garment out over the water to the consternation of its youthful bare-kneed owner and the entertainment of the more or less innocent bystanders. When Colonel Walrus has contributed his share to the rescue of one of the drowning men by throwing a heavy rope to him, absentmindedly failing to retain one end of it, he continues his heroic career by recovering the separated garment.

Chester Conklin is Colonel Walrus, the foreign spy; Billy Armstrong is the Juvenile; Ethel Teare is a female detective; Lillian Biron is the Juvenile's sweetheart, and Earle C. Kenton is the Power King, her father. This is the cast that romps through the comedy, sometimes so fast, as it was shown in the Paramount projection room anyway, that it is difficult keeping track of the thinly defined threads of the farce.

"An International Sneak" is a regulation Sennett production, with an abundance of fun and a number of surprises.

"The Eternal Temptress"

Lina Cavalieri Strongly Portrays an Interesting Role in Her Paramount Debut.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

FINELY presented is "The Eternal Temptress," the five-part subject in which Lina Cavalieri makes her Paramount debut, and which is released on December 3. The famous singer is a most acceptable screen subject—the close-up contains for her nothing to inspire fear. She "photographs" remarkably well, too. As the production leaves the hand of Director Emile Chautard it is a good subject, the leading player has a role which she fills to marked advantage, there is a strong supporting cast, and there is a steady interest.

Lina Cavalieri portrays ostensibly the character of a wanton. Actually we see a most charming woman, fond of attention, one who loves finery and concerns herself little as to the involved financial sacrifice on the part of the giver, and very much of a flirt, too, but nothing is shown to indicate that her character is not a thing apart from her reputation; so far as one may judge the Princess Cordelia Sanzio is faithful to Harry Althrop, the young American infatuated with her, and on whom she lavishes what seemingly is genuine, not assumed, affection. So it is when at the end the princess commits suicide there is a confirmation of the impression that it is a case of a not bad woman following what she still conceives the straight path rather than that of one who seeks regeneration in self-tragedy. The singer has screen magnetism.

Elliott Dexter is Althrop, the American as weak in character as he is strong in his love for the Italian. Althrop's infatuation is of the most pronounced type, of the helpless, hopeless sort, the kind that drives a man through fire and water and into jail in the doing of things he believes will find favor in the eyes of the woman who has absorbed him. Alan Hale is Count Rudolph Frizl, an aid of Prince Estezary, an Austrian diplomatic-political agent, played by Edward Fielding. James Laffey is the American Ambassador, and Hallen Mostyn is Althrop's father. The work of Messrs. Dexter, Hale, and Laffey stands out.

Scene from "The Eternal Temptress" (Paramount).

The story is laid in Venice and Rome. The staging is convincing, which is another way of saying it is well done. The atmosphere of the Italian locale is sustained, and so, too, is that of the embassy and of the court of honor. The writer was not clear as to the instrumentality employed by the princess to accomplish the death of the count when in a struggle the latter sought to recover from her the document which involved not only the honor of the woman's country, but also of the man she loved. The blow with the tiny dagger may be there at that.

"The Eternal Temptress" should go well.

SOCIETY and the financial world clash pleasantly in a five-part screen version of Hulbert Footner's stage play, "Shirley Kaye," Clara Kimball Young having the title role. The picture was directed by Joseph Kaufman, and is released by Select Pictures Corporation. Elsie Ferguson originated the part of the eastern society girl, who uses her position to fight a battle with a western railroad king and save her father from ruin. Clara Kimball Young brings the beauty and refinement of manner necessary to the part, and the entire production is marked by the proper atmosphere of wealth and good breeding. The locations and interior sets are always in the picture.

The scenario was made by Margaret Turnbull. The situations in "Shirley Kaye" never rise to any lofty dramatic pitch, but the spirited way in which the young girl, who is supposed to be a society idler, wins her battle against two determined and experienced railroad executives is bound to interest the spectator. T. L. Magen, a western railroad king and the father of a socially ambitious daughter, comes to New York with his general manager, John Rowson, and his family. Shirley is attracted by the young man, but he is known as a woman hater. The girl tricks him into giving her information that enables her to defeat the scheme against her father. Magen forgives Shirley for the sake of his daughter and the recognition Shirley has secured for her; but Rowson refuses to have anything further to do with the girl and returns to the West. She goes after him on the pretext that he must be forced to accept the general managership of her father's road. She finds him at his hunting lodge in the mountains and convinces him that a woman hater is the most foolish type of mankind.

Corliss Giles plays opposite to the star as John Rowson. He belongs to the virile type of actor, and is always satisfactory. George Fawcett is a humorous and commanding figure as T. L. Magen, and Claire Whitney is winsome and pretty as his daughter. The other parts are in the hands of George Backus, Nellie Lindrich, John Sunderland, Mrs. F. O. Winthrop and Frank Otto.

"Until They Get Me"

Pauline Starke Makes Pronounced Hit in Finely Dramatic Triangle Photoplay—"The Maternal Spark" and
"Because of a Woman" Also Released.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANY truthful director of moving pictures will admit that occasionally he is given a combination of scenario and cast that seem made for each other and cause him to think there are harder jobs than turning out photoplays after all. "Until They Get Me" belongs to this class of pictures. It is a five-part Triangle production, written by Kenneth B. Clarke and directed by Frank Borzage. Moreover, the cast is headed by a newcomer of uncommon promise in the person of Pauline Starke. But sixteen years of age and of limited experience before the screen, this young actress is bound to duplicate the success attained by Mae Marsh and Bessie Love. She has many of the best qualities of both, and is capable of portraying a strength of character that is entirely unexpected. As Margy, a nameless waif, who fights her way to happiness and wins the love and respect of every one at a Northwest Mounted Police station, Pauline Starke is called upon to impersonate a fourteen-year-old girl, who has known every privation, and to show her mental and physical growth into womanhood. She does this with a depth of sincerity, allurements of personality and excellence of method that merit the highest praise. Little Miss Starke has arrived!

"Until They Get Me" is a tale of the Canadian Mounted Police, and its hero is private Richard Selwyn, a character played with feeling and force by Joe King. The young fellow allows a fugitive named Kirby to escape, through a trick, and all during the play he keeps up his pursuit of his man. The manner in which Margy's fate is entangled with Kirby's and Selwyn's is ingeniously brought about, and the entire story moves forward with steady and unobstructed speed. In construction it follows the newer and better way: A simple and direct but strong story, that does not turn back at frequent intervals to relate something that only retards the action.

The production brings out all the points of the picture for their full worth, and has been skillfully photographed by C. H. Wales. Jack Curtis as Kirby, Walter Perry as Sergeant Blaney, Wilbur Higbee as Draper and Anna Dodge as Mrs. Draper have important parts in the good work.

"The Maternal Spark."

George du Bois Proctor is the author of this five-part Triangle picture, which contains a considerable truthful observation of life and is enlivened by the actions of a bright child and a frisky dog. "The Maternal Spark" shows a young lawyer's rise from a small country practice to a position of trust and importance with the head of a great corporation in New York. Helms has always been happy and contented with his wife and child, but with the change in his fortunes comes a desire to indulge in the amusements of the city. His employer has put him in the way to make considerable money by speculation, and is on friendly terms with his family. Helms gets entangled with a woman of doubtful reputation, and she claims that he has awakened a pure love in her heart. He is ready to leave his wife and boy for her, when Mrs. Helms finds it out and sends for her rival. The maternal spark in the woman is not proof against the claim of the boy for his father's protection, and she gives Helms back to wife and child. The employer discovers the entanglement. He breaks Helms financially, and the man is obliged to go back to the little country town and start all over again.

The incidents of this story are all pertinent to it, and are without exaggeration. The production has been given intelligent direction by G. P. Hamilton. An evenly balanced cast keeps the acting up to the right mark. Rowland Lee and Irene Hunt are the leading players, and Joey Jacobs, Edwin Jobson, Josie Sedwick, Frank Newburgh and Frank McQuarrie have other important roles.

"Because of a Woman."

The construction of "Because of a Woman," a seven-part Triangle release, pictured by George Elwood Jones from a story by E. Magnus Ingleton, leaves a great deal to be desired. The story is of fair quality, but it is put together with so little regard for dramatic effect that most of the situations miss fire. Heroic cutting will improve the picture.

The plot is based on the sacrifice a man makes for the woman he loves. Noel Clevering, a young West Virginian, bears the stain of another's crime, and sees Muriel Gwynne married to his rival. He still does all he can to serve her, and in trying to prevent her husband from leaving her for another woman meets his real fate, a charming young girl from New York, who is visiting in the south with her invalid mother.

The work of the cast is uniformly excellent. Belle Bennett plays Valerie Greenway, the New York girl, with spirit and charm, and Jack Livingston is a manly Noel Clevering. George Chesebro, Louella Maxam, Lillian Langdon, Josef Swickard and George Pearce complete the cast. Jack Conway directed the picture.

"Those Who Pay"

Seven-Part Thomas H. Ince Photoplay Written by Gardner Sullivan and Starring Bessie Barriscale Treats a Vital Theme with Frankness and Truth—Released by U. S. Exhibitors' Corp.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN "Those Who Pay," a seven-part photoplay, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and produced by Thomas H. Ince, but two of the incidents will be questioned by the spectator. For the rest, they are woven into a drama that deals with life frankly and truthfully, but confines itself almost wholly to the weakness in humanity. As the title indicates, "Those Who Pay" are the women who are the victims of their own folly and want of firmness; and the scenes and incidents the author has used in pointing his moral are generally discussed in the most guarded manner in real life. The picture comes in the same class as "To-Day," and infidelity is the mainstay of the story. Regarding it purely from the artistic side, the drama is almost without a flaw. It treats of the "eternal triangle," but does so logically and with a directness of attack that forces the action on without a halt or pause. The cutback is ignored as something that never existed, and the dramatic balance of affairs is adjusted with easy dexterity. The direction and photography are also highly meritorious and throw the situations into constant bold relief.

The story is a tragic one—tragic in its frequency, its pitifulness and its revelation of how want and circumstances conspired to entrap the girl of good intentions but weakness of will. Opening with a foreword that is much too long and only serves to dull the edge of suspense, it follows the career of Dorothy Warner along the primrose path until the awakening comes and she sacrifices herself rather than separate from his wife and child the man who ruined her. Dorothy is a ten dollar a week shopgirl, who falls into the hands of a man of position and breeding after he has befriended her. Graham, a successful lawyer, gives her a position in his office, and her gratitude rapidly turns into deep love. And right here occurs the first of the doubtful incidents. Graham has a number of other clerks working for him, and yet Dorothy never learns that he is married until after she has gone on an automobile trip and spent the night with him. Confronted the next morning by shame and remorse, the girl has every confidence in the man she has trusted, and when Graham tells her that he is already married weakly consents to become his mistress. He places her in a fine apartment, and spends his spare time between his two establishments.

Fate does not permit him to escape, however. A political enemy informs his wife of the true state of affairs, and Mrs. Graham acts with calmness and decision. She sends for Dorothy, puts the case squarely before her and asks who has the better right to Graham's love. She next tells the girl of Graham's unborn child, and asks if it also must suffer from the wrongdoing of its father. Dorothy, brought face to face with reality, agrees to give up Graham forever. He enters just as she is leaving the house, and turns on her in the most cowardly manner. This is the second incident that does not convince. Dorothy's fineness of nature would have detected any such mark of the cur, and she would never have loved him so fervently. After renouncing him she remains loyal to the end, and refuses to wreck his public career. The last scene shows their final parting, and Dorothy sinks down with the cry, "Mother, mother!"

Only the sternest of moralists will withhold their sympathy from the unfortunate girl, and most persons will ask themselves, What does life still hold for her? What is to be the end? As usual, it is the woman who pays; the man goes free!

Bessie Barriscale is the Dorothy Warner. She is an excellent choice for the part. The woman she projects on the screen is one of those ardent, loving natures that is easily swayed where her heart is concerned. The manner of her downfall almost excuses the act so little does she contribute to its bringing about. Graham takes advantage of her terror of a violent storm to get into her bedroom, when a thunderbolt narrowly misses the house. These extenuating circumstances are fully indicated by the actress, and she is always consistent to the mood of the character.

Howard Hickman plays Graham and follows faithfully the lines laid down by the author. Melbourne McDowell is realistic as the politician, Steve McNutt, and Dorcus Mathews sketches in the character of Alice Graham with deft strokes. It is a most fortunate thing for Graham that he has such a woman for a wife.

Blood-Stained Russia, German Intrigue, Treason and Revolt

The War in Russia from 1915 to the Present Day Illustrated in Pictured Events Arranged in Dramatic Sequence by Donald C. Thompson.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE part that the moving picture is destined to play in the recording of history is forcefully exemplified in the eight-part production, entitled "Bloodstained Russia, German Intrigue, Treason and Revolt." The scenes in this picture were photographed and arranged in dramatic sequence by Donald C. Thompson, staff war correspondent of Leslie's Weekly, and with thoughtfully worded subtitles give as clear an idea of Russia as she is, torn asunder and temporarily impaired through the influence of German intrigue. Mr. Thompson's frequent visits to Russia, which, in the last instance, was prolonged over a period of eleven months, have vested him with a superior knowledge of the situation, and made him the possessor of a wealth of material with which to paint his pictures. These visits to Russia were made in 1907, 1915 and November, 1916, returning to America only about a month ago.

One of the opening subtitles of the picture gives the cue to its predominating color. It is as follows: "Since March, 1917, the world believes that Russia treacherously forsook her allies, but records from my diary and camera will show that Russia's anarchy was not willed by her people, but was caused by vile German intrigue working in the unthinking masses." Then as a fitting commencement of the true history of the Russian chaos looms on the screen a murderous visage, which we readily recognize as that "Kaiser Wilhelm, Emperor of all the Huns, who hung a war of conquest into the world, believing that he could quickly conquer Europe. The Hun emperor aimed his first blow against Russia, where mobilization seemed most difficult. But Russia, at the first call to arms, rose as one fighting man. From every part of the vast empire came galloping Cossacks." A distant view of what the last sentence of this latter subtitle implies, which gives a dramatically realistic suggestion of the spirit of the Russian people at the beginning of the war, is followed up by views and subtitles which recall the fact that Russia mobilized six million men in ten days and twenty millions later. The army in its turn, we are told in subtitle, mobilized billions of "Cooties," among whom socks were luxuries and rags were used as substitutes. Then we learn of the demoralization of the Russian military machinery because of Russia's failure to imprison pro-Germans.

Step by step the picture leads us along the line of German intrigue, showing incidentally the destruction of Turkey's shipping facilities and telling of the enticing of Turkey into the war by Germany. The results of the German intrigue in Russia, such as overcrowded hospitals, shortage of war materials and surgical necessities, caused by the diverting in other directions by Pro-German influence, of the millions in money raised to successfully carry on the war, are illustrated. Then comes the dark hour, when the Czar took supreme command of the army and navy and sent Grand Duke Nicholas to the Caucasus, which is illustrated in the picture with a familiar view of these two central figures conversing presumably in the grounds of the palace.

In this manner the picture tells its story of this remarkable period of history, always in the same effective and lucid manner, giving us, first-hand as it were, truthful pictures of the student, the peasant, the soldier, the socialist, the anarchist and the Bolshevik, "all of whom have been led to believe themselves ready for complete freedom." The revolutionary period is vividly described in the picture, showing among other interesting scenes, the room in the Hotel Astoria in Petrograd, where Mr. Thompson lived, with its windows broken and its walls pierced with bullets. Neither have the leaders of the different factions in Russia escaped the ever-watchful Thompson camera; and one of the most interesting points brought out in the picture is the concentrative spirit of the Russian soldier fighting at the front, disillusioned of the German lies.

The most realistic battle pictures yet brought to us are to be found in the latest Thompson pictures. These were taken on the Dvinski front. Some remarkable scenes show a gas attack and the men in the trenches donning their gas masks. In these scenes the poisonous vapor can be seen distinctly in its descent over the trenches. At another point a machine-gun attack on a detachment of Russians sent over the top to clean out the German trenches shows the wiping out of the entire detachment with the exception of a half dozen who were taken prisoners. Nor has the photographer forgotten the noble part that Russia's women have played during this trying period, for they are seen in the picture at work in various capacities, including soldiering.

Plans for the future handling of these pictures, which are in course of a week's showing at the Strand theater, are under consideration. For the present information regarding them can be had from the Donald C. Thompson Film Company, 33 West Forty-second street, New York City.

"Too Much Henry"

Amusing Metro-Drew Comedy in Which Mrs. Henry Learns Through Nerve-Racking Experience That "Distance Lends Enchantment."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT IS astonishing that the amusing domestic situation in Drew comedies has not been run to the ground. The fact remains, however, that Drew comedies still continue to hold good, and when we are prone to believe that they have reached the very last point in domestic complications, one funnier than the rest presents itself on the screen. "Too Much Henry" is one of these.

As the story runs, Mr. Henry, a traveling salesman, is unable to pay proper attention to his business because of the tormenting recollection of his wife's tears at parting. No matter how frequent the necessary absences occurred Mrs. Henry failed to get used to parting with hubby. At last a bright idea enters Henry's head and he takes a lengthy vacation, during which time he follows his wife about the house like a dog, insisting on "running her house as he thought it ought to be run." Finally hubby's "cuteness" gets on Mrs. Henry's nerves, and at the close of the vacation instead of shedding tears she gleefully packs his suit case and sees him return to his work. Noon that day brings the last straw to Mrs. Henry's trials, when Henry returns with the news that he is to be retained in the home office.

"Miss Jackie of the Army"

Margarita Fischer Pleases in Five-Part American Production of Patriotic Flavor.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AROLLICKING, light-fibred role is that played by Margarita Fischer in the American Film Company's production directed by Lloyd Ingraham, with a cast perfectly capable of taking care of a number of fairly interesting characters. The picture is evidently intended for a patriotic offering, but is not particularly striking as such.

Margarita Fischer, in the role of the daughter of a military officer, is destined by the author to play a leading part in the capture of a gang of spies, the leader of which turns out to be an important member of the ranks of the American army under the command of Jackie's father. A pretty love strain, lightly dwelt upon, runs through the story. A bit of comedy develops in the picture through Jackie's overzealous desire to find incriminating evidence. In her search she discovers in the belongings of a soldier upon whom she has placed an ungrounded suspicion a paper that touches her affections. This is a real estate advertisement which leads her to believe that this man who has already made love to her, and who she secretly loves, is entangled with another girl. Her success in trailing and leading to the capture of the spy gang proves to her father that his supposed misfortune in the possession of a daughter in place of the son that he has wished for was not such a misfortune after all.

Some criticism might apply to the elaborate quarters of the individual soldiers, unless we are to believe that they are quartered in their own homes. The picture will be found pleasing to many, especially on account of Miss Fischer's charming personality.

General Spy Expose

New Serial, "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," Founded Upon Providence Journal Revelations.

THE inside story of the sensational manner in which countless German spy plots and intrigues have been baffled by the United States Secret Service within the last three years is shown for the first time in "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the tremendously gripping patriotic serial to be released through General Film Company, beginning January 12. The twelve episodes of this lively serial, which is produced by the Jaxon Film Corporation, reflect the campaign of the Government against the destruction inaugurated in the United States by German agents.

The rapid succession of thrilling incidents in connection with the tracking down of plotters and spies is based almost entirely upon facts revealed in the sensational disclosures which have been made through the Providence Journal in the last eighteen months. The announcements carried by the press of the country from time to time that "The Providence Journal will say this morning" have formed some of the most stirring chapters of the current history of the war and the activities of the United States Secret Service. The amazing ramifications of the work of the plotters in this country are revealed in a startling fashion by Jane Vance and Will Sorelle, two well known picture stars, and a strong supporting company.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

ONE DOLLAR'S WORTH (Broadway Star Feature).—This is an interesting two-reel production based on O. Henry's story of same title. There is a well sustained mystery element when the hero, with no ammunition but buck shot, kills the counterfeiter at long range. It develops that this was accomplished by cutting into small pieces a counterfeit coin intended for evidence in another case. As a consequence the counterfeiter who passed the coin to obtain medicine for his sick sweetheart is freed because of lack of evidence. Francis Parks appears in the leading roles.

BLUNDERING BOOBS (Jaxon).—A typical Pokes and Jabs slapstick comedy. The female member of a vaudeville team, out of a job, accepts a position as teacher in a country school. All of the men fall in love with her; and her partner, disguised as a peddler, sells her fake stage jewelry to them, and they make her a present of the different articles. There are quite a few humorous situations coupled with considerable watermelon and vegetable throwing.

THE GENERAL (Essanay).—This is an amusing number, in which Amedee Rastrelle cuts a piece out of an envelope, and, using it as a visiting card, poses as "General Delivery, U. S. A." He is introduced into society, is found by a policeman, who arrests him, but he slips away.

MONKEY-MAID-MAN (Sparkle).—Kate Price and Billy Ruge are featured in this number. Kate is the cook, and Billy is her lover, the ice man. Billy meets the master of the house in a saloon, and they buy a monkey, after partaking quite freely of liquid refreshment. After much excitement they finally dispose of the beast. There are a number of comedy policemen who do ordinary rough and tumble stunts, and Billy has some amusing work with the monkey, which is almost as large as he is.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

Christie Film Corporation.

THEIR SEASIDE TANGLE (Christie Comedy), Dec. 3.—This is an enjoyable story, written by Robert F. McGowan, concerning two young married couples at the beach. One of the husbands pretends to take poison, in order to scare his wife. She is wise to the trick and calls a doctor with a stomach pump. The action is farcical and amusing. Betty Compson, Jay Belasco, "Smiling" Billy Mason and Lois Leslie are in the cast.

HELP! HELP! POLICE! (Christie Comedy).—A pleasing domestic comedy, by Richard F. Young. "Smiling" Billy Mason and Ethel Lynne appear as a young married couple. They are tired of hearing their neighbor tell how he has captured several burglars, so each of them employs a thief to enter their home that night. A mixup of the farcical type results and the neighbor has to come in and help them out of their troubles. This contains an amusing idea and is presented in an entertaining way.

Commonwealth Pictures Corporation.

THE FROZEN WARNING (Commonwealth), December.—A five-part production of entertaining quality which will appeal to many by way of its novelty. Charlotte, the famous skater, is featured in the picture and is discovered to be a young woman of unusual talent. Her work is pleasing and the picture, which is directed by Oscar Eagle, is artistic in location, photography and general style. A full review will be found in our issue of Dec. 8.

Fox Film Corporation.

LES MISERABLES (Fox).—This ten-part screen version of the Victor Hugo story is worthy its subject. William Farnum plays Jean Valjean forcefully, and Frank Lloyd, the adapter and director, has covered himself with honor. A long review is printed on another page of this issue.

DAMAGED, NO GOODS (Sunshine), Dec. 23.—An excellent slapstick number, in which a father and his daughter have conflicting love affairs. Some of the most amusing things in the picture are the result of a "young cyclone," which causes much stir. The number will be thoroughly enjoyed by the majority of audiences. A full review will be found in our issue of Dec. 8.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE MARRIAGE SPECULATION (Vitagraph), Dec. 10.—Cyrus Townsend Brady is the author of this five-part Blue Ribbon Feature, which is conventional in plot but not without interest. It was directed by Ashley Miller. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

THE TRESTLE OF HORROR (Vitagraph). The fourteenth installment of "The Fighting Trail" serial shows a realistic train wreck, as the climax to a number of exciting incidents. The picture still maintains its excellence of action and production.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

AS OTHERS SEE US (Drew), Nov. 26.—An entertaining comedy with an original idea in which hubby fakes deafness with a laughable result in order to cure wife of a propensity for reading aloud. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE SQUARE DECEIVER (Metro-York), Dec. 3.—A five-reel, very romantic melodrama, with Harold Lockwood in the hero's role. This kind of offering with its bit of patriotic interest and its romantic love scenes has a strong pull with many in the average audience. For a longer notice, see elsewhere in this issue.

TOO MUCH HENRY (Drew), Dec. 3.—One-part domestic comedy of the regulation Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew stamp. Vastly amusing all through.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY TAKES GAS (Cub), Dec. 6.—In this number of the Jerry comedies an unhappy, but not particularly convincing, mixup between Jerry and his sweetheart occurs. On the day of his wedding a young woman borrows the bride elect's fur coat and is seen by Jerry in the arms of her lover. Mistaking her for his intended bride, he decides to commit suicide by taking gas. Finally, after an unsuccessful attempt at taking his life, explanations are made and the couple are happily married.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 8 (Signal), Nov. 7.—"The Mountain King" is the title of this chapter of the serial, in which Bonner is lured into intimacy with the "gang" by the Baron. An attempt to gain possession of the stock books of the mine are frustrated by Helen, who rescues them from the safe when it is on its way to a hiding place. Some thrilling scenes occur in this chapter, which is well-staged and interesting.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 12 (Signal), Dec. 6.—"Daring Death" is the title of this chapter of the serial, which is a thrilling sequel to former episodes. On his way to the mine, Mr. Thurston finds Helen and Murphy, the latter having been injured by members of the Syndicate during the fight near the mine. An impaired wheel causes his car to be sidetracked, and while in this position the Baron's and his agents sever the brakes and allow the car to run wild down grade. We are left to imagine what happened until the appearance of the next chapter.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 154 (Gaumont), Dec. 9.—This number of the Weekly is unusually good and contains some interesting views from the Flanders front, a review of troops held at Camp Wheeler, which is given in honor of the daughters of Joe Wheeler, for whom the camp is named; the launching of the new war freighter, the "Seattle"; a lake storm photographed at Chicago and other interesting current events.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 13 (Signal), Dec. 13.—"The Escape" is the title of this chapter, in which the mystery of a certain prisoner of the Baron and his gang is solved. It transpires that this prisoner is the brother of Pitts, who has brought about his capture and imprisonment earlier in the story that he might take his place as secretary to Mr. Thurston and thereby gain valuable information and power. The release of this man is accomplished in this chapter, and also a repetition of his kidnapping, leaving the villainous brother in the envied position of lover to Helen, who does not detect the change, and secretary to the man he wishes to ruin.

LITTLE MISS FIXER (Strand), Dec. 18.—Billie Rhodes is the central figure in this amusing little comedy. Immediately after the separation of the young married couple of the picture the husband's aunt comes to visit them, believing that they are living happily together. The wife, realizing the situation in which she is placed, decides to have her husband present in spirit, if not in body. The complications which occur thereby are quite entertaining.

MISS JACKIE OF THE ARMY (American), Dec. 10.—A five-part production, featuring Marguerita Fischer. This offering is intended to fill the bill of a patriotic number, but as such is not particularly strong. The story centers about the daughter of an army officer, whose father has wished that she was a boy. She does, however, manage to make almost as good as a boy could have done in the tracing of a gang of spies to their hiding place and aiding in their capture. A pretty love story is interpolated and the picture will be found pleasing to many.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

AN INTERNATIONAL SNEAK (Sennett-Paramount), Dec. 2.—Chester Conklin, Billy Armstrong and Ethel Tera are featured in this two-part laughmaker, typically Sennett and worth while. It is reviewed elsewhere.

TOOTHACHES AND HEARTACHES (Klever), Dec. 3.—A Victor Moore comedy, in which the comedian, who is not in love with his homely wife, goes to the dentist to have a tooth out. He takes gas and dreams a wonderful dream about pretty girls who follow him everywhere. This is not one of the best of the Klever comedies, nor is the subject one that will appeal to all. The tooth-drawing scenes are unnecessarily vivid in portrayal.

A BEDROOM BLUNDER (Sennett), Oct. 7.—The element of fun in this two-part farce comedy is clean and unobjectionable for the most part, unless objection be raised to the appearance in closeup of a galaxy of bathing girls in one-piece suits. The theme of the picture centers about the capers of a husband. A change of rooms at the hotel at which the two couples in question are stopping gives opportunity for many complications that are strictly funny. Charles Murray is the comedy star.

OH, DOCTOR! (Arbuckle), Sept. 30.—Roscoe Arbuckle, in this two-part farce comedy, plays an amusing part. In the capacity of a doctor he visits, unknown to his wife, a beautiful vampire who finally becomes the possessor of his wife's necklace through an accomplice. Some amusing horse play is introduced that would keep any audience in roars of laughter.

ROPING HER ROMEO (Sennett), Oct. 21.—An unusually amusing two-part farce comedy, in which "Little Nell," the sheriff, has her heart broken twice, and mended once. One of her rival lovers, a bandit, is finally captured in one of the funniest of chases up through a chimney and down, and over the mountains. This comedy will be much enjoyed, being free from strictly objectionable business.

THE SECRET GAME (Lasky), Dec. 9.—A strong detective story, one showing affiliation between Japanese and American secret service officials in an effort to circumvent German spies. Sessue Hayakawa is featured. The picture is reviewed at length on page 1643 in the last issue.

THE ETERNAL TEMPTRESS (Famous Players), Dec. 3.—Lina Cavalieri is featured in this entertaining story of Venice and Rome, finely staged by Emile Chautard. It is reviewed on another page.

TOM SAWYER (Famous-Players), Dec. 10.—An exceptionally fine visualization of Mark Twain's great story of American boyhood, with great care exhibited in details of performance and setting and with Jack Pickford entirely satisfactory in the title role. A delightful entertainment.

THAT NIGHT (Sennett), Dec. 17.—A two-part farce comedy featuring Charles Murray, Wayland Trask and Mary Thurman. The plot of this comedy is not of the most refined and will not help it to a welcome before refined audiences. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE ROTOGRAVURE SECTION (Pathe), Dec. 9.—A half-reel subject which demonstrates clearly the new process for printing the magazine and picture sections of great newspapers. The making of full-page, photographic plates, etching of the cylinder and other processes are shown. This is instructive and will interest most observers very greatly.

AT THE CIRCUS (Pathe), Dec. 9.—On same reel with above. This is an animated drawing, showing Happy Hooligan and the three kids under the big tent. Numerous animals are pictured in an amusing way, and Happy has an adventure in the lion's den.

THE TOWER OF DEATH (Pathe), Dec. 16.—Episode No. 14 of "The Seven Pearls." One of the most interesting and exciting installments of the entire serial. This pictures Ilma's escape from the piano box. She then gets the seventh pearl from Joe Gudgeon, but is immediately attacked by Perry and Stayne. During the exciting incidents pictured, Perry throws Stayne under a locomotive and fights with Harry. Ilma climbs to the top of a water tank and falls into it. The tank is destroyed by dynamite at the close.

VENGEANCE IS MINE (Pathe Play), Dec. 16.—A five-reel subject, produced by Astra Film Corporation and directed by Frank Crane. Irene Castle is featured as the daughter of a financier who commits suicide after being made the scapegoat of some crooked financiers. The girl determines to have revenge upon the malefactors, but when vengeance is in her hands she relents. There is a well-defined story interest in this, though some of the melodramatic incidents are not strongly realized. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE FALSE LOCKET (Pathe), Dec. 16.—Episode No. 4 of "The Hidden Hand." Doris escapes from under the upturned boat and swims ashore, aided by Jack Ramsey. Friends take them to Whitney Island, where Jack recovers the packet. The chief incidents which follow have to do with the substitution of a false locket by the Hidden Hand. Doris is nearly killed in an explosion and fresh suspicion is turned upon Jack. The later explosion of the packet, killing the Hidden Hand's henchman, is an interesting and dramatic development. Doris and Jack become reconciled and are now in love.

ARGUS PICTORIAL NO. 3 (Pathe), Dec. 16.—This pleasing number opens with views of coral limestone rocks taken on a tropical island. The rock is described as being tough and porous; views are shown of the rock being sawed into building blocks and shingles. There follows an interesting microscopic study of the crystallization of various fluids, including sulphate of zinc and nitrate of silver. "Tied dyeing" is an odd form of designing, demonstrated by Prof. E. J. Thatcher of Columbia University. The interesting reel closes with Helena Dayton Smith's clay figures in comic poses.

THE SEVENTH PEARL (Pathe), Dec. 23.—This fifteenth and final episode of "The Seven Pearls" brings the story to a thrilling close. It pictures the last desperate effort of Perry Mason to get the pearls, and the manner in which he is outwitted. The scenes in the deposit vault and in the chamber of horrors are vividly enacted. The serial has contained many novel "stunts." The interest was split up in one or two installments, but on the whole it has contained numerous original situations and kept a good hold upon the interest.

THE AIRLOCK (Pathe), Dec. 23.—Episode No. 5 of "The Hidden Hand." Numerous exciting events occur in this number. Doris is taken to the subterranean chambers of the Hidden Hand and has a narrow escape from drowning, after hiding in the vault. The Countess Olga Sonia appears and declares that Doris is the child of the Grand Duke Alexis, the girl of the prophecy. Vera renews her efforts to prove herself the daughter of Judson Whitney. The final scenes occur in a church building, where Doris and Jack are followed by the Hidden Hand and his henchmen.

Select Pictures Corporation.

SHIRLEY KAYE (Select).—Five-part screen version of Hulbert Footner's stage play, this picture is a pleasant comedy and is played in the right spirit by Clara Kimball Young. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

BECAUSE OF A WOMAN, Dec. 16.—Jack Livingston and Belle Bennett take the leading roles in this five-part photoplay, which is not well put together. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE MATERNAL SPARK, Dec. 16.—Seven-part story of a woman's sacrifice, this picture is natural in plot and interesting in theme. Roland Lee and Irene Hunt have the principal parts. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

UNTIL THEY GET ME (Triangle).—A topnotch picture, introducing a new name among the bright lights, this five-part Triangle was written by Kenneth B. Clarke. Pauline Starks is the newcomer. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 101 (Universal), Dec. 5.—The Red Cross crusade for new members is a leading feature of this very interesting number. Other subjects treated are the opening of the racing season in Madrid, launching of the steamship Seattle, burial of a French general, etc.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 30 (Universal), Dec. 8.—Contains many timely subjects, most of which throw light upon present war activities. Troop movements, recruiting for the aviation corps and scenes along the front are included. The number closes with newspaper cartoons.

SECRET SERVANTS (Nestor), Dec. 17.—A comedy number, by Wm. Beaudine, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey as a married couple. Both of them flirt with others and are exposed by snapshot photographs taken by the scheming servants. This is an average number of a fair degree of strength.

HEARTS OF STEEL (Universal Special), Dec. 22.—Episode No. 10 of "The Red Ace." A typical installment, with numerous adventurous incidents recorded. Virginia swims ashore after being wrecked in the canoe, and the foreign spies later succeed in raising the box of platinum from the lake. Winthrop, after driving the spies from the cabin, goes with Virginia on horseback to intercept those who are fleeing to the nearest railway with the treasure box. Virginia boards the engine they are using and is thrown off at the close.

THE SECRET OF THE TOMB (Universal Special), Dec. 22.—Episode No. 4 of "The Phantom Ship." In this installment both of the conflicting crews arrive on the island in Gaston's yacht. All hands begin searching for the hidden treasure. Gaston confronts Betty and commands her to give him the other half of the torn map, not knowing that her fiancé has turned against her and stolen it. The island presents a picturesque setting for further adventure with its native huts and wild, rugged landscape.

BUCKING BROADWAY (Special Productions), Dec. 24.—A new "Cheyenne" Harry narrative, written by George Hively and directed by Jack Ford. A stock buyer lures Cheyenne's girl to New York. The hero follows, with a band of cowboys, and makes a cleanup of a cabaret where he finds the stock buyer and the girl. The number is very capably directed and the general familiarity of the plot is offset by pleasing humor and sentiment. It is one of the strongest of the "Cheyenne" Harry series. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp.

THOSE WHO PAY (U. S. Booking Corp.).—Seven-part Thomas H. Ince made picture, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and starring Bessie Barriscale, this photoplay is a fine example of screen drama. Strong in plot and exceedingly well played, the production is of a high order. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

World Pictures.

THE TENTH CASE, Dec. 17.—A woman's fight to establish her innocence, when charged with infidelity, is the subject of this five-part photoplay. June Elvidge heads a good cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

NEXT MARY PICKFORD PICTURE IN JANUARY.

Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft picture, "Stella Marie," adapted from William J. Locke's well-known book, by Frances Marion, will be released the end of January. It was staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

Conducted by A. K. GREENLAND

Charles H. Christie Visiting Trade

In New York Since Thanksgiving—Has Left for New England—Will Return to Studios by New Year.

MANHATTAN has been host to Charles H. Christie for the last two weeks; in fact, ever since the gentlemanly treasurer of the Christie Film Company arrived here Thanksgiving Day. By the time this article circulates among the trade, however, he will have arrived in Boston, where he plans to call on Manager E. A. Golden of the Boston Photoplay Company, who controls the Christie distribution throughout New England.

Before his departure for Massachusetts Mr. Christie visited the Moving Picture World offices, where he delivered himself of the following interesting data for adherents of the independent market: "If this trip across the country has brought any one development forcibly to my attention it is the increasing strength of the independent exchangemen. And I mean 'independent,' not the occasional state right buyer, who makes a sporadic investment or two, but fails to extract the maximum profit because he does not feed his sales force sufficient fuel. Truly the improvement in this phase is obvious today to any one who knows the type of exchanges that exploit our wares.

"Then, too, I am gratified that our slogan, 'Best Theaters Everywhere,' is being so amply fulfilled. In order to corroborate this I merely have to cite the work of the S. P. Reiben Film Exchange in New York, who have repeatedly booked our comedies at the Rialto, and over such entire circuits as those of Keith, Loew and Fox. It is with modesty that I state that our comedies cannot be denied. Al. E. Christie has given them the winning dash and style.

"Our two groups of leads, co-starring in the one case Betty Compton and Billie Mason, he of the smile that will not erase, and in the other Ethel Lynne and Bobbie Vernon, meet the endorsement of all who have talked to me about the comedies of 'today.' The latter pair are new to the trade, but I vouch for their ability. Bobby Vernon was formerly a comic under contract to Keystone and previously to Universal. He is but twenty years old, but behaves like a veteran at the art. Now that he is under the direction of my brother watch his popularity climb right on up."

Incidentally, the Christie treasurer has arranged to return to Los Angeles around the new year.

"BIRTH OF A RACE" SPECTACLE ACTIVITIES.

The hotel living citizenry of Tampa has been further augmented by officials and artists who have gathered to participate in the filming of the forthcoming Sherrill historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Race," at the headquarters of the Frohman Amusement, near that Florida town. Within the past week Edwin L. Barker, president of the Birth of a Race Photoplay Company, accompanied by Jack Sherrill and Anna Lehr, the latter two of importance in the cast, have journeyed southward, as have also Anthony P. Kelly, the scenarolist; Philip Van Loan, and a bevy of bathing Veni, who are to interpret the languorous roles of Egyptian maidenhood during the days that civilization centered around the ancient Nile.

William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman house, has recovered from his indisposition and is arranging for a Broadway house in which to stage a trade showing of the Frohman offering, which has just left the cutting, assembling and titling precincts of the Flushing laboratory.

S. R. D., INC., ENGAGES SUITABLE QUARTERS.

Mel Simmons, general manager of the newly formed State Right Distributors, Inc., of which Sol. L. Lesser is president, announces that he leased suitable quarters for the transaction of the business of this association of transcontinental exchanges that he represents. The suite is on the fourth floor of the Longacre building, with the entrance through Room 418. Mr. Lesser and Mike Rosenberg, the latter the member from Seattle, are still in New York, and assisted in the selection of the new quarters.

In the meantime, Lesser and Rosenberg have been doing individual buying for their respective territories, as is announced in part in this issue, as well as in the last several editions of the Moving Picture World.

PARTRIDGE APPOINTS MORE REPRESENTATIVES.

Recent additions to the sales forces of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, a representative of which is stationed in every large city of the United States and Canada, are Joseph Desberger, G. W. Wilson, A. B. Lucas and Joseph Levy, all of whom have had long experience in the western district.

Mr. Desberger comes from the management of the World Film Corporation, and will represent the booking concern in St. Louis. Mr. Wilson, who will direct the Cincinnati district, resigned as representative of the Triangle Film Corporation in that city to join the United States forces. A. B. Lucas also leaves the Triangle to take charge of United States business in Kansas City. Joseph Levy has resigned from the sales forces of Select Pictures, Pittsburgh office, to handle United States productions in Minneapolis.

STERLING PICTURE CORPORATION LAUNCHED.

A new state rights selling and distributing organization has entered the field. It is the Sterling Picture Corporation, with headquarters on the sixth floor of the Godfrey Building, and which has selected for its purpose that of exploiting state right productions for various independent manufacturers by arrangements which entail the taking over of the sales rights of the entire film, and it has the further purpose of handling the bookings in such territories where a ready buyer may not put in appearance. Toward this end the New York headquarters will serve as exchange No. 1 in the contemplated system.

The identity of the board of directors of the concern has not been announced, but it is advised that they are about to engage an exchangeman well known in the trade, and are prepared to offer this man the presidency as well as the general management.

The first material that the company announces is the purchase of certain of the Harry Raver subjects, three of which are already made and all of which feature Alma Hanlon. It is intimated that they may close for the exploitation of all forthcoming Raver productions, as well as a Russian revolution subject.

RAVER MYSTERY READY FOR CUTTING.

The final scenes of the new mystery story, which has been announced as in course of production by Harry Raver, have been photographed and the picture is now ready for the cutting room. The picture is described as a new type of "crook" drama and contains a plot which, in addition to possessing a strong mystery element, is notable for plenty of action of the rapid-fire sort. While Edmund Breese, the star of the production, has on several occasions, notably in "The Scarecrow" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," evidenced remarkable cleverness in depicting dual roles, this is the first time in his career that he has attempted the portrayal of nine distinct characters—a task he accomplishes with singular effectiveness in the latest Raver production.

Alma Hanlon, who plays the leading female role, also has a part which is said to give her excellent opportunities for the exercise of her screen talents. Among her best liked pictures, and those which have proved her drawing power as a star, are "The Mystic Hour," "The Libertine" and "The Whip."

BUTTERFIELD ILL IN NEW YORK.

W. S. Butterfield, the controller of things vaudeville and motion picture out in Michigan territory, and whose headquarters are in Battle Creek, Michigan, arrived in New York early last week, but has been confined in his room in the Hotel Knickerbocker ever since with a cold of the type that is prevalent in the East at this particular season. It is expected that he will be dismissed from the physician's care in a day or so. His mission to the big city is of a film-buying nature.

"Cleopatra" for State Rights

Helen Gardner Production Brought Up to Date and Offered in Six Reels.

AN announcement from the Cleopatra Film Co. states that a revised version of Cleopatra, with Helen Gardner as the famous queen of Egypt, will be offered to state rights buyers. This is a revival of the production released several years ago and which was proclaimed by the trade papers as the best photoplay produced in America up to that time. The story as then presented has been retained, and new scenes have been made with Miss Gardner to make the feature a spectacular production in every way.

It is advised that nearly two thousand soldiers take part in the battle in which the combined forces of Cleopatra and Marc Anthony are defeated by the Roman army.

Miss Gardner is especially fitted for the role of Cleopatra, being gifted with great beauty and a figure in keeping with the accepted conception of Cleopatra by historians. In this photoplay she shows the character of Cleopatra in varying moods, at one time the incarnation of tigerish ferocity; at another imbued with the seductive languor and delightful enervation of tropic temperament. With all the witchcraft of a worldly woman, and all the wondrous charm of a naturally beautiful one, she holds the eye every moment she is on the screen.

Helen Gardner as Cleopatra.

Charles L. Gaskill wrote the scenario and directed the photoplay, using for the story the main events of Cleopatra's life based on a combination of Shakespeare and Sardou together with original incidents interpolated by Mr. Gaskill in harmony with the character of Cleopatra as portrayed by these two famous authors.

Alexandria in the height of Egypt's glory is shown, and the elephants, camels, horses, sumptuous settings and battle scenes add to the dramatic story, which ends so tragically with the death of Marc Anthony and Cleopatra by their own hands.

This six-reel picture will be immediately available for motion picture houses.

RAPF ANNOUNCES TRADE SHOWING.

Harry Rapf announces that a private presentation of the super-modern morality photoplay, "The Struggle Everlasting," by Edwin Milton Royle, starring Florence Reed, will be shown to an invited audience on Sunday evening, December 16, at 8:30, at the Shubert 44th Street theater. This picture is to be shown to the members of the film and theatrical world, the press, city officials, and heads of social organizations.

James Kirkwood directed the screen version of this big morality play, which is an adaptation of the same play produced many years ago by the late Henry B. Harris, and which preceded the well known stage successes, "Every Woman" and "Experience."

The cast supporting Florence Reed, who plays the leading role of Body, are Milton Sills as Mind, Irving Cummings as Soul, Wellington Plater as Champion, E. J. Radcliffe as Banker, Edwin N. Hoyt as Worldly Wise, Fred C. Jones as Musician, Albert Hall as Poet and Actor, H. Hatteras as Aristocrat, Margaret Pitt as Wife, Mildred Chesire as Frail Sister, and George Cooper as Slimy Thing.

KING-BEE COMEDIES BUZZING.

The Bee-Hive exchange, handling Billy West King-Bee Comedies exclusively in the states of New York and New Jersey, have had three salesmen on the road who report that never in the history of the film industry have comedies been in such great demand as now. Contracts closed for Billy West comedies since November 19 have been very gratifying in number.

Such is the demand for these comedies that the Bee-Hive exchange will open a branch office in Newark, N. J., the address to be ready for announcement within the next ten days.

Another publicity stunt the King-Bee Films Corp. will release December 15 is an original set of instrumental waltzes composed by their star, Billy West, which they will print and release to the various newspapers throughout the country who care to print it. These waltzes cannot be purchased in any music store, and will not be sold to anyone. Following the publication of the number a prize will be offered to the best lyric writer who supplies a set of words that will fit the melody.

Shipman Records Activities

Announces Deals That Concern Each Branch of His Enterprises—Creates in Addition a Service Department.

THE W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company, of which Victor Kremer is general manager, has contracted for the production of one five-reel feature a month. These features will be exploited on the state rights plan, and a franchise for the entire twelve stories to be released on the first day of each month during 1918 will be open to negotiation either as purchases of an outright nature or upon a co-operative basis. These releases will introduce a comedian who already has the backing of the movie fans.

Shorty Hamilton's first release is entitled "Denny from Ireland." Six of the subjects to follow have already been decided upon, and half of them already produced; namely, "The Snail," "A Prisoner of War," "In Society," "A Texas Ranger," "On Wall Street."

Through the state rights buyers and exhibitors the motion picture public will be asked to vote their choice of other humorous stories which will be presented for their selection through the medium of the press.

After investigating market conditions for a period of two weeks, the W. H. Clifford Company came to the conclusion that Ernest Shipman was the best qualified to handle the exploitation of this series both in the United States and abroad, and a contract was accordingly entered into, whereby all business in connection with this series of pictures will emanate from the Shipman headquarters.

A line of patriotic comedies in one and two reels is being exploited, and will soon be announced. The Art Studios & Laboratories, situated at 316 East 38th street, an Ernest Shipman affiliation, are turning out prints from some of the European war negatives of D. W. Griffith. Some prominent stars of the screen have been enrolled under Mr. Shipman's management, and a special service department has been opened to attend to their needs. Amongst others, King Baggott was placed with the Wharton Brothers' Secret Service Serial, and which will keep him occupied until April next, after which time he will be starred in two special state rights features for which Mr. Shipman has already contracted.

Syn M. DeConde has recently completed a leading role opposite Mme. Nazimova in her forthcoming Metro feature. Many rising authors have entrusted business management of their works to Mr. Shipman's play department. John R. Coryell's first screen release, "Talking Talbot," was well received in scenario form by state rights buyers, and its early production is assured.

FINK ON EXCHANGE TOUR.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., announced this week that their traveling representative, M. R. Fink, started Monday last on a tour of the important states in the interests of "Mother." It is planned to hold screenings of the McClure feature in all of the important cities, such as Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Chicago, etc., at which time the territorial buyers of the various sections will be invited to be present. All of these gatherings have been prearranged by this Longacre building selling organization in order that every state rights man may have the opportunity of viewing the merits of "Mother" for himself.

Scene from "Mother" (McClure).

Mr. Fink also carried with him a quantity of copies of the January issue of the Ladies World, which carries a complete story in fictional form of the George Loane Tucker production. By this novel method the old idea of distributing synopses of the film will be eliminated. The road man will also complete the previous arrangements which have been made to screen "Mother" for the various up-lift societies throughout the country. Mr. Fink will carry with him two copies of the picture, "Mother," together with a complete supply of lithographs and other advertising accessories.

Goldburg Opens State Rights Sales Bureau

Intends Employing His Knowledge of Seven Years in the Business for Benefit of Independent Manufacturers.

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, lately sales and exploitation manager for the Ogden Pictures Corporation, has completed plans for a state rights sales and exploitation office, and is located in the Times Building, New York City. The plan of Mr. Goldburg's operations, as outlined in his announcement, is essentially in accordance with the ideas of those who had endeavored to form The Producers' Protective Association.

He will exploit and handle independent productions that are to be released through the state rights market and, as part of the entire scheme, will supervise and regulate the advertising and publicity and the advertising matter issued in connection with the productions placed under his charge.

Mr. Goldburg is one of the first producers to have released pictures on the state rights plan. He organized The Life Photo Film Corporation, which produced among others "The Greyhound" and "The Ordeal," and which numbered among its stars Lionel Barrymore, Mary Nash, Florence Nash and Elita Proctor Otis. He thereafter organized the Rialto Film Corporation, and with both companies acted as supervising director and sales and exploitation manager.

Before joining the Ogden Pictures Corporation, which has ceased producing, at least for the present, Mr. Goldburg was sales and exploitation manager for the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

In the course of his activities, Mr. Goldburg toured the country several times in order to keep abreast of market conditions.

Jesse J. Goldburg.

Mr. Goldburg has given out the following statement at his new offices:

"The entire industry has suddenly awakened to a condition of affairs that some characterize as likely to destroy it. This clarion call is sounded because of extravagance in production and methods of distribution, and lack of business co-ordination. The same condition of affairs exists, although to a lesser extent, in connection with independent producers and state rights exchanges.

"With my organization I hope to ultimately house under one roof a medium of distribution concentrating the advertising mediums, and engaging in a method of exploitation that will materially reduce the expense of selling and exploiting, and shorten the time within which a picture production can be entirely disposed of.

"It is a strange fact that the industry was never in a more profitable or healthy condition or conducted upon a more businesslike basis than before the era of stars with excessive salaries and other talent drawing princely income out of all proportion to the service they perform. The very gentlemen who are decrying present conditions are those who have created the star system with its fantastical salaries, not alone for the star but everybody in authority. With state rights productions there has been less of this mad scramble to do things regardless of the cost, and I believe that theaters have come to realize they can book high-class independent productions without committing themselves to whole series of pictures at prices not in excess of the ordinary program booking and that for the immediate future there is nothing left but open booking, and state rights method of distribution. My plans are fully completed, and all that is required to be done is to put each into operation as the progress of my institution justifies, but no production will be handled through my organization unless I can give it my full attention. When I find that I have got to shunt the work which I am expected to perform on to the shoulders of an employee, I will cease for the time being to take on added productions."

Mr. Goldburg further stated that he had his first picture to exploit but was not yet prepared to announce its details.

W. H. PROMISE NEXT HART FEATURE.

W. H. Productions Co., which is now releasing on the state rights market their first production featuring William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," announces that they have now in preparation the second Hart feature, which will be entitled "The Bandit and the Preacher." The role of the bandit is claimed to be a typical characterization by Hart, who is supported by the following stars: Robert Edson, Herschell Mayall, Rhea Mitchell, and Gladys Brockwell.

A very spectacular fight takes place in this production, wherein Hart and Edson fight a lone battle against an aggregation of roughnecks.

HODUPP LAUDS "SINS OF AMBITION."

"Sins of Ambition," Ivan Film Productions' latest release, is heralded by President I. E. Chadwick as his firm's crowning creation.

"Before leaving for home," said V. H. Hodupp, of St. Louis, Mo., "I would like to state why I made my purchase from Ivan Film Productions as large as I did. It is because in buying I always keep four cardinal points in mind, first, the title of the picture; secondly, the story; thirdly, the cast and direction, and fourthly, of course, photography.

"To illustrate my above statement as regards the qualifications of a picture for my exchange a good point in fact may be my most important purchase, 'Sins of Ambition,' the latest Ivan Film Productions' release. First of all let us look at the title, 'Sins of Ambition.' At this present time, when insatiable ambition seems to have been the cause of all the world's difficulty, it seems to me that the title of this production will strongly appeal to the public, and, while this is nowise a military picture, yet the title is not a misnomer, for every one in the east presents a distinct ambition, which is forcefully depicted in the play. As to the story the high touches are masterfully interwoven so as to present a perfect unity of action. Thirdly, it is always important to have people with drawing power, people that are known and favorites of long standing, and whose artistry stands out markedly. The female cast, headed by Leah Baird, Barbara Castleton, and Madeline Travers, stands in equal strength with the male cast, including Wilfred Lucas, James Morrison, and Anders Randolph. The photography of the picture is of the topnotch variety.

"The picture will have its first showing on Broadway in the New York theater, December 19, and," concludes Mr. Hodupp, "I am sanguine that the reviewers' opinion will unanimously endorse the sentiments above expressed."

CLUNE AND SHALLENBERGER MAKE DEAL.

"The Eyes of the World" will be given a trade showing in New York shortly. Much interest attaches to this adaptation from Harold Bell Wright's novel of the same title, and was produced by W. H. Clune, whose production of "Ramona" was presented at the 44th Street Theater for an extended run.

"The Eyes of the World" has never been offered in New York, although it has been acclaimed a motion picture thriller and is said to have taken over one hundred thousand dollars out of the Pacific Coast and intermountain states under the direction of J. L. Adams of the Deseret Film Company, Salt Lake City.

Shallenberger & Priest, of the Arrow Film Corporation, are the selling managers for both "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona."

"SHAME" LAUNCHED BEFORE HOLIDAYS.

Jules Burnstein, who is engineering the campaign which will place the new Zena Keefe vehicle, "Shame," on the state rights market, announces that the advertising matter, which will introduce the John W. Noble production to the public, is now ready, and the picture will be offered to state rights buyers before the holidays.

Mr. Burnstein was anxious to have the posters and other advertising accessories in keeping with the importance of Mr. Noble's production, and after devoting ample time to their careful preparation now says that "Shame" is well prepared for high-class theater presentation.

Sales of the Week

Herebelow a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Rights Market the Past Seven Days.

Rights for Tennessee and Kentucky on the Pathe features, "Today" and "The Mad Lover," have been sold to the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, Ky., Col. Fred Levy, president, and Lee L. Goldberg, secretary and treasurer.

Tom North, manager of the Pathe State Rights Department, reports that with the exception of some territory in the South and the New England States territory for these pictures has been practically all sold.

An arrangement, which involves an outlay of upwards of half a million dollars, gives to the Robertson, Cole Company, of New York and London, the exclusive marketing privileges to the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation productions, of which the new Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," is the first; the Ince drama, "Those Who Pay," starring Bessie Barriscale, the second, and Sidney Olcott's historical drama, "The Belgian," the third.

In consummating the arrangement with the Robertson, Cole Company, Mr. Hall is applying to the foreign market the same ideas he put into effect in the domestic distribution of U. S. subjects. He conceived the idea of marketing his productions through an already established chain of exchanges, and selected the Hoffman-Foursquare system and the Globe Feature Film Corporation for the New England district, the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. for territory south of the Mason-Dixon line, and the Gersten exchange for New Jersey.

W. H. Productions Co. announces the sale of William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" to Sol. L. Lesser for the territory comprising California, Nevada, and Arizona. Mr. Lesser has also purchased the rights for the same territory for the second Hart production, which is now in preparation, entitled "The Bandit and the Preacher."

W. H. Productions Co. announces the sale of William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" to Mike Rosenberg, of Seattle, for the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana. Mr. Rosenberg has also closed for the same territory to secure the rights to the second Hart production now in preparation entitled "The Bandit and the Preacher."

General Manager C. E. Wallace, of the Cosmofotofilm Co., makes announcement of the sale of "I Believe," the George Loane Tucker production starring Elizabeth Risdon, for the territory of Maryland, Virginia, Washington, D. C., Delaware, and North Carolina to Sidney B. Lust, head of Super-Feature Attractions, with headquarters in the National Capital. The deal was closed on Tuesday, December 4.

D. W. Russell, who handles the foreign market on Horsley and Rankin & Lee productions, announces the sales of the Rankin & Lee feature, "A Modern Lorelei," in which Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham are co-starred, to Joseph Monat for France and Switzerland; and to the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., for Argentine, Chile, Uruguay, and Paraguay.

The enthusiastic reception which "The Warrior" has met with from the exhibitors throughout his territory has induced James R. Grainger, manager of the Allen Film Corporation, of Chicago, Ill., to contract for further rights to the spectacle starring Maciste. To this end contracts were closed this week, whereby Mr. Grainger becomes the owner of "The Warrior" for the states of Kansas, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas. He originally purchased the territory embraced by the states of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Ohio, and Indiana for the seven-part feature exploiting the hero of Cabiria from Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., which firm controls the territorial privileges to the picture for the United States and Canada.

W. H. Productions Co. announces the sale of the entire series of their two-reel Hart productions for Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, and Utah to the Foursquare Pictures Corporation, of Colorado.

The biggest state rights sale on record of the Ivan Film Company the last several months, and perhaps the biggest state rights sale of any concern in the country, is the one concluded this week with V. H. Hodupp, of St. Louis, Mo.

The territories covered include Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, northern Wisconsin, and Illinois. The following are the subjects: Missouri and Kansas, "Two Men and a Woman," "One Law for Both," "Sins of Ambition," "Human Clay," "Married in Name Only," "Life or Honor," and all future releases of Ivan Film Productions; for Indiana and Illinois, "Married in Name Only," "Sins of Ambition," "Human Clay," "Life or Honor"; for Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and northern Wisconsin, "Girl Who Did Not Care," "One Law for Both," "Babbling Tongues," "Two Men and a Woman," "Married in Name Only," "Human Clay," "Sins of Ambition," and "Life or Honor."

So impressed has been Mr. V. H. Hodupp with the product of the Ivan people that he has already contracted for the next two pictures now in work under the direction of William Humphrey and F. J. Grandon.

W. H. Productions Co. announces the sale of their two-reel William S. Hart features for New York to the Dispatch Film Service, New York City.

Charles E. Christie announces that contracts have been signed with the Consolidated Feature Film Company, Denver, for the regular weekly release of Christie Comedies in the territory of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

The territory for North and South Dakota, Minnesota and Northern Wisconsin has been sold by the Pathe Exchange on "Today" and "The Mad Lover" to the Supreme Feature Film Corporation of Minneapolis, F. W. Thayer, manager.

The E. and H. Film Distributing Co., Atlanta, Ga., P. A. Engler, manager, advises that they have closed for the southern rights for "Babbling Tongues," the Ivan Production. They are handling this production in addition to the "Submarine Eye" and the "Ne'er Do Well," Billy West Comedies, and Art Dramas.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., report the sale of "I Believe" (Cosmofotofilm Co.) to Dawn Masterplays Co., Detroit, for Michigan.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., selling agents for the Paragon Film Corporation, announce the sale of "The Whip" for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas to the Yale Photoplay Co. of Texas.

Ivan Abramson Creates Own Firm

Well-Known Director and Producer Becomes Generalissimo of Graphic Film Corporation—Offices in Godfrey Building.

ON Monday morning, December 3, the offices of the Graphic Film Company were established at 729 Seventh avenue. Though no preliminary announcements have antedated this notice it is a safe prediction that this firm will quickly grip the attention of the state rights buying field.

Ivan Abramson, long well known as the organizer of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., of which he was until recently its president, has severed his connections with that company, and has accepted the presidency and director-generalship of the new organization formed for the utilization of his unique and admitted abilities. As writer and director of "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "One Law for Both," "Sins of Ambition," and twenty other screen successes the Graphic head has created for himself a wide reputation.

Mr. Abramson goes to the Graphic Film Corporation with a determination to do even better than in the past. With three new plays already in scenario form, each one of which he considers better than any of his past efforts, he will soon begin directing with a cast which he is choosing in the Graphic's offices in the Godfrey building with care and skill.

The emblem of the Graphic concern will be an open eye. A competent staff embracing all departments, be it office or studio, is being engaged at the new offices on the seventeenth floor.

SECOND SERIES OF OFFICIAL ITALIAN WAR FILMS.

It was announced from the offices of the Fort Pitt Theater Company of Pittsburgh, in the Times Building, last week, that the second series of the official Italian war films, which show the terrific fighting between the Italians and Austrians on the Adige Plateau and the Piave River, which will reach America some time this week, will be released for the United States during January. The first series of official Italian war films, known as "The Italian Battlefield," established such success in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and other large cities, that the production of the new pictures will be watched with great interest.

Recent Italian reverses and the subsequent heroic stand of the Italian armies in Northern Italy against the Austro-German forces, have brought Italy's position in the present world war strongly into the limelight. All films pertaining to Italy's activities, therefore, will be watched with great interest in the future.

William Moore Patch, president of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, arrived in New York last week after an absence of a fortnight, during which time he visited the West and Middle West.

"RAFFLES" COUNTERACTS EFFECT OF TAXES.

Special productions, such as "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," are the solution of the present war tax problems of the exhibitors, according to Hiller & Wilk of New York, who have handled some of the biggest state rights propositions on the market during the last few years.

These state rights specialists explain that exhibitors, by booking a big production once a month or perhaps even oftener, are enabled to raise their admission price to a figure that will allow them to assume the tax and, at the same time, make a profit more than large enough to offset any possible loss through the falling off of patronage when presenting regular five-reel program pictures with the two reels of comedy and the one-reel filler.

Pathe Christmas Program

Big Box Office Stars and Players on the Bill for Christmas Week.

AN unusually large number of box office stars and well known players appear on Pathe's program for the week of December 23. They include Marion Davis, the beautiful young star who has caused a sensation in New York; Doris Kenyon, Mollie King, Harold Lloyd, Joseph Kilgour, Pedro de Cordoba, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, Gladden James, Boyce Combe, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, Mahlon Hamilton, Creighton Hale, Leon Bary, Bebe Daniels, and Harry Pollard.

Marion Davies is starred in "Runaway Romany," the most extensively advertised five-reel feature ever produced. It is released as a Pathe Special, and is a fine attraction for the holidays. Marion Davies is one of the most beautiful of the stage favorites of the day. The big all-star cast includes Joseph Kilgour, Pedro de Cordoba, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, Gladden James, Boyce Combe, the English actor, and William Bitner.

Over $50,000 has been spent on this picture advertising it in over forty of the largest newspapers in the United States, and this extensive advertising will be continued through December and probably through January. On the day of release full page advertisements will be published in a large list of Sunday newspapers in every section of the country.

Doris Kenyon is starred in "The Hidden Hand," episode five, entitled "The Air Lock," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, and Mahlon Hamilton, released in two reels, and produced by Pathe. Thrills abound in this chapter.

Mollie King's vehicle is the fifteenth episode of "The Seven Pearls" entitled "The Seventh Pearl," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra. Thrill follows thrill in this chapter in which Ilma and Harry finally secure the last pearl.

Harold Lloyd appears in a one-reel comedy entitled "Bashful," produced by Rolin, in which he is supported by Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard.

"The Pearl of the Atlantic," "Belle Isle" ("Picturesque Brittany"), and "Strange Fresh Water Insects" form a split reel Pathe colored scenic and educational.

An International cartoon and educational split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 104 and No. 105 complete this program.

TUCKER GETS FINE MOONLIGHT EFFECTS.

The realistic night effects secured in Goldwyn Pictures are varied in Mae Marsh's forthcoming vehicle, "The Cinderella Man," by a photographic novelty of the highest order, devised and introduced by Director George Loane Tucker. The scene is on the water in the bay of Naples, Italy, at night. It is just a short, atmospheric note in the action; but it affords a thrill in giving the effect of the moon passing from under a cloud.

The scene does not show the moon. Mr. Tucker contends that there is much more to be gained by suggestion than by representation, so all that is seen is just the light of the moon, bathing everything in the picture. First the scene is deep blue with the moon under the cloud, and then, suddenly, as the moon comes out, everything is illumined by a bright light.

In the continuity of "The Cinderella Man," which was written by Director Tucker, may be found the explanation of how the effect was secured. "Tone the scene blue," reads the direction; "and let three feet run black-and-white." It is very simple when one knows how it is done, but it is highly successful on the screen in indicating the shifting moonlight.

MORE ESSANAY COMEDIES.

Essanay has completed the fourth of the series of slapstick comedies being produced by Director Arthur Hotaling, and work on the fifth is now under way. Each picture is a fifteen-minute subject, and carries a farce theme along with the fun and action.

Amedee Rastrelli, famous French comedian on leave of absence from the trenches in his native country, and Arthur Higson, a well known English contortionist comedian, are being featured in the productions along with a beauty squad, a number of whom worked with Max Linder in his Essanay productions.

For release December 15 is "Make Your Eyes Behave," and for December 22 is "Lunch." Previous pictures were "Hard Luck," released November 24; "The General," released December 1, and "A Depot Romeo," released December 8. One of the series is being released each week through offices of the General Film Company.

"THE SEVEN SWANS" (Paramount).

From time immemorial the legends of fairyland or some mysterious country akin thereto have held an important place in the history and literature of all nations. There is no country that has not its folk-lore and yet there seems to be a connecting link somewhere; the same plots, so to speak, are found in several lands, under different names and disguises.

The stage had gained the attention of those who saw the possibilities of fairy stories as drama, and we have "The Midsummer Night's Dream," than which there is no more beautiful creation in the whole range of stage production. But it has remained for the motion picture to afford the medium best suited to the elfin drama—and one of the finest examples ever offered will be "The Seven Swans," in which Marguerite Clark will star for Paramount in December.

The picture will be notable for its sheer beauty of investiture, costume and ensemble effects; it will be exceptional because J. Searle Dawley has constructed a charming story—adapted it, rather—and directed it with consummate skill. It will be photographically perfect, because of the wonderful lighting facilities and the skillful work of Lyman Broening.

Work on "The Seven Swans" is drawing to a conclusion. The company has been in Florida getting "summer" scenes. Great indoor sets have been prepared; King's palaces and gardens have arisen—as if by magic, in very truth—hundreds of gayly-clad people of a land that never was have taken part in a spectacle that should come very near rivaling the works of the masters in this direction.

KIRKWOOD COMES BACK TO FAMOUS PLAYERS.

James Kirkwood, who is directing "Eve's Daughter" with Billie Burke, for Paramount, made his last picture under these auspices about a year and a half ago, the subject being "Susie Snowflake," in which Ann Pennington made her film debut. He now finds himself once more under the roof of the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players. Work is now well under way on the new picture and Miss Burke, with the supporting company, is busy on the initial scenes for the screen version of the play by Alicia Ramsey, in which Grace George starred at the Playhouse, New York. Thomas Meighan will be seen in the leading male role.

HAYAKAWA ON WAY HOME FROM HONOLULU.

A cablegram received at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, from George Melford, director of "Hidden Pearls," starring Sessue Hayakawa, supplies the information that the company has left the Hawaiian Islands and is on its way home. Mr. Melford stated also that besides filming all the exterior scenes of "Hidden Pearls" they had secured about 10,000 feet of film on the funeral ceremonies of the late Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii.

Paramount Has Strong Start for 1918

Will Begin the Year with Plays Featuring Some of Its Best Acting and Writing Combinations.

FOR the first month of the new year Paramount offers in January a superior list of striking photodramas starring some of its most popular players and written by prominent authors. The schedule is notable for several reasons, not the least of which is the reappearance of George Beban, after several months, in "Jules of the Strong Heart," directed by Donald Crisp, and presenting the favorite delineator in one of his most pleasing roles—that of a trapper in the North Woods. The story is by William Merriam Rouse and the scenario by Harvey F. Thew and Frank X. Finnegan.

Another interesting announcement is that J. Stuart Blackton's second Paramount picture, "The World for Sale," filmed from Sir Gilbert Park's famous novel, will be released in January. This is the production which called for such distinct character types and has for its leading players Conway Tearle and Ann Little, with a splendidly selected cast of noted actors in the supporting roles. This was adapted and supervised throughout by Mr. Blackton.

Pauline Frederick appears in "Mrs. Dane's Defense," from the Henry Arthur Jones drama, and which, directed by Hugh Ford, the scenario being the work of Margaret Turnbull, promises to be one of the most effective pictures in which the popular and beautiful star appeared.

Wallace Reid, always a favorite with Paramount patrons, has a stirring story in "Rimrock Jones," adapted from Dan Coolidge's novel, by Harvey Thew and Frank X. Finnegan, and directed by Donald Crisp. This is a tale of the Arizona copper-mining country with characters from real life. The title role, played by Mr. Reid, is modeled after a well-known figure in mining circles in the state productive of so much of the country's mineral wealth.

Charles Ray has a new type of story in "The Hired Man," with its New England characters and locale. A country fair in full blast with the exhibits, sports and pastimes common to such events, is one of the notable scenes in this picture. The scenario is by Julian Josephson, a clever magazine story writer, and the picture was directed by Victor Schertzinger under the supervision of Mr. Ince.

Julian Eltinge has already proved his motion picture prowess, and in his two former Paramount offerings evidenced a splendid adaptability to the screen. His new picture, for January release, is "The Widow's Might," by Marion Fairfax, one of the most prolific and successful authors of film plays. It was directed by William C. De Mille, and is said to be highly entertaining, with an altogether new angle.

Jack Pickford appears in "The Spirit of '17," by Judge Willis Brown of the Chicago Juvenile Court. Julia Crawford Ivers did the scenario and William D. Taylor directed the production, which presents Pickford in a story teeming with human interest and containing a most original theme.

"DODGING A MILLION," MABEL'S NEWEST PICTURE.

Following the biblical injunction, "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," the Goldwyn Picture Corporation had Mabel Normand's newest picture in course of production for fully a week before deciding upon its title. Now, however, the matter has been settled, and Director George Loane Tucker has officiated at the christening of the infant—"Dodging a Million."

A strong cast has been assembled in support of Mabel Normand. Heading it is Tom Moore. His work with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," shortly to be released, gave such satisfaction to George Loane Tucker, who directed "The Cinderella Man," and to the Goldwyn executives, that Mr. Moore was promptly engaged for the masculine lead in the newest Mabel Normand production.

Others in the cast include George Fawcett, Hubert Druce, Armand Cortes, J. Herbert Frank, Edwards Davis, Franklyn Hanna, Bernard Thornton, Joseph Smiley, who has already appeared in a Goldwyn-Normand production, "Joan of Plattsburg," Florence Ashbrooke, Lillian Paige, Shirley Aubert and Rita Dane. Miss Dane is a prominent player in musical comedy who sang the prima donna role in the Mizzi Hajos "Pom Pom" and appeared in the Ziegfeld Follies prior to her determination to invade the new field of the screen.

MARIE DRESSLER COMPLETES "FIRED."

Word comes from the Los Angeles studios of the Dressler Producing Corporation that Marie Dressler has completed "Fired," her second comedy for Goldwyn release. It is in two reels and is said to be even funnier than her uproariously funny first one, "The Scrubblady."

Reports from cities and towns in which "The Scrubblady" has been shown indicate that Miss Dressler has lost none of the great public which used to flock to see her before she gave up the speaking stage for the motion picture screen. Newspaper critics have spoken with delight of the vitality of her broad humor, which never seems to wane and which apparently is even better reflected on the screen than it was exemplified on the stage.

Miss Dressler believes that the satisfactory completion of her second comedy marks her entrance into the ranks of successful scenario writers.

"I wrote the story of 'Fired' all by myself," she says proudly, "and, if I do say it as shouldn't, it strikes me as pretty blamed funny. I'm going to write all my own stuff hereafter—not because I believe I'm so much better at writing than people who get money for it, but because I think I know how fearfully funny I can be on the screen if I have the chance. Nobody else who has ever written a scenario for me seemed to think I could be funny enough to do justice to their most advanced ideas. Just for that, I'm going to show 'em what a scream I can be."

SEVENTEEN NEWS EVENTS IN MUTUAL WEEKLY No. 154.

It would be difficult to pick out the most important subject pictured in No. 154 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which will be released on Sunday, December 9. This issue contains more than the usual number of timely news subjects, no fewer than seventeen "front page" events being illustrated.

And it would also be hard to say which is the more interesting, the war scenes from abroad, or the happenings in the United States. From Europe come many scenes showing how France is rebuilding the shell-torn ground which she has reconquered, the inspection of the Polish Legion on the battle-front, and the bestowal upon the heroes of Bayonne of the decorations for valor which their brave deeds have deserved.

Ranking first among the many subjects pictured in the United States is an intimate portrait of Lieutenant Georges Flachaire, the famous French aviator and terror of the Huns. Recuperating from wounds received in gallant air fights, in which he destroyed many German airplanes, Lieutenant Flachaire has come to America to aid in the instruction of our ten thousand aviators.

Another scene of timely importance is the launching of the huge war freighter, "Seattle," one of the hundreds of new ships which will soon be completed on the Pacific Coast.

It would take more than this page to describe every subject in this issue of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly. At Camp Wheeler, Georgia, an impressive review of troops is held in honor of the daughters of General "Fighting Joe" Wheeler, who visit the camp named for their illustrious father. In the nation's capital the Government announces its need of skilled mechanics, and advises that any man of draft age can enlist in the aviation section until noon, December 15. At Camp Travis, Texas, Donna Easley, famous coloratura soprano, who has been called the "Nightingale of the Camps," entertains the soldiers with her notes of liquid gold. At Chicago, Illinois, a ninety-mile gale which endangered lake traffic did heavy damage along the beach front.

There are two subjects in this issue which the spectators will long remember: The thousands of ducks which the cameraman caught on the wing, and the Chinese baby show.

CHAPLIN DONATES CANDY.

Charlie Chaplin continued to do his "bit" this week when he stacked up ten thousand boxes of candy at the headquarters of the "National Defenders" Yuletide Committee, of Southern California, of which Mayor Frederic T. Woodman, Los Angeles, is chairman, designating that a box be contained in every package consigned to a soldier or sailor of the local Christmas list.

Attached to each of the Chaplin tokens was a small card bearing the signature of the comedian, on the reverse side of which is a brief sentiment expressing good cheer and good luck.

Col. Noel Marshall, chairman of the executive committee of the British Red Cross organization of Canada, was also included in Chaplin's Christmas mail, a check for five hundred dollars being sent to the army officer as the initial contribution for the Red Cross drive in Toronto.

Within the past two weeks Chaplin has autographed close to three thousand photographs of himself in response to numerous requests from every section of the United States where benefits are being conducted for the purpose of raising money to carry on worthy causes doing with the war. The photographs are to be sold at auction in every instance.

How Universal Begins New Year

In First Six Weeks Will Feature Messrs. Rawlinson, Hoxie, Mulhall, Carey, Grace Cunard and Louise Lovely.

THE distribution of Universal's product for the early weeks of the new year will account for an array of special attractions, designed to center renewed interest in the stars that have been prominent in past releases originating at Universal City. Harry Carey, Louise Lovely, Grace Cunard, Herbert Rawlinson and Jack Mulhall, stars long identified with Universal's activities, figure as leaders in the arrangements for the first six weeks of 1918.

There has been a careful selection of vehicles to suit the screen temperaments of the various star players, Harry Carey being furnished with a western, Louise Lovely having an emotional melodrama, Herbert Rawlinson figuring in a highly exciting adventure, Grace Cunard starring in sensations and Jack Mulhall having a romantic play to suit his style. Thus will exhibitors be able to offer their public the type of entertainment that is expected from the individual star.

Here are the specifications, in brief, that apply to these Universals so far as special features have been definitely scheduled for releases:

December 31—"The High Sign," a Herbert Rawlinson production, starring the hero of "Come Through" and other snappy productions of high-speed sensations. Elmer Clifford directed.

January 7—A Louise Lovely production, "The Wolf and His Mate," with Hart Hoxie, Betty Schade and Alfred Allen, in a feature directed by Edward J. Le Saint.

January 14—A Grace Cunard production, "Hell's Crater," featuring the star of some of Universal's most successful serials.

January 21—"Madam Spy," a Jack Mulhall production, with Claire Du Brey and Donna Drew leading the support. Douglas Gerrard directed.

January 28—A Harry Carey production, directed by E. J. Le Saint, "Phantom Riders," with Molly Malone.

February 4—The Louise Lovely production, "Painted Lips," directed by Edward J. Le Saint, with Betty Schade, Alfred Allen and Louis J. Cody.

THE PICTURE THAT MADE TWO STARS.

Whatever may be the public verdict of "Les Miserables" the production will be memorable to two young women in the employ of William Fox as having been the picture which gave them their opportunities to prove their right to be starred.

Before Madame Sonia Markova was announced as a star, Mr. Fox wished to verify his judgment by a try-out, and gave her the part of Fantine in his William Farnum de luxe production of Victor Hugo's masterpiece. He put her in high grade company knowing that if she could make the part stand out under such conditions she had the mettle justifying advancement. That his judgment was correct is proved, he believes, by the attention Madame Markova received from New York critics and reviewers in the notices of the opening of "Les Miserables" at the Lyric theater, December 3.

The other young woman who started her first starring picture under Mr. Fox's management just after finishing her performance in "Les Miserables" was Jewel Carmen, who had already proved her attractiveness and worth in numerous pictures.

FRED THOMPSON TO DIRECT BESSIE LOVE.

In line with Pathe's new policy of big stars in big features produced by big directors, Frederick Thompson, maker of what is generally known as Marguerite Clark's best picture, "The Goose Girl," and many other successes, and further distinguished as the first legitimate stage director to go into motion pictures, has been engaged to direct Bessie Love.

Under Mr. Thompson some of the best-known stars on the screen made their film debut, including Norma Talmadge, John Bunny, Lillian Walker, Earle Williams, Carlyle Blackwell, Peggy Hyland. He has also handled many others, including Edith Storey, Clara Kimball Young, Anita Stewart, Antonio Moreno, William Farnum, John Barrymore, Hazel Dawn, William Elliott, H. B. Warner, Naomi Childers, Dorothy Kelly, Charlotte Ives and little Bobby Connelly.

PICTURE WORK ENHANCES PLAYER'S POPULARITY.

The recent triumph of Marjorie Rambeau in a big Broadway production, "The Eyes of Youth," at Maxine Elliott's theater, is due, she says, in considerable measure to vastly increased public knowledge of the star's personality through her work in picture plays which have included some of the most successful of Mutual productions.

Miss Rambeau was widely known as a metropolitan star when she entered motion pictures, but her fame has been enhanced through her appearances on the screen in "Motherhood," "Mary Moreland," "The Mirror," "The Dazzling Miss Davison," "The Debt" and "The Greater Woman." With her reappearance as Gina Ashling in the speaking drama she was given a hearty reception by the public and critics.

"THE UNBELIEVER" (Edison).

It is announced that the forthcoming Edison seven-part picture, based upon the story, "The Three Things," by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, will be released under the title, "The Unbeliever."

"Christie Comedies"

Further Adventures of Young Married Couples Featured in Two Characteristic Comedy Releases.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AL E. CHRISTIE has concocted two new comedies with a farcical twist, one called "Help! Help! Police!" and the other "Their Seaside Tangle." Both deal with the tribulations of newlyweds and are constructed with the natural action and careful attention to detail for which the Christie offerings are known.

The casts of these new offerings are pleasing and the humor is genuinely entertaining.

"Help! Help! Police!" is a domestic comedy, written by Richard F. Young. The Smiths are a young married couple, portrayed by "Smiling" Billy Mason and Ethel Lynne. They have a neighbor who is always boasting of his prowess at catching burglars. The Smiths desire to have an adventure which will "put one over" on this bragging neighbor. Each of them employs a burglar to enter the house that night. The resulting situations are very amusing, and it is the neighbor, after all, who comes in and restores order.

"Their Seaside Tangle," by Robert F. McGowan, is a bathing-resort comedy, featuring Betty Compson, Jay Belasco, "Smiling" Billy Mason and Lois Leslie. The plot is a slender one and concerns one of the husbands, who pretends to take poison because his wife flirts with the other. A doctor and the beach police force take part in the general mixup. The clear photography and attractive settings do much to make this enjoyable.

WILLIAM S. HART IN BIG TREE STORY.

William S. Hart and company are in the Santa Cruz country filming some "big tree" scenery for the famous actor's next Arcraft release. With Hart are E. H. Allen, his business manager; Gertrude Claire, Maude George, Robert Gordon, and thirty other players of the Thomas H. Ince Studios. Hart is giving to this, his fourth picture for Arcraft, all the superb direction, photography, and dramatic interest of his other releases plus a story which has most exciting moments and much human appeal.

BOBBY BUMPS, EARLY SHOPPER.

No doubt inspired by the advice published far and wide in the press, on billboards and in street cars to "do your Christmas shopping early," Earl Hurd of the Bray Studios, Inc., tells in his latest animated cartoon, "Bobby Bumps, Early Shopper," appearing in the ninety-seventh release of Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, the "Magazine-on-the-screen," what happened to his youthful hero when he failed to follow said advice.

BIG FIGHT SCENES IN "THE AVENGING TRAIL."

Harold Lockwood's fight scenes with Lester Cuneo in his recent Metro wonderplay release, "Under Handicap," were big and thrilling, but they are overshadowed by those in his forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Avenging Trail," an adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo of Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf."

In "The Avenging Trail" Mr. Lockwood is a principal figure in a number of fights, but the most bitter is the one he stages with Louis Walheim, who plays the role of Lefty Red. Red challenges Gaston to meet him to settle their differences. The battle wages furiously with neither gaining the advantage until one of Gaston's blows sends his adversary crashing against the bar. Seeing that the tide is turning one of the crowd slips a knife into the hands of Red, who lunges forward to continue the fight. Gaston is alert, however, and, locking Red's arms, renders his attack useless and throws him to the ground, his arm broken. The fight was so realistically done that for a week Lockwood and Walheim carried bruises.

Fox Record for 1917 is 105 Pictures

Of These 39 Were Made in the East and 66 in the West—Companies Roamed All Over.

THE William Fox property at Sunset Boulevard and Western avenue, Hollywood, is as material evidence as is adducible in corroboration of the contention that it takes a whole lot to make motion pictures. This particular lot now contains twenty acres, having been enlarged within the last year from a fifteen-acre tract. But, big as it is, it is not yet large enough to contain the Fox Film Corporation's activities. The whole country round about the Pacific Slope, in fact, as far north as Portland, is utilized for work on locations, and, in addition, the corporation has five studios in New Jersey, another in Kingston, Jamaica, and its companies, at times crowded out even from these broad ranging grounds, rove extensively along the Atlantic Coast all the way from Maine to Florida.

Fox made 105 pictures during 1917—39 in the East and 66 in the West. The 66 included all of the comedies, most of the Standard Pictures, and some of the Special Features. The whole twenty acres at Hollywood was utilized for these, which means six stages were kept busy. Of the six stages, three are of the open-air type, one is inclosed, one is partly, and another completely covered with glass. The one partly glass covered is five times the size of the average stage, and will accommodate many hundred people.

The 39 productions made in the East have kept the Fox New Jersey studios crowded to capacity and running over. In fact many times during the year it has been necessary for a company to do all of its work on locations before beginning work indoors merely because there was no studio immediately available. One company that headed Annette Kellermann making 'Queen of the Sea' spent all summer and part of the fall out of doors at Bar Harbor, Me.

EDISON TO PRODUCE JAPANESE PICTURE.

Under the supervision of Cedric Gibbins, Art Director, the Edison Studios are assembling a series of unusual Japanese settings in preparation for the production of "The Weaver of Dreams" from the story of the same title by Henry Albert Phillips. Shirley Mason will enact the leading role as Oki Adachi. The picture will probably be released the latter part of December.

WORK ON "THE BLUEBIRD" PROGRESSING RAPIDLY.

In Artercraft's big photo-production of Maurice Maeterlinck's international dramatic triumph, "The Blue-Bird," two children will portray the chief characters of Tytyl and Mytyl. These famous parts have been entrusted to little Robin McDougall and Tula Belle, two talented children whose experience before the motion picture camera fits them well for this important work.

Supporting these two clever kiddies is an exceptional cast including Edwin E. Reed, Emma Lowry, William J. Gross, Florence Anderson, Edward Elkas, Katherine Bianchi, Lillian Cook, Gertrude McCoy, Lyn Donelson, Charles Ascot, Tom

Maurice Tourneur and Kiddies Who Appear in Leading Parts in "The Bluebird."

Corless, S. E. Potapovitch, Mary Kennedy, Eleanor Masters, Charles Craig, and Sam Blum.

Under the direction of Maurice Tourneur work on the cinema adaptation of Maeterlinck's famous play is rapidly progressing at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee, N. J. The largest set ever staged on the big stage of this plant has just been completed, representing the graveyard which turns into a beautiful flower garden before the eyes of the audience. It is confidently expected that this scene will afford one of the greatest of the many surprises promised in the new Artercraft production.

"HER SISTER" (Empire-All Star).

"Her Sister," the Ethel Barrymore dramatic success, is to be the next release, and Olive Tell will create for the screen the role made famous by Miss Barrymore.

As in her other pictures made for the Empire All-Star, Miss Tell will be supported by David Powell, who has a role particularly well suited to him.

Eileen Dennes, who will be remembered as the graceful dancer in "The Unforeseen," Miss Tell's first picture, will have an important role, that of the younger sister, in "Her Sister," while other members of the cast are Anita Rothe, Martha Dean, Charles Edwards, and Sidney Blair.

Scene from "Her Sister" (Mutual).

"The Impostor" will follow "Her Sister" on the screen if not in the flesh, and will bring once more to the screen charming Ann Murdock, whose play, "The Three Bears," is now running at the Empire.

Once more David Powell, called the best looking and most popular leading man in the movies, is the star's support, and equally good is the balance of the cast, which includes Lionel Adams, Charlotte Granville, Richie Ling, and Eleanor Seybold.

John B. O'Brien directed Miss Tell both in "The Unforeseen" and "Her Sister," while Dell Henderson was in charge of "The Impostor."

PATHE OPENS BOOKING SCHOOL IN NEW YORK.

Henry E. Genet has been appointed to the new position of Inspector Booker by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe exchange. Through this appointment he becomes an important member of the sales organization under F. C. Quimby, sales manager.

Mr. Genet is a graduate of Fordham University, New York. He worked for the New York Edison Company and for a big elevator concern, getting fine commercial experience, which has stood him in good stead. He went into the film business because he saw a big chance, and joined Pathe for the same reason, accomplishing noticeable work with this big organization.

Another indication of the importance of the booker's department in addition to the appointment of Mr. Genet is the fact that a school for bookers has been established at the New York branch, where at all times three or four good men will be in training, this being another of the progressive steps Pathe is taking to assure 100 per cent. service to exhibitors.

It is understood that Genet has worked out several additions to the splendid Pathe booking system which greatly reduce the time and effort expended in the proper demonstration of booker's work making for better efficiency and better service.

INNOVATION IN OPERATING ROOMS.

Kahn & Greenfield's remodeled New Mission theater, San Francisco, Cal., which has just recently reopened, now has a seating capacity of three thousand. One of the very interesting innovations is the operating room on the main floor with a large plate glass window in the rear of it, so that the theater patrons may walk around and view the Simplex Projectors in operation from a large foyer back of the booth especially designed for this purpose.

PICTOGRAPH TO SHOW CANDYMAKING.

The ninety-seventh release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "Magazine-on-the-screen," will take theatergoers on a most interesting trip through one of the largest factories in the world devoted exclusively to the production of confections. It should serve to bring to consumers the reasons why candy made by reputable manufacturers is not only wholesome but kept free from possible contamination in its production.

Triangle Program

Belle Bennett Shows Marked Ability in "Because of a Woman"—Irene Hunt's Work in "The Maternal Spark" Commendable.

THE Triangle program for the week of December 16 offers two dramas of life and business that have more than usual interest. "Because of a Woman," a seven-reel feature, with Belle Bennett in the leading role, and Jack Livingston supporting, will be the first release. Irene Hunt, Josie Sedgwick and Rowland Lee share honors in "The Maternal Spark," scheduled to follow.

"Because of a Woman" is the first seven-reel production to be released under the new Triangle plan to produce a seven-reel feature on the regular program each month. Belle Bennett has the leading role, and she is ably and well supported by Jack Livingston, George Chesebro and Louella Maxim. The story mainly concerns a man who sacrifices all, even to assuming the guilt for the misdeed of another, in order to protect the girl he loves. Jack Livingston is said to do some extra fine work in this picture, and George Chesebro, cast as a man who does everything dishonorable in order to gain his own selfish desires, is also up to the mark. Most of the scenes are laid in West Virginia and center around a southern family. Others in the cast include Josef Swickard and Lillian Langdon. "Because of a Woman" was written by E. Magnus Ingleton, pictured by George E. Jenks, and the play was produced by Jack Conway.

"The Maternal Spark," scheduled as the second release of the week, is said to offer Irene Hunt an excellent opportunity to display her emotional qualities. She is supported by Rowland Lee and Josie Sedgwick. Little Joey Jacobs also plays a prominent part in the picture, and shows improvement in his work. The story deals with a country bred attorney, whose ability is recognized by a prominent railroad president, and is brought on to New York as a confidential secretary. Rowland Lee is the attorney and Irene Hunt and Joey Jacobs make up his family. The joy spots of New York, and Josie Sedgwick, cast as Clarice Philips, "Who neither toils nor spins," get the better of the attorney. Great trouble exists for a while and it remains for the railroad president to settle the difficulties. Throughout this picture the situations are said to be well played and the ending actually carries a "punch."

R. Cecil Smith wrote "The Maternal Spark" and G. P. Hamilton directed the production.

In the Triangle-Keystone Comedy, "The Sanitarium Scandal," the Keystone bathing beauties do much in causing a general disturbance. The Sanitarium Hotel is a peaceful place until Peggy Pearce and her diving nymphs arrive. Then Baldy Belmont, a professor, Paddy McGuire, a porter, and Fritz Schade, the sheriff, all fall for the girls, and many "wet scenes" take place thereafter. William Beaudine directed the picture.

Two one-reel Triangle Komedies, "His Bad Policy" and "A Discard Note," are also included in the week's releases.

SUSPENSE TO THE LAST IN "THE LOST EXPRESS."

Evidence of well-balanced suspense in motion picture direction is apparent in Chapter 14 of "The Lost Express," the fifteen-chapter photoplay starring Helen Holmes, which is nearing its conclusion.

Chapter 14, entitled "Unmasked," scheduled for release December 17, carries the many audiences which have been watching the chapter play to the very brink of the mystery and leaves them still in wonder and suspense at its solution.

The mystery is founded on what became of the lost express. The train disappeared completely in Chapter 1 of the serial. While there have been many near solutions, the picture has sustained interest and kept away a definite indication of what happened to the engine and its three coaches after it left the station and failed to show up at the station next beyond.

Chapter 14 deals with the unmasking of "The Harelip," a member of the gang of conspirators who has attempted to rob Helen's father of his priceless invention and his gold mine property. In this installment "The Harelip" is revealed to old General Thurston and to Helen as Pitts, the general's private secretary.

The tangled skein is to be unraveled in Chapter 15, which is to be released December 24. That means that the thousands of anxious fans who have been following the puzzle since early in September can eat their Christmas dinners with full knowledge of what happened to the lost express.

EDITH STOREY IN "REVENGE" (Metro).

Production has been begun at Metro's West Coast studio in Hollywood, Cal., on "Revenge," the next starring vehicle of Edith Storey. "Revenge" is a picturization of the popular novel "Hearts Steadfast," by Edward Moffatt, which has been adapted by H. P. Keeler.

Tod Browning will direct Miss Storey in "Revenge," which will be a five-act Metro wonderplay, presented by B. R. Rolfe, Metro's western representative. It is a story western in thought and locale, bringing the star back to the sort of picture which first endeared her to the public. It is full of exciting and absorbing incidents and essentially dramatic in its powerful theme.

A strong cast is being selected by Mr. Rolfe and Mr. Browning to support Miss Storey in this unusually vital photodrama.

Bluebirds Ready Far in Advance

Schedule Completed Until January 21—Six Leading Players Busy.

WITH Bluebirds definitely scheduled well into January Managing Director Carl Laemmle is urging along the production of features at Universal City to keep the supply adequate and listed far enough in advance to give exhibitors every opportunity for advantageous publicity well ahead of release dates. Bluebird's five women stars and Franklyn Farnum are all busy on location, turning into completed products the scenarios that are depended upon to maintain the standard of excellence the program has established.

Incidentally, the third year of the Bluebird series begins with the release set for January 21—Dorothy Phillips, "Broadway Love." Bluebird No. 104, ending the second year, will present Mae Murray in "Face Value" a week earlier. The schedule of releases for January is summarized herewith:

December 31—Violet Mersereau in "The Girl by the Roadside," a dramatization of Varick Vanard's novel of the same title, directed by Theodore Marston.

January 7—Carmel Myers in "My Unmarried Life," screen version of Frank R. Adams' story, "Molly and I"; produced by George Siegmund, and released as Miss Myers' second feature in the Bluebird program.

January 14—Mae Murray in "Face Value," the story by Miss Murray and her director, Robert Z. Leonard, offered as Miss Murray's second Bluebird.

January 21—Dorothy Phillips in "Broadway Love," produced by Ida May Park from W. Carey Wonderly's story, featuring Lon Chaney and William Stowell, who head the supporting company.

There is one more release in January to be accounted for, and to fix that issue there are several subjects from which a selection may be made. In the regular routine of presentations either Franklyn Farnum or Ruth Clifford will be the star for the last week of the month.

BUSY YEAR IN SIGHT FOR LEES.

Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, have a busy year ahead of them, having been assigned by Mr. Fox to make eight pictures for the Fox Standard Picture schedule. Scenarios for some of these have already been written, and others are under way.

The Lee children having demonstrated that they are especially adapted as fun makers, these eight pictures will be comedy-dramas with the "human interest" vein predominating.

A vigorous publicity and advertising campaign of national scope in behalf of the Fox "Baby Grands" is now in full swing. An unusual line of posters and other advertising matters on "Troublemakers," their next picture, has been provided for exhibitors.

"THE GUY AND THE GUYSER" (Nestor).

A second allotment of Nestor Comedies, to run for four issues, is announced by Universal as supplemental to the four comedies that were scheduled following the slackening of production at Universal City. At that time Universal exchange managers requested that Nestors be released for four additional issues, and now has come a second request to continue them for an additional period.

Scene from "The Guy and the Guyser" (Universal).

"The Guy and the Guyser," starring Dave Morris and featuring Gladys Tennyson, for release December 24, is the last of the four pictures picked out for supplemental distribution. Both of the advertised leaders are supplied with roles favorable to their exploiting comedy in speedy details. Nestors, together with L-Kos, are providing the comedy in Universal's weekly distribution under the latest arrangement.

"THE LEGION OF DEATH" STARRING EDITH STOREY.

"The Legion of Death," starring Edith Storey, which is nearly completed at the West Coast studios of Metro, under the direction of Tod Browning, is an unusually massive production, elaborate in detail. The story itself is based, by the author, June Mathis, on the historic fact that since the time of Catherine the Great women have been the most potent factors in Russian history.

The star herself is individually fitted to portray a fearless fighting girl of Russia because she has the characteristic Slavonic round face and dark features, and she is singularly adapted to perform the athletic feats of riding, both on horseback and on motorcycles, the shooting and the fighting in hand-to-hand combats.

As great care has been exercised in casting the other characters, each one being engaged after a careful study of the strong "types" needed for the parts, Director Browning demanded that he be supplied with real Russian men and women for the big street and battle scenes instead of the regular extra players usually seen in mob scenes. The Russians were on hand when needed, but none of them could speak English, so it was necessary to employ seven interpreters and distribute them among the mob, so that Browning's orders could be carried out without mistakes. The settings erected for "The Legion of Death" are spacious and elaborate.

ERNEST WARDE TO DIRECT KEENAN.

Ernest C. Warde, son of Frederick Warde, and producer of a long list of big artistic and financial successes, has been engaged by Pathe as director for Frank Keenan, the new Pathe feature star. Mr. Keenan, known as one of the grandest American delineators of big dramatic roles, is now completing a strong feature called "Loaded Dice," scenarioized by Gilson Willets from the widely-read novel of Hillary A. Clark.

Mr. Warde has made final arrangements for the production of "Simeon's Shadow" from the novel by Elizabeth Lee, the scenario for which was also written by Mr. Willets. This picture affords Frank Keenan one of the most dominant parts he has ever had, that of the head of a great railroad system reminiscent of such men as Hill and Harriman.

L-KO RELEASES CARRYING STARS.

Having decided to add stars to the L-Ko brand as an extra attraction for exhibitors who have been showing the long established comedies under the trade-mark exclusively, President Julius Stern, in co-operation with Director J. G. Blystone, announces a few of the forthcoming attractions in detail. Hughie Mack, Gale Henry, Mack Swain, Myrtle Sterling and Bobby Dunn are all working, under individual directors, in active preparation of forthcoming L-Kos.

The second comedy in the "Ambrose" series, following "Ambrose's Icy Love," to be released December 26, will be "Baseball Ambrose" in nine innings of the national pastime condensed into two reels of fun. There will be a lively comedy, with grotesque Gale Henry demonstrating "The Price She Paid," and Archie Mayo is directing Bobby Dunn in a bathhouse feature that will engage a large assemblage of L-Ko beauties.

"Barbarous Plots" will have Hughie Mack as the star, with Bobby Dunn featured. In this subject there will be an unusual assemblage of old favorites who have frequented L-Kos for some time, including Eva Novak, Dick Smith and the comedy "vamp," Katherine Young. Julius Stern remains on the Pacific Coast for some time to come, centering his activities at L-Ko's studio in Hollywood, with occasional trips, on the business of his firm, to other coast cities. Abe Stern, treasurer of L-Ko, is meanwhile substituting for his brother at L-Ko headquarters in New York.

RICE AND CAVANAUGH FORM PARTNERSHIP.

Burton Rice, recently returned from the battlefields of France, where he saw eight months' service doing ambulance work, and who will be recalled as the designer of many of the attractive advertising displays of various film manufacturers, not to forget the talk-creating copy that he turned out for Bluebird in the earlier days, has formed a partnership with Raymond Cavanaugh, for the last three years with Universal as assistant advertising manager, and previously in the same line in Chicago, where his work on the art staffs of various advertising agencies made full use of his knowledge of printing, typographical display and engraving. The new firm, which has opened offices on the twentieth floor of the Times Building, purposes to turn out all orders from film concerns for black and white color work, art posters and such other design work as naturally falls under their style of endeavor.

TWO SCREEN PLAYERS HEAR THEMSELVES TALK.

For the first time in about three years Pauline Frederick, star in Paramount pictures, and Thomas Meighan, who has appeared as her leading man in many productions, had an opportunity of hearing what their own voices sounded like on the stage when they appeared with others from the Famous Players Studio at the Hero Land Bazaar in Grand Central Palace, New York. The vehicle of this appearance was a skit written by Willard Mack, based on the funny incidents that occur in a studio during the making of a production. The sketch ran for about twenty minutes and was a riot from the start. They "packed 'em in" for four shows and repeated the performance on another occasion. Others in the cast were Robert G. Vignola, William J. Scully and Ned Van Buren.

UNIVERSAL BOOSTS GOOD CAUSE.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Co. will enter largely into the purchase and distribution of the War Savings Certificates and Thrift Stamps. Universal took a quarter of a million in the first Liberty Loan and sold the bonds on weekly payment plan to its employees. In its move to promote the War Savings Certificates, every employee will be invited to participate, and Universal's Accounting Department will propose that every bill it pays for merchandise, supplies and other business obligations shall be partially accounted for in Thrift Stamps or Certificates.

Attractions for Broadway Theater

Managing Director Laemmle Announces a Number of Important Productions to Be Shown There.

MANAGING Director Carl Laemmle, of the Broadway theater, makes announcement of a number of very important productions, which will go into the Broadway during the months of December and January, during which time a double bill and continuous performance, at popular prices, will be Mr. Laemmle's rule.

The first of these special Broadway house features to have their initial showing on Sunday afternoon, December 9, are "My Unmarried Wife" and "Beloved Jim."

"My Unmarried Wife" is adapted from the Frank R. Adams novel, "Molly and I," skillfully done by Doris Schroeder and inimitably produced by George A. Siegmann. Beautiful Carmel Myers, last seen at the Broadway house, in the Jewel feature, "Sirens of the Sea," has the leading feminine role, and Kenneth Harlan, seen also recently at this playhouse in the Lois Weber-Jewel masterpiece, "The Price of a Good Time," plays the male lead. The well-balanced cast includes Beatrice Van, Pat Calhoun, Marc Fenton and Jack Hutchinson. The story is that of Phillip Smith, who reluctantly leaves the shelter of his father's luxurious home because of his penchant for a literary career, and who subsequently meets with an accident while saving the life of a child in an explosion blast. He is taken to the home of a doctor by his beautiful young ward and there becomes the husband of the girl, under unusual circumstances. His eyesight is restored in Switzerland but a harmless vampire and a wooden-shod immigrant re-enter the scene when Smith, restored to health, returns to New York minus his newly-acquired bride. Both the vampire and the immigrant bring about a happy finale with a decided twist in the fifth reel, making a production tremendously interesting from point of plot construction, acting and situations.

"Beloved Jim" is also in five reels. The story is a Christmas one, beautifully done by Joseph Girard and produced by Stuart Paton, who has a long line of decided cinema successes, including Universal's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," to his credit. Attractive Priscilla Dean, who made a hit at the Broadway theater in two Lois Weber features, notably "Even as You and I" and "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle," plays the leading feminine role and that of the wife of "Beloved" Jim Brockton, excellently portrayed by Harry Carter of "Gray Ghost" fame. The remainder of the cast includes J. Morris Foster, Charles Hills Mailles, Frank Deshon, Sydney Deane, Ed. Brown, Jos. Girard and Mrs. A. E. Witting.

Mr. Laemmle announces that special musical programs will accompany all of these features at the Broadway.

"UNKNOWN 274" (Fox).

An unusually large cast containing the names of numerous favorites of motion picture patrons is announced by William Fox for the Fox Special Feature to be released December 16. The title of the production is "Unknown 274," the star is June Caprice, and the supporting company, comprising ten actors and actresses, includes Kittens Reichert, Florence Ashbrook, Tom Burrough, Inez Marcel, Dan Mason, Richard Neill, Jean Armour, William Burns, and Alexander Shannon. Another important member of the company is Lady, the dog.

The story is that of a girl who was placed in an orphanage by her mother when the latter's husband was arrested by trickery in this country for failure to perform army service in his native land. The girl is discovered in the orphanage by a scheming couple, who adopt her in the hope of being able to marry her to some rich man. The girl meets a rich young man just as was planned, but he does not happen to be the sort of man the schemers had hoped to find. Result: He rescues the girl from her bad environment. About the same time the girl finds her father as a result of playing an old violin which had been left with her when she was placed in the orphanage. The theme of the story is stated to be "from poverty to millionaire's wife."

The picture was made under the direction of Harry Millarde, and George Scarborough wrote the scenario.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS SHOWS NEW POLISH ARMY.

From New York to New Zealand is a far cry, but in the Hearst-Pathé News No. 93 are some remarkable scenes showing the eruption of the volcano Waimangu at Rotorua in that British Island. The camera was perched upon the brink of the crater and caught a number of scenes showing the clouds of smoke and steam arising from the depths of the earth far below. In connection with these scenes are one or two others showing the "stern and rock-bound coast" in that vicinity. These scenes are of great beauty.

Among the other interesting features of this number are scenes of the new Polish army, which has been organized in France, and is now fighting on the side of the Allies. This army appeals to the imagination, since the Poles are literally a nation without a country and are fighting to have restored to them the land for which their forefathers fought and died and which had a brilliant history.

From Seattle, Washington, come views of an 8,800-ton ship which was built in 79 days after the keel was laid, it being one of the first to be launched under Uncle Sam's new ship-building plans. Scenes of life in the training camps, charming girls in the costumes of 2,000 years ago, the placing of New York's waterfront under martial law, etc., etc., round out an excellent number of the famous weekly and one which is bound to get applause wherever it is shown.

Picture Increases Vogue of Stage Star

Jane Cowl Sees New Englanders, After Witnessing "The Spreading Dawn," Storm Box Office of "Lilac Time."

BY A CHAIN of fortuitous circumstance Jane Cowl, star of Goldwyn's photoplay production of Basil King's story, "The Spreading Dawn," has punched holes in the theatrical superstition that the stage popularity of an actor or actress can be killed by his or her appearance on the motion picture screen. Miss Cowl's experience has proved that this popularity is enhanced by the very means presumed in some sections of the country to injure it.

The Goldwyn star was on tour in "Lilac Time" when "The Spreading Dawn" was released throughout the United States. Miss Cowl's managers were not a little astonished to find that in cities in which it followed "The Spreading Dawn" the business was even better than usual.

In one New England city the stage show opened the night after the picture had closed a run at a local theater. Patrons who had been delighted with the Goldwyn photoplay were so anxious to see its star in the flesh that they besieged the box office at "Lilac Time" and almost fought for the privilege of buying seats.

Under these circumstances Miss Cowl found herself almost in the position of motion picture actresses who elect to make a "personal appearance" at motion picture theaters in which their films are being shown. The natural curiosity of theatergoers to see in person, the player they had admired on the screen worked to her profit.

ARBUCKLE THINKS HE IS A HORSEMAN.

It is virtually decided that Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's comedy for release by Paramount, following "A Country Hero," will be a western story in which Mr. Arbuckle will appear as a cowpuncher, mounted on a dashing steed, pursuing the festive maverick over the prairies of the cow-country. Which is all very well, or would be, if Mr. Arbuckle were a trifle less given to avoirdupois; but as it is, he is saying with Richard III, "A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse."

Mr. Arbuckle has visions of himself, no doubt, "careering" through the sagebrush and chaparral with all the reckless abandon of a modern Mazeppa. Then he glances ruefully at the scales and in his mind's-eye attempts to conceive a horse capable of carrying his weight.

"SADIE GOES TO HEAVEN" (Essanay).

Little Mary McAlister plays the role of a tenement waif in her newest picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven." The six-year-old actress shows her remarkable fund of dramatic ability in this characterization, as she is required to carry most of the weight of the production.

It is filled with quaint sentiment, and revealing the hypocrisies of a certain type of the wealthy.

That the ecstasy of heaven is found where the heart is happiest is the moral demonstration of the picture. For Sadie, born and bred in the poorer part of a big city, returns to her tenement hovel, preferring its hardships and deprivations to a life of luxuries where sentiment and appreciation for the simpler qualities of life are so bluntly ignored.

There are many unique presentations in this picture. Sadie's entrance into the home of the rich via a clothes hamper is whimsically handled.

Mary McAlister wears some lovely gowns in this production, as well as some ludicrous rags. "George Washington Square" her ragged dog, is portrayed by Patsy Argyle, a newcomer to the screen, "rented" from a Michigan farmer.

Supporting players are Rod LaRocque, Bobby Bolder, Frankie Raymond, and others. The screen time is 65 minutes.

"New York Luck" Leads Mutual

Russell Is Featured in a Scrappy Financial Story—Other Pictures for Week of December 17.

William Russell is the "headliner" in the Mutual release scheduled for the week of December 17, appearing in "New York Luck," a story of "frazzled finance," intrigue and romantic adventure in the great metropolis. "The Lost Express," with Helen Holmes, arrives at the threshold of the mystery; Billie Rhodes comes near losing her happy home in "Little Scene from "New York Luck" (Mutual).

Miss Fixer," and the Cub Comedy, with George Ovey, and the Mutual Weekly balance the schedule.

Never has William Russell appeared in a more engrossing characterization or staged a more thrilling fight, than in his latest Mutual-American production, "New York Luck," released Monday, December 17. There is an unusual twist to the story, distinctly agreeable. It was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, scenarioized by Chester Clapp. Edward Sloman has achieved another triumph in directing this production. In the cast are Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Edward Peil, Alfred Ferguson, Frederick Vroom and Carl Stockdale.

A domestic tangle, arising from a family wrangle, gives Billie Rhodes another of her refreshing comedy roles in the Strand one-reeler, "Little Miss Fixer," released by Mutual, Tuesday, December 18.

The strongest dramatic climax yet reached is shown in "Unmasked," Chapter 14 of "The Lost Express," the Signal-Mutual photoplay, starring Helen Holmes, released Monday, December 17. Despite the discovery that "The Hare" is proved to be an impersonation, the clever villain succeeds in actually marrying Helen while the real secretary is held a prisoner.

George Ovey "double crosses" old man Grouch in his latest Cub Comedy, "Jerry's Double Cross," released by Mutual, December 20. The Mutual Weekly, released December 17, shows momentous events on land and sea with a liberal number of stirring happenings in the war zone.

METRO ACQUIRES "A WEAVER OF DREAMS."

Admirers of the stories of Myrtle Reed will rejoice to hear that one of her most popular novels, "A Weaver of Dreams," has been acquired by Metro Pictures for the use of charming Viola Dana. Work on the production has already been commenced at the firm's West Coast studio.

"A Weaver of Dreams" is a story of the heart, and Miss Dana excels in stories of this description, as will be made doubly evident when Metro's great special production of "Blue Jeans" is shown to the public. The action of "A Weaver of Dreams" takes place in a rural community filled with quaint types of humanity, where among simple surroundings a mighty drama of the human heart is played and reaches its dynamic denouement.

An actor of note has been engaged to create the role of the old "weaver," and the sympathetic part of Cynthia Bancroft is in good hands. John H. Collins, who is directing the production of "A Weaver of Dreams," starring Miss Dana, will announce his entire cast at an early date. The only player so far announced is Clifford Bruce, who will play opposite the star in the part of Carter Keith.

UNCLE SAM TO USE MOVIES TO INCREASE FOOD PRODUCTION.

Official motion pictures, bringing home the vital importance of increased food production, will be shown by the United States Department of Agriculture in hundreds of regular motion picture theaters throughout the United States. The first releases, which are to be handled under an agreement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through its exchanges, will be made early in December. The first film will show activities in the national forests, which are important sources of timber and water supply and also afford grazing for a large number of cattle and sheep.

The second release, which will follow in about two weeks, will show what children, through the pig clubs, are doing to increase the supply of pork. Other selections from the department's 40,000 feet of official subjects will make clear various features of food production, the raising of meat animals and horses, and will deal with home activities, such as poultry raising and the canning and drying of perishable products.

The department laboratories are at work on a number of other popular films, specially designed to make clear to city as well as rural populations, problems of food production and to show them ways in which they can co-operate effectively to feed the nation and the Allies.

FOX REPORTS FOREIGN INTEREST IN "THE SPY."

The generally favorable reviews and the reports of big business on "The Spy" are resulting, according to the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation, in many inquiries being made regarding the picture by exhibitors and agencies in territory outside the United States.

Advices from London are to the effect that the picture received markedly favorable comment on the occasion of its recent presentation at British trade showings. Interest, of course, is heightened by the fact that experiences paralleling those pictured in the film story have been of common occurrence in England during the past three years. The same, however, is true of other capitals and important cities; in all of these the agents of the contenders in the present world war long have been busily at work seeking information and data which might be of military value.

The Fox management is confident "The Spy" will prove just as big a success in other parts of the world as it has proved in the United States and at the British trade shows. An international campaign on behalf of the picture now is being outlined, and meanwhile the foreign department is closing with buyers for territory remaining open.

DIRECTOR O'BRIEN GETS DETAIL.

No expense has been spared in reproducing an ancient Egyptian throne room, one of many of the unusual scenes shown in "Her Sister," the Empire All-Star production which presents Olive Tell for the second time on the screen and is scheduled for release by Mutual December 24.

Director John B. O'Brien is a "stickler" for truth—in detail. He was not satisfied with the descriptive literature at the New York public library, so, accompanied by David Powell and a well-known artist, a visit was made to the Egyptian room in the Metropolitan Museum, where, by special arrangement with the authorities, permission was granted to make drawings of the pottery, carvings and draperies and other furnishings of the royal chambers of ancient Egyptian royalty.

From these drawings exact duplicates were made, imported tapestries obtained to conform to the designs of the original ones and a magnificent tiger's skin was secured as a covering for the throne itself.

The result is an exact replica of the original throne room and is strikingly illustrative of the determination of the Empire-Mutual directors to reproduce the real thing in pictures.

CARMEL MYERS HAS NEW LEADING MAN.

Following an engagement of more than two years with the American Film Company Ashton Dearholt lately joined the Bluebird forces, and is playing a leading role opposite Carmel Myers in "The Green Seal," which is being produced as a program feature under the direction of Stuart Paton. While with the American he was featured in a number of productions, and played juvenile leads in several of William Russell's pictures. He appeared opposite Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle" and Juliette Day in "The Calendar Girl." More recently he played one of the principal roles with Jack Pickford in "The Spirit of 1917" for the Morosco company.

Mr. Dearholt is an all-around athlete, and before entering the photoplay field was a racing driver of more than ordinary capability. His athletic training is being put to good use in "The Green Seal," for he is called upon to do some fight scenes and other strenuous stunts that would make the average actor throw up his hands in absolute despair.

IRENE CASTLE IN "CONVICT 993" (Pathe).

To "Convict 993," a five-part Pathe Play featuring Irene Castle, goes the distinction of being the first Pathe feature of 1918. This picture was produced by Astra from an original scenario by Wallace Clifton of the Pathe scenario department. It was directed by William Parke, this being the first time that Mrs. Castle has been under his direction. Members of Pathe's film committee have not hesitated to express the opinion that "Convict 993" is the best picture in which the famous star has yet appeared.

Associated with Mrs. Castle in the cast are a number of players of sterling merit, some of whom have been starred in Pathe productions in the past. Prominent among them are Warner Oland, Helen Chadwick, W. H. Gilmour, Harry Benham and Bert Starkey.

Paramount to Issue Chapin Pictures

Will Be Grouped Into Ten Episodes of Two Parts Each, All Dealing with Life of Lincoln.

PARAMOUNT is to present a most notable motion picture achievement, Benjamin Chapin in "The Son of Democracy," a series of ten two-reel features, each complete in itself and each telling a dramatic chapter in the life of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Chapin has given his life to the portrayal of Lincoln on the lecture platform, on the stage and on the screen. For years he has been engaged in making "The Son of Democracy," which now is to be available for exhibitors. No other living man could produce such a series of features as make up "The Son of Democracy." Mr. Chapin from boyhood has been a disciple of Lincoln. He has produced Lincoln plays and vaudeville sketches, appearing in them all in the character of Lincoln. In stature, in face and in manner he is a living reproduction of the Civil War president.

In "The Son of Democracy" Mr. Chapin portrays the great President, Abraham Lincoln's father, and the first Abraham Lincoln, grandfather of the President. Lincoln was noted as a humorist, a kindly humorist, and "The Son of Democracy" is crowded with smiles and hearty laughs, as well as with heart throbs and stirring patriotic moments. Mr. Chapin, an actor and playwright, as well as a man who loves Lincoln, has made first an absorbing picture, a drama that would hold interest even though its leading character were fictitious. There are rousing hand-to-hand conflicts, for both Abraham Lincoln and his father were, like all strong men of their time, fighters.

Mr. Chapin's talent in directing children is shown in charming stories of the boy Lincoln and his playmates. They were real boys and girls, Mr. Chapin shows. Throughout he establishes the fact that Abraham Lincoln was above all a human being.

A part of Mr. Chapin's Lincoln pictures was shown at the Strand Theater in New York City and later enjoyed a long run at the Globe Theater, on Broadway, at advanced prices. They were an immediate success. Hundreds of discerning men and women saw these pictures and wrote Mr. Chapin, congratulating him. Exhibitors throughout the country tried to book them, but Mr. Chapin held off, preferring to finish his plan, which was to produce a complete series showing the life of the great emancipator.

"THE HEART OF A LION" (Fox).

William Fox will release another Standard Picture December 16. It will be a William Farnum production, "The Heart of a Lion," based on Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor."

The story, which has been read by thousands of moving picture patrons, is called by the author "A Tale of the Canadian Rockies," and has been closely followed by Director Frank Lloyd in his screen version. Most of the opening scenes, laid on a farm, were taken on Mr. Farnum's country place on Long Island, several of the old country town characters introduced in the picture being friends and neighbors of the actor.

Action is transferred from the farm to the West through the folly of Barney Kemper's brother, Dick, whom Barney is sending to a theological school. Dick gets in all sorts of trouble and slowly eats up Barney's savings, finally making it necessary for him to abandon the farm. Incidentally, Dick also is caught by Barney making love to the latter's fiancée.

Scene from "The Heart of a Lion" (Fox).

That settles matters for Barney. He "hits the trail," landing in a mining camp. Dick, who reforms and finally becomes a minister, goes to the same camp, and the story thereafter has to do with their joint fight against evil influences in the place.

William Farnum, of course, has the role of Barney Kemper. The part of the brother is played by William Courtleigh, Jr., and the other principals include Mary Martin, Wanda Petit, Walter Law, Marc Robbins and Rita Bori.

"FACE VALUE" (Bluebird).

The Bluebird set for release January 14 will be a Mae Murray feature in more essentials than merely featuring the dancing actress in the advertising and publicity. Robert Leonard collaborated with Miss Murray in writing the story, and Director Leonard shared his work with his co-author in finally preparing the subject for the screen.

"Face Value" will be Miss Murray's second Bluebird, the release of "Princess Virtue" having served to introduce her to Bluebird's "star-cycle" in November. In the January 14 release, Miss Murray plays the role of an orphan girl who goes on to prosperity and contentment through her own efforts, finally coming into the culmination of joy in the happiest of endings.

In presenting "Face Value," Miss Murray qualifies as a "stunt" actress through her leap from a moving train as it crosses a bridge and her swimming feats that immediately result in finding safety on shore. In the earlier sections of the play the star shines as a comedienne, and her talents as an emotional actress are later disclosed in the more dramatic episodes. Robert Leonard has made a production declared to be one of the most sumptuous Bluebird has ever offered in its program.

ELSIE FERGUSON CHANGES STUDIOS.

Production of Elsie Ferguson's new Arcraft picture, "The Song of Songs," adapted from Edward Sheldon's well known play of the same name, has been transferred from the Fort Lee (N. J.) plant to the Fifty-Fourth Street Studio, New York. The "Song of Songs" company was installed at the New York plant last week, where new sets had been prepared in advance so that there would be no loss of time in making the change of studios.

Director Joe Kaufman reports rapid progress in the production of Miss Ferguson's new vehicle, and it is expected the picture will be completed in the near future. In selecting his supporting cast, Mr. Kaufman has assembled a splendid company of players, including such well known artists as Craufurd Kent, Cecil Fletcher, Frank Losee, Gertrude Berkely, Robert Cummings, Corinne Uzell, Charles Wellesley, and Henry Leone. The release date of "The Song of Songs" has not as yet been decided upon.

BIOGRAPH STUDIOS AVAILABLE FOR INDEPENDENTS.

Since the Biograph Studios became available November 1, the Biograph Company offers its facilities to the independent producer for such period of time as his production requires. With its Cooper-Hewitt lighting equipment augmented by hard lamps it affords a floor space of 19,200 square feet, which is the largest electric lighted studio floor space in the United States.

Madame Petrova, Lewis J. Selznick, Robert Warwick, James Kirkwood, Ralph Ince, Clara Kimball Young, Emily Stevens, Eva Tanguay, Harry Rapf, Charles Richman, Leonce Perret, Charles Giblyn, Albert Capellani and Florence Reed are a few of the notable producers and artists who have made feature productions in these studios. Thomas A. Persons is in charge of the studios.

"THE FAIR BARBARIAN" (Paramount).

Vivian Martin is always most at home in a picture that enables her to display the natural vivacity which is one of her chief charms, and in "The Fair Barbarian," adapted by Edith M. Kennedy from the story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, she has a character to portray that might have been

Robert Thornby is directing Miss Martin in "The Fair Barbarian," which will be a Paramount release for December 17.

POLLY SHOWS 'EM IN "TAMING TARGET CENTER."

As described by the producers, "Taming Target Center," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy which follows "That Night," released December 16, begins with a riot and ends with a peace. It brings again into prominence Ben Turpin, the sheriff, Polly Moran, who succeeds him; Tom Kennedy, as a safe proprietor, and Glenda Durand, the leading vampire. William Campbell directed it with the supervision of Mack Sennett.

As the story goes, Ben was a real good sheriff when there was any shuffling to do, but when Polly, bent on matrimony, visited Target Center, trouble started. The jail, formerly a place of repose, was disrupted and filled with lodgers. Polly discovered that Ben was not as brave as he looked and, meantime, the leading vampire of the town entered the plot and Ben became involved in a network of circumstantial evidence. But it all ended when Target Center donned its Sunday best and went to church—the first time in its ruddy career.

Needless to detail, there are feats of horsemanship, thrills and speed of lightning variety. A big surprise at the conclusion tops off another of the inimitable Sennett laugh-makers appropriately.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNE IN NEW COMEDY-MELODRAMA.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Metro's popular co-stars, have begun work at the Metro studio on a brilliant comedy melodrama called "The Woolworth Diamonds." The story of "The Woolworth Diamonds" is from the pen of Hugh Weir. It has been adapted for the use of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne by Albert Shelby LeVino, and provides roles of the keenest interest for both stars.

Mr. Bushman's part is that of a young multi-millionaire, Gerry Simpson, and Miss Bayne plays Virginia Blake, a girl reporter. Some of the comedy arises from the fact that the girl reporter has a perfect horror of the idle rich, and then is thrown much against her will into the society of young Simpson, to whom money is absolutely no object. But the melodrama is provided by entirely different means. That is where "The Woolworth Diamonds" come in. New York life in all its phases will be mirrored in "The Woolworth Diamonds." There will be smart society scenes, charity bazaar scenes, scenes among tenement dwellers, and other vari-colored pictures of the life of the metropolis. William S. Davis will direct the new Bushman-Bayne feature.

"AMBROSE'S ICY LOVE" (L-Ko).

In the L-Ko to be distributed through Universal exchanges, December 26, exhibitors will have Mack Swain to bill as a star attraction in addition to the L-Ko trade-mark so long established in general favor. This will be the first of a series of "Ambrose" comedies to go to L-Ko exhibitors under Julius Stern's new plan of presenting stars in these gloom dispellers.

"Ambrose's Icy Love" will introduce a new type of activities into what purports to be one of the score of ice houses that flank the shores of the Hudson River where it narrows down toward its source, approaching Albany. There is fun in a nearby country store, and the merchant's pretty daughter is concerned in the flights of comedy endeavor undertaken by Mack Swain and his associate merry-makers.

Ice-making machines and fun-making contraptions are synonymous in L-Ko ways to comedy, and "Ambrose's Icy Love" is heralded as something new in the line of mirth provoking achievements. L-Ko takes on new activities with this release.

"THE LIFE MASK" CHOSEN FOR MADAME PETROVA.

In accordance with the custom which she inaugurated at the formation of the Petrova Picture Company, Madame Olga Petrova has personally chosen the story for the third starring vehicle in which she will appear during the forthcoming year. The story selected by the famous Polish star is an adaptation of "The Life Mask," a novel which has had tremendous vogue during the past few years throughout the English speaking world. The name of the author of this story is enshrouded in mystery, inasmuch as "The Life Mask" was written and published without divulging the name of the man or woman responsible for it. Madame Petrova has chosen Mrs. L. Case Russell, the well known playwright, to adapt and scenarioize "The Life Mask." Mrs. Russell is responsible for the screen version of the second Petrova vehicle, which has recently been completed under the direction of Larry Trimble.

"TWO RENEGADES" (General Film).

One of the most humorous stories yet screened in the Broadway Star Feature series of O. Henry stories is "Two Renegades," a current General Film release. This is a rollicking two-part comedy-drama of a Central American revolution. O. Henry has contributed an unusually entertaining story to make up for the lack of feminine character, and for once they are not missed. Chet Ryan and W. L. Rodgers, who have been appearing in the Western O. Henry pictures, are featured.

Bernard O'Keefe, a true-blue Northerner, attempts to father a small revolution, but is captured and ordered shot in a Panamanian revolution. How an old ex-confederate doctor gets him out of it by invoking the might of the long defunct G. S. A. provides the surprise climax of this story.

TAYLOR HOLMES AND COMPANY IN ARIZONA.

Taylor Holmes is now in Arizona with his "Ruggles of Red Gap" company filming the outdoor scenes of this George K. Spoor special. Director Windom completed most of the interiors prior to leaving the Chicago studios. "Ruggles of Red Gap" affords Mr. Holmes an unusual opportunity to assume a characterization he is naturally adapted for, that of an impressionable English valet in the United States Western country. With Mr. Holmes are such supporting characters as Lawrence D'Orsay and Frederick Burton, both of whom appeared in the original stage presentation; Lillian Drew and Virginia Valli, Essanay stars.

Committee Will Handle Government Films

New England Division to Distribute Official United States Government Films Formed—Prominent Film and Business Men Give Services.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Working under the vigorous leadership of Paul D. Rust, a prominent Bostonian, and Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, film executive and celebrated lecturer, the New England division of Official United States Government Films, established in this city last week, is meeting with extraordinary results.

The personnel of the local bureau consists of Paul D. Rust, director; Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, film executive; Llewellyn Howland, chairman; J. Pennington Gardiner, secretary; Allan Forbes, treasurer; Louis B. Mayer, Elton Clark, C. C. Payson, Alexander S. Porter, Roger Ernst and Joseph Lee. Everyone of these men are prominent business men and are giving up hours of their time each day to the work, because they believe it is their patriotic duty. Their services are given absolutely free.

The New England division will work in conjunction with various war activities organizations, which plan from time to time to stage moving picture shows, the proceeds of which will go toward aiding this country to win the war. Fifteen thousand feet of official Government films have already been received by the local bureau, which are now being distributed throughout New England to patriotic associations. The distribution has been so efficiently systematized by Mrs. Carroll, who has charge of this part of the work, that the films are working every minute.

What the Pictures Will Show.

Moving pictures of every Government war activity in New England will be taken, including the military camps and naval stations throughout this section of the country. A big historical film will be made in the near future. Scenes will be taken all over the country and will include staged scenes of the Landing of the Pilgrims, the Battle of Lexington and other Revolutionary scenes. Events of importance up to the present time will be filmed for this one gigantic picture. The scenario for the film will be written by Prof. George W. Baker, head of the drama department at Harvard University.

Auxiliary Council to Help.

A great many of the members of the New England Division have been active since the beginning of the war in directing the exhibitions of war films in New England for war benefits. Louis B. Mayer, general manager of the Select Pictures in this city, who represents the New England motion picture exhibitors on the committee, is organizing an auxiliary council of two hundred men and women, including many film men in New England. Among those who have already been approached by Mr. Mayer are Colonel Henry L. Kincaide, of Quincy; Frank J. Howard, of the Atlas Film Company, this city; Charles Williams, of the Strand theater, Providence, R. I.; Alfred S. Black, president of the Maine branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and head of the Main Theaters, Inc.; Charles Bean, of Franklin, N. H.; Harry Asher, manager of the Boston Paramount office, and Harry F. Campbell, Boston Fox manager.

How to Get the Shows.

The various state councils of defense in New England have appointed representatives to co-operate with the new bureau. The bureau has established its headquarters at No. 35 Congress street, this city. A detailed letter of instructions has been sent out to every war activity association explaining to them just how to get a show and put it over successfully.

A great deal of the credit for the organization of this New England bureau belongs to William F. Neibuhr, former lieutenant in the United States Cavalry, who is at present a member of the National Committee on Public Information. Mr. Neibuhr spent ten days in this city working on the proposition and organized and put the committee on its feet. He is now establishing the same thing in the West and Middle West.

John Mahoney, well-known Boston publicity man, will have charge of all the publicity matter of the local bureau.

Archie Jerome, nephew of Paul D. Rust, who has just returned from service with the French armies on the Chemin des Dames front, will assist his uncle with the work of the bureau. Mr. Jerome drove an ammunition truck to and from the firing line for several months and was never wounded.

"Eagle's Eye" Serial Shown This Month.

Boston, Mass.—Samuel Rubenstein, manager of the Boston Foursquare exchange, announces that a trade showing of "The Eagle's Eye," the new serial exposing German intrigue in the United States, will be held at one of the leading Boston moving picture theaters the latter part of this month. Exhibitors from all parts of New England will receive invitations from Manager Rubenstein.

Children's Matinees in Brockton.

Brockton, Mass.—Special Saturday morning matinees for children will be instituted by Brockton moving picture theaters in the near future. This was agreed upon by Brockton censor board and the local theater managers in conference at City Hall. The special week-end children's shows will be conducted in rotation by the theaters.

Harry L. Campbell Is Proud Daddy.

Boston, Mass.—Harry F. Campbell, the popular manager of the local office of the Fox Film, is daddy of a baby boy, and last reports were that mother and baby were doing nicely. This makes three children Mr. Campbell has, two girls and a boy. The local Fox chief expresses himself as "proud as a peacock." He has been kept busy daily receiving the congratulations of his many friends.

Comes from Atlanta to Head Local Vitaphone.

Boston, Mass.—L. A. Watrous has severed his connections with the local Vitaphone exchange and gone to Philadelphia to accept a position with an adding machine company. Mr. Watrous was in that business before entering the film game.

C. W. Sawin, formerly in charge of the Vitaphone office in Atlanta, Ga., and at one time manager of the Minneapolis exchange, has been appointed general manager of the Boston Vitaphone office.

H. F. Campbell Returns as Fox Manager.

Boston, Mass.—Harry F. Campbell, leading film executive and pioneer of the industry in this section of the country, is back with the Boston Fox exchange. He has been general manager of the local Goldwyn office and left the employ of William Fox last June to take charge of it.

He entered the game about eleven years ago. Since then he has had charge of several theaters, but most of his time was spent in the film distributing end of the business.

W. H. Bradley Heads Boston Triangle.

Boston, Mass.—William H. Bradley, former manager of the Triangle Boston exchange and more recently manager of the Washington Goldwyn office, succeeds Mr. Campbell as head of the local Goldwyn office.

William D. Shapiro, manager of the Boston Fox office since Mr. Campbell resigned last June will remain with the Fox organization and will be assistant to Mr. Campbell. It was Mr. Campbell who gave Mr. Shapiro a start in the film business and "made" him, and it is believed that with the two working together Fox will increase its business tremendously in New England.

A Lucky Portland School.

PORTLAND, MAINE.—M. J. Garrity, of the Jefferson theater, Portland, has presented to the Maine School for Boys, of which he is a former trustee, a motion picture machine, to be used at the school for educational and entertainment purposes. The object of the photoplay exhibitions will be to assist the boys in their studies and improve their minds.

One difficulty in making full use of the equipment will be overcome through the kindness of Hiram Abrams, a native of Portland and president of the Paramount Picture corporation. Mr. Abrams has never forgotten his native city and state, and at every opportunity he has displayed a deep interest in everything connected with it. He has promised that the school will have a picture program as often as they desire, and this means much for the success of the new feature.

Edward A. Golden, manager of the Boston Photoplay Co., has promised to give all the shows needed, and others who have promised to help and have helped are A. Goodside, George A. Foley, of the Portland theater; Frank Hoe, of the Elm theater, and Al Eagles, of the Empire theater.

New Jersey Exhibitors Aid the Red Cross

Special Day Set for Boosting Red Cross Fund Responded to in Characteristically Patriotic Way—Seat Tax Suspended for Red Cross Shows Only.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—The exhibitors of Newark and the entire state of New Jersey responded in a characteristically patriotic way Friday, December 7, the day set aside for National Red Cross Day. Several of the theaters gave the entire receipts of the matinee performance, while quite a number gave special morning shows, the entire receipts being given to the Red Cross. Among the playhouses giving a special morning performance were Proctor's Palace, Lewis R. Golding and R. J. O'Crowley, Jr., managers; Kenney's theater, Louis J. Fosse, manager; Fox's Carlton theater, Louis P. DeWolfe, manager; Fox's Terminal theater, Moe Kridell, manager; Loew's theater, Eugene Meyers, manager. Practically every exhibitor has agreed to devote the entire proceeds of at least one performance to the Red Cross. Employees of the various houses served gratuitously in their respective capacities.

Collector of Internal Revenue Charles V. Duff issued a notice last week, calling attention to the fact that all performances, the net proceeds of which are devoted to the Red Cross, are not subject to the war tax on admissions. Entertainments, the net proceeds of which are for soldiers' benefits and for the benefit of cantonment camps are, however, subject to tax.

$100,000 Film Concern Incorporated.

Fort Lee, N. J.—A new corporation, known as the Fort Lee Motion Picture Corporation, has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $100,000 on November 22. Nicholas Kessel, of this place, is listed as registered agent. The incorporators, besides Mr. Kessel, include George A. Enright and George C. Dobbs.

Manager Fosse Celebrates.

Newark, N. J.—Louis J. Fosse, aided by Mrs. Fosse, entertained informally Friday evening, November 30, at Achtel-Stetter's, in celebration of the completion of his first year as manager of Keeney's theater, Branford place and Halsey street. A number of friends were present as Mr. Fosse's guests. Mr. Fosse had managed Poli's theater in Washington and the Orpheus theater here prior to assuming charge of the Keeney house.

Controlling Device Patented.

East Orange, N. J.—Jerry Chesler has had a controlling device for a motion picture projection machine patented. The patent was granted last week.

Eliot Theater Incorporated.

Newark, N. J.—The Eliot Amusement company has filed articles of incorporation and will take over the Eliot theater, 244 Washington avenue, Newark. William H. Richards, the present manager, is listed as registered agent. The concern is capitalized at $2,000. The incorporators are Moe Rosenstein, William H. Richards and Hattie Rosenstein.

Maritime Trade News Notes

By Alice Fairweather, The Standard, St. John, N. B.

F. G. Spencer Changes His Policy.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Lyric theater, St. John, N. B., is making some changes in its policy. F. G. Spencer is showing several specials for a week at a time, omitting the vaudeville when putting on the longer pictures. This policy began with "Joan the Woman" and was a great success with this splendid picture. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" has been contracted for with L. Sourkes, to be shown early in January, and "Redemption," contracted for with J. R. Kauffman, for week of Dec. 11.

Shows Change in Spirit of the Times.

St. John, N. B.—There is a possibility that "Damaged Goods" may be shown in the city. It was condemned by the censors when first brought into the Territory but, I have been told, a member of the Government may use his influence to have the film shown on the grounds that in view of the strong agitation against vice which is being waged in many cities this picture, which has a moral value, should be put before the public.

Items from the New Globe Exchange.

St. John, N. B.—The Globe Film with its energetic manager, J. R. Kauffman, is already making quite a stir in the Territory and doing quite a remarkable booking for the short while the office has been open. Mr. Kauffman was ill for four days recently so was not about the exchange, but he has recovered now and has his booking sheet out ready for business. He tells me that the exhibitors throughout the Maritime Provinces express satisfaction in knowing that the Paralta pictures are being brought into Canada.

"Redemption" is booked at the Empire theater, Halifax, with G. J. B. Metzler for three days this week, then two days with H. R. Walker in Dartmouth and two days in Truro.

N. V. Gastonguay, of the Orpheus, Halifax, and H. R. Walker of Dartmouth have both contracted with J. R. Kauffman of the Globe Films Co. for the Billy West Comedies and will show one each week at their theaters.

Among the specials that the Globe Films are ready to release here are "The Spoilers" and "Babbling Tongues," a seven-reel Ivan picture.

"The Spoilers" is booked at the Empire, Halifax, for a return showing, as it was such a success before when it played in that city. It is to be shown about Dec. 17.

Another special is a film called "The Jockey of Death," to be released in the Maritime Provinces Jan. 12. This is a great circus picture taken in Italy and, while in the possession of the Famous Players, played more repeat dates than any other picture in their lists. The Moving Picture World reviewers praised it highly.

Arch Mason Buys Two Theaters.

Wolfville, N. B.—Arch Mason, of Wolfville, has purchased from F. G. Spencer, of St. John, the Wolfville opera house and the Hantsport theater and will manage them himself. He reports business good and tells me that he is running Trinagle, Monday and Tuesday; Vitagraph, Wednesday and Thursday; and Pathe, Friday and Saturday. He is doing without the girl ushers and making some other changes in his staff, planning to look after things himself.

Notes of the Trade.

Exhibitor A. A. Fielding of the Princess theater was in St. John. He reported business good, especially on the opening of the Paramount and Aircraft pictures. For the showing of "Joan the Woman" over two hundred people were turned away.

F. W. Winter of Moncton was in St. John looking over films.

Harvey L. Watkins, Eastern manager for Keith's, has been recently paying a brief visit to St. John in the interests of the Imperial theater.

J. P. Clancy, general manager of the General Film company, has paid St. John a visit recently.

Many Patriotic Benefits in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Sunday afternoon and night, December 2, two performances were given at the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, the house being loaned for the occasion by L. A. DeHoff, for the benefit of the stalwart lads of the Twentieth Ward machine gun company of the 313th Infantry at Camp Meade. Frank A. Hornig, president of the Maryland Exhibitor's League and proprietor of the Horn and Royal theaters, and L. A. DeHoff, secretary of the League and manager of the New, arranged the program of pictures and local acts and made a collection which amounted to $525, which was turned over on Wednesday to the members of the company at the camp. These benefits were held under the auspices of the Twentieth Ward Democratic Club.

Three benefit performances were given at the Palace theater, Gay and Hoffman streets, on Sunday, December 2, by Manager Frank H. Dirkee. The collection taken up was used for buying comforts for selected men from the Eighth District who are now at Camp Meade. Antonio Moreno in the "Captain of the Gray Horse Troop" was the feature.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, week of December 3, benefit performances were given at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, under the auspices of the Alumnae Association of the St. Agnes Hospital, which shared in the profits. This benefit was arranged through the courtesy of Bernard Depkin, Jr., the supervising manager of the Parkway interests.

Loew's Hippodrome was crowded to capacity on Sunday, December 2, when this theater was used for a meeting which was held under the auspices of the Baltimore Conference for Jewish National Restoration in Palestine, the house being loaned for the occasion by George A. McDermitt, manager of the house. Many speakers of prominence addressed those assembled. Several resolutions which were in favor of the project passed unanimously.

A crowd estimated at nearly 2,000 gathered at the Maryland theater on Sunday night, December 2, where the annual memorial services of the Baltimore Lodge No. 7 of Elks, were held. The theater was loaned by Frederick L. Schanberger, the manager.

"Cleopatra" Breaks Into Regular Season.

Baltimore, Md.—The Fox feature, "Cleopatra," Theda Bara in the leading part, was at Ford's opera house all of the week beginning December 3. It no doubt came as a surprise to the theatergoers of Baltimore when it was announced by Manager Charles E. Ford that this film would break into the regular season. As the booking originally stood, Chauncey Olcott was to appear at Ford's during this week in his new play, "Once Upon a Time," but owing to the fact that permission could not be obtained from the Baltimore authorities to allow the little seven-year-old girl to play her part in the performances, and as the play could not be given without her playing the part, Mr. Ford was compelled to immediately book another attraction and the Fox feature was decided upon.

Pelsweig Back in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—Simon Pelsweig, who was formerly associated with the Electric Theater Supply Company as their representative in Baltimore, and who, until recently, has been connected with Harry Schwable, of Philadelphia, Pa., has now returned to Baltimore and will act as the representative of the Fairmont Feature Film exchange, a branch of the Baltimore Film exchange. Mr. Pelsweig has just returned from a successful trip through southern Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

Baltimore's Tax Rate.

Baltimore, Md.—It has been announced by Mayor James Harry Preston of Baltimore that the tax rate for Baltimore for the year 1918 will be $2.01, which is an increase of three cents over the 1917 rate.

Baltimore Visitors.

Westminster, Md.—On Monday, December 3, George Osborne, proprietor of the Star theater in this city, took a run down to Baltimore to look over the situation and visited the Mutual exchange on Film Row.

Hagerstown, Md.—About a week ago J. F. Sanderson, proprietor of the Palace theater in this city, visited Baltimore and called on friends along Film Row. It is understood that Mr. Sanderson is a Universal booster.

Crescent Theater Reopens.

Baltimore, Md.—Recently the Crescent theater, 1507 West Lafayette avenue, which has been dark for some time, was reopened to the public under the management of Mr. Mauler. The Universal service is being used as part of the program.

Business Notes and Personals.

Baltimore, Md.—The Rialto theater, on North avenue at Linden, of which Arthur B. Price is the manager and Myer Fox the president, is now absorbing the war tax.

L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, ran the D. W. Griffith big spectacular production, "Intolerance," for the entire week beginning December 3.

The fifth anniversary was celebrated at Schanze's theater, Pennsylvania and North avenues, on Friday, November 30, and an exceptional program was offered.

Mayor James F. Strange, of Annapolis, Md., part owner of the Colonial theater in that city, has been named fuel administrator for Annapolis.

Manager Stem at the Majestic theater, 320 South Broadway, is now running a chapter of "The Lost Express," with Helen Holmes, every week, and it is understood that it is a big drawing card.

Will the exhibitors and exchangemen of Baltimore City and vicinity please take notice that any information which they are kindly inclined to impart to the Moving Picture World correspondent will be gladly received via phone, using number Madison 7182-J.

Baltimore, Md.—H. Lyman Broening, cameraman for the Famous players, who married Miss Annie Daleigh on Thursday, November 22, is a native of the Monumental City, and a nephew of State's Attorney Wm. F. Broening. He has many friends in Baltimore, and all wish him much happiness as a benedict.

The patriotic film play, which was a short time ago produced by Harry Lewy and directed by J. Aler Barry, formerly with the Fine Arts Company, of Los Angeles, both of Baltimore, entitled "Fighting at Home," has now been taken over by the Government for its own use.

Plans have now been completed by Blanke & Zink, architects, of Baltimore, it is understood, for five theaters, which are to be erected by "Tom" Moore, of Washington, D. C.

Elk Services in Cumberland and Frostburg Theaters.

Cumberland, Md.—Through the courtesy of the Mellenger Brothers, proprietors of the Maryland theater in this city, the annual Lodge of Sorrow was held by Cumberland Lodge No. 63, B. P. O. E., in this playhouse on Sunday, December 2. Many noted members of the lodge attended the affair.

Frostburg, Md.—On the evening of the same day memorial exercises were held by Frostburg Lodge, No. 470, in the Lyric theater, of this city, due to the courtesy of the proprietor, A. C. Frey, who kindly allowed this playhouse to be used for the occasion.

Notes About Exchange Men and Exhibitors—Local 307 Elects Officers for the Year—Notable Pictures on Screens—Business Items.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The Peerless exchange, on the first floor of 1339 Vine street, will shortly occupy the entire four stories of this building. Manager Flynn announces that the increased business has compelled them to enlarge their quarters to this extent. The first-floor offices will be extended, and a projection room will be installed on one of the above floors. The rest of the building will be used for films and advertising matter. A dumb-waiter has been planned to facilitate the handling of films.

Red Cross Benefit at Wayne Opera House.

Wayne, Pa.—The Wayne opera house gave a special performance for the benefit of the Red Cross on last Friday. Through the courtesy of the World Film, "Mothers of France," starring Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, was shown as the main feature attraction in conjunction with "The Zeppelin Attack on New York" offered by the Mutual Film.

Roller Bearing Company Buys Lubin Plant.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Wright Roller Bearing Company took title to the former moving picture plant of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, at the southeast corner of Twentieth and Indiana streets. Conveyance was made to Alfred S. Miller for $82,500, of which $44,500 remains on mortgage. The conveyance was then made to the present owners. The property occupies a lot 280x200 feet, and includes a four-story factory and two-story factory and other buildings, assessed at $110,000.

Operators Bury Dead Comrade.

Philadelphia, Pa.—After several vain attempts had been made by the members of the Motion Picture Operators' Union Local 307, I. A. T. S. E., to discover the relatives of Fred La Marr, a member who died last week, the organization put together and gave him a fitting funeral and had the body interned in their own burial grounds.

Local 307 Elects New Officers.

Philadelphia, Pa.—At the last meeting of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 307, I. A. T. S. E., held on last Sunday, Dec. 2, the following election of officers took place: B. F. Bache, president; H. B. Johns, vice-president; John Harris, financial secretary and treasurer; Walter G. Murray, recording secretary; Louis Krouse, business agent; Jessie Abel, Walter Hall, Thos. Feeney are the trustees. W. G. Murray and Abbott Oliver will be on executive board. B. F. Bates, Louis Krouse and W. G. Murray were elected delegates to the Central Labor Union.

A resolution donating the services of its members with a view of co-operating with the war emergency unit was passed.

Trade Notes of Local Interest.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A. G. Buck, manager of the Hoffman Foursquare exchange, 1325 Vine street, has inaugurated a novel messenger card service to the exhibitors in this territory every week. He mails cards 5½ by 7 inches, upon which are printed announcements likely to interest the exhibitors. Upon messenger No. 2, Mr. Buck makes known the coming release of "The Eagle's Eye," a new serial in twenty episodes. A private showing of the first three episodes is expected to be given about Dec. 15, although the serial will not be released before January.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"The Retreat of the Germans," released by the Pathe exchange in six episodes of two reels each, was booked as a complete 12-reel production to the Majestic and Grand in Williamsport, Pa.; the Victoria, in Harrisburg; the Family, in Melton, Pa.; the Majestic, in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and the Victoria, at Jersey Shore, to be shown in their entirety as a special attraction for extended runs.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Superior Film exchange, of 1331 Vine street, announces for immediate booking "The Russian Revolution" in seven reels. A few of Manager Barrist's forthcoming releases are Irving Cummings in "A Man's Law," Marie Shotwell in "The Woman and the Beast," and the De Luxe edition of Jules Verne's "Around the World in 80 Days" in six reels.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Keystone Distributing Corp. held a private showing at the Locust theater December 2, of William S. Hart in "The Cold Deck." The performance was well attended and the production was well praised.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A Osborne, manager of the local Pathe exchange, is receiving a large number of bookings on the Mrs. Vernon Castle releases. Among the leading theaters who have already closed for this series are the Lorenz, Bethlehem, Pa., for two days; Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa.; Colonial, Easton, Pa., and Lyric, Reading, Pa. The Stanley Booking Corp. has taken the entire six releases for their circuit of theaters and have paid for them in advance.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The two-story moving picture theater at the southwest corner of 25th street and Allegheny avenue, has been sold by John J. Cree to Sarah Mayer, for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $25,000. The property occupies a lot 108.10x71 feet, and is assessed at $25,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Albert Brown, manager of the Overbrook, recently carpeted this theater throughout, and has made general improvements for the benefit of his patrons.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Charles Klang will shortly go on an extended tour, calling on exhibitors throughout eastern Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Max Milder, manager of the Select Film exchange, recently closed contracts with L. C. Chamberlain for eleven theaters located up through the state.

Notable Pictures on Last Week's Programs.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The following notable film productions were offered during week of December 3:

"The Secret of the Storm Country," with Norma Talmadge, was shown at the Stanley during the entire week.

"Camille," with Theda Bara in the title role, played a week's engagement at the Arcadia.

"The Wild Girl," featuring Eva Tangay in her first screen production, was presented at the Victoria all week.

"The Grell Mystery," with Earle Williams; "The Eternal Mother," with Ethel Barrymore, and "Sunshine Alley," starring Mae Marsh, were shown at the Regent.

"Draft 258," with Mabel Taliaferro, and the comedy, "The Country Hero," with Roscoe Arbuckle, were presented at the Palace.

"Reaching for the Moon," with Douglas Fairbanks, and "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," with Elsie Ferguson, shared equal honors at the Strand.

"The Little Princess," with Mary Pickford, was offered at the Locust during the entire week.

Buffalo Theaters See No Cause for Worry

Holiday Shopping Is Now in Full Swing, but Plenty of People Have Spending Money—Women Are Making Big Wages, Also.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood Street, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Gift buying has begun two weeks earlier than usual this year on account of a publicity campaign conducted by Buffalo business men, and this has caused a slight slump at the local moving picture theaters. The depression is regarded as only temporary and after the people have made their holiday purchases, it is expected they will again crowd the show houses. Some declare that, generally speaking, the women of Buffalo have more spending money than the men, but even the latter, especially those who are working overtime for extra good wages at the local plants, will have plenty of funds left for theater tickets. Many local women no longer have to depend upon "mere insignificant men" when it comes to show-going. Thousands of women employed at the local aeroplane, automobile and railroad plants, etc., are being paid wages much higher than they have ever received before and are spending their money in a manner that would have been considered reckless last year.

Buffalo exhibitors, figuratively speaking, are extending their arms in welcome and cordiality to the women patrons? Of course, the patronage of the men is not being overlooked. Many of them, especially those who are working overtime for extra good wages at the local plants, will have plenty of show money during the winter.

Wurlitzer Improvements Finished.

The improvements at the Buffalo branch of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. at 701 Main Street have been completed. Departments have been arranged for the various musical instruments handled by the company.

"Among our recent sales was a theater organ for the Lyric theater at Austin, Pa." said Mr. Tanney, who came here from Pittsburg. He has thoroughly reorganized his staff and since his arrival, trade at this branch has shown a substantial increase.

Theaters Give Many Red Cross Benefits.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Moving pictures and other high-class entertainment were featured at performances at several of Buffalo's theaters, Friday, December 7, for the benefit of the Red Cross. The date of the shows was a week later than the time mentioned in last week's Moving Picture World. The regular shows advertised for the week were presented. Matinees were given at the Teck, Star, Shea's Majestic and Olympic theaters. The Olympic and the Lyric theaters, which feature moving pictures and vaudeville, gave a joint Red Cross show, beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning. Shea's theater also gave a morning performance of vaudeville and pictures. The other shows were in the afternoon. Everything was donated, the benefits being real in the true sense of the word. The houses were crowded. President Wilson, as honorary head of the Red Cross, proclaimed December 7 as national Red Cross theater day. The idea received the tangible cooperation of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association.

Goldwyn Manager Busy.

Buffalo, N. Y.—George A. Hickey, manager of the Buffalo branch of Goldwyn, is completing a successful tour among the exhibitors of the central and southern parts of the state.

"My visit is a personal one and I am finding out conditions in the territory covered," said Mr. Hickey. "Beginning December 27 the Goldwyn productions will be featured at the Avon, a fine new house in Utica, which has been playing vaudeville and is now returning to moving pictures. The Avon will open with 'The Cinderella Man.' This and the three other latest Goldwyn productions are in great demand."

The pleasing appearance of the Goldwyn headquarters in Buffalo is receiving plenty of praise. The furnishings and partitions are of mahogany and the whole surroundings present a modern, businesslike appearance. A large shipping department and vault are on the second floor. The screen room is frequently crowded with exhibitors. When Mr. Hickey is on the road the Goldwyn branch is in charge of his capable assistant, Miss Grace Redans. S. R. Banks has been appointed traveling representative for the company.

Maxine Theater Enjoys Good Neighborhood Patronage.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"We feature our eight-piece orchestra and our admission is ten and fifteen cents," said George Hall, who with his partner, George Haney, conducts the Maxine moving picture theater, Buffalo.

"Our people are of the middle class and are all employed, so our attendance is excellent. The section about Seneca Street, where we are located, is like a town by itself and many of our patrons go downtown only once a month. This helps our patronage."

Harry Somerville Has Good Job in Cleveland.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Somerville, former manager of the Happy Hour theater, Buffalo, has written that he is now picture booking manager for the two houses of the Miles Theater company of Cleveland. He also is press agent for the two theaters. Mr. Somerville says in part:

"This company has opened a new house, one of the finest in the country, devoted to high class pictures and vaudeville, the same as the Miles theater."

A Good Report from Geneva.

Geneva, N. Y.—Frank C. Pierce, proprietor of the Temple theater, Geneva, was a Buffalo visitor. "We play pictures and vaudeville," said Mr. Pierce. "We formerly charged fifteen cents, but have advanced to eighteen cents, and collect the war tax, making the even twenty cents. Everything is going along nicely. Geneva has a population of 12,000. There are three houses in the town, seating a total of 3,200."

Short Notes About Theaters.

Oswego, N. Y.—The Nickel theater of Oswego, formerly the Gem, which has been closed for two years, has been reopened.

Rochester, N. Y.—It is reported that the Garden theater of Rochester has been closed.

Geneva, N. Y.—A Geneva, N. Y. report says that the Smith opera house of that place, which has been playing stock and road shows, will feature only pictures, beginning this month.

Capital City News Letter.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

American Theater Now Crandall's.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A change of considerable note took place in the exhibitors' field here last week when Harry M. Crandall took over the American theatre, at First street and Rhode Island avenue, Northwest, formerly conducted by Louis W. Atkinson. This house has a seating capacity of about 650, and was the only theater in the residential section of Washington with a seating capacity over five hundred and not already in the Crandall circuit.

Mr. Crandall has planned numerous changes in the American, and will close it down from the night of December 11 to the night of December 15, during which time it will be extensively overhauled. The interior will be redecorated, the prevailing color scheme being old gray, ivory and gold. The lobby, which extends clear across the Rhode Island avenue front, will be painted to harmonize with the interior decorations. The exterior will be painted green, heightened with medieval bronze. The lighting system, both interior and exterior, will be entirely rearranged.

The announcement of the purchase states that recently patented high-power searchlight lamps will be installed and the front of the theater will be a blaze of light. Semi-direct lighting fixtures will replace those in the lobby and the interior will have the indirect system of illumination and the wall brackets will be of hammered bronze. New hangings and draperies, in harmony with the color scheme of decoration, will replace those now in use. The stage will be equipped with new scenery.

Mr. Crandall contemplates closing the house next summer for extensive remodeling, installing a balcony, and so arranging the interior as to afford a seating capacity of eleven hundred.

Some of the Official Films Are Ready.

Washington, D. C.—Official motion pictures, bringing home the vital importance of increased food production, will be shown by the United States Department of Agriculture in hundreds of regular motion picture theaters throughout the United States. The first releases, which are to be handled under an agreement with the Universal company, through its exchanges, will be made early in December.

National Forests Picture.

The first film will show activities in the national forests, which are important sources of timber and water supply and also afford grazing for a large number of cattle and sheep.

Children Help with Pig Clubs.

The second release, which will follow in about two weeks, will show what children, through the pig clubs, are doing to increase the supply of pork. Other selections from the department's 40,000 feet of official subjects will make clear various features of food production, the raising of meat animals and horses, and will deal with home activities, such as poultry raising and the canning and drying of perishable products.

Problem of Food Productions.

The department laboratories are at work on a number of other popular films, especially designed to make clear to city as well as rural populations problems of food production and to show them ways in which they can co-operate effectively to feed the nation and the Allies.

Tom Moore Will Build Six Theaters.

Washington, D. C.—Tom Moore announces his intention of commencing work on the erection of six new theaters to be located in various parts of the city, the first of which is to be the new Rialto, at Ninth and G streets, Northwest. He states that in all about $1,200,000 will be expended on this project. In addition there will be included the two Moore theaters, the Garden and Strand on Ninth street now in operation.

The first of the uptown houses will be located in the Mount Pleasant section, and it is planned to accommodate about 2,200.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

A new two million dollar corporation to be known as Tom Moore's Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., is to be formed to handle the proposition. It will take over the old Tom Moore's Amusement Enterprises Corporation.

New Branches for Wolfberg Attractions.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Lyceum building, Pittsburgh, has announced that branches will be opened soon in Maryland and Delaware. H. E. Stahler, manager of the Pittsburgh office, is now in that territory working out an organization. During Mr. Stahler's absence, J. L. Ellman, head of the publicity department, will be in charge of the local office. The first production to be distributed by the Wolfberg Attractions in Maryland and Delaware will be "The Crisis," which is in line with the precedent established when the new Cleveland and Cincinnati branches were opened. This will be followed by "The Mad Lover," "Today," "The Deemster," "Persuasive Peggy," and other features now controlled by the company in Western Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Recently the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions has made three additions to its sales force. J. M. Duskin has been appointed traveling representative in the western Pennsylvania territory, Walter Blaney will handle the West Virginia territory, and C. Burchfield Kennedy will divide his time between Ohio and western Pennsylvania.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Rialto at Toronto Has Interesting Front.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Stuart, of the Rialto theater, Toronto, has had several very attractive fronts recently for big releases shown at this house. One particularly fine lobby display was arranged for the "Jockey of Death." Practically the whole front was made to resemble a circus, with tent top, sawdust, circus animal wagon and special ticket office. The latter bore the price of admission with the printed announcement that the price "Takes you all the way through." The tent section had all the usual circus statements about the number of performers and sensations and slogans such as "The Greatest Show on Earth," "Six Shows in One," "Astounding Feats of Daring," etc.

During open hours a clown performed tricks in front of the entrance while the ticket-taker was garbed as a circus attendant.

Political Campaign Too Warm for Theaters

Exhibitors Began by Lending Houses for Meetings, but Found It Too Dangerous—Mob Wrecks a Theater in Sherbrooke, Quebec.

MONTREAL, QUE.—The political campaign in Canada before the Federal elections on December 17 has reached such a fevered stage that alleged partisans were resorting to violence in some sections. The result was that managers of moving picture theaters became reluctant to permit the use of their houses for the holding of political rallies, particularly after one large picture theater in Sherbrooke, Quebec, had been wrecked by gangsters on November 30 during the course of a meeting at which two cabinet ministers were among the speakers. The riot lasted for several hours, during which time the gangsters made repeated attacks upon the theater. It was a series of pitched battles which resulted in the breaking of every window, the smashing of doors and the destruction of equipment both inside and out. The mob was only prevented from tearing the stage scenery and screen to pieces by the liberal use of the fire hose, but the water from the latter destroyed the mural decorations. The seats were broken up by those in the meeting to provide weapons with which to repel the attackers, who were armed with stones, clubs and revolvers.

At the close of the meeting 800 people in the theater, including some 400 women voters, made a brave sortie under the direction of several returned officers, and after a fight the besieged reached places of safety. The theater looked as if it had been struck by a cyclone.

It was necessary to close the theater for repairs and it was found that the whole place would have to be redecorated and refitted. In addition to the material loss, it was pointed out locally that the house would suffer in future business as a result of the outbreak.

Montreal Orpheum Opens with "20,000 Leagues."

Montreal, Que.—With the opening of the New Princess vaudeville theater in Montreal on December 17, the City of Montreal gained still another first-run picture theater, namely the Orpheum, which opens on Monday, December 24, with a big feature picture policy. The first release to be presented in the Orpheum is "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," distributed in Canada by Superfeatures, Ltd. This is the first booking of the special production in the Dominion.

Regal Films Has New Montreal Office.

Montreal, Que.—The Montreal office of the Regal Films, Ltd., who lately took over the Triangle in Canada, had been moved to the former headquarters of the Triangle in Montreal, the new address being 31 McGill College avenue. These premises are large and include a screen room.

Censor's Condemnations Cause Waste of Money.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Board of Censors for the Province of Manitoba condemned "The Auction Block," the first of the Rex Beach features to be released in the Dominion by Regal Films, Ltd.

The picture had been booked by the Lyceum theater, Winnipeg, for the week of December 3 and considerable advertising had been done by the theater. As a result of this rejection, the Lyceum was the first house in Canada to show "For the Freedom of the World," the eight-reel special, released by the Regal, this being substituted at the last moment for "The Auction Block." "For the Freedom of the World" followed "The Fall of the Romanoffs" at the Lyceum, which is also controlled in Canada by the Regal.

The Manitoba Provincial Government has decided to reorganize its Board of Censors and to make a number of important changes in the system of censorship in that province.

"The Auction Block" was presented in the Regent theater, Toronto, during the week of December 3 without a cut by the Ontario Censor Board, while the same feature was also shown at the St. Denis, Montreal, during the same week without question.

The Board of Censors for Quebec condemned "Bought and Paid For," in which Alice Brady is starred. This had been booked by the New Grand theater, Montreal, and all advance advertising had been done when the feature was rejected by the censors. Two features were substituted for "Bought and Paid For," which had been scheduled for a whole week. These were "The Mark of Cain," with Mrs. Vernon Castle, during the first half of the week, and "The Queen of Spades," the first Russian Art feature, during the last half.

Nine Hundred Picture Theaters in Canada.

Toronto, Ont.—Harry Kaufman, general sales manager of Globe Films, Ltd., has compiled statistics to show that there are nine hundred active moving picture theaters in the Dominion. He has started a campaign of circularizing Canadian theaters with regard to Paralta Plays, the control of which for Canada has been secured by the Globe company.

Interesting Montreal Notes.

Montreal, Que.—Manager Maurice West, of the Montreal Fox office, has received word from Manager A. Richardson of the Olympia theater, Grand Mere, Quebec, to the effect that "Patsy," starring June Caprice, had attracted an attendance of 2,300 people in a run of two days. The population of Grand Mere is 4,500.

"The Daughter of the Gods" had its first run in Montreal on a rental basis at the St. Denis theater during the week of December 10. The picture had previously been shown as a road show.

A. Fisher, general sales manager of the Independent Film Supply Company, left Montreal recently for his home in Pennsylvania, to attend to National military duties as an American citizen. During his absence, Dave Mendelsohn, formerly salesman for the Famous Players, has been looking after his duties.

The American Thanksgiving Day, November 29, was celebrated by Montreal moving picture men with a banquet at the Commercial restaurant and a theater party. The master of ceremonies was Charles Berman.

Tax Brings No Falling Off in Cincinnati

About $30,000 Contributed in War Tax by Theaters In and Near Cincinnati During November—Patrons Becoming More Discriminating.

Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First Nat'l Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—Theater managers and moving picture exhibitors have been busy comparing notes with each other since December 1, with a view to finding out, if possible, exactly how the war tax on admissions has affected business, if at all. As it is estimated, from figures gathered from every available source, that Cincinnati contributed during November, the first month in which the tax was in effect, about $30,000 to Uncle Sam in this manner, it is obvious that the amount is in the aggregate substantial, although it comes in small dribbles from the individual.

It is also estimated that of this total amount about $15,000 came from the ninety moving-picture houses in and around Cincinnati, this being the largest amount from any other amusement, as the remaining $15,000 or so came from several sources, such as the legitimate, burlesque and vaudeville theaters, concerts, prize-fights, etc. The consensus of opinion among the moving-picture exhibitors is that the tax has had virtually no effect on attendance, the downtown houses being especially emphatic in this view. Throngs have attended their performances, paying the pennies required to meet the tax without objection, and even with cheerfulness, as reported in these columns when the tax first went into effect. On the other hand, it is believed that the so-called legitimate theaters have suffered, in Cincinnati, as well as elsewhere, on account of the tax and the economical tendency caused by the war together. The loss has come in the attendance at the less meritorious attractions, the better shows suffering little or nothing. It is pointed out, however, that in all probability it is not so much the tax as the general stimulus to saving which has had this effect. In other words, people do not balk at the tax if they desire to go to the show, but if they don't care particularly about it they stay away altogether, and would probably do so if there were no tax. Judging from these conclusions on the effect of the tax, the exhibitors will not lose much business on account of the war, but the theaters showing stage attractions will have to look sharp to the merits of the shows put on, or suffer accordingly.

New Gifts Has Prosperous Week.

Cincinnati, O.—The first week of the new Gifts theater, owned by McMahan & Jackson, proved that the public is going to support the new house, as, in fact, the location made certain in advance. The attractiveness of the Goldwyn "Polly of the Circus," of course helped things along. The ten-year lease of the Greater Cincinnati Amusement Co. on the house was filed a few days ago, revealing the interesting fact that a monthly rental of $1,241.66 is being paid for it.

"Birth of Nation" Comes Back.

Hamilton, O.—The management of the Jefferson theater made the return engagement of the great Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," a big event in the city for its four-day stay. Liberal advertising, featuring the various interesting points about the well-known film, kept public interest at a high point, and attendance was splendid, in spite of the fact that the range of prices was from 25 cents to $1.00.

Exchanges Furnish Free Films to Camps.

Cincinnati, O.—Cincinnati film men are to have the honor of furnishing regularly films to the ten moving-picture theaters run in connection with the Y. M. C. A. houses at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, O., where all of the National Army men from Ohio are encamped. This, obviously, is equivalent to providing regular programs for just ten moving-picture houses of the ordinary sort, and as the service is to be furnished free of charge, it is obviously no light matter. I. Libson, manager of three of the largest downtown houses in Cincinnati, and therefore a man familiar with the work of purveying entertainment to large numbers of people, was appointed by R. H. Kirkendall, director of entertainment at Camp Sherman, to take charge of the work of getting the film men together on the matter, and while the plans for the work have not yet been fully mapped out, it is certain that the score of exchanges in Cincinnati will see to it that the Army boys are kept supplied with the best that there is in pictures. Of course, each film can be shown in each of the ten theaters at the camp, but this does not alter the fact that ten shows have to be kept running.

Gus Sun Promises a 2,000-Seat House

Springfield, O.—Gus Sun, the well-known theatrical magnate, president of the Gus Sun Amusement Co., has bought the Columbia theater property from Lamar J. Dalie and the Bookwalter estate, and on the site a handsome theater of three stories, with a seating capacity of 2,000 persons, will be erected in the spring.

Dayton News

By Paul J. Gray, Alhambra Theater Bldg., Dayton, O.

Orpheum Theater at Dayton to Remodel.

DAYTON, O.—The passing of one of the last so-called small picture houses will be recorded in Dayton soon after New Year's, at which time the Orpheum here will undergo complete remodeling and also a changed policy. None but the best of the program features will be played. John Lyons, who has managed the house for the last year, has done very well when one considers that it was his first attempt at managerial honors. Previous to the time of Lyons, Homer Guy, who is now at the Majestic, managed the house. John happened to be an intimate friend of the writer, and only a few days ago he confided that the reason the Orpheum was not now playing big features in big style was that he thought at least one house was wanted for short-length pictures put over right.

The latest house to change was the Apollo, directly across the street, and there, where once programs of short pictures were always played big films in really big style are the rule. The Apollo reopened after renovations with the "Conqueror," a Fox picture. One day last week I dropped into the Apollo and saw as good business in proportion as any of the larger houses had—following the "Conqueror" and the "Spy" came Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," followed by the "Manxman."

As there had been keen competition between these two houses the wise ones predicted that the Orpheum would get in all the old trade of the Apollo. It did get some of it but this did not alter the decision of the Orpheum to enlarge. This leaves the field open to Ben Wheeler at the Royal, next to the Lyric, which cannot enlarge.

In an interview John Lyons stated that, when reopened the Orpheum would have about eight hundred seats. A new five-thousand-dollar organ will be installed, and the best in music will be offered.

As the Columbia and Strand here get first-run Paramount and Arcraft service, in order to run this the Orpheum would have to play it second-run, and it seems at this time that this may take place. The writer's best wishes are indeed with Mr. Lyons, and I hope to see the Orpheum placed among Dayton's leading theaters.

L. C. Pollack Becomes Metro Salesman.

Dayton, O.—L. C. Pollack, who recently opened a branch office of the National Film Company here, about two weeks ago, announces that he is to go with Metro as road salesman for the Ohio district. Mr. Pollack completed arrangements with W. C. Bachmeyer, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, to start Monday, December 3, in his new capacities. It has not been announced who will take his place at the office of the National in the Rauh building here. Mr. Pollack's many friends regret to see him leave Dayton and sincerely hope that he will favor us with a visit in the near future.

Jake Needham Will Represent Pathe.

Dayton, O.—A newcomer is in our "midst" in the person of Jake Needham, and he needs no introduction to many Dayton exhibitors with whom he is well acquainted. Jake is to handle the Dayton Pathe interests, succeeding Paul Allison, who leaves the Pathe Co.

Two Fox Films Make Good Same Week.

Dayton, O.—The Victoria last week, under the management of Theodore Chifos, housed an attraction, "The Honor System," that was worthy of the success it attained, for "The Honor System" pleased Daytonians by the score and the writer heard much praise for it. A special orchestra of eight pieces rendered the musical program, which helped the picture wonderfully.

Theodore Chifos has every reason to be pleased this week for at the recently remodeled Apollo, his other house, "The Conqueror" went over wonderfully. This is the first time in the history of Dayton that two Fox productions have played to good business at advanced prices within a square of each other. Following the engagement of "The Conqueror" at the Apollo will come the "Spy" for a week.

J. W. Jackson to Open Athens Theater.

Athens, O.—J. W. Jackson, well known in the business, is to open the Grand at Athens, Ohio, which for some time has been closed.

Interesting Bits Heard Here and There.

Gilbert Burrowes is seen every day at the Auditorium working hard as ever and anxiously waiting for the reopening.

Ann Pennington, in the "Antics of Ann," was one of the favorites of the last week at the Strand.

John Lyons, of the Orpheum, has at last entered the ranks of those who continually worry about the increasing cost of gasoline. John is the owner of a new touring car which speaks of class. A. H. Shaw, of Mutual, is seen with him constantly "touring" in search of excitement.

F. Burr Smith informs us that since the Apollo, which was formerly the Dayton stronghold of Bluebird, has changed its policy that the Ideal here is to play Bluebirds.

R. E. Meyers, who controls the Majestic and Royal at Chillicothe, says that business is very good at the present. The large cantonment camp at Chillicothe helps business wonderfully.

C. E. Smith, who operates the Star and Queen theaters in Chillicothe, plays Paramount and Arcraft pictures.

It seems to be a habit to own a pair of theaters and the custom is growing.

The Sun theater at Springfield is now playing Bluebirds.

To prove the Italian war pictures was a real feature Lefty Miller induced Jimmie Muir (The Chronicler) of the Dayton News to print a review of the film. It was a good move for the News came out the next day with quite a boost for the picture.

A. L. Kinsler is again in our midst, he having returned from a week's hunting trip. Many were the lucky ones in the Rauh building who received rabbits.

Some New Roadmen Out of Detroit.

Bert Graham, formerly with the Universal in Detroit, and recently with Pathe in Chicago, is with the Mutual in Detroit.

Harry I. Irons, who recently had the Mystic theater in Findlay, Ohio, is now with Vitagraph in Detroit.

Howard Gale, 73 Broadway, is taking bookings on "The Warrior," purchased for Michigan by the Allen Film Co., who also have "The Garden of Allah" for this territory.

Notes About Film Men in Uniform.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry I. Garson, president of the Broadway-Strand theater, and personal representative for Clara Kimball Young, is second lieutenant in the commissary department of the United States Navy and is spending about three days of each week looking after purchases for the Government.

L. E. Davis, former Vitagraph salesman, is with Battery A, Field Artillery, 329, Camp Custer, Battle Creek, being in the latest draft.

Lew Cohen, of the Coliseum theater, is with motor-truck division, Camp Custer, Battle Creek.

Marshall D. Martin, former manager of the Knickerbocker theater, Detroit, is at Camp Custer, Battle Creek.

Manager Montgomery Wins On Tact

Head of Metro-Madison, Detroit, Exchanges Has Made Good on Consideration for the Exhibitor—Shows Diplomacy in Present Emergency—

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Manager Montgomery of the Metro-Madison exchanges is sending out an interesting letter, explaining why Metro must charge the tax. He also announces at the same time that the tax will not be charged on any First National Exhibitors' pictures, nor on the Petrova or Chaplin pictures.

George Montgomery is one exchange man who has positively made good in Michigan, due to his consideration at all times for the exhibitor. He looks upon the friendship of the exhibitor as the greatest asset of his exchange, and he treats the exhibitor as he would like to be treated. For this reason he has justly earned the title "He's a prince of a fellow," heard so often among exhibitors. Mr. Montgomery came to Detroit about two years ago to do special work for the World Film. He formerly managed World exchanges through the West. About eight months ago he was appointed manager of Metro in Detroit, and now he has full charge also of all the pictures which are bought by John H. Kunsky, including the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and all others. He has eliminated a great deal of the unnecessary overhead expense in the Metro-Madison exchange, and has brought the business to the point where it is showing a handsome weekly profit.

The Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, has booked "The Cold Deck" for some time in December. This feature was recently purchased for Michigan by Harry I. Garson.

Owing to the fight on the film tax the exchanges charging the tax are finding a big lull in business. There are many exhibitors who are ready to book their film, but they will not sign any contracts that contain the war tax clause. This is due to the fact that they have signed a pledge with others and do not want to break their word. It puts the exchangemen in a rather peculiar position, because it is impossible for them under present conditions to make a showing.

Ohio Censors Want to Employ Inspectors

Exhibitors Might Possibly Disregard Board's Decisions—Board Wants a Lot of New Jobs for the Deserving.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—An attempt is being made to put the screws on tighter as far as film censorship is concerned in Ohio.

Word from Columbus, the capital, brings the information that the State Industrial Commission, which has supervision over the censor board's work, will ask for a fund for the employment of a number of inspectors whose duty it will be to travel over the state seeking violations of the law.

Heretofore there have been no inspectors working directly for the censor board. The present law provides for three censors, but no inspectors. It is reported that the legislators will be asked to amend the law to provide inspectors, the Industrial commission urging the need of them.

Film exchange managers and exhibitors take the opposite view, claiming that there is no need for inspectors, because they are not violating the law. They also claim that this will only be an additional expense which certainly should not be added to the state tax burden, especially during the war.

Bells." It was booked for four days at the Alhambra the week of November 25. Before the four days were over the manager extended the engagement to cover the entire week. And before the week was over the manager of the Mall, another first-run house, booked it for the entire week of December 2.

"This only goes to show that the Fox-Sunshine comedies speak for themselves," said District Manager Mooney.

Remodeled Victor Office Gets Busy.

Cleveland, O.—The Victor Film Service, handling the Universal product, has remodeled its big offices, and they now present a very busy appearance. The inspection and shipping departments have been removed to the west end of the building, while the sales and executive departments are now in the east end of the building.

R. C. Travers Gets Captain's Commission.

Cleveland, O.—Richard C. Travers, former Essanay star, and a resident of Cleveland, was in the Forest City during the Thanksgiving holidays visiting his family. Mr. Travers had just been commissioned a captain in the U. S. Army at the Fort Sheridan, Ill., training camp.

Children's Matinees in Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—Children's matinees are becoming very popular in Cleveland. When the season opened, the Alhambra following its usual custom, started its Saturday afternoon matinees showing fairy pictures.

Other theaters which have inaugurated these performances within the last few weeks are the Monarch, Windameer, and the Doan. The Mall gives a regular Saturday morning children's show.

Most of the performances have fairy tales as their principal attractions.

Youthful Film Stars Now in Vaudeville.

Cleveland, O.—The Fairbanks Twins, Marion and Madeline, famed during their work for Thanouser, were the attractions the week of December 2, when the Ziegfeld Follies played the Opera House, Cleveland.

The previous week the Thanouser Kid, Mary Elaine, appeared at the Priscilla theater, headlining the vaudeville bill.

Fund to Give Michigan Boys Tobacco.

Detroit, Mich.—A fund has been started by the Detroit exhibitors, which now totals over $50, for the boys who are in service of the Government. This applies only to the Michigan boys. The fund will be used to buy cigarettes and candy, and will be divided among the boys and sent with the compliments of the Michigan exhibitors and exchangemen.

New Film Building Notes.

Detroit, Mich.—The Goldwyn, World, and Standard exchanges are the latest to move into the new film building.

The removal of the Paramount-Artcraft exchanges is delayed owing to certain changes which must be made in the partitions, and the further fact that the building inspector has ordered the owner of the building to put a fire escape in the rear of that particular part of the building.

The U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation is making its headquarters in the Foursquare exchange.

Bert Weddige, of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co., has moved to the second floor.

The United Theater Equipment Corporation has taken an entire store on the main floor of the film building, No. 53 East Elizabeth street. It will have four times the space it had in the Peter Smith building.

Madison Exchange Buys Dittmar Films.

Detroit, Mich.—The Madison Film Exchange, 73 Broadway, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to the Dittmar Animal Pictures and Dittmar's Living Book of Nature.

Theater Equipment Gets Simplex Rights.

Detroit, Mich.—The Theater Equipment Co., of Minneapolis, of which J. George Fineberg is president, has taken the Michigan rights to the Simplex projection machine. He will announce a Detroit office very soon, which will likely be in the new film building.

A Pretty Good Hand of Salesmen.

Detroit, Mich.—Field Carmichael, the new Fox manager in Detroit, is going to make the fight of his life for business. He announces a wonderful selling organization which will handle the state by zones, comprising Joe Kaliska, J. O. Brooks, Jack Loranger, J. E. Powell, and E. Grimes.

I. J. Schmertz, formerly in charge of the program department, has returned to the home office.

H. A. Bandy to Work for Banner.

Cleveland, O.—H. A. Bandy, the Goldwyn exchange manager in Cleveland, is one of the most popular film men in the state. His office is now doing a big business, and with the assistance of Harry Reavey on the road and Fred Schramm handling the specials, Mr. Bandy hopes to be the banner office all season.

Mr. Bandy formerly was the Triangle manager in Cleveland, and previous to that was the Mutual manager in Indianapolis.

A Comedy That Spoke for Itself.

Cleveland, O.—The first of the Fox-Sunshine comedies certainly had a most auspicious opening in Cleveland. The picture was "Roaring Lions and Wedding

Interesting Trade Notes from Louisville

Collector Finds No Profiteering in Louisville Theaters—L. J. Dittmars Explains How Tax Has Been Met—Patrons Coming Back to Theaters.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—An investigation in Louisville by agents of the Department of Justice for profiteering in connection with the war tax has so far failed to reveal any such violations. T. Scott Mayes, as the local collector of internal revenue, said: Any firm or corporation has a right to increase prices, but it must not lead the public to believe that the amount of increase is to cover the war tax when the amount raised is in excess of the amount of the war tax. This would not only cause the war tax to prove unpopular with the people but would be taking advantage of both the Government and the tax payer.

How Price Adjustment Affects Income.

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Louisville Photo Play Association, and head of the Majestic Amusement Co., said that the price changes had not really increased or decreased the gross receipts of the houses. "We have been getting fifteen cents for matinees since last April," he said, "and when the war tax problem came up we decided to reduce the matinee admission to 13 cents, and the two additional cents paid the war tax. At night the price was raised to 18 cents, which, with the 2-cent tax, made the admission 20 cents. Thus, if our afternoon business is exactly the same as our night business in numbers attending, we make one cent per ticket, but the effect has been to reduce the night attendance in favor of the afternoon, and frequently we lose.

"We have been very careful to make it plain to the public exactly what has been done, and in front of every theater in the city where a tax is charged prices are shown like the follow: 'Admission, afternoon, 13 cents, war tax, two cents—ticket, 15 cents. Night, admission, 18 cents, war tax, two cents, ticket, 20 cents.' We are wholly within the law in every way."

Patrons Coming Back to Louisville Shows.

Louisville, Ky.—"I believe that business will be better as soon as the people get used to the idea of paying a higher admission price," remarked Fred Dolle, of the Alamo theater, who is smiling again after holding a grouch against business for the past three or four weeks. For a time, after the new rates became effective, there was a considerable falling off in patronage at all houses, but this is beginning to disappear, and may have been partly due to the changing seasons. Until the public gets used to either very hot weather or cold weather a large percentage prefers staying at home. The general prospects are for an immense holiday business in Louisville for everyone, and some good films have been booked.

Charles Scott to Manage Camp Taylor Theater.

Louisville, Ky.—Charles Scott, formerly manager of Macauley's theater in Louisville, and more recently connected with the Ben All and Lexington, Ky., opera house, handled by the Haggin estate, will be manager of the Klaw & Erlanger theater at Camp Taylor, according to Dame Rumor, who states that the offer has been made to Mr. Scott, who is a first-class manager. The camp theater is a big one, and will be a busy place when the soldiers really begin to take interest in the shows.

Gave Five Per Cent. to Smoke Fund for Week.

Madisonville, Ky.—E. W. Dozier, manager of the Garrick theater, increased business somewhat during the week of November 27, when he offered to give five per cent. of gross receipts for the week to the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." Mr. Dozier called attention to the fact that the plan had been investigated by the management of the Rialto and other Eastern theaters, and had been warmly endorsed.

Thanksgiving Taxed Capacities.

Louisville, Ky.—Thanksgiving business with the Louisville theaters was as good, if not considerably better, than ever experienced, and as usual the theaters were forced to turn down much evening business, their capacities being severely taxed in handling the afternoon crowds. At half-past eight in the evening, the lobbies of all of the downtown theaters were jammed with people awaiting the opening of the new runs at nine o'clock. The suburban houses also handled capacity business. The Cherokee theater, a suburban house, offered a special double bill, consisting of eleven reels, handling a continuous show during the afternoon and evening.

Country Show Cuts Down.

Hellier, Ky.—The Star theater has cut down to three shows a week, due to winter weather, bad roads, and the usual falling off in business at this season of the year. Shows will be given on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday nights throughout the winter.

Tennessee News Letter

By J. L. Ray Trade News Service, Nashville, Tenn.

Loew Buys Memphis Picture House.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Marcus Loew's theatrical expansion has again reached Memphis, after having put up one high-class vaudeville and moving picture house during the past year. This time he buys a moving picture house, where he will show pictures alone. On December 22 the Loew interests will take over the Princess theater, which has been running for many years as the "five-cent house." Some of the largest features have been shown at this theater, with no increase in the admission price, and the building itself is one of the largest in West Tennessee. Heretofore the program has been changed daily, but under the new administration the highest-class features will be shown for ten cents, with a change of program four times a week.

Repairs will be made, and the auditorium brightened up and improved to meet the demands of the Loew standard. The house will be known as Loew's Princess. The slogan of the house, which has become generally known over the state, "Five Cents, Why Pay More?"—passes out of existence with the transfer of ownership.

Mutual Exchange to Leave Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—The latest announcement in the Tennessee exchange field is that the Mutual will close its Memphis office. It is proposed to wind up the affairs of the exchange within the next week or ten days, and close immediately thereafter. The Mutual exchange was formerly located at 500 South Main street, but recently moved to Fourth and Union, in the same locality with the other exchanges in this city. The "Big Star only" service was featured.

Sunday Pictures but No Vaudeville.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Sunday theaters are running in this town without molestation by the authorities. Keith's Rialto is advertising that no vaudeville will be shown on the Sabbath, but that pictures will hold the boards exclusively. Thousands of soldiers come in from the army cantonment at Fort Oglethorpe, just over the Georgia line, on Sundays, to view the pictures, and every house in the city runs to capacity.

New Policy at Memphis Majestic.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Majestic theater of this city has added a vaudeville act to its picture program. The "theater with the largest seating capacity" is using this one act of high-class entertainment to break the program between reels.

Within a few weeks the Majestic Amusement Company's newest theater, the Majestic No. 1, will put into effect a twice-a-week picture change, instead of the four-time-a-week change, as now running. The best features will be shown, one picture being on the program for four days and the other for three.

Triangle Man Takes Memphis Bride.

Memphis, Tenn.—Jack Stewart, one of the best-known exchange managers in the South, was married in this city on November 28, to Miss Gertrude Morris, one of the belles of Memphis. Mr. Stewart is manager of the Triangle offices in New Orleans, and if he meets with the same success in married life as has been his lot in the business world, he has nothing to fear.

Princess Helps Soldiers.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Princess theater recently placed a container in the lobby to gather smokes for the Tennessee boys in camp at Greeneville, S. C. Harry Sudekum, manager of the Princess, has sent a lot of smokes for distribution to Lieut. Baxter Jackson, of the 114th Field Artillery.

Negro House Likes "Ne'er Do Well."

Memphis, Tenn.—Splendid reports come from the Lincoln theater, a Beale street negro house, regarding the run of the "Ne'er Do Well," Rex Beach's master picture. Kaufman Specials of Memphis is distributing the prints.

Atlanta News Letter

A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhall Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

F. A. Petrich Will Guide the Grand.

ATLANTA, GA.—F. A. Petrich assumed the managership of Loew's Grand theater, Saturday, December 1, succeeding E. A. Schiller, who will devote his entire time to Loew's southern circuit, of which he is general representative. Mr. Schiller will also have charge of Loew's southern booking agency in the Grand building through which acts and attractions, including moving pictures from the Southern territory, will be booked for Loew's theaters. Mr. Petrich comes to Atlanta from Minneapolis where he was manager of the Loew theater. Mr. Petrich has also been connected with Loew theaters in a number of other cities and is well known in theatrical circles in the north and east. F. G. Wilson, formerly treasurer of Loew's Grand theater, has been promoted to assistant manager.

W. E. Sipe Now Heads Bluebird and Jewel.

Atlanta, Ga.—W. E. Sipe, who has been connected with the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. as special representative, has taken over the management of the Bluebird Photoplays and the Jewel Productions. Mr. Sipe has taken offices at 111 Walton St.

Lyric Prepares Grand Red Cross Benefit.

Atlanta, Ga.—Arrangements have been made for a benefit performance for the Red Cross at the Lyric theater December 7th. As that day has been established by an organization of stage interests, for general Red Cross benefits, it is likely that other theaters and moving picture houses in Atlanta will likewise arrange special programs. The full bill of the Keith vaudeville will be given, probably supplemented by local talent and moving pictures. The arrangements were made upon authorization by Jake Wells by his local manager, Hugh L. Cardoza, who immediately requested Colonel W. L. Peel, director of the Red Cross activities for the Southeastern department, to make whatever plans he desired for the occasion. It is likely the enlarged program will be arranged by a group of women to be named by Colonel Peel. All proceeds will go to the Red Cross.

STRAY NOTES FROM COAST.

Northern California News.

Dinuba, Cal.—The Dinuba theater, conducted by J. A. Lloyd, was destroyed by fire on November 26.

Red Bluff, Cal.—J. M. Deeds has opened the old Red Bluff opera house.

Grass Valley, Cal.—George Trotter has closed the Grass Valley theater on account of illness, and is preparing to sell the house.

Sacramento, Cal.—Charles Rohrer, of the Nippon theater, has opened the Edison theater on K street, formerly conducted by Mr. Marks, who is now in the army.

Napa, Cal.—Extensive alterations are being made in the Empire theater by managers L. Kaliski and E. Rosenthal. A large marquee is being installed, the ticket office is being moved to the center of the lobby and its former location being transformed into a telephone booth. A new entrance aisle is being built and the capacity of the house increased by about 150 seats. The lobby is being redecorated, the orchestra pit overhauled.

Alameda, Cal.—Plans for the new theater on Park street by James Hamblen are being prepared by architect George F. King. The house will have a seating capacity of about 1,500 and will cost about $75,000.

Peoria City Council Passes New Blue Law

Exhibitors in City's Jurisdiction Fearful of New Law Not Yet Signed—With Present War Burdens Sunday Shows Are Necessary.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South

PEORIA, ILL.—Local exhibitors are afraid of a blue Sunday law just passed by the city council but not yet signed.

The measure, which was put through at the request of the local barbers, provides for Sunday closing except hotels, eating houses, drug stores, tobacco stores and livery stables.

While the ordinance does not specifically legislate against moving picture theaters it is so brief and sweeping that under its provisions any zealot could apply for a warrant against an exhibitor who operated his show on Sunday.

Since the advent of the war tax the managers have depended more than ever upon Sunday business to retrieve the bad business of the week. It would be impossible to offset the loss of Sunday business by raising week-day admissions and further adding to the burdens of the patrons.

Saturdays, Sundays, Holidays and Pay Days.

Canton, Ill.—The Gem theater was closed for the installation of a new heating system. Temporarily it will be open only on Saturdays, Sundays, holidays and pay-days at the Parlin & Orendorff implement factory.

Unfinished Midway Changes Hands.

Rockford, Ill.—Ascher Brothers, the Chicago photoplay magnates, have secured a house in Rockford. It is the Midway theater, which is under construction on East State street. This is on the east side of the city, which supplies about 65 per

Terre Haute Company Building Theater

Work Begun on House That Will Seat 1,500 Persons—Site of Old Varieties Theater—Will Cost About $75,000 and Have Stage.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—This city will soon have a fine new motion picture theater on corner of Wabash avenue and Eighth street, the site of the old Varieties theater.

Work has already begun on the new building for the Terre Haute Theater Company, an Indiana corporation with a capital stock of $100,000, and a subsidiary of the Bankers and Merchants Company. It is understood that the new company is being financed by John S. McFall, the owner of the ground on which the new theater will be.

The theater will cost between $70,000 and $75,000 and will have a seating capacity of about 1,500, of which 960 seats will be on the ground floor and the remainder in the balcony. It will be a two-story building with four office rooms, a smoking room and ladies' rest room, etc. A new typhoon fan, similar to the ones used in several of the modern theaters in Chicago, will be installed on the roof. The fan alone will cost about $1,000. There will be a stage to permit use of vaudeville, if desired, later. The building will be fire-proof throughout.

Moving Pictures During School Lunch Hour.

Evansville, Ind.—Motion pictures at the local high school during the lunch hour are to be resumed next week, as a result of the action of the high school board of control at a meeting last Thursday. This movement was started by the board about a year ago but was stopped about a month ago because of the difficulty in obtaining films.

Formerly the pictures used—mostly travel and news features and few cartoons—were rented from local exhibitors, but that source has been closed owing to contracts of some of the houses forbidding outside use of the pictures. In some cases, it is said, the exhibitors claimed the shows hurt their own business and naturally refused to support it.

It will be necessary now for the board to get the films directly from the producing houses, and this will cause an added increase in the cost. R. E. Chewing, principal, said that in case the fund raised by school entertainments and like sources, from which the cost has been defrayed heretofore, is not sufficient to maintain the pictures, then voluntary contributions from the pupils will be received.

Operators Take Out Licenses Under Protest.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Scores of motion picture machine operators visited the office of the city controller last week and took out licenses to operate motion picture machines, in compliance with the new city ordinance now in effect. Notifications of protest, however, were made on each license as the local Operators' Union is preparing to wage a legal fight to contest the validity of the ordinance.

The men took out the licenses after it had become apparent that the arrest of Joseph Gavin, one of their craft, was not likely to save the rest of them from being arrested. It was understood at the time Gavin was slated that his case would be made a test case and that others would abide by the decision, but, on the advice of their attorney, the operators decided to take out the licenses under protest.

The operators contend that the present ordinance was passed merely as a means of collecting revenue, to aid the city's depleted treasury and say they would receive no benefit from it whatsoever. They say it does not make any provisions for the qualifications a man shall have to obtain a license, and they are preparing to make a stubborn fight against it. It is probable that the question will be decided in the local courts some time later in the week.

Strand Will Try Films and Vaudeville.

Fort Wayne, Ind.—The Strand theater, one of the city's most popular amusement places, has announced an extension in service. Beginning next week the Strand will adopt a combination policy of de luxe photoplays and "big time" acts, an innovation that is said to have met with much success in some of the larger cities. W. C. Quimby, manager of the house, has associated with him Frederick Shaffer, of Chicago, who was road manager for the Merry Widow and several other big productions. John Miller, who recently severed his connection with the orchestra in the Colonial theater, Chicago, will come to Fort Wayne to direct the Strand's musical programs.

Miss Leila Hollin Buys Princess Theater.

Williamsport, Ind.—The Princess theater here has been purchased by Miss Leila Hollin, who owns the Messner theater at Attica, Ind. Fred Ritenour, of Covington, will manage the Williamsport photoplay house for Miss Hollin.

John C. Reynolds Enlists with Engineers

South Bend, Ind.—John C. Reynolds, who was formerly manager of the Jefferson theater here, is now in Washington, D. C., with the 30th Indiana Engineers. He enlisted at South Bend a few weeks ago and was soon transferred to Washington.

New House Promised in Peoria.

Peoria, Ill.—The construction of a magnificent moving picture theater was one of the principal reasons for the sale of Jacobson block at Main and Madison streets. The site was sold for $150,000 to J. W. McDowell of the Title and Trust Company, acting for an unidentified client. It is said that plans for an elaborate photoplay house have been drawn and construction will soon begin.

New Incorporations in Illinois.

Springfield, Ill.—Articles of incorporation have been issued to following:

The Sparta Theater & Amusement Company, Chicago, capital, $500; incorporators, M. E. Ruth, Gobind S. Jays, J. W. Brown.

Oloima Photoplay Company of Illinois, Rock Island; capital, $2,500; incorporators, Al Weston, Lee Gillam, William A. Delean.

Chris Taylor Takes Another Theater.

Kewanee, Ill.—Chris Taylor, manager of the Rialto and Dreamland theaters, and his son, Walter, have taken over the management of the Grand theater. They will use vaudeville and musical tabloids on Sundays and big feature pictures during the week.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Trade Notes from Kansas City Filmdom

The Hardings of Omaha Expect to Build a 1,200-Seat Theater in Kansas City—Another New House Will Be Called the Doric—Other Notes.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Kansas City will soon have a fine new theater if the plans of the architects and the owners in regard to the new Liberty theater are carried out. It will be fireproof in every respect. In regard to the convenience the theater will have a foyer space which will care for about 200 people, thus obviating the necessity of patrons having to stand outside of the theater while waiting for the conclusion of a show. The theater will have a seating capacity of 1,200. It will be operated by Samuel Harding and David H. Harding of Omaha, Neb., both of whom are pioneer moving picture men. It is planned to open the theater early in February. It is located at 1104-1106 Main street, which is in the heart of the shopping district.

Doric Theater to Be Built.

A second new theater to be erected in Kansas City will be the Doric theater, taking its name from the Doric style of architecture. The location is 908 Walnut street. It will have a seating capacity of 976, and will cost over $50,000. The exterior will be in cream terra cotta. The architects of both these theaters speak highly of the beauty of them.

J. L. Shipley Will Assist in Goldwyn Office.

Kansas City, Mo.—John L. Shipley, special representative for the Kansas City Goldwyn office, will assist in the office here indefinitely. He has been working out of the city, but an influx of bookings has made this change necessary for the present.

J. B. Howard and C. W. Potter Join Select.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. B. Howard, formerly of the General Film Company, and C. W. Potter, formerly of the Universal Film & Supply Co., of Kansas City, have been added to the sales force of Select. Mr. Howard will cover western Missouri and Mr. Potter will cover northeastern Kansas.

Hoffman District Office in Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Hoffman Four-square Pictures, Inc., of New York, will occupy the fifth floor of the People's Trust building, 1120 Walnut street. Kansas City has been selected for the district office and will be in charge of S. J. Baker, coming from St. Louis.

Exit Famous Willis Wood.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Willis Wood theater is being razed. The theater that was once not only the pride of Kansas City, but of the whole middle west has "had its day." It is being torn down to make way for the new Kansas City Athletic Club building.

Kansas City Goldwyn Has a Fire.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Goldwyn office has had practical experience which would prove valuable to a projection machine company in that the necessity of a modern fireproof projection room. Two reels of "Polly of the Circus" were burned November 28 while the picture was being run off for the benefit of an exhibitor. This was caused by the film breaking just after the film had passed the intermittent sprocket. The accident was remarkable in that there was no injury to the operator, nor was there any damage to the compartment or the machine.

"Hell Morgan's Girl" Breaks Records.

Kansas City, Mo.—"Hell Morgan's Girl" broke all house records at the Glory theater here, when 1,300 persons paid admission to the theater in two shows. The theater has a capacity of 500. The theater is located in the residence district of the city and is within a few minutes' walk of six other first-class theaters, all of which had put on special features for the Thanksgiving Day program.

C. W. McDaniel Will Assist Manager Swift.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. W. McDaniel, who for the last four years has been assistant manager of the General Film at Chicago, Ill., has been made assistant manager of the Kansas City office. This is his first visit to Kansas City, as he has always been associated with the film business in Chicago. F. P. J. Swift is manager of the local office.

Across Texas with Exhibitors.

Vernon, Wibber County, Tex.—Moore's theater company has been dissolved.

Bastrop, Tex.—Chester Erhard, Earl C. Earhard, W. A. McCord, and W. E. Goodman have bought all of the stock owned by the stockholders of the Arion opera house. They have accepted plans for the remodeling of the entire building at a cost of over $30,000. Every modern improvement will be made in the building.

Waco, Tex.—The old Majestic theater on North Fourth street has been remodeled at a large expense. It was opened to the public November 25 by M. Frankel, manager.

Corsicana, Tex.—The new opera house will soon be ready for occupancy.

Yoakum, Tex.—Damage amounting to about $350 was caused by a recent fire in the Bijou theater. There was no insurance.

Clarksville, Tex.—Billy Edwards has leased the Clarksville opera house, and will open it early in December. The building will be renovated.

Theater Changes in Middle West.

Albert City, Ia.—Henry Kiscner will build a picture show here.

Thanksgiving Fills Theaters in Dallas

Year's Big Holiday in the Southwest Brings Out Patrons to All Places of Amusement—Many Kinds of Tickets Make Crowds Hard to Handle.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas.

DALLAS, TEX.—Thanksgiving Day is always the biggest amusement day of the year in the southwest. It beats Christmas and New Year's and the Fourth of July and all the rest of them in the way of attendance. Thanksgiving Day, 1917, proved a record-breaker for attendance at Dallas theaters and the same is undoubtedly true in other cities as well. Weather conditions were ideal, and people everywhere had been put in pleasant frames of mind by rains, which had in some measure broken the long continued drouth.

Patience was the chief attribute of the crowds which thronged the entrances of Texas theaters—patience which under war conditions must needs closely approach a virtue. It takes a longer time for the girl in the ticket window to wait upon a line of potential patrons nowadays than it formerly did. She is compelled to handle too many different kinds of tickets.

Take the condition at one of the largest theaters in the state, located at Dallas. It has a range of three prices on the lower floor, three for the balcony, and the ever present pass holder must also be figured on. The ticket seller in this theater is placed much like the British horsemen at Balaklava—there are tickets to the right of her; tickets to the left of her, tickets in front of her, and she must not blunder.

She handles seven different kinds of admission slips, and it takes more time to ascertain the class of seat the patron wants and then supply him than it formerly did. One manager went so far as to say that he lost business as a result, but that's hardly to be supposed, although mayhap a few chafing at war time delay, might have sought holiday amusement other than that afforded by film and projecting machine.

Parker County Peanuts Make Prosperity

Dallas, Tex.—J. B. Davidson of the Princess theater, Weatherford, Tex., called on Dallas exchanges during the last week. He was in good humor, declaring things were all right, and singing the praises of Parker county and peanuts. "Decry not the lowly goober," was part of his paean of praise. "It toils not, neither does it spin, but verily I say unto you it makes farmers rich, and when you have rich farmers you've a prosperous community." Parker county agriculturalists have gone strong on raising peanuts and are profiting as a result. Not only is there a heavy demand from oil mills for the nuts, but the hay makes the best kind of cattle feed.

Vitagraph Travelers Meet at Dallas.

Dallas, Tex.—Vitagraph traveling men, working out of the Dallas branch, met with Manager J. B. Dugger on the day before the Texas convention for a sales conference. Those attending included J. L. McKinney, G. W. Thornton, H. E. Fulgham, Jack Petit, Jos. Berliner, W. S. Tuttle and G. L. Randal. The first three episodes of the new V-L-S-E serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," was shown for the salesmen's benefit.

John Sayeg in Town.

Dallas, Tex.—John Sayeg of the Grand theater, Ennis, Tex., paid his annual visit to Dallas during the last week in November, but said he was coming back to the convention. Mr. Sayeg doesn't come around often, but branch house managers declare that they know he's "on the job" if his stuff doesn't come to him properly.

San Francisco Briefs.

Charles M. Pincus, formerly of the box office of the Columbia theater, is now assistant house manager of the new California theater.

H. Von Emmel, formerly salesman for the George Kleine system in northern California, has been made head salesman, and is visiting the southern part of the state. F. B. Riley has been promoted to the position of road man, and Jack Martin has taken his place as shipper.

Charles I. Luntz, formerly with the George Kleine system, is now with the Fox Film, as is Mike Zar, formerly a salesman for a coin machine manufacturing concern.

Fred Frisk, of the United Theater exchange, has disposed of the Gem theater, Pleasanton, Cal., to B. Nagle.

D. S. Smith, formerly booker at the Progressive exchange, has joined the Signal Corps of the army, and is now at American Lake, Wash.

The Atlas Educational Film Company has taken over the agency for the projector made by the Derry corporation, and has already disposed of the initial shipment, the last machine having been sent to Australia.

Frank E. McCoy, for some time with the local Mutual office, is now with the Select Pictures.

Harry Carney, for some time with the Fox Film, is no longer with this concern.

William Bernard is now filling a road position with the All-Star Feature.

Walter Preddey recently disposed of a projection machine to J. Gorius, who plans to go on the road with it.

The Lincoln theater has been sold to L. H. Killingsworth, formerly of St. Helena, Cal.

Prominent Men at Fresno Theater Opening

Liberty Theater Has Brilliant Premier—Special Car Takes Party of Guests from San Francisco—Banquet and Parade to Theater—Those Present.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

FRESNO, CAL.—The opening of the Liberty theater on the evening of November 27 was the occasion for the greatest gathering of film exchange men ever held on the Pacific Coast, a distinct tribute to the popularity of James Beatty, of the Liberty theater, San Jose, and one of the owners of the new house. Under the management of M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine system, and Louis Reichert, of the Metro, the party of San Francisco film men made the trip to the Raisin City in the special car, reaching Fresno early on the morning of the twenty-seventh, Mr. Beatty accompanying the party.

Breakfast was provided at the Hotel Fresno by Mr. Beatty, and when this was finished the entire party, together with some who had come up from Los Angeles, was taken on a drive through the city and the surrounding country, one of the beauty spots of California. Luncheon was served at the Sunnyside Country Club, and then an inspection was made of the great fruit packing plants which make Fresno famous. Following a fine dinner at the Hotel Fresno early in the evening the party then marched in a body, headed by the redoubtable Charles J. Goddard, of Sacramento, to the beautiful new Liberty theater, which was then formally opened.

The opening program consisted of a selection by the symphony orchestra; the "Star Spangled Banner" by a quartette, an address of welcome by Mayor William F. Toomey, an address by M. J. Cohen, representing the United Motion Picture Industry of northern California, and a tenor solo by Arthur Brigg. The moving picture program consisted of a Pathe weekly, an Educational Film Corporation scenic, a Sunshine comedy, "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," and William Farnum in "When a Man Sees Red."

Following the performance the film men for the fourth time were invited to partake of nourishment, and were seated to a splendid banquet in the main lobby of the Hotel Fresno. C. W. Midgley, of Oakland, a boon companion of Mr. Beatty, acted as toastmaster, and everyone present was called upon to speak. The festivities continued until two o'clock in the morning, when the start home was made in the special car.

Some Who Were Present as Guests.

Among those who attended from San Francisco were Wm. J. Citron, manager of the Fox Film; Louis Reichert, manager of Metro; G. C. Parsons, manager of the Goldwyn; J. W. Allen, manager of the Progressive exchange; M. H. Kohn, president of the Consolidated Film; E. C. Jensen, district manager of World Film; Edward B. Baron, sales manager of American Photo Player; Louis Hyman, manager of the All-Star Feature; M. L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film; Newton Levi, manager of Mutual Film; E. O. Child, manager of Pathe; R. Quive, manager of the Greater Vitagraph; Henry Bredhoff, president of the Hawaiian Film, Honolulu; Harry Naugle, manager Western division of the Greater Vitagraph; Abe Markowitz, of the Western Feature Film; M. J. Cohen, manager of George Kleine; Ralph Smith, representing the Triangle exchange; H. Von Emmel, representing the George Kleine System; G. C. Blumenthal, representing Metro; Fred W. Voigt, representing Metro; Mr. Davis, of the General Film; Mike Zar, representing Fox Film, and C. W. Midgley, manager of the American theater, Oakland, and the Alameda theater, Alameda. Those who attended from Los Angeles were E. H. Silcocks, manager of George Kleine; Arthur Brigg, representing George Kleine; H. H. Hicks, manager of the Select Pictures; Dave Bershon, of the California Film, and Irving Lesser, manager of the All-Star Feature. Charles J. Goddard, of Sacramento, was also present.

Unique Organ Installation Planned for Tivoli.

San Francisco, Cal.—Although the Tivoli opera house, conducted by the Turner & Dahnken circuit, already has one of the finest pipe organs to be found in a theater on the Pacific Coast a second one is to be installed at an early date. The new instrument will be a counterpart of those in use at the Strand and Rialto theaters, and it is proposed to feature pipe organ duets, a new idea, as far as is known.

Film Men Win Commissions.

San Francisco, Cal.—Several well known California film men attended the second officers' reserve training camp at the Presidio and have received their commissions. Among these are Byington Ford, of the Animated Cartoon Film Corporation, San Francisco; John S. Van Cott, formerly of the Atlas Educational Film Co., San Francisco, and J. S. Hommel, formerly road man for the General Film Company out of Los Angeles. All are now first lieutenants in the army.

Film Man to Go to Russia.

San Francisco, Cal.—George Mooser, formerly general manager for Oliver Morosco, was in this city recently for a short stay preparatory to leaving for Russia as a representative of the committee on public information. Through the medium of moving pictures he hopes to carry the story of democracy to Russia.

War Tax Charges Investigated.

San Francisco, Cal.—Under orders from Washington, D. C., Justus Wardell, collector of internal revenue, has commenced an investigation to ascertain whether any theaters are making misrepresentations of the amount of war tax for the purpose of charging exorbitant prices. He has received instructions to report all cases of misrepresentation, with the further suggestion that these be aired in the press.

Copy of Rothapfel's Full Address Free.

San Francisco, Cal.—For the benefit of those exhibitors who were unable to attend the luncheon tendered Mr. S. L. Rothapfel at the Press Club in San Francisco last week, the Turner & Dahnken Circuit will mail to each exhibitor in this territory a copy of Mr. Rothapfel's remarks.

The purpose in doing this is to give each exhibitor the benefit of Mr. Rothapfel's ideas of properly conducting a motion picture theater.

The Press Club felt so highly of Mr. Rothapfel's speech that a copy has been prepared to be filed in their archives.

Joseph Saeli Buys Lyric Theater.

California, Pa.—The handsome Lyric theater, California, Pa., has been purchased by Joseph Saeli, a well known business man, who will operate the house with high class photoplays. The Lyric is being remodeled and a lighting plant installed. Mr. Saeli is also negotiating for the Bailey theater, discontinued recently by Fred Bailey.

Celebrates Silver Wedding.

San Francisco, Cal.—On November 27. Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Kemp celebrated their silver wedding with a reception and dinner at which thirty-eight members of the family were present. Both Mr. and Mrs. Kemp are well known in local moving picture circles through their work in the camera and lecture field, and their long connection as distributors of the Motiograph in this territory.

Spokane to Have Second Producing Studio

Titan Photoplay Company Incorporated for Half a Million and Organized by Local Men for California Capital—Will Have Plant in Spokane.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 11th Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Spokane's scenic and climatic advantages have landed a second motion picture producing corporation.

It is known as the Titan Feature Photoplay Company, and is authorized to issue capital stock to the amount of $500,000. The company has been organized by local men for California interests. The incorporators are L. M. Thompson, Attorney H. G. Twomey, B. Clements, C. L. Mayo, and J. G. Sullivan, the latter two being stockbrokers in the city. Since Mr. Clements signed the organization papers he has been called into army service, and a successor will be chosen for his place on the board.

"The more picture producing projects that can be put under way in Spokane the more attractive will the city become to this class of business," stated Attorney Twomey. "Our company will not be a competitor of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation already established here. Both will find it mutually profitable to use the city as headquarters for their studios, and it may be expected that other producers also will be attracted. An important item favoring the city now is the unlimited amount of power here for the development of lighting. The Government's orders requiring limited use of coal for lights is likely to hit many photoplay companies, but it never can affect those in Spokane.

"Our company has not chosen a location for its studios, but it is certain they will be placed in or adjoining the city."

Beautiful New Pantages Theater Coming.

Spokane, Wash.—When it was announced that the new Pantages theater, a moving picture theater and vaudeville house, would be erected on the site of the old structure an impression was created that it was to be nothing more than a job of remodeling. Instead, the new building, when completed, will be one of the most imposing and up-to-date amusement palaces in the West. Such is the assurance given by B. M. Priteca, the architect, who has designed some of the finest theater buildings on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Priteca treats architecture as an art, and this is to be reflected in the Spokane home of the Pantages shows just as it has been in other theaters recently constructed at the direction of Mr. Pantages. Combined with the latest appliances for the comfort of the audience and the actor will be a beauty and impressiveness of decoration and design that is the result of artistic thought and imagination.

The exterior will be simple but impressive. A colonade of pilasters across the front will be the most imposing feature of the decorations. The entire front is to be done in terra cotta, with the exception of the lobby, where some elaborate glass work will heighten the effect. A marquise extending the entire width of the building will be an ornamental and useful feature of the front.

The entire building will be devoted exclusively to the theater, and in this respect the Spokane house will enjoy a distinction shared by but few others in the West. The opening of the new theater will take place early next spring.

W. L. Cutts Wins His Commission.

Spokane, Wash.—William L. Cutts, former manager of the Liberty theater here, was among the men at the Presido, Cal., training camp who were successful in qualifying for the service. He has been assigned to the aviation section of the signal officers reserve corps. Mr. Cutts was in Spokane for a short time Monday, November 25, and left for Vancouver, Wash., to which post he has been assigned.

He was the first manager of the Liberty theater, coming here from Butte, Mont., to open the house. He remained about six months, returning to Butte.

Children Flock to See "Heroic France."

Spokane, Wash.—Six hundred school children were turned away from the Auditorium theater, Monday, November 26, and more Tuesday, November 27, when J. W. Allender threw open the doors for a free school children's matinee of "Heroic France," the new official French Government war picture. Long before the appointed hour the youngsters swarmed into the vestibule and backed across the sidewalk and over the street car tracks.

The Cantonment Theater at Herrold Opens

Big Picture House for Soldiers Built in Twenty Days at Cost of $25,000 and Seating 1,500 Persons Is Now Operating—Opens to Full House.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—Built at a cost of $25,000 with 1,500 opera chairs and a 1,000 mirror screen, the Herrold theater in Herrold opened Thanksgiving Day with first-run pictures. Bluebird productions were the choice of Walter F. Davis, the manager of the cantonment house, since he felt that they would best please the boys in khaki. Franklyn Farnum in "Anything Once" was the picture, with a two-reel comedy and the Hearst-Pathé news to complete the program. On the opening day a lively vaudeville program was furnished by soldiers at the cantonment, besides stirring music by the Three Hundred Thirty-nine Artillery band under the direction of Bandmaster Don Letock.

The theater is an example of the miraculous swiftness with which buildings have been springing up since the great cantonment came here. The theater was built in just twenty days by W. L. Snyder, Des Moines contractor. The theater is owned by the Cantonment Amusement company, which includes the following: C. F. Frazier, treasurer; C. O. Deering, president; Burt German, secretary; Alec Nelson, vice-president; W. L. Snyder, contractor. Directors: John Elliot, W. T. Bair, Fred German, C. C. Deering and Alec Nelson.

The 1,500 seating capacity of the theater was taxed all evening of Thanksgiving, not only soldiers but town people attended, and automobiles lined the streets on all sides of the theater. The Bluebird company sent out six young women to act as ushers that night. Each wore a broad blue sash with the name Bluebird and the six have the distinct honor of being the first women allowed to enter the camp after evening, having obtained the permission of the officers of the camp. They were escorted to the car by guards after the performance.

Two Exhibitors Form Partnership.

Fairfield, Ia.—Hugh Bennett, who but recently took over the Fairfield theater in Fairfield, has formed a partnership with P. E. Wolfe, manager of the picture house in Mount Pleasant. Messrs. Wolfe and Bennett will operate their picture houses in conjunction with each other, and since the two houses are not far distant and railroad service is good they will be able to arrange bookings together. Until recently Mr. Wolfe has acted as salesman for the Bluebird exchange in Des Moines and left the management of the picture house to his father.

Changes Among Iowa Theaters.

Lamoni, Ia.—A. D. Briggs has closed down his house in Lamoni. Haskins and France have opened the opera house in the same town for picture purposes.

Pocahontas, Ia.—F. Hronek has purchased the Princess theater in Pocahontas.

Interesting Trade Notes.

Spokane, Wash.—The big Metro patriotic screen spectacle, "Draft 258," was shown privately Monday, November 26, at 11 o'clock, at the Liberty theater. H. B. Dodge, representative of the producers, brought the picture to Spokane, and arranged with Manager S. W. B. Cohn for the trial run.

Spokane, Wash.—H. B. Perry, traveling representative of the World Film, of Seattle, was in the city this last week, and reports that business is good.

Spokane, Wash.—The crowds were so large that tried to get in the Liberty theater to see Will S. Hart in "The Cold Deck" that a policeman was sent for to handle them. All through the day the theater was crowded, but when evening came there were many more than the usual Saturday evening crowd, and pedestrians had to walk out in the middle of the street to get by the theater.

Seymour, Ia.—Mrs. A. L. Haines has opened the picture theater in Seymour.

Des Moines, Ia.—Frank Schragg, well-known Des Moines theater owner, has sold his Ideal theater on East Twenty-fifth and Grand, to Frank Lindsey, for the consideration of nearly two thousand dollars. Mr. Schragg has quit the motion picture business.

News Notes from the Northwest.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Milwaukee's Strand Gets New Manager.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Charles C. Perry, who acted as assistant to Theo. L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick, St. Paul, since that playhouse passed under the control of Finkelstein & Ruben in August last, resigned his berth recently to accept a position of greater responsibility as the active manager of the Strand theater, Milwaukee.

Mr. Perry, a direct descendant of Commodore Perry, was born at Lafayette, Indiana, thirty years ago. He was assistant treasurer at the Orpheum theater, St. Paul, for several seasons and was also connected with the former Grand opera house in that city. In 1913 he leased the opera house at Sioux City, Iowa, and gave that city an artistic exposition of feature photoplays.

The Strand theater, Milwaukee, over which Mr. Perry now presides, is a beautiful theater of large capacity, playing high-class photo features and one of the most successful playhouses in that city. Under Mr. Perry's direction $10,000 will be spent in beautifying the interior.

Wisconsin Theater Notes.

Waupaca, Wis.—Manager Charles Cohen of the Lyric theater has purchased the building in which the Lyric has been located, and in the course of remodeling will increase the seating capacity to 400.

Green Bay, Wis.—The Grand theater has been taken over by an Indiana syndicate, headed by David Werner, and will play vaudeville.

Monroe, Wis.—W. L. Tollefson is now the manager of the Little theater for the Co-operative Amusement Co., succeeding Mrs. Mary Gruwell who, with her husband, Otto Rupnow, are now exhibitors at a Grand Rapids, Wis., theater. The Wegg-Booth orchestra will play for Sunday evening shows.

Mauston, Wis.—H. F. Hasse, now a soldier in the National Army at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., has turned over the Majestic theater her to his cousin, L. A. Hasse. The latter has been operating the theater since his cousin has been called to the colors.

From South of Portland.

Albany, Ore.—E. C. Cummings was a recent visitor in Portland and reports that his new theater, the Rolfe, in Albany, will open about December 5. Projection equipment was installed by the Service Film.

Ashland, Ore.—Mrs. O. T. Bergner is personally supervising all her theaters in Southern Oregon and she spends her time between Ashland and Medford. Mr. Bergner will return to Ashland about the first of the year to assist her.

Eugene, Ore.—The Rex theater, A. H. McDonald, is undergoing its annual decorations, and is adding a number of improvements, including new foyer glass.

Local Exchanges Get Pathe's Business.

Portland, Ore.—As anticipated by Portland film men, much of the business formerly enjoyed by the Portland Pathe office has gone to the local Portland exchanges, instead of to Seattle. The local exchanges are laying claim to a lot of the old customers the Portland Pathe formerly had, but George Endert, Seattle manager for Pathe, denies much loss of business. Just what loss Pathe will suffer by withdrawing from Portland cannot yet be figured, inasmuch as a good deal of the Pathe business out of Portland has been done in serials which have been contracted for.

All Oregon Theaters Will Pay War Tax

Reports Indicate That Few if Any Picture Theaters Will Have to Close Because War Took Profits—Business Picking Up.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Rumors that went forth from Oregon a few weeks ago that the government might as well take over the operation of the state's moving picture theaters right then; because they would all be ready to close when tax collecting day came 'round, proved to be all wrong, because tax collecting day is here and most of the theaters are still running. The closing of the few who have quit has been due to other causes than the admission tax.

However, all reports from exhibitors prove that the patrons are not paying the tax in any case where prices were boosted to 20 cents November 1, war tax included. The theaters are paying it out of their profits, and the profits have shown a decided slump. The Portland downtown theaters have found a solution to the problem of poor business, namely, better pictures, and for the past week they have been massing their big productions right along the front line of trenches and have captured a goodly number of twenty-cent admissions thereby.

As previously remarked, the patrons of the downtown theaters are not paying the film tax; the exhibitors have added it to the cost of operating their theaters. With this increased overhead, theater owners are going to commence cutting some place. The writer is not going to predict where the axe is going to fall, but will venture this: When the producer passes his burden down to the exhibitor and the exhibitor tries to hang it onto the public and the public refuses to accept it, and passes it back to the exhibitor, isn't the exhibitor going to pass it right on to the producer, and isn't the producer going to think a little more seriously when he signs stars who demand inflated salaries?

The smaller theaters and suburban houses in Portland seem to have educated their people to bring the war tax to the box office in pennies and they are not complaining overly much about poor business due to the admission tax.

The first month during which the tax has been in effect in Oregon, indicates that an entire rearrangement of exhibiting conditions are necessary as far as the big theaters who pay the real film rentals are concerned if they are to be conducted for any profit at all.

Car Men Fight and Theaters Suffer

Twin Cities Have Week of Street Riots—People Fear to Ride on Cars and Stay at Home—Patronage of Theaters Suffers.

By J. L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Street-car disturbances—otherwise known as riots and Irish confetti bombardments—did damage to more than city railway rolling stock and employees the week of Dec. 2. The street car men, recently partially organized as a union, were forbidden to wear their buttons on the cars by the State Public Safety Committee and, incidentally, were discharged by the car company. Following three days of loud talking there were riots in the streets of St. Paul and the next day brought riots in Minneapolis. Home-guard companies kept people off streets on which the theater-going public usually traverse, but the riots were not exactly quelled.

In St. Paul, Starland, Alhambra, New Princess, Gem, Blue Mouse, New Palace and New Majestic theaters suffered. In Minneapolis, the Wonderland, Dewey, Star and other Gateway theaters suffered considerable from the fact that the thrills provided outside their doors proved more interesting than the screened escapades within. Many downtown Twin City theaters showed a falling off in patronage, despite exceptional bills, because people feared to ride on the street cars. The street car company estimates that its losses were 40 men wounded and 500 window panes bent, while the theaters suffered from severe attacks of small box office receipts.

Offerings at Minneapolis downtown theaters the first half of the week beginning Dec. 2, and running in opposition to the street car siege, were: New Garrick, "The Garden of Allah"; New Lyric, "Draft 258"; Strand, "For the Freedom of the World"; New Garden, "Fighting Mad"; New Astor, "The Sin Woman."

With the Exchange Men.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Although no "official" information has been given out by any member of the newly-organized exchangemen's club here, the World correspondent has discovered that J. R. Levy, manager of the World Film exchange, is imperial potentate. A fourth meet of the clan was held at the World offices Monday evening, Dec. 3.

Manager Dan Donnelan, of the Mutual exchange, was best man at his brother's wedding, Saturday, Dec. 1. Judging from the fancy duds M. Donnelan wore at the ceremony as "best man" the groom must have been attired a la King George. M. Donnelan's non-taxable smile was much in evidence.

J. Earle Kemp, of the Westcott exchange, is due to return from New York, where he attended a meeting of Allied Exchangemen recently—Saturday, Dec. 8.

R. C. Fox, former Artcraft manager here, has gone to Chicago to assume his duties as assistant to Max Goldstone at the Chicago Artcraft offices. Mr. Fox was one of the most popular and aggressive exchangemen in Minneapolis. Before going to the Artcraft here he was a roadman for Vitagraph under C. W. Sawin and Bill Howard and manager of the "Ramona" department for Elliott and Sherman.

E. A. Westcott Again Fox Manager.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Edward A. Westcott is the manager of the Minneapolis Fox exchange. Mr. Westcott was Minneapolis Fox manager a year and a half ago. Then he got an idea of organizing his own exchange and carried it out. The Peerless exchange was formed and Mutt and Jeff cartoons contracted for. Mutt and Jeff made a hit with the public and started Mr. Westcott's new venture off with a rush. Later the Peerless became the Westcott Film Corp. The new firm bought rights on "Intolerance," "The Masque of Life," "The Warrior," "A Mormon Maid," and other productions. Mr. Westcott recently sold his interests in the firm to J. Earle Kemp and W. H. Shafer and returned to the Fox exchange as manager. Since returning to the Fox office Mr. Westcott has begun an aggressive campaign for business, the results of which are very evident throughout the Northwest.

Several Changes at the Pathe Office.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Changes have been taking place in the local Pathe office in bunches. Berger Tomte, booker, has been shifted to the Oklahoma City Pathe exchange and L. A. Samuelson, of the Pathe exchange, Portland, Ore., has succeeded him. J. W. Shalvcross, Earle B. Shaw, son of former Governor Shaw, Iowa; Hal Dickenson and H. W. Kirk have been added to the road staff of the exchange by Manager Kofeldt.

New Portland Censor Appointed.

Portland, Ore.—Will Spencer, juvenile officer of the County Court, was recently appointed as a member of the censor board, vice C. W. Meighan, resigned. It all happened without knowledge on the part of most of the members of the Exhibitors' League, and the ones who are in the dark are anxious to know the details. There was some kind of a tentative understanding when Mayor Baker came into office that two of the members of the new censor board were to be selected from the film fraternity. Gus Metzger, of Universal, and Charlie Meighan, then manager of the People's Amusement Company, were chosen. Then Meighan resigned and Mr. Spencer was picked to take his place. The writer ventures that interesting arguments will take place in the Exhibitors' League when all the ramifications of the transaction are aired.

Fifteen Cents a Reel Still Bothers.

Portland, Ore.—Oregon exhibitors are still marching around the film exchanges arrayed in war paint and feathers insofar as the 15 cents a reel per day tax is concerned. One exhibitor paid an exchange in Seattle in full for service and paper, all except the 15-cent charge. The films came to Portland C. O. D. for the amount of the war tax. They came on the night the exhibitor was to show them, so he was compelled to take up the C. O. D. or close his house. But, after consulting counsel, he sent the films back with the very same C. O. D. on them with which they came. Now he is awaiting developments.

News comes from Boise, Idaho, in which state the Exhibitors' League has most actively opposed the 15 cents excise, that all the exhibitors in that city have banded together and have refused to patronize any exchange charging the excise. Mutual, Triangle and General services are very popular in Boise.

Sam Myers Puts on a Show.

Portland, Ore.—Sam Myers, assistant manager of the Hippodrome theater, staged the first meeting of the Midnight Owls at his theater November 27 and over two hundred of the film fraternity of Portland and all the theatrical people in town enjoyed his entertainment. Arbuckle and Chaplin comedies furnished a lot of the humor of the evening and artists from the vaudeville houses entertained the crowd. Then there was a buffet lunch served on the stage and about three o'clock the dancing commenced.

A War Message to Exhibitors

Men:

With war pictures and war taxes and war prices upon you, you are probably ready to agree that your business is war.

Some carry this a point further and conclude that what Sherman said about war therefore applies to business. But we can't see that. In the place Sherman referred to there can't be any fun; and there's plenty of fun and fascination in the war of business — especially when you win.

To win, however, you've got to wage the right kind of a fight. If you go to sleep in the trenches the other fellow will come over the top and wipe you out. See?

Don't let 'em. Use your head. Fighting nowadays is a science.

Have you the best guns? Watch your screen and see what the guns in your Projection Room are doing.

Are they making a hit? If not, don't blame the ammunition. The finest ammunition won't camouflage poor hitting. So get the right kind of gun.

We hardly need tell you what make to adopt. Simply watch those who have won gloriously in the fight and you'll see the Simplex nameplate on everyone of their field pieces.

It's a gun that shoots straight to the mark; every shot goes home and counts in the battle for success. That, by the way, is the right kind of conservation.

Speaking of conservation reminds us that since you have become used to Mr. Hoover's meatless and wheatless days, maybe you won't object to the fact that "Every day is Troubleless Day" where the Simplex gun is used.

And say! You'll not consider it "trouble" when you use up a lot of tickets, will you?

To win (that's easy to be seen): Train Simplex Guns upon your Screen.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

ON THE LOVE LINE—(One Reel)—Letty, who considers herself the "whole cheese" in the chop house near the car barn in the city, decides to quit and return to the farm, owing to the persistent wooing of Billy, the Beau Brummel of conductors and motormen. Jim, her country sweetheart, goes to town to meet her and arrives in time to see Letty in the midst of a battle royal which results in the wrecking of the chop house. On the way home Billy keeps up his ardent flirtation, much to Jim's annoyance.

Billy picks up a card of Count Elec Trick, Special Envoy to H. R. H., King of Shox. He rigs himself up as the count and calls on Letty, who promptly throws Jim over for royalty.

The deception is discovered by Letty's father, who intercepts a message from the Count arranging for an elopement. Father decides to forestall the plans, so in the morning he takes Billy's trolley car and dashes to the appointed place, followed by Billy in an auto. Letty thinks Billy is running the trolley and only sees her mistake when it is too late and she is locked in the speeding car. Billy overtakes the trolley, snatches Letty from the window, the auto explodes and they are landed at the abode of the village pastor, who ties the knot as the irate father dashes in and decides to give his blessing.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE ENCHANTED KISS (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Sam Tansey (Chet Ryan); Capt. Peek (W. L. Rogers); Ramon Torres (Charles Wheelock); "Fate" (Claire Toner); Katie (Frances Parks); Dwarf (Jack Pierce); Mrs. Peek (Mrs. Parks). Directed by David Smith.

Sam Tansey adores Katie, daughter of his landlady, and she would be his for the asking. But intimidated by her brutal father, Captain Peek, he cannot bring himself to make advances to her even when taunted by his fellow-boarders envious because they see all so clearly how the land lies. O. Henry from this point on develops the story by having his hero driven to a chance drink of absinthe. Under the influence of this desperate draught, Tansey rises to imaginary splendor in gallantry and courage. His delirium is an fantastic round of prodigies of valor, in which the girl, her father, and all sorts of grotesque villains revolve in a dizzy plot—Sam always to the rescue. Captain Peek, dwarfs, allegorical figures, nymphs, cavaliers, old hags and a Mexican, ages old, who keeps up the semblance of youth by eating the flesh of a young maiden every little while, these participate in an orgy of violence and intrigue against Katie—and Sam saves her. She rewards him—in the dream—with a warm kiss which he multiplies masterfully. Coming out of his trance to reality, and supposedly inspired and heartened by it, Sam goes home. Kate is there waiting for him by the door. Now is his time. But he wavers, loses courage. He clambers awkwardly up the stairs condemned to Katie's withering scorn forever.

ESSANAY.

"A DEPOT ROMEO" (One-reel Comedy).—John, the station agent, arises for his daily work. He washes from a bucket in the rear of the station yard and goes briskly about his daily duties in the railroad station. The station is filled with passengers waiting for the train. They include people of all types—a group of whispering Russians, a bevy of pretty girls, a gigantic fat woman and an English Lord. John has trouble with all of them, particularly with the English Lord, who tries to butt in when he is talking with a pretty girl. Later, while sprinkling the station floor with a hose, this same pretty girl so attracts his eye that he does not realize where the hose is aiming. As a result everyone in the station is drenched with water. Then a big burly brute, wearing flashy clothes and a long mustache, starts trouble brewing, and the two of them come to blows, dodging in and out around the express room door. Finally, John opens a chute that leads to the coal pile, intending to shove the rival of the girl into the coal. But he is thwarted in his plan, the wily rival pushing John in.

MAKE YOUR EYES BEHAVE (One Reel Comedy).—Ferdie and his wife, who weighs a good three hundred pounds, go for a walk in the park. The pretty girls around Ferdie overcome his admiration for his wife. After a series of flirtations with several of them, Ferdie is taken by his wife aboard a motor bus. Ferdie jumps into a limousine traveling alongside. He meets a pretty girl and ushers her to a soda fountain. But he only has a dime, and when the girl motions for a dozen of her friends to join them, Ferdie tries to figure some way to foot the bill. He stealthily extracts some money from one of the girl's pocketbooks, hands it to the waiter, then sneaks it back again. But his troubles are not over, for his wife catches up with him and has him arrested. Ferdie escapes, however, by whanging the jailor over the head with a mallet and locking him in a cell. Returned home, he receives his wife's forgiveness, but at seeing another pretty girl passing the window, forgets his promises to behave. Out the window he goes after her and they are having an interesting conversation when his wife reappears. She drags him home and locks him in the cellar for safe keeping.

THE GREAT NATURAL INDUSTRIES OF CANADA (One Reel Scenic).—This scenic reel shows the incalculable magnitude of Canada's timber areas; revealing logging methods on the Nashwaak River near Fredericton, New Brunswick—a thrilling occupation of the river drivers, who must possess accuracy of eye, certainty of step and unflinching courage. You will also see the gigantic paper mills, saw mills and their operation by electricity. The procuring of asbestos is also interestingly revealed, showing how the fibrous stone is dynamited from pits and the intricate process by which asbestos curtains are made.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

L-KO.

DEEP SEAS AND DESPERATE DEEDS (Two Parts—Dec. 12).—The cast: Merta (Myrtle Sterling); Her Lover (Al. Forbes). Directed by Vin Moore.

In Chicken Center, Merta, the little fat rascal, dreams of love, but a 500-pound weight brings her back to life again. In the same neighborhood a distracted wife sits up, waiting for her husband's return from a "sick friend," while in the cold gray dawn of the same day a bank robbery is being enacted. The constable makes a raid on the sick friend's apartment, sending the chips and cards flying all over the room, while the bank president makes his escape unnoticed. Later the constable calls to inform him of the robbery, but mistaking his motive, the bank president grabs his wife and rushes her away. Once aboard the ship bound for Nowhere, Mr. President is satisfied that he has left the hounds of the law far beyond reach; but the captain receives word that the thieves are on board his ship and orders a search to be made.

Merta's sweetheart, who witnessed the bank robbery, was thrown in the hold of the boat by the thieves, but succeeded in sending word to Merta of his danger. The boat starts, but Merta is persistent, and throwing a rope to the other side of the river, swings herself across and drops onto the deck of the boat. The bank thieves suspect danger and deposit the money with the bank president, but he in turn hides it in the smokestack. This incident is witnessed by his wife. She is about to take the money when Merta arrives upon the scene. She gives the lady a chase for the money, who, finding herself outwitted, jumps overboard, only to be followed by Merta, the daredevil of Chicken Center. At the bottom of the ocean Merta relieves her of the money and comes up smiling. She returns bankroll to the rightful owner. With a clear conscience and an empty head, she rescues her lover, and promises to marry him at the first opportunity.

NESTOR.

THE OTHER STOCKING (Dec. 3).—The cast: An Artist (Eddie Lyons); A Clay Modeler (Lee Moran); Artist's Wife (Teddy Samson).

Gaston's wife does not allow girl models to pose for her artist husband, but when Jean, his dearest friend, expresses a wish to have his sweetheart's statue made in clay, he is powerless to refuse. The two artists concoct a scheme to get the jealous wife away.

"You look so pale and then you need a vacation in the country," whispers Jean to Gaston's wife. Their little scheme works out fine. She takes steps to go away, but the eternal feminine prompts her to eavesdrop. Her curiosity is rewarded, for she finds that they are planning to get her out of the way, so Mrs. Gaston decides to turn the tables and see it through. When Jean returns to Lee's studio with his sweetheart, she sees them from across the street where she is in hiding. Lee does not permit Jean to remain while he is working, and tells him that he will spoil his inspiration if he is around.

Jean leaves the studio, but his suspicion aroused, he decides to return. In the meantime, Mrs. Gaston feels that she has waited long enough and also returns. Gaston hears her and hastily pushes the girl out on the fire-escape. She climbs into the window above, and scares a student, who runs down the fire-escape into the artist's studio. Gaston rushes up to him and forcefully insists upon him posing as his model. When Gaston's wife and Jean break into the room, they see the student posing for Gaston. This was all the jealous wife waited for. Jean, removing his angry sweetheart from the scene of battle, leaves the two to fight it out.

A MUNITION WORKER'S CURSE (One Reel—Dec. 19).—The cast: Mayor Engenbrizen (Dave Morris); His Wife (Gladys Tennyson).

Mayor Engenbrizen had a decided leaning toward women. Anyone could see by looking at his wife that his taste was excellent, but for all that he yearned to be Mayor of Turkey. One morning when he caressed his wife's hand, thinking it belonged to the maid, he was in a lonesome frame of mind as he walked past a row of munition factories. His quick eye was taken by an attractive girl in trousers. She enters one of the factories. So does the mayor. In a short time he comes out all black and blue and bleeding. To account for his appearance he tells his wife how he had been injured in saving a baby, but that night at the moving picture theatre at which he and his wife are invited guests a picture is shown which had the mayor as the principal actor, and for its plot, what really happened in the munition factory. It was scandalous.

SPECIAL PRODUCTIONS.

FIGHTING MAD (Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Doctor Lambert (William Stowell); Mary Lambert (Helen Gibson); Clean-Up West (Hector Dion); Fero Fanny (Betty Schade); Smith (Alfred Allen); Lilly Sawyer (Mildred Davis); Frank Baxter (M. K. Wilson). Story by J. G. Alexandar and Fred Myton. Produced by E. J. Le Saint.

Dr. Lambert strove in every way to aid his fellow-men. His wife had not wanted to come West at all, and she fell an easy victim to the wiles of Clean-Up West, a gambler, whose fancy had wandered temporarily from Fero Fanny to Mrs. Lambert. When the doctor's wife eloped with West, Lambert got his first jolt, and when she returned a year later and died in his cabin in giving birth to a daughter, Lambert's mind became deranged, and he swore never to help man, woman or child again. In his delirium he left the new-born babe on the door-step of Eldorado Smith, who brought her up as his own child.

Years later Lilly Smith, now grown to young womanhood, was strangely attracted by the gruff and repellant exterior of old Whiskey John, who came into her father's saloon occasionally to replenish his jug. The jug and an old dog were the only two things in life which old John cared anything about, and he begrudged the interest which Lilly was taking in him, and which he was forced to take in her, until one day Clean-Up West and Fero Fanny came into the life of the settlement.

Hundreds of women had come into West's life since he ruined Lilly's mother, and Fero Fanny's soul was sore with it all. West started to make love to little Lilly while Lilly's lover, Frank Baxter, was away in the desert. So successful was West with Lilly that she promised to elope with him, but Fanny discovered the plan and attempted to frustrate it. West struck her down. Then she went to old Whiskey John, and told him the whole story of Lilly's life, and for the first time he realizes that Lilly is his own daughter. What happened to West in the next half hour removed that individual for all time, and restored John's sanity and his faith.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Episode No. 3—"Adrift"—Two Parts—Dec. 15).—The cast: Miles Gaston, Jr. (Ben Wilson); Betty Lee (Neva Gerber); Betty's Aunt (Elsie Van Name); Jack Fay (Kingsley Benedict); James Lee (Nigel De Bruillier); Harry Russell (Duke Worne). Written and produced by Harry Harvey.

The sinking of Betty's boat compels her to throw herself and her crew on the mercy of Gaston. Miles Gaston gives instructions to have Betty Lee brought aboard his yacht without her knowing that he was not drowned as a result of her plot to cripple his engines.

When Gaston first sees Betty he is struck with her beauty, but quickly puts aside all such thoughts for the more sober business of obtaining possession of the map showing where her father hid the treasure.

Betty is put in a stateroom aboard Gaston's yacht by Jack Fay, the young reporter who shipped with Gaston. The latter watches and sees Betty take the map from its hiding place. He enters and demands it. Betty is dazed to see him alive, but soon recovers her wits. They struggle for the map. It is torn in two pieces. Gaston has one-half and Betty the remaining half, and she runs out on the deck.

Betty declares she is going to take possession of Gaston's yacht, as her crew is the stronger and that is the only way to continue her mission. Betty's crew engages in a pitched battle with Gaston's crew. An arrow soars through the air and lands near Betty. Attached to it is a note enjoining her to keep up her courage, for unseen but strong help is always near her and will defend her in the hour of peril. Betty's forces capture the wheelhouse and Gaston's crew is driven to the engine room. Gaston orders the engine stopped. The yacht drifts towards the rocks. He offers to start the engine if Betty will surrender the other half of the map. He gives Betty two minutes to act. The minutes pass and the yacht is almost on the rocks.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 9—"A Voice from the Dead"—Two Parts—Dec. 15).—The cast: Virginia Dixon (Marie Walcamp); Patrick Kelly (Bobby Mack); Dr. Hirtzman (Harry Archer); Sergeant Winthrop (Larry Peyton); Steele Heffern (Charles Brindley); Pierre Fouchard (L. M. Wells); "Dutch" Kate (Miriam Selbie); Red Fawn (Yvette Mitchell); Little Bear (Noble Johnson); Bertha Schweir (Nellie Allen). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Virginia finds herself in the dungeon with the hungry lion and manages to get in an adjoining room and hold the door against the beast. Winthrop goes in search of the girl, comes to the mine just as Virginia is about exhausted, and he rescues her. Before leaving on the search, Winthrop has sent Red Fawn to the Inn to warn his men, but Fouchard has her thrown out. The officers, hearing the commotion, rescue her.

Hirtzman meanwhile calls his gang together and gives new instructions to secure the precious metal. He and Steele, his lieutenant, leave for the hidden mine. Virginia and Winthrop find Kelly and start out, but hear Hirtzman coming. Virginia sees a paper protruding from a ring Kelly has. It is half of the letter describing the hiding place of the metal. While Kelly holds the spies off, Virginia and Winthrop dive into the lake and seek the outer air. The crooks dynamite the water but are too late to harm the two. Instead the water entrance is blocked.

The two meet the police and are escorted to Virginia's hut where she endeavors to unravel the secret of the hidden platinum. She is given a letter from the munition manufacturers pleading that the platinum shipments be rushed as the Government is in vital need. She declares that the Government shall be supplied if she loses her life in the attempt.

Two pieces of the letter are put together and full directions for finding the buried platinum are found. While Virginia and Winthrop follow up the search the "Phantom" skulks in the underbrush watching them. He sees Winthrop swim out in the lake, find the box and bring it to shore. Making sure it is the platinum, the Phantom returns to Hirtzman and tells of what he has seen.

Virginia, Winthrop and the officers all return to Virginia's cabin and prepare to take turns on guard during the night. Hirtzman gathers all his gang and attacks the cabin. The defenders realize it will be only a matter of time before they are overpowered, and while the men keep the attackers busy Virginia slips out the back, enters the canoe and starts out. She hardly gets out of sight before she is rammed by the motor boat in which are Ben and Bertha Schweir, Virginia's former maid. The canoe is crushed, the platinum sinks and Virginia is thrown into the water.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 49 (Dec. 15).—This interesting number opens with a warning to slackers. The examining physician is usually a good judge of human nature, as most general practitioners are, and can spot a faked disability with little difficulty. The Screen Magazine caught the members of the Barnum & Bailey circus performing for charity before the inmates of Bellevue Hospital in New York, and it furnished a very interesting chapter. It also persuaded Henry Disston & Sons, of Philadelphia, to permit the Magazine to show its patrons how this leading saw manufacturer makes hand saws in its manufactory at Philadelphia. Another interesting chapter is that contributed by the Chippewa Indians of Northern Minnesota. These Indians subsist principally upon rice, and it is interesting to note the manner in which they harvest and cure and distribute their winter food supply.

JERRY'S BOARDING HOUSE (One Reel—Dec. 13).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Betty (Claire Alexander); The Joy Killer (Pearle Elmore); her husband (John Rand); Mr. Hamlet (V. Omar Whitehead); Mr. Omlette (Bert Wilson); Hortaio (Harry Edmonson). Written and produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry is living in a theatrical boarding house, where everybody, including himself, is in debt to the landlady. The landlady is going right after her collections in regulation "strong arm" style, and the boarders are resorting to every device known to escape from her clutches with their belongings.

Jerry is not slow in his methods of making a getaway, but has hard luck in carrying them out. He finally gets into a mix-up with the landlady, the janitor and a policeman, but after a whirlwind scramble upstairs and downstairs, through second story windows and back doors, up and down ladders and ropes made of bed sheets, he succeeds in distancing his pursuers and escapes up an alley with his trunk.

JERRY'S DOUBLE CROSS—(One Reel—Dec. 20).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); the Girl (Claire Alexander); Jerry's Rival (J. J. Hayes); the Girl's Father (Bert Wilson); Jipt DeBlud (V. O. Whitehead). Directed by Charles Bartlett.

Jerry is in love with a girl whose father owns an antique shop and who is deeply in debt. The old man hates Jerry and wants his daughter to marry his bookkeeper. He relies greatly on the bookkeeper to rescue him from his financial difficulties and in order to bind him to his cause, he compels the girl to agree to marry him. In furtherance of his plan he commands her to write a letter to Jerry breaking off their engagement.

Jerry receives the letter and, heartbroken, decides on suicide, but not having nerve enough to do the deed himself, he visits a professional murderer and makes a contract with him to kill him on sight. He then repents his bargain and is kept busy dodging his executioner.

In the meantime the bookkeeper puts up a scheme in the shape of an auction sale and sends confidential telegrams to various wealthy people to buy everything marked with a double cross, as these things are very valuable. The girl, believing in the fake, meets Jerry and giving him some money tells him to buy double-cross articles also and they go towards the store. On the way, Jerry again falls in with the murderous gentleman and after a brief skirmish succeeds in landing him in the hands of a policeman.

When they reach the store, the auction is about over, only one marked piece remaining, a large vase. Jerry buys it and then, after the money has been paid over, the bookkeeper gives him the laugh and explains the fake. Jerry hits the bookkeeper over the head with the vase, the vase is broken and among the pieces a roll of bills amounting to $10,000 is discovered. Thus Jerry and the girl are made independent and the bookkeeper loses out.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

MISS JACKIE OF THE ARMY—(American—Five Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: Jackie (Margarita Fischer); Lieut. Adair (Jack Mower); Lieut. Wilbur (L. C. Shumway); Col. Kerwood (Hal Clements). Scenario by Chester B. Clapp. Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

Jackie Kerwood, daughter of Col. Kerwood Ingraham, wanted to be a boy. She thought if she was only a boy she could fight in the trenches or do some wonderful deed of valor that would make her name redound to glory. When the women of the army post urged her to be like the other girls and stay at home and knit, she replied that Joan D'Arc didn't knit—she got out in the open and fought. Jackie tried to organize a brigade of girls into "The Fighting Demons," but they didn't seem to care much for it. Neither did her father.

Jackie decided to run away and be a Red Cross nurse. She rather hated to run away and leave Lieut. Adair, who had been calling regularly on her, but she felt that she must be of some service somewhere—and they did not seem to appreciate her at home.

But just as she was leaving she saw something that made her decide to stay right at home and capture a spy. Only she had the spies mixed up and thought it was Lieut. Adair, who was furnishing information to a regular nest of spies who were planning to blow up a train of troops. They wouldn't even pay much attention to Jackie's suspicion at her post. Her father told her he was getting tired of her wild dreams and pranks and that if she didn't stop them she was going to disrupt the discipline of the regiment.

But Jackie was determined to nab a spy. So she watched around and trailed and kept track until she saw Lieut. Adair following Wilbur one night. Adair had his suspicions, too. He thought it might be safe to keep his eye open for Wilbur and consequences were that the spies grabbed Adair for watching Wilbur and threw him in the cellar of the conspirators' house.

Jackie made tracks for her father, who believed her this time. There was a thrilling arrest of the spies, a smashing of the apparatus that was to electrically set off the fuse to blow up the train. Jackie and her lieutenant explained everything before the troops were called out to the front.

NEW YORK LUCK—(American—Five Parts—Dec. 17).—The cast: Nick Fowler (William Russell); Gwendolyn Van Loon (Francella Bilington); Dad Fowler (Harvey Clark); Jimmie Keen (Clarence Burton); Steve Diamond (Edward Fell); Lord Boniface Cheadle (Alfred Ferguson); Peter Van Loon (Frederic Vroom); Palter (Carl Stockdale). Directed by Edward Sloman.

Nick Fowler's dreams carry him beyond the click of the telegraph in the village station of Hohokus. On a passing train are two passengers, Jimmie Keen, a motion picture director, and a beautiful girl, who drops a handbag, containing her photo, which Nick finds after the train has proceeded. He resolves to seek his fortunes and the girl in New York. Jimmie Keen has promised to help Nick in the big city.

But the fates are unkind to Nick. A scamp of an office boy prevents him from seeing Jimmie Keen and he is unable to trace the original of the photograph. He decides to write home and confess his failure. But a vision of his rousing sendoff at Hohokus prompts him to conceal his disillusionment.

As he writes, a stranger enters and drops the same photo as Nick carries. This incident leads to Nick getting acquainted with "Lord Boniface Cheadle." The man is really an international crook, named Steve Diamond, the leader in a plot to obtain official British documents from the father of the very girl for whom Nick is searching.

Nick, deceived, becomes a tool in the conspiracy. He sees the girl, Gwendolyn Van Loon, with her father, enter their home, notifies the false lord, then, impatiently, presents himself and the card given him by Diamond. Nick is received as the English cousin, and from the villainous butlers gleams the scheme afoot.

By the time Diamond arrives, Nick has a plan for the capture of the plotters, and after a fight for life in the elevator shaft of the house subdues both Diamond and Palter, the spy. The real lord escapes after being held a prisoner to allow Diamond to impersonate him, arrives in time to get mixed up in the amazing exposures and with Gwendolyn's father extends congratulations to Nick and the girl.

This is what Nick writes and when Jimmie Keen sees it, he offers the surprised writer a big sum for it to use as a picture play, and best of all, when Jimmie is presented to the star of his play, he recognizes the girl of girls. So "New York Luck" plays Nick a winner after all.

THE HIDDEN HAND (No 4—"The False Locket"—Two Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Doris Whitney (Doris Kenyon); Dr. Scarley (Sheldon Lewis); Verda Crane (Arlene Pretty); Jack Ramsey (Mahlon Hamilton); the Hidden Hand (???)

Doris is trying to escape from the Hidden Hand by hiding herself under an overturned

rowboat. Ramsey, who has been made a prisoner, escapes and rescues Doris. A search party rescues them from the rocky point on which they landed and Ramsey secures the packet containing the fingerprints, which he threw into the bushes before his capture by the Hidden Hand.

In his den, the Hidden Hand plans to arouse Doris' jealousy. One of the female members of his gang is sent to Doris with a letter purporting to be from Ramsey to his wife, in which he says that he has the locket and is sending it to her for safekeeping. He tells her not to be jealous of Doris Whitney as she means nothing to him. The letter is signed, "Your Husband, Jack." In the envelope is the false locket prepared by the Hidden Hand. Ramsey's supposed wife goes to Doris and gives her the letter and the locket and tells her to keep her hands off her husband. Doris demands the packet from Ramsey and again becomes friendly with Dr. Scarley.

With the locket and the packet in her possession, Doris is about to attempt to open it and settle the question of her identity, when Ramsey warns her of the danger she runs, as he feels sure the locket is a false one. Hearing Ramsey's warning, Doris puts the locket and the packet in the safe in her living room. Ramsey discovers the false entrance to the underground den of the Hidden Hand and decides to destroy whoever is using the den. He places dynamite in the false entrance to the den and arranges so it can be set off by electricity. The electrical wires he attaches to a piedmograph which records the footsteps on the ground in the vicinity of the dynamite.

The Hidden Hand discovers Ramsey's plan and has Verda Crane lure Doris to the place where the dynamite has been placed. Ramsey sees the piedmograph record footsteps and sets off the dynamite. He hastens to see who his victim may be, and is surprised to find Doris struggling to free herself from the debris in the cave. Dr. Scarley tells Doris that Ramsey was responsible for her plight and Doris breaks with Ramsey. Late that night she hears noise in her living room and rushes down to find the false Ramsey opening the safe, by means of an oxy-acetylene torch. He gags and binds her. He then opens the safe and secures the packet and the locket. Out of curiosity he attempts to open the packet. It explodes and kills him. The Hidden Hand, waiting outside the house for the false Ramsey, enters just as the evidence in the packet is destroyed. Doris manages to free herself from her bonds and is struggling with the Hidden Hand when the real Ramsey enters the room and rescues her. She is surprised to see Ramsey alive and looks in wonder at his dead double on the floor. He explains to her that it was his double who attacked her and secured the packet and the locket. The episode ends after a tender love passage between Doris and Ramsey.

THE SEVEN PEARLS (Episode No. 14—"The Tower of Death"—Two Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Ilma (Mollie King); Harry Drake (Creighton Hale); Perry Mason (Leon Bary).

The fourteenth episode opens with a surprise for Harry when he is drawn to the bridge from over the Rapids. He is greeted by Ilma, who, he thought, was in the piano box that went over Niagara Falls. She explains that when Perry Mason and his men threw the case into the river she managed to escape from it.

Home again, Kismet warns Ilma and Harry that the next day is the last one set by the Sultan for the return of the pearls and that if she fails to secure the entire seven pearls she must go into the Sultan's harem. They hear that Jeo. Gudgeon, a member of Grady's gang, has the seventh pearl and is offering it to the highest bidder. After many adventures Ilma obtains it, and hands it to Harry for safekeeping. He returns it to her as he does not want to be responsible for it. Perry and Stayne attack Ilma and Harry and secure the pearl. In the fight Harry is knocked unconscious and Ilma pretends to be senseless, but when Perry and Stayne start away she follows after them. Perry and Stayne discover her and corner her near a big tank. To escape them she climbs up the ladder of the tank and Stayne follows. He is about to capture her when she pushes him from the ladder. In the effort she loses her balance and falls into the tank. She lies unconscious at the bottom of the tank, which has only a few inches of water in it.

Stayne wants to rescue Ilma so that Perry will be able to get the Sultan's reward, but Perry wants to leave her to her fate. Their difference of opinion results in a fight and Perry throws Stayne under a locomotive engine passing on the tracks near which they are struggling. Harry regains consciousness and seeing the tank climbs up its ladder to get a drink of water. Perry sees him and is about to shoot him when Stayne, who has been badly injured, opens his eyes and seeing the situation, shoots at Perry to obtain revenge on him. Stayne's shot goes wild and dislodges the tank. It falls to pieces and Harry falls to the ground. Perry is knocked unconscious, but Ilma is not to be seen.

HER SISTER'S RIVAL (Russian Art Film Corp.—Five Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Prince Baskoff (V. A. Polonsky); Nita, the adopted daughter (V. V. Colodna); Mary, the daughter (L. M. Coronova). Directed by A. Arkatov.

Nita and Mary are reared as sisters by Madame Krofet, a wealthy business woman. At a reception Nita, the foster daughter, is adored by Bartinsky, a wealthy banker, and who, though he desires to make her his wife, cannot induce her to give her consent. The girls are later introduced to Prince Baskoff, whose worst habit is the spending of money. The introduction was the means of many frequent calls by the Prince, and Nita falls in love with him.

Meanwhile Mary, Madame Kromoff's daughter, has become enamored with the Prince and during a visit of the banker to the Prince's apartments, the Prince discloses the fact that he is badly in need of money and a compact is soon made between the two men that if the banker will arrange for the Prince's marriage to Mary he (the Prince) will endeavor to help the suit of the banker in his desires for the marriage of Nita. Mary accepts the Prince's proposal of marriage despite her mother's strong objections and Nita, in a fit of pique, makes happy the ardent suitor, Bartinsky. A double wedding takes place.

On the return from the honeymoon, which superficially was all that Mary in her heart's desire for happiness could wish for, the Prince against reverts to drinking and gambling. With the almost successive losses incurred by the Prince, the necessity for more money constantly arises and to save the humiliating application of her husband coming to her for money, Mary gives him power of attorney, with the result that the money remaining is rapidly depleted.

Mary's mother comes to her and expostulates regarding her husband's actions, but being a devoted wife she smooths over the matter temporarily. With his source of supply shut off, the Prince resorts to other means of securing money, with the result that a money lender presents for payment three notes bearing a forged signature of the banker. This fact becomes known to Madame Kromoff, who repairs to the house of her son-in-law, where she berates the unscrupulous man for his shortcomings.

Bartinsky, suspicious of Nita's loyalty to him, leaves on a pretended business visit. His unexpected return discloses the fact that his suspicions were too well founded. Bartinsky decides to get a separation from his wife and imprison the unscrupulous Prince for forgery. Learning of the banker's intention to send the Prince to prison, Mary calls on her sister and entreats her to use every effort to have her husband stay his hand against her husband. Nita's pleas prove successful. The banker falsely asserts that the notes were signed by him and that the fault was not the Prince's. But meanwhile Mary's mother again visited her wrath upon her unscrupulous son-in-law and during her verbal arraignment word is brought that the police have surrounded the house. Asking to be left alone for a few moments they hear the muffled report of a pistol and Prince Baskoff has passed the pale of human judgment.

husband's infatuation and blames Eyre for her husband's death. She determines to avenge his death and altho she herself with a crowd of anarchists led by Professor Groesbeck, Mary secures work in Eyre's steel foundry and incites the workmen to strike. Eyre, however, hears of the proposed strike and arrives at the plant in time to avert it.

Mary then finds the returned check which her husband had received from Eyre and realizes the truth. Eyre comes to claim her and is not repulsed.

Jim Benton, owner of the biggest cattle ranch in South California, is unable to read or write. Jim meets Evelyn Hastings, who he learns is a schoolmarm and persuades her to open school for his cowboys and himself. Jim proves a star pupil and aided by his affection for his teacher he makes rapid strides in scholarship.

Then the sheep-men close the dam which waters Benton's herds and it is up to Jim to open the dam at all costs. Before he and his punchers leave he promises Evelyn he will only use his guns in self-defense.

Jim is called upon to protect himself and kills the deputy sheriff. He is arrested and the sheriff promises him a fair trial and a jury of cow-men. The judge, however, is bribed and he installs a jury of sheep-men, who return a death verdict.

Just as Benton is led to the gallows Evelyn arrives with a pardon from the Governor and Benton wins in two ways.

CHRISTIE FILM CORP.

THEIR SEASIDE TANGLE (One Reel—Dec. 3).—The cast: Mrs. Newlywed (Betty Compson); Mr. Newlywed (Jay Belasco); Mrs. Smith (Lois Leslie); Mr. Smith (Billy Mason). Directed by Al E. Christie.

Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed select Sea Breeze for their vacation at the beach and the same resort is decided upon by Mr. and Mrs. Smith. The women are jealous of their husbands and the husbands evince equal concern over the behavior of their respective wives. Betty and Jay set out for a day on the sands and the first point of interest appealing to Betty is Billy Smith. Mrs. Smith is no less interested in Jay.

Trouble starts when Betty leaps into the ocean for a swim, in which pastime she proves herself an adept. Unfortunately Jay is unable to swim a stroke. But Billy is a powerful swimmer and deserts his wife for the more sportive splash with the alluring Mrs. Newlywed. Mrs. Smith's attempts at swimming are quite as futile as the efforts of Jay Newlywed.

Betty and Billy are getting along "swimmingly" when Jay develops a demonstrative pique. The affliction spreads to Mrs. Smith. Tortured by the deep sea spooning of Betty and Billy, Jay and Mrs. Smith vainly appeal to the Sea Breeze police force to separate them. Jay finally decides upon the ruse of faking suicide. He empties a bottle of its contents of carbolic acid and substitutes water. This he swallows in plain view of Betty. She hastily summons a physician, who renders first aid by vigorously applying the stomach pump. The fake is discovered. The Smiths depart, leaving Jay and Betty "fussing." Betty taunts Jay by telling him she knew the "poison" was only water.

ONE GOOD TURN (One Reel—Dec. 10).—The cast: Mrs. Newlywed (Betty Browne); John, her husband (Harry Edwards); Billy (Billy Mason). Directed by Al E. Christie.

After a year of happy married life the anniversary of the Newlyweds' marriage dawns. Its importance in their lives dawns upon Betty, but not upon John, so, as a reminder, Betty ties a kerchief with ribbons and places it at her husband's place at the breakfast table. John calmly reads the paper, oblivious of the wifely hint. He even leaves for the office without bestowing upon her a good-bye kiss.

Betty is chagrined, but undaunted. She orders the cook to prepare a lavish dinner, far surpassing in delicacy the usual evening meal. Meanwhile she meets Bessie, her chum, who tells her that Billy, her brother, and a former sweetheart of Betty's, has returned from college.

John, unmindful of the anniversary dinner Betty has had prepared, is induced by his men friends to phone home that he will not be home for dinner. Betty determines the repast shall not be wasted, so she invites Billy to dine with her. Billy accepts, but is ill at ease during dinner and is deeply dismayed over the unexpected arrival of Uncle and Auntie, who are giving the Newlyweds a surprise.

Betty introduces Billy as her husband. Grief then grows to frenzy when Uncle and Auntie insist that the old proverb of "early to bed, early to rise" must be regarded. In the midst of the confusion John comes home. He sees a strange hat. He investigates. He finds Billy vainly trying to escape from Betty's boudoir. He threatens murder. He rages. Auntie and Uncle join in the turmoil. Betty explains. John is contrite and makes fitting amends for his thoughtlessness in overlooking their first anniversary of wedlock.

GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM.

SADIE GOES TO HEAVEN—(Essanay Perfection Picture—Five Parts—Dec. 24).—The cast: Sadie O'Malley (Little Mary McAlister); Sadie's mother (Jenny St. George); Orval (Russell McDermott); Mrs. Welland Riche (Frankie Raymond); Coal heaver (Rodney LaRocque); Housekeeper (Kathryn Kennedy); Butler (Bobby Bolder).

Little six-year-old Sadie O'Malley, a child of the tenement district, has a vision of heaven awakened within her by the teaching of a settlement worker; so when she sees a handsome limousine in front of the settlement laundry near her home she thinks it is a heavenly chariot, climbs into a clothes hamper in the interior of the car and is whisked away to the home of Mrs. Welland Riche.

The latter has left earlier in the day on a trip, so when Sadie and her dog, George Washington Square, who has been her companion in the hamper trip, are dumped down the clothes chute of the Riche home while concealed in the basket, they find easy access to the upper regions of the mansion and then, indeed, Sadie thinks she is in heaven.

Sadie soon is discovered by the servants, but they believe she is just another of Mrs. Riche's fads when she tells them she is there to stay. Believing Mrs. Riche as desiring that the best of care be given the child, Sadie is dressed in rich garments and is much at home until Mrs. Riche returns.

While the servants' explanations have been made, Mrs. Riche, in the meantime having been won over by the child's beauty and sweet manners, decides Sadie may remain. But the tenement child's happiness is shortlived when George Washington Square appears upon the scene. Mrs. Riche orders that the pup be removed and tells Sadie that, instead, she can play with the Riche collection of Poms.

Not so for Sadie. She informs the wealthy matron that she wouldn't give up George Washington Square for all the heavens and that if G. W. S. cannot remain she will go. So hugging her doggie close to her she returns to her worried mother with the explanation: "I have been to heaven, but they sent me home because they didn't like my dog."

KING-BEE FILM CORP.

THE SLAVE (Two Parts—Dec. 15).—The cast: The Slave (Billy West); The Sultan (Oliver Hardy); The Vizier (Leo White); The Collector (Budd Ross); His Daughter (Beatrice Joy); The Sultan's Favorite (Gladys Varden). Scenario written by Rex Taylor.

Billy is a slave in the palace of the Sultan of Bacteria. Horatius Crabbe and his daughter, Susie, are sojourning in Bacteria in search of antiques. They arrive at the palace just as Billy is about to be beheaded for an offense against the Sultan. Susie stops the execution and her smile softens the heart of the Sultan.

During their visit the Sultan takes a great fancy to Susie and resolves to add her to his harem. He makes advances to her, but she repulses him. After Susie and her Dad have gone, the Sultan plans with his Vizier as to how they shall capture her. Knowing Dad's fondness for antiques, they get a mummy case and place in it one of their warriors. Billy overhears the plot and, resolving to save the girl, he scares the warrior away and takes his place.

The Sultan has the mummy case taken to Dad's hotel, where he is about to put his plan into action when he discovers that Billy has taken the warrior's place and their plot will not work.

So he invites Dad and Susie over to the palace for lunch and leaves Billy heavily guarded.

Arriving at the palace, he throws all pretense aside, and has Dad put in a dungeon and starts to take possession of the girl. She puts up a fight and he has her locked up in the tower to think it over.

Billy escapes from his captors and rushes to the palace to save the girl. The Vizier shoots him through a trapdoor into the dungeon with Dad. Both escape from there and Billy fights his way to the tower while Dad is again captured. Billy and Susie try to escape and the entire army take after them. From a strategic position in one of the corridors Billy knocks out the entire army, including the Vizier and the Sultan, and saves the girl like a regular hero.

THE HONEYMOON (Five Parts).—The cast: Susan Lane (Constance Talmadge); Richard Greer (Earle Foxe); Mrs. Lane (Maude Turner Gordon); Uncle Jimmy Lane (Russell Bassett); Philip Lane (Harris Gordon); Marion Starr (Lillian Cook); Maisie Middleton (Julia Bruns); Robert Moody (Sam Coit). Directed by Charles Giblyn.

Susan Lane has an ungovernable streak of jealousy which infuriates her within fifteen minutes after the ceremony which makes her Mrs. Richard Greer; for she sees her husband talking to Marion Starr, one of the bridesmaids. Susan's brother, Phil Lane, has fallen in love with Marion, but a previous entanglement in the shape of Maisie Middleton of the Jigfield Rolics prevents the announcement of their engagement. Maisie, to whom Phil had become engaged after a wine supper, refuses to release him, and the sweethearts are in despair.

Phil draws Dick aside and tells him the whole story, and also informs him that Maisie's troupe will be in Niagara Falls, whither the honeymooners are going, and that it's up to Dick to buy her off. Dick protests, but Phil declares that his and Marion's happiness is at stake, and the young bridegroom consents.

In Niagara, Susan and Dick pass the first day without a cloud in the sky. Dick, however, realizes that time is flitting and so, on a lame excuse, he tears himself away to interview the would-be vampire in her dressing room. A prying maid sees him there and reports the matter to Susan, who comes and sees for herself. Convinced of his perfidy, she dashes back to the hotel, demands a separate room from the clerk and locks herself in, refusing to listen to Dick's explanation. At the same time she wires her Uncle Jimmy to get her a divorce. The family also receives Dick's report on the Middleton affair and his anguished plea for help.

To teach Susan a lesson, Uncle Jimmy telegraphs her to forward her depositions; and she, still at white heat, sends them on. Before they arrive, however, Uncle Jimmy, Susan's mother and the engaged couple leave for Niagara to patch up the domestic break. When the depositions arrive, Uncle Jimmy's partner rushes things through to a divorce. Accordingly, when the rescuing family arrives, it finds Susan and Dick, now reconciled, in despair over the announcement of the divorce decree. Uncle Jimmy is aghast, but Dick cuts the Gordian knot by corraling a minister and getting himself married to Susan all over again. In a burst of good wishes they start on their second honeymoon.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE MARRIAGE SPECULATION (Five Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: Mr. Cliday (Charles Kent); Clara Wilton (Mildred Manning); Billie Perkins (Wallace MacDonald). Directed by Ashley Miller.

Cliday has worked twenty years in a pickle factory and saved $10,000, which he desires to invest so as to insure him a competence for the remainder of his life. He has an acquaintance with Clara Wilton, who works in a confectionery store and who is the sweetheart of a plodding grocery clerk.

Cliday tells Clara he will invest his $10,000 in her education and introduction into society—she, in return, to win and wed a rich man who will see that he (Cliday) wants for nothing the remainder of his life. Clara accepts, although it wrenches her heart to give up Billie Perkins, her sweetheart.

In two years Clara develops into a beautiful and polished young woman who has made the best of her opportunities, but given little thought to her fulfillment of the compact. She and Cliday are at a fashionable resort when he tells her there is enough left of his $10,000 to pay bills for one month more.

Clara still loves Billy and loathes the men who seek her hand, but she places her duty to Cliday above her love, and finally accepts an Italian count. The wedding day arrives and also Billy, who experienced an "awakening" with the departure of Clara, and now is partner in the store and able to pay Cliday the money he has expended on Clara.

Billy unmasks the count as a waiter-adventurer, and disguising himself to resemble him, takes his place in the bridal party. Clara fails to recognize him until the ceremony is well under way. Cliday, not knowing Billy has any money, generously offers to release Clara of any obligation and everything turns out happily.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

THE ETERNAL MOTHER (Five Parts—Nov. 20).—The cast: Maris (Ethel Barrymore); Dwight Alden, Maris's second husband (Frank Mills); Lynch, Maris's first husband, later known as Winch (J. W. Johnston); Minister (Charles W. Sutton); Kate (Kaj Gynt); Bucky McGhee (Louis R. Wolheim); Felice (Maxime Elliott Hicks); Butler (J. Van Cortlandt). Directed by Frank Relcher. Adapted by Mary Murillo from the novel, "Red Horse Hill," by Sidney McCall.

Maris has married against her father's wishes. Lynch, her husband, turns out to be a drunkard. In her life the only bright spot is their little child, Felice. Maris is forced to be the bread winner of the family. She secures a position as stenographer in the office of Dwight Alden, the wealthy mill owner. Word comes to Maris of the death of her husband and child in a railroad accident. When Alden learns there is no longer an obstacle to their marriage, he asks Maris to be his wife.

A few years later Lynch returns under the name of Winch with a woman named Kate. Both depend upon the efforts of little Felice, who goes to work in the mill. Maris, driving by in her machine with the minister, sees the little child hastening weakly to her work. When her husband arrives he tells her it is no affair of hers, and hurries her away to be ready for a reception that evening.

At the mill that night a belt around the spools, which has not been arranged in accordance with the law, breaks and Felice is injured. McGhee, the superintendent, phones Alden at his home, and Maris overhears her husband giving his cold directions. Later in the night Maris steals away to see what she can do for the sufferer. As she nears the cottage, Winch staggers out, telling Kate that he is going to get damages for the injury to his bread-winner. When Maris comes to the cottage, she smooths the little child. Kate watches Mrs. Alden's affection for Felice, and goes out to find Winch to tell him that she thinks they can extort money from the mill owner's wife.

Winch gets into a fight with McGhee at the saloon, and McGhee gets the best of it. Winch hastens home with Kate, and the husband and wife face each other. Maris is aghast at the knowledge that he is alive, and that the injured child is her own baby. Maris attempts to take her child away, but Winch stops her. Winch forces the sick child to get up and dress and the three leave. Kate and Winch fall asleep by the roadside, and Felice creeps away in search of the kind lady.

The next morning after her husband has left the house, Maris determines to make one final effort to obtain possession of her child. She goes to the Winch cottage. At the church, the minister makes an impassioned plea to his rich congregation on behalf of the children of the mills, and ends with a scathing denunciation of Alden. At the close of the sermon he falls dead. Felice staggers to the gate of the Alden home, where Maris finds her. Maris decides to take Felice and leave Alden's home, and writes a note in which she tells her husband that Felice is her own child and that Winch is her husband.

Alden, a changed and softened man, hurries home to find Maris, and is just recovering from the shock of her farewell letter when Winch and Kate, who have gone in search of Felice, reach the house. Winch admits that the report of his death was simply a scheme

THE SQUARE DECEIVER (Yorke Film Corp.)

—Five Parts—Dec. 31.—The cast: Billy Van Dyke (Harold Lockwood); Beatrice Forsythe (Pauline Curley); William Pugfeather (William Clifford); Mrs. Pugfeather (Dora Mills Adams); Celia Pugfeather (Kathryn Hutchinson); Edith Van Dyke (Betty Marvin); Dick Blakesley (Dick L'Estrange). Directed by Fred J. Balshofer. Adapted by Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer from Francis Perry Elliott's novel, "Love Me for Myself Alone."

Billy Van Dyke, multi-millionaire owner of Dynecourt Manor, and a most likeable chap, is counted a great catch by fortune-hunting mothers of marriageable daughters, but he is unimpressible while he waits for his "dream girl" who will love him not for his millions, but for himself alone.

William Pugfeather has brought his society-made wife, his daughter, Celia, and his ward, Beatrice Forsythe, to New York. Mrs. Pugfeather is anxious to lease Dynecourt Manor in the secret hope that Celia can make the acquaintance of the owner and win him. Celia is selfish and arrogant, and just the opposite to the sweet and unspoiled Beatrice, who does not figure in these negotiations.

The first step in Mrs. Pugfeather's campaign is to hire a liveried chauffeur, and Beatrice is sent to town to find one. Billy sees her driving through the park, and recognizing her as his "dream girl," he pursues. He learns of her errand, and, struck by an idea, dons his chauffeur's coat and cap, applies for the position, and is engaged.

Beatrice and Billy become friends much to the alarm of Mrs. Pugfeather. She demands references, but when Billy tells her his last employer was the rich Mr. Van Dyke she is satisfied. The succeeding days find Billy working as chauffeur. Celia has arrived at a suburban depot, and the car is there to meet her. Celia's baggage takes up so much space that there is no room for Beatrice, and Mrs. Pugfeather tells her to take the local train home. Beatrice leaves at this insult, and Billy, infuriated, quits his job.

Billy finds Beatrice down the lane almost in tears. He comforts her, and offers to loan him three hundred dollars, all she has. At last Billy has found the girl who loves him for himself alone, so he pours out his heart, and they become engaged. The Pugfeathers quarrel, and Beatrice returns just in time to hear Celia accuse Pugfeather of sheltering a pauper. At this new insult she resolves to go away. As she is leaving the house, Pugfeather, as executor of her father's estate, tells her she is heiress to two million dollars.

Billy, still retaining his secret, and aided in his plans by his sister, Edith; his chum, Blakesley, and Dr. McChesney, meets Beatrice by appointment. They are married. Then Beatrice learns that her husband is the rich Mr. Van Dyke. Mrs. Pugfeather and Celia collapse when they receive the news at the Van Dyke home, where they have been invited for a visit.

Ashley has taken up his portfolio in Belmark. He visits Paris, but avoids Jörn. Jörn has aroused the suspicions of Morhange, a French police agent, and he searches Jörn's studio and discovers proofs that Jörn is a spy. Jörn surprises him. There is a struggle. Morhange is killed. Jörn takes a ring from his own finger, places it upon Morhange's hand and burns the studio. The charred body is identified as that of Jörn, and Marion, at her father's request, leaves with him for Belmark. Jörn reports to his own government. In Belmark Marion meets the Crown Prince Leopold. They fall in love and Marion consents to a morganatic marriage.

Jörn, under an assumed name, goes to Belmark at the command of his Emperor to incite the people against war. Marion marries Leopold. Jörn's master sends an ultimatum to the King of Belmark that unless Leopold weds the Princess Sophia (the Emperor's cousin) war will be declared and Belmark devastated. The people of Belmark, under Jörn's domination, demand peace. They throng the square before the palace. Leopold refuses to renounce Marion. Marion is summoned to the Council Chamber. The Emperor's envoy warns her Belmark will be laid in ruins. Marion makes the supreme renunciation that Belmark may have peace.

Then the envoy, triumphant, betrays the fact that it is a trap and Belmark is to be an ally of the Imperial Government in a war of greed. Marion is horror-stricken. She refuses to give up Leopold. The envoy plays his trump card. Jörn is announced. Marion is dazed at seeing Jörn alive, realizes that she has never been the wife of Leopold. The Imperial Government will triumph. Ashley demanding an audience with the King says that America will protect the neutrality of Belmark. Marion begs Leopold to tell the good news to the surging crowd in the square. On the balcony of the palace Leopold addresses his people. Says America will protect his Kingdom and theirs. Jörn gives the signal that has been decided on in the event of failure of the Imperial plans. Leopold is to be killed. A bomb is thrown at Leopold by one of Jörn's confederates. Marion sees it, hurls herself in front of Leopold. The huge balcony collapses as Jörn enters from the palace at the side and is killed by a section of falling marble. In the ruins of the balcony Marion's body is found. She is badly hurt. Leopold is unscathed. There is a period of unconsciousness and suffering. The people of Belmark mourn for the brave American girl—then they know that Marion's life will be saved.

THE AWAKENING (Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Jacques Revilly (Montague Love); Marguerite (Dorothy Kelly); Horace Chapron (John Davidson); Varny (or Maxime) (Frank Beamish); Prosper Chavassier (Joseph Granby); Celestine (Josephine Earle). Directed by George Archainbaud.

Twenty-five years ago Jacques Revilly was found on the church steps in a small French village. He grows up into a fine strapping young farmer. His abstinence from rough play after his farm work makes him unpopular, he surreptitiously cultivates his skill at painting within the sacred portals of the church. One of Jacques' tormentors discover his art attempts, which suggest a new mode of attack, and then his co-workers make an issue of a little delinquency and refuse to stay at the farm unless he is discharged. Jacques, enraged at this injustice, leaves the hamlet forever.

Three years later in Paris Jacques is able to produce some very good canvases. His unkempt appearance, his sulkiness and his apparent distaste for the society of his fellowmen have won for him the nick-name of "The Beast." He goes to the Cafe Brasserie Murger where the artists are enjoying themselves, among them being Horace Chapron, the bully of the Student Quarter. A dance is being planned for the evening, but the girls do not wish to have "The Beast" present.

Jacques that night, knowing nothing about the party enters the cafe and as usual takes his drink by himself. He is invited to join the party by another student named Varny, but says he prefers to be by himself. Toward morning a girl who has been dancing on a table falls from it, landing on Varny, injuring his arm. Jacques takes him home and nurses him back to health. With the recovery of his friend, who joins his old companions, Jacques realizes anew that in this world he stands alone.

He goes to a saloon and as he is drinking he prays God to give him the companionship that his soul craves for. On his way home he finds a frail young girl lying apparently dead in the snow. He carries her to his home, confident that his prayer has been answered. Under the careful ministrations of his friend, Varny, and the caretaker, the girl convalesces. Her story relates her unsuccessful attempts to find work after her mother's death. Her strength gave out and she fell almost lifeless in the street. Jacques gives her his room, while he goes across the hall to Varny. Through the aid of the caretaker, Marguerite secures a position in Madame Celeste's millinery shop.

Jacques begins to take an interest in his physical appearance. One day Prosper, one of the students, announces that he has just seen "The Beast" sober, clean-shaven and neatly dressed. His friends are incredulous, so he says he will prove it. A few days later when passing under Marguerite's window a book comes down on his head, it having been pushed off the window sill by the girl when dusting. Prosper returns the book to Marguerite, and is about to kiss her when Jacques appears. Prosper is ordered out of the place, and tells the students that Marguerite is beautiful and virtuous. Horace, another student, wagers a dinner that she will be his a month from that date, which, by the way, will be the wedding day of Jacques and Marguerite.

One month later the students are all assembled for dinner, Jacques, who has not seen his companion for over a month, enters the cafe and asks if he may join the party, not knowing the nature. Horace then toasts "His Marguerite, who works in Madame Celeste's shop." As there is but one Marguerite in the shop in question Jacques demands that Horace retract the toast. Horace shows her ring which Jacques insists he stole. Horace challenges Jacques to a duel.

Jacques rushes to Marguerite's room, where he finds her directing a letter to him. She hands the missive to him. He reads, "You'll never see me again. I am a defiled creature." Jacques bids her leave. He makes his will leaving all to Marguerite. Marguerite begs his friend to get Jacques to finish reading her letter. Jacques consents and so Varny finishes reading the confession of how she had gone home with Madame Celeste who had feigned sickness; was introduced to a man she called her brother; that after drinking her wine she was powerless to move; and next morning she found herself—

Jacques resolves to kill Horace. Varny asks Jacques if he will not see Marguerite. He does; but when Marguerite hears that a duel is to be fought begs Jacques not to go, as she is sure he will be killed. Jacques is not to be swayed from his purpose. On the field of honor Horace says that he is in the wrong and wants to apologize. Jacques strikes him in the face. They fire. Jacques is shot; but not mortally and the doctor tells him he will soon be all right. He is carried back to his rooms. There is a reconciliation, and so Jacques at last has his heart's desire.

THE GOOD FOR NOTHING (Five Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: Jack Burshaw (Carlyle Blackwell); Marie Alston (Evelyn Greeley); Mrs. Burshaw (Kate Lester); Mr. Eugene Alston (Charles Duncan); Jerry Alston (William Sherwood); Barbara Manning (Muriel Ostriche); Barbara's mother (Eugenie Woodward); Laurel Baxter (Katherine Johnston). Story by Alexander Thomas. Directed by Carlyle Blackwell.

The story deals with Jack Burshaw, a young man who has plenty of character and is extremely likable, but who has failed to make good in business. Out West he has a sudden longing to see his mother again. He has not seen her for ten years—since the time that his father threw him out of his home for misbehavior. Jack decides to go back home, but he has considerable difficulty in locating his mother. Finally he finds that his father has died and that his mother has married again. Jack finds that his mother's second husband is a wealthy, aristocratic individual, who is the father of a son and a daughter by his first marriage. The son and daughter are aristocratic and high and mighty like their father, and Jack fails to fit in well in the family. Finally it comes to the point where Jack is accused of the theft of a necklace belonging to a friend of the daughter. Jack goes to a farm and there he is happy and contented until he finds that his stepbrother is a rather bad egg. Then Jack sets himself the task of making his stepbrother do the right thing. The manner in which Jack succeeds in this laudable effort and the reward which comes to him constitutes a mighty entertaining drama.

FOX FILM CORPORATION.

TREASURE ISLAND (Six Parts—Nov. 18—Fox Standard Picture).—The cast: In the prologue: Jim Hawkins (Francis Carpenter); His Mother (Eleanor Washington); Louise Trelawney (Virginia Corbin); Bill Bones (Herschel Mayall); Long John Silver (Elmo Lincoln); Black Dog (C. Gorman); Blind Pew (Ed Harley). In the story: Jim Hawkins (Francis Carpenter); Louise Trelawney (Virginia Corbin); Long John Silver (Violet Radcliffe); Black Dog (Lloyd Perl); Ben Gunn (Lew Sargent); Captain Smollett (Buddie Messinger). Scenario by Bernard McConville. Directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

The story begins in the "Admiral Benbow Inn," Black Hill Cove, on the coast of England. Bill Bones, a mysterious seaman, puts up at this inn, which is run by Mrs. Hawkins, mother of Jim Hawkins. He has scarcely arrived when he is attacked by a number of other mysterious seamen who turn out to be pirates in search of a chart which Bill possesses. In the scuffle which follows Jim gets possession of the chart and flees with it to the home of Squire Trelawney, father of Louise Trelawney. While the squire and Dr. Livesey ponder over the strange map, which is known among the pirates as "Flint's Fist," Jim is sent upstairs to sleep and to dream.

Jim and Louise go to Bristol. They charter the "Hispaniola," with a crew of what they consider carefully selected men. They start for the mysterious island outlined on "Flint's Fist," for a little red cross on the chart had beside it the luring words, "Bulk of treasure here."

On the way the two children learn that most of the crew they have hired had formerly sailed with the notorious Flint, one of the boldest pirates who ever lived. He had given this map to Bill Bones, his first mate, on his deathbed in Savannah, Ga.

Then begins a series of exciting adventures. After a long voyage, they reach the Treasure Island and Jim goes ashore with several pirates, headed by Long John Silver, while Louise stays aboard with Captain Smollett. Jim finds Ben Gunn, a marooned former shipmate of Flint's, and makes a friend of him.

The captain and Louise, fearing an attack on board, make for the shore and take refuge in the stockade which had been built on the island by Flint. Jim joins them there only to find that he has left the coveted chart on shipboard, and he is forced to make the hazardous trip back.

After many fights between the pirates and the honest members of the crew, Louise and Jim are finally reunited. They find the treasure safely piled away in Ben Gunn's cave. And they once more climb aboard the "Hispaniola," homeward bound.

THE BABES IN THE WOODS (Five Parts—Dec. 2—Fox Special Feature).—The cast: Roland and Hansel (Francis Carpenter); Rose and Gretel (Virginia Lee Corbin); The Bad Prince (Violet Radcliffe); The Good Fairy (Carmen de Rue); John Hamilton (Herschel Mayall); Mrs. Hamilton (Rosita Marstini); Mason Hamilton (Robert Lawler); The Butler (Scotty McKee); The Witch (Teddy Billings). Adapted by Bernard McConville. Directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin).

John Hamilton has two children. He marries a second time and his second wife does not like the children. She does, however, like Mason Hamilton, her husband's brother. John Hamilton suspects the pair and goes away on a trip, ostensibly. He draws up a will before he goes, leaving the major portion of his money to the two children; but in the event of their death the money is to go to the brother. The father sets a manservant to watch the pair. Soon after he causes to be circulated the report of his death.

In a short time the manservant comes to him at a nearby hotel with the report that his second wife and his brother are plotting to destroy the children so that they can get the money immediately. Suddenly the husband returns. The wife and brother are astonished. The brother leaves the house. The father gathers around him his wife and the two children and asks the children as they sit on his knees if they would like to hear his story of the Babes in the Woods. Of course they want to hear it. So with his wife listening he begins the recital.

The picture fades from the pleasant room and the fairy story is shown on the screen. Hansel and Gretel are given into the hands of ruffians by their cruel stepmother. They are to be killed in the forest. The beauty and innocence of the two children softens somewhat the hearts of the murderers, who decide they cannot kill the children, so they leave them in the forest to die.

The children wander in the wood for some time and they lie down near a big tree and fall asleep. The Good Fairy, who watches over the children in the wood, brings forth her fairies to dance around the lost ones to make their dreams pleasant.

The next morning the children are found by the Bad Prince, but Hansel and Gretel flee and are assisted by the Good Fairy, who, when the children reach a stream in their flight, calls two swans and on the backs of these Hansel and Gretel escape across the water.

The Bad Prince then goes to an old Witch and promises her wealth if she captures Hansel and Gretel for him. The Witch sends her raven into the wood to guide the children to her house, a structure built of gingerbread. The children see the raven. They marvel at it, and as the Witch intended, follow it to her home.

While the children are nibbling at the gingerbread house, the Witch comes out and invites them inside. She makes prisoners of both, intending to fatten Hansel so that she can eat him.

When the roasting day comes, the Witch tells Gretel to crawl into the oven to see if it is hot enough. Gretel, guided by the Good Fairy, declares the oven is not large enough. Whereupon the Witch, to show the children it is, crawls in herself. Gretel slams the oven door and she and Hansel escape.

Then follow many adventures, in which the children get into the hands of the Bad Prince, but the Good fairy still aids them and they escape. They finally return home, tell their story, and the entire village turns out and visits deserved punishment on the bad stepmother and the uncle.

The picture then returns to John Hamilton's home. The children are still on his knees. The little girl is crying softly and the boy looks angry. For a time the wife and stepmother looks at her husband, then as the full effect of the story sinks into her heart, she bows her head, then smiles and takes the children to her bosom. She loves the children now and by her act regains the affection of her husband.

THE PRIDE OF NEW YORK (Five Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: The Son (George Walsh); The Father (James A. Marcus); The Fop (William Bailey); The Girl (Regina Quinn). Staged and written by R. A. Walsh.

The story opens with George, the son of a building contractor at work on a 20-story structure. He's hard working and happy. In New York there is another type, one often found—a rich man's son who is an idler, who loves the night life and the spending of his father's money. He's a typical snob. To this son is attracted, probably because of their stations in life, the daughter of a millionaire. But one day when she watches George standing smiling on the end of an iron beam, being drawn up twenty stories, with nothing below him but the hard street pavement, she takes an interest in him.

Soon George and the rich man's son are called in the draft. She judges the worth of the two in their soldier's uniforms, and despite George's comparative poverty she comes to believe he is the better man.

Then the soldiers go to Europe, and she follows as a Red Cross nurse. George, genial, smiling, continues to improve in her estimation, while the rich man's son, still a snob and disliked by his fellow soldiers, fades from her esteem. When George, battling for all he is worth, fearing nothing in his fight to uphold the honor of his country, saves this girl from death at the hands of the Germans, she places her hand and her heart in George's keeping.

When the rich man's son sees that his idleness and his snobbish ways have caused him to lose this girl, whose real worth he had never appreciated, his whole disposition changes. He patterns his acts and his conduct after George's and becomes a credit to himself, to his family and to his country.

AN INTERNATIONAL SNEAK (Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: A Foreign Spy (Chester Conklin); The Juvenile (Billy Armstrong); A Female Detective (Ethel Teare); The Juvenile's Sweetheart (Lillian Biron); Her Father, the Powder King (Earle C. Kenton).

It is Conklin's job to get the formula for a high explosive which the Powder King is using. If he can't get it, he is to blow up the entire munition plant. Ethel learns all this when she goes through Conklin's grip. Her job is to "get the goods" on Conklin. Ethel is such a beautiful girl that Conklin tells her everything and even tips her off to a meeting of International Sneaks of his own calibre and Ethel, in order to get the goods on them, puts on boys' clothes.

Comes then a series of mixups in the middle of which Conklin saves the Powder King's daughter from drowning and becomes a hero. The affair got Conklin the inside track to the powder mill and the coveted formula, but it also made a strong enemy of Billy, Lillian's sweetheart. It's an open question whether Conklin or Billy was the biggest bonehead. Between them they distanced all competitors for the ivory championship, it culminating in the mutual possession of a bomb with a lighted fuse. The things they did to get rid of that sizzling bomb, and the unique manner in which said bomb refused to be shunted to a place of safety are one of the laugh climaxes of the picture. There is a whirlwind finish that would spoil in the telling, but this does not come until after a sequence of the most surprising and stirring adventures imaginable.

MOLLY ENTANGLED (Five Parts—Nov. 19).—The cast: Molly Shawn (Vivian Martin); Barney Malone (Harrison Ford); Shawn (Noah Beery); Jim Barry (G. S. Spaulding); Mrs. Barry (Helen Dunbar); O'Mara (C. H. Gowland); Mrs. O'Mara (Jane Keckley); Leary (W. A. Carroll). Directed by Robert Thornby.

Molly Shawn lives with her old grandmother and her father, the big smithy. We see little Molly bustling around the thatch-roofed cottage preparing a toothsome apple turnover for big Barney Malone, her sweetheart. While this work was going on in the cottage two carriages of nearby gentry, one the Barry's, the other the O'Mara's, drove up to the door of the blacksmith's shop. There was a bitter feud between the two families, who were distant cousins. This was heightened by the fact that the vast Barry lands would fall to the O'Maras if Jim did not marry. At Jim Barry's present furious pace, this seems unlikely.

That night at a party at the Barry house Jim, in a drunken stupor, falls down the steep cellar stairs, seriously injuring himself so that the doctor declares he will not live the night out. The mother fears, as much as his death, the fact that the lands will go to the hated O'Maras, and suggests his marrying someone—anyone—to save the house. Little Molly Shawn is Jim's choice, and she is summoned. A midnight wedding takes place. Molly had done the thing only at the urgent request of her father, who thought it a fine chance to repay the debt of gratitude to the Barrys, who had granted the rights of his little house to him. A second doctor, summoned from the city, orders Jim removed to a city hospital, whence he promises Jim will emerge in a week as good as new. Molly is bewildered and frightened.

On Jim's return she finds it increasingly hard to forget Barney and refuses to recognize Jim as her husband. Jim has not lost any of his bad habits, and one night at the tavern engages in a fight with young O'Mara and it is only thanks to Barney, who happens to be near and who thinks he is saving him for Molly, that he gets away with his life. One day Molly, who is still at the Barry home, is overpowered by the longing to see all her people again, slips away and creeps back to the tree in front of her father's smithy.

There she finds no one but Barney. While they are talking, Jim appears. He tells Barney and Molly, what he has just discovered, that he and Molly have never been really married. The priest who performed the ceremony and who said he was from a neighboring parish, was in reality a criminal who, in order to escape justice, had arrayed himself in the first clothes he had happened to find—which had been those of a priest. He had not dared refuse to perform the ceremony for fear of discovery. Barney and Molly are overwhelmed at their new-found happiness and it is Jim himself who orders the fiddler and hustlers around making preparations for a big celebration of their betrothal.

TOM SAWYER (Five Parts—Dec. 10).—Tom Sawyer is a mischievous boy. He is seen with Aunt Polly and his cousins, Sid and Mary, living in such harmony as was possible for any boy with Tom's volatile spirit. He meets a goody-goody boy of the town and the sight of his neatly brushed hair and starched white collar so affects Tom that he challenges him to battle. They roll about in the roadway, and the fight ends when Tom has made the goody-goody boy yell "nuff!"

Tom hates to go to church. He also rebels ineffectually against the practice of his Cousin Mary of washing his neck and ears on Sundays, and adorning him with a hated white collar and flowing tie. In order to win a Bible, which was to be presented to the boy holding the greatest number of tickets given to Sabbath pupils for memorizing Bible verses, Tom trades his marbles, tops, kites, etc., for tickets and wins the Bible. When the superintendent presents the Bible and calls upon Tom to repeat some of the verses he is presumed to have memorized, Tom gets into deep water. But Tom grows fat on difficulties, and he never loses his nerve. At school he is quite willing to take his punishment for infractions of the rules, because this consists in being obliged to sit with the girls. He sits next to Becky Thatcher and puts in his time writing the magic message on her slate, "I love you."

Tom and Becky get along famously until Tom admits that he has had a previous love affair. A quarrel results, and Tom gets a whipping at home. He determines to run away and become a pirate. With Joe Harper and Huck Finn, Tom fixes up a raft and sails away on the Mississippi River. They land on an island and establish pirate headquarters.

Meanwhile, the parents of the missing youths institute a search for them, and, believing that they were drowned, they cause guns to be fired on the river in the hope that the concussion may bring the bodies to the surface. Stricken with remorse, Tom swims away from the island at night, writes a note on a piece of bark announcing that neither he nor his companions were dead ones, and finally reaches Aunt Polly's house, only to find her in consultation with Mrs. Harper relative to the funeral of the missing lads on the following Sunday.

The humor of the situation appeals to Tom, and instead of leaving the note, he steals away, returns to the island, and urges upon his companions the necessity of attending their own funerals on the following Sabbath. When the church bells begin to toll, they start back home and creep into church just as the minister sobbingly dwells upon the delightful qualities of the deceased lads. Of course, the appearance of the trio causes a sensation, and in the excitement Aunt Polly quite forgets to lick Tom in punishment of his escapade. Becky Thatcher's tears vanish and she stands proudly beside Tom in the pew as they sing the Doxology.

The Standard Light Exhibition Projector

VICTOR ANIMATOGRAPH

Exclusively Equipped with Mazda Lamps

Intended and Guaranteed for Traveling Exhibitions
 Small Theatres
 School Auditoriums
 Church Auditoriums
 Lodge Halls
 Road Shows
 Private Exhibitions, or

For any showing of standard film for any purpose not requiring an image of more than twelve feet in width, and a throw of more than 100 feet.

THE PIONEER MAZDA LAMP PROJECTOR

In the Animatograph incandescent lamps give more light on the screen than in any other existing projector. The patented optical system, improved intermittent, and shutter, designed for use with Mazda lamps, save a large percentage of the light wasted in all other machines.

Motion Pictures Whenever and Wherever You Want Them

The Model 2 Victor Animatograph is a standard film projector, with standard slide attachment. Lamps and lenses are interchangeable, to conform to requirements of size of picture and distance of throw.

For quality of image—steadiness, lack of flicker, illumination—no machine of any size or type, is superior to the Animatograph. This is guaranteed.

To Operators Private exhibitions are becoming popular everywhere. There's good money in running them. It is a one-man job to carry, set up and run the Animatograph. Lamp socket attachment saves time and wiring trouble. Write for other information.

Note Eighteen months ago we announced to the trade that incandescent lamps were soon to be practical for motion picture projection. Much ridicule was heaped upon us. Now we tell you that a 40-pound machine equals the image quality of the best heavy machines. We will prove this, too, if you are interested.

Wagner Converter in Projection Booth of Wisconsin Theater

You Theater Owners and Managers; Do You Realize You Are Retail Dealers?

You have a theater—that's your retail store. Your business is to sell pictures. Like any other retail store, you make it attractive, well lighted inside and out.

Suppose you built and equipped a beautiful store, and then employed impudent, careless, shabby salesmen? How long would you keep your patrons?

You sell pictures, stories, acting. Your equipment is the salesman that places them before your patrons. Your operator is only your director, for without proper equipment he is handicapped.

Putting all the light on the screen, clear, WHITE LIGHT, steady and ever dependable, is the duty of the Wagner Converter—economical in current, reasonable in price; it is the silent salesman that will fill the vacant seats.

There are facts and details in Bulletin 10923 and booklet "Ghosts."

Exhibitors

What are YOU doing now?
What have YOU done in the past?

To Support a National Fraternity of Motion Picture Exhibitors?

For about eight years,

Exhibitors of this country
As a very general thing Have Not
Given their whole-hearted support
To any National Organization of Exhibitors

National Organizations lived from funds raised by a few officials,

By giving Balls, Expositions, Trade Shows, and through a Trade Paper and on propositions where mostly the film manufacturing interests gave freely to these affairs.

Now mostly

You GET what you PAY FOR,

As you individually did mostly nothing,
Therefore you individually receive mostly nothing,
And furthermore, what could you expect under the circumstances?

Yes - -

All Motion Picture Organizations should work for the best interests of the entire Industry. Agreed

But - -

Sometimes—yes, oft times—questions arise whereby there must be decided

What shall be rendered to the Exhibitor?

What shall be rendered to the Film Producer?

At such a time

A National body of Exhibitors

Must be free from entangling alliances.

If a National Body officially
Owns a Trade Paper

That lives by the advertising of Film Producers

Can that Body protect the interest of the Exhibitor, first, last and always or—

Give the Exhibitor the benefit of the doubt?

A Fraternity that lives entirely by the aid of its membership can protect. To have such a Fraternity

A few weeks ago the

American Exhibitors' Association
was organized.

This new Body of Exhibitors

Have no entangling alliances

No one man controls our destiny

No Official receives a cent of salary

We allow only Motion Picture Theatre Owners or Accredited Managers to become members.

Every Exhibitor is welcome and requested to join.

Every Local Body is invited to affiliate.

The moment you join you at once become a power for your own good.

This Organization will do big things for you and the Industry.

When the majority of Exhibitors are enrolled in our membership.

The reason of past failure

Was because so few took any interest in National affairs.

An organized few are doing much for themselves

While an organized majority struggle blindly

A large Organization of Exhibitors will do the right thing
Because it is large.

Now is the time to join the AMERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION. WE ARE ARRANGING TO KEEP A REPRESENTATIVE IN WASHINGTON ON THE TAX QUESTION. That is why you should HURRY.

We want you to join now because we want to know
what you want

So as to give you just what you want.

FILL THIS OUT AND SEND TO

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook

for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS A FEW REASONS

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.

3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

The PRICE of a GOOD TIME

WITH wealthy young Winfield's hand on hers and his wonderful offer of six Arabian Nights in her eager ears, is it any wonder that little shopgirl Linnie takes no thought of the price she may have to pay?

Together, Mildred Harris and Lois Weber—the Belasco of the Screen—have created the most absorbing, heart-clutching, universal-interest drama of many years. Reserve dates for “The Price of a Good Time” for at least twice an ordinary run. And do it now. Tomorrow may be too late. First come—first served.

A sure box-office value

—Exhibitors' Trade Review

AT the Rialto the beautiful Lina Cavalieri proves her fitness for the screen.

—New York Times.

The whole cast is more than adequate.

—New York Tribune.

Demonstrated her fitness for such a title role.

—New York Herald.

HUNDREDS of exhibitors have been waiting for these pictures. They have brought forth literally thousands of requests for booking dates.

"The Lincoln Cycle" crowded the Strand Theatre and played at the Globe Theatre, New York, for 245 performances. They have never been shown anywhere since—pending distributing arrangements with Paramount Pictures Corporation.

It is now combined with the new Lincoln Pictures, to make a series, which, for drawing power, entertainment and prestige-building force, has never been equaled.

A Tremendous Business Stimulator

10 Chapters of 2 Reels each, released January 21st

This "make-'em-laugh, make-'em-cry drama" will be second only to the great national advertising campaign in developing new friends for Paramount and Arcraft Pictures.

New Ideas get new Patrons.

Paramount considers it necessary to do more than distribute the best pictures. Big new ideas for promoting new and permanent friends and patrons for the pictures are quite as necessary.

Special Advertising Campaign to the public.

An unsurpassed advertising and promotion campaign devoted exclusively to "A Son of Democracy" will also be inaugurated to tell the people about the wonderful pictures you are going to show.

Chapin's Showmanship.

Benjamin Chapin's superb characterizations and fine ideas of showmanship and experience in exhibiting these pictures at big prices have resulted in these tremendous attractions. Prints will be in all Paramount Exchanges by January 1st. See the chapter for each week—twenty reels—but the treat of a life time.

You will become immediately enthusiastic on the possibilities of this epoch making series.

REX BEACH PICTURES

"The Auction Block" A Huge Hit

ATTEENDANCE records for the entire year 1917 have been broken throughout North America by Rex Beach's greatest story, "The Auction Block." This sensational success proves the Goldwyn statement that "good pictures cure bad times in the theatres." Read these reports of exhibitors and powerful daily newspapers:

NORTH

Boston Post: "The Auction Block is the biggest attraction of the year. Long lines waited in the cold for admission. Throngs turned away." Boston Traveler: "An endless line at the box office." Boston Herald: "It made hundreds wait on the street to gain admission." Boston Transcript: "Vividly remarkable."

EAST

Joseph Grossman, Standard Theatre, Cleveland: "Broke all records for the year." Cleveland Leader: "A tremendous picture that has packed the Standard." Cleveland Press: "One of the few pictures worthy of particular recommendation." Edward A. Zorn, Temple Theatre, Toledo: "Drawing bigger crowds than any of Rex Beach's other great pictures."

WEST

Chicago Examiner: "The Auction Block is the 'honey' that will draw the people in swarms to box offices." Chicago Post: "It thrills one even more when seen a second time than it does the first time." Aaron J. Jones, Chicago: "It is a tremendous hit." Chicago American: "The Auction Block has the heaviest booking ever recorded in the Chicago territory."

SOUTH

Atlanta American: "Tremendous in its appeal, The Auction Block instantly drew the crowds. It is what motion picture showmen call 'a clean-up picture.'"

There can be no "holiday slump" or depression if you play "The Auction Block" and other powerful Goldwyn productions.

Mae Marsh's Triumph in "The Cinderella Man"

RELEASED today throughout North America, Goldwyn's production starring Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter, has the advance approval of the powerful trade journals and more than two-score important exhibitors who predict that it will make more money for theatre-owners than any Goldwyn production thus far released. The following reviews of the greatest Mae Marsh picture ever made will interest all exhibitors.

M.P. WORLD

Louis Reeves Harrison: Goldwyn presents a sympathetic adaptation of Edward Childs Carpenter's story, "The Cinderella Man." . . . Mae Marsh again shows her half-compassionate, half-whimsical talent. This production makes a charming Christmas story and will prove an attractive addition to any program the year round.

VARIETY

Jolo: "The Cinderella Man," Goldwyn's eighth release, marks a mile-stone in the advance of this company. Mae Marsh is as elusively charming as always. George Loane Tucker, the director, has far out-distanced any work he ever did in England. One of the smartest pictures of the year that ought to bring the money.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

Frances Agnew: "The Cinderella Man" is a credit to the delightful charm of Mae Marsh, the genius of George Loane Tucker and his technical staff, and the abilities of an all-star supporting cast. This picture will get the money.

M.P. NEWS

Peter Milne: If the name of Goldwyn had not been popular zed long before this, "The Cinderella Man" would turn the trick with ease. It is the most delightful film drama that the writer has had the good fortune to see.

DRAMATIC MIRROR

D. A. Balch: Exhibitors will find "The Cinderella Man" a safe booking proposition because of its "legitimate" source and the firm excellence of its production. . . . One wonders how it could possibly be better.

The Reason Why

exhibitors are rushing to book "For The Freedom of The World" and the reason why it plays to capacity business, breaking all box-office records everywhere for the year 1917, is that

FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD

by Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser contains in vivid and overwhelming dramatic sequence the great human element that exerts the never failing appeal

To the conscience of all humanity.

To the love for bravery and heroism.

To the mothers who give their sons to the nation.

To the patriotic men and boys eager to tread the Path to Glory.

To the girls who would go through the fires of Hell to reach the men they love.

To the world's millions who love the lands they live in.

Every exhibitor desiring to book at once a production that will banish all depression and wipe out the effects of the war tax can obtain "For The Freedom of The World" exclusively through the offices of

ONE REASON alone justifies this unprecedented Twelve Page Advertisement on Lois Weber's Jewel wonder-play, "The Price of a Good Time," featuring Mildred Harris and Kenneth Harlan. That reason is its MONEY-EARNING POWER FOR ALL EXHIBITORS.

SENSIBLE BUSINESS MEN are not publishing the biggest, most costly advertisement ever issued in this magazine on a single play, unless that play is an unquestionable money-getter—a long-run production—a cost-cutting, self-advertising repeater.

A trifling matter of a thousand dollars for an hour's pleasure. Mrs. Winfield, social climber, gives an engagement luncheon in honor of aristocratic Miss Schuyler, fiancée of Preston Winfield. And "old man" Winfield's great chain of Department Stores pays the bill.

Linnie—saleswoman in Winfield's, with a paralytic for a father—a soap-box Socialist for a brother, a sordid home of poverty and unhappiness. Oh—for just a little of the pleasure and pretty clothes that other girls had!

"The Price of a Good Time"

The Perfect Photoplay

Book, for once, a photoplay that more than fulfills every possible requirement of yourself and your patrons—from the box-office angle down to the last costly refinement of setting and atmosphere, screened by a Pastmaster of photodramatic detail, Lois Weber—universally acknowledged, the Belasco of the Screen

Book the biggest Story ever screened—the Great Temptation known to every working woman, every woman of leisure, every woman you know, whatever her age or situation in life.

Book the most sympathetically conceived, the most artistically staged photodrama obtainable at any price from any source today.

Book a sure, profitable, repeating, self-advertising, heart-throbbing drama—whose moving story told and retold by everyone who sees it will bring in hundreds of new patrons at only a fraction of your original advertising cost.

Book on Unbiased Opinion

AT the same time that "The Price of A Good Time" was creating a furor with its first performance on the Pacific Coast, a Critic in the East went on record with a straight-from-the-shoulder appreciation of this Jewel wonder-play. Said he:

"WE have only a few directors who are capable of doing big things in a big way. One of these is Lois Weber. Seldom have I seen a subject more deftly handled in registering a delicate subject with telling pathos and forceful power without at any time overreaching in the dramatic moments and without ever losing sight of the fact that after all a picture should first be artistic."

Again he said:

"PROPERLY handled as to exploitation (Exhibitor's advertising) "The Price of a Good Time" should be a very successful production. It has the box-office value of propaganda appeal with the ability to make good as an entertainment and the prestige of Lois Weber as the producer back of it all."

What Peter Milne said in The Motion Picture News

"A HUMAN story, well told and strong, preying heavily on the sympathies and entertaining from the very first. It should certainly prove a complete box-office success."

"Mildred Harris gives a wonderfully appealing characterization. Her rise to prominence during the past year has been most meteoric and certainly her performance in this picture is her crowning achievement, sufficient alone to raise her to the ranks of stardom."

Lois Weber —the Belasco of the Screen

KNOWN to every Exhibitor in the country as the producer of those artistic, money-making triumphs of past years "Shoes"—"Where are My Children?"—"Hypocrites"—Lois Weber has created in "The Price of a Good Time," adapted from "The Whim" by Marion Orth, a still greater drama.

WORDS only baffle attempts to describe the magic of the Lois Weber touch in "The Price of A Good Time." Youth's thoughtlessness—Love, Joy, Sorrow, Tragedy—to the sensitive portrayal of these by Miss Mildred Harris, Lois Weber's addition is a marvelous enrichment.

In every moment of this masterpiece Lois Weber is the truest of the few, rare artist-directors of the Screen, for her perfect sympathy has endowed this mighty, throbbing drama with the priceless gift of universal appeal.

Go Your Advertising Limit on "The Price of a Good Time"

HERE is a drama of such amazing power, such tremendous heart-interest that you will be doing yourself a rank injustice unless you avail yourself of every publicity help offered, and make "The Price of A Good Time" your biggest profit play of the year.

Advertise this Jewel wonder-play to your last limit. Don't play "table stakes" with "The Price of A Good Time"—the story is too big. And realize this—everything about "The Price of A Good Time" will be working for you—its wonderful Title—its Producer's Name—the lure of its Theme, and its amazing Power as a "Repeater." All that is necessary is ordinary business co-operation in order to get full value out of a money-getting combination but seldom encountered in a photoplay.

Make Use of Every One of These Big Publicity Helps

DON'T fail to get from Jewel Productions, Inc. all the following powerful publicity assistance. It tells and pictures the tremendous story of "The Price of a Good Time" so that none can overlook it, none forget it.

READY-MADE ADS.

Admit This Fact

ON your women patrons alone rests your failure or success. And women want plays about a woman. Preferably, a woman they know. A woman whose great temptation they can fully understand. Most important of all, a woman of good instincts, holding their sympathy right through to the end.

This woman whom every other woman knows, is little shopgirl Linnie, in "The Price of a Good Time."

First Come—First Served

LET nothing interfere with prompt action on "The Price of a Good Time." No matter where you are, your success with this great drama of pathos and power is just as certain as tomorrow's sunrise. Let nothing take this profit away from you. Act today. First come, first served. Get ready for a long run—a biggest profit run—a wonderful repeat. It will be a positive shame if you don't book this picture to run at least twice as long as you ever ran a picture before. Reserve your dates on "The Price of a Good Time" NOW!

THERE will be no delays in carrying out the policy recently announced by the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company. Twelve five-reel comedy dramas under the trademark of the SHORTY HAMILTON series will be issued with a release of one on the first day of each month beginning January 1st, 1918. Two of the series are now ready for negotiation. The State Rights buyers have been previously advised regarding the first—"Denny from Ireland"—and we would now call attention to the second release—"The Snail"—a Chinese-American blooded heroics and mirth-provoking op which are taken full advan "SHORTY" HAMILTON, the comedian, whose legitimate meth tracting laughs has established him as a prime favorite with the movie fans, and a box office magnet in the minds of the exhibitors. "The Snail" is a big story of absorbing ineffervescing with portunities, all of tage of by natural od of ex-

terest and has been selected by the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company for its intense dramatic value, comedy situations and opportunity for its effective and beautiful locations. Opening in the land of the poppy—Oriental scenes, character and atmosphere are most attractively introduced and followed by a further unfolding of the story amidst the wild and mountainous region of our own land of the setting sun.

THE "SHORTY HAMILTON" series are now offered to the State Rights Buyers under a franchise or upon a co-operative basis, and with a guaranteed timely release—should prove most attractive to the exhibitors permitting in consequence their ability of announcing a definite program of a Quality feature, with a real star.

ADMINISTRATION OFFICES are located at— No. 17 West Forty-fourth Street, with ERNEST SHIPMAN as sales manager for all domestic and foreign rights.

The Handwriting on the Wall

You have recently read statements about the many changes that are about to take place in the motion picture industry. Complaints are made of over-production, extravagance and waste, unreasonable salaries paid stars, duplication of exchanges, etc.

There is no doubt but that conditions in this business will change. Any business which has grown to the size of the motion picture business in such a short time is bound to have developed extravagances that need elimination. It is exactly such conditions as those existing at present which prompt men in the industry to stop and reflect. It is from such conditions that changes come and methods adopted which establish a business on a more stable basis.

Triangle will not make any prophesies at present concerning the future of the motion picture business. We realize that there is and always will be a demand from the public for this type of entertainment. Our policy is simply that of developing better pictures and of so systematizing the business that high grade motion pictures can be sold to exhibitors at a price that will show them a profit.

We believe we have already done some things towards systematizing, economizing and eliminating waste in the distribution of motion pictures—but we also appreciate that there is much more to be done. We intend to keep working until a lot more is accomplished.

The Triangle Studios at Culver City are being operated under plans which have proven successful in the largest industries in the country. A maximum of return is procured from every dollar invested in equipment. System, efficiency and economy are rigidly enforced in every department of the studios.

This increase in efficiency and elimination in waste means better pictures at smaller costs. The money thus saved means lower prices to exhibitors. Taking into consideration the unequalled quality of Triangle pictures, there are none on the market today selling at more reasonable prices.

We are advising exhibitors to book the Hart and Fairbanks reissues. Reports prove that these pictures are drawing even larger crowds than when first issued. This is due to the fact that no better pictures have been made. Remember, these are the pictures that made Hart and Fairbanks so universally popular. The large number of bookings we have made, and the constant stream of testimonials to our exchanges, indicate that every exhibitor should book the Hart and Fairbanks reissues.

We repeat that we want to make a regular business of the distribution of moving pictures. We are using our time, money and best efforts in endeavoring to give exhibitors better service. We are trying to play the game perfectly fair and square. This is evidenced by the fact that we do not transfer to exhibitors the war tax levied by the government on film manufacturers.

So watch Triangle. Watch Triangle pictures and Triangle service. If we can be of service, write the Triangle exchange nearest you.

There Is Urgent Need For the Services I Offer

To Independent Producers

I will procure in the United States and Canada the maximum worth of your productions within a reasonable time.

To State Right Buyers

I will offer only those attractions that are of positive box office merit and at prices that will insure you at least a reasonable profit.

To Both Independent Producer and State Right Buyer

I offer a sale and exploitation policy that will build a permanency of business relations and permit of your continuing because both will be doing business on a reasonable return and no inflation of values and no "bunk."

My dear Mr. Goldberg:-

I read your announcement in the trade papers which contained your generous acknowledgment that your new organization is patented after the ideas which I had in mind, when I proposed The Producers' Protective Association.

I want to say in answer to your announcement that I certainly believe you can, and will succeed. I am firmly convinced that the motion picture industry, or so much of it as is engaged in the manufacturing of independent productions requires a sales and exploitation agency as you have formed and I know of no man throughout my broad acquaintanceship who is better qualified or fit by reason of his knowledge, practical or technical of motion picture productions, sales and exploitation, to head such an institution, as you.

In your connection with my company I want to reduce to writing, what I have stated openly, that you have given me more than 100% of services. You may rest assured of my hearty cooperation, and I believe other independent producers will join with you.

Very truly yours,

Quality Insurance

The announcement last week of my arrangements for using the shipping and other exchange facilities of the General Film Company on PARALTA PLAYS and other product which I shall distribute answers the immediate questions of the trade.

It also now allows me to express my real message to the industry.

This message is that I expect to tie together responsible elements within the business to promote and insure quality as the basic principle of our progress and our profit.

The means for tying these elements together I do not find in the industry at present.

Analysing the whole situation, I have therefore picked upon the neglected spot in the industry as the means for uniting all responsible elements now existing, and as the critical point upon which to bring my new leverage to bear. I have obtained the rights to what has been called which is an improved medium for photographing and projecting motion pictures, a medium which is to the motion pictures of today what the modern disc phonograph is to the old wax cylinder, what the broad gauge railroad is to the narrow gauge line, what the motor truck is to the one-horse express wagon.

A four-page supplement describing the process in detail will be issued with the Moving Picture World of next week, January 5, 1918 (published December 26).

In this new process, and in its absolute control by my organization, you will see not only a bigger and better product on the screen, something which will lift motion pictures to a higher plane of public entertainment than it has ever reached or ever could reach in its present form, but you will also see in it—a means by which the wheat of quality pictures can be sifted from the chaff of mediocre pictures. This leverage will let us go to the public with an assurance of QUALITY WHICH THE PUBLIC WILL RECOGNIZE. This is the all-important thing at this time.

A Guarantee and Control of Quality,

The Motion Picture PLUS will therefore be the first true stabilizer of quality production, for upon the screen itself, every moment the picture is shown, the audience will recognize our process, and that process must and will be confined to the highest type of pictures made, with all the quality elements now recognized.

It is for this reason, more than any other, that I am tying my forces to the Motion Picture PLUS as THE ONE MEANS BY WHICH QUALITY CAN AGAIN BE STAMPED UPON A PRODUCT, for only by going to the public with the leverage of unmistakable quality, can we turn this business back into substantial, sane, profitable business channels.

While American manhood takes up the challenge of the Kaiser's armed forces on the seas and on the fields of Europe, the very sources of its support in this country are menaced by furtive, non-uniformed armies whose weapons are spying, sabotage, bomb-planting, incendiarism, murder and a hundred forms of insidious and demoralizing propaganda.

WHO PAY

Even the Critics Advise You to Book It

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW:

"THOSE WHO PAY" is a worth-while feature from every viewpoint. It should be a money-maker and a picture that will cause all who see it to speak well of your theatre.

DRAMATIC MIRROR:

Exhibitors who book "THOSE WHO PAY" will be "wise in their generation," for the picture is in all ways a winner.

CHARLOTTE

Queen of Ice and Romance

The best picture shown in some time, and one of the best dramas ever screened is that, as yet untitled, in which Charlotte, famous ice artiste, was starred by Commonwealth Pictures Co. at trade showing last week. Charlotte pervades the atmosphere with personality, acts superbly, and is beautiful in face and figure. Her cast was selected with a keen eye to beauty, vivacity and ability, but even these many attributes are dwarfed by the unusual art of the star. Without fear of contradiction it is safe to predict that this picture will be among the foremost money-makers of the screen, and if you are wise, Mr. Exhibitor, you will be the first to get it for your town.

It's a picture every man will go to see more than once. Charlotte is one of the best screen actresses of the day.

Facts and Comments

THE Season's Best Wishes to every reader. May the old year close with no regrets. Another page carries our Christmas Greeting to friends and readers everywhere.

EXHIBITORS in all parts of the country are becoming aware of the possibilities for co-operation in their business with the Government. When a six hundred seat theater can tell its patrons that its check to the Government for the war tax for the month of November alone was over four hundred dollars, when the Government check for the tax from one of our big Broadway houses will be close to the ten thousand mark for the same month, any one can be made to see how much the tax collected through the industry is going to mean to the United States. Tell your patrons all you can about this and thereby secure their co-operation. It can and should be done.

GRANTED that the solution of all picture problems now confronting the trade lies in lessened production and fewer exchanges, who will volunteer to commence cutting on the production end and which manufacturer is optimistic enough to feel sure that a co-operative exchange will push his particular products as energetically as would his own individual exchange sales force?

APROPOS the so-called contemplated boycott of the Brooklyn exhibitors and the resultant legal action of the distributors. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways. If the distributors have taken steps to protect themselves against fellow members of a trade organization, did not some of those same members first conspire together against their fellow members in the same organization? What is the meaning of co-operation, getting together, mutual benefit, better understanding, etc., etc.? In the minds of some, these phrases, it seems, literally mean the old David Harum axiom, "Do the other fellow and do him first."

COMMENCING with this issue we inaugurate the publication of a new help to the busy exhibitor; a compact but comprehensive campaign scheme given in such a form that, if desired, the material may be filed upon the common catalogue cards, by turning the excess over to the back. Efforts will be made to suggest stunts not too expensive to be employed by the smaller houses, which is something that does not always seem to be taken into consideration in the press books. We hope to improve this department until it becomes the most valuable feature of a paper filled with invaluable aids. We are indebted for the general idea to the very excellent series books written by Philip Wright Whitcomb of the London office of the Triangle, and to him we make grateful acknowledgement.

MADE in the U. S. A. but export controlled from London or Barcelona. Sounds ridiculous and is just as ridiculous as it sounds, yet we find an exporter in London adding his "bit" to the begging of the whole question and avoiding the real issues in a late copy of a British trade paper. Judging from this writer, it would be better to encourage the renters and exporters of Barcelona than to permit the American manufacturers to control the export rights of their own productions. Does the London exporter uphold the contemptible duping methods of the last few years that have robbed the rightful owners of films, both British and American, of their legitimate profit and of which both London and Barcelona know more than they should?

THE resolutions passed at Washington by the gathering of exhibitors a few days ago should meet with the keen approval and the active support of the whole industry. Surely the Government needs every ounce of encouragement, every grain of moral backing and support that every citizen can muster. There is altogether too much carping criticism rampant, much of it emanating from those who should know better. Let this industry crystallize the sentiments of these resolutions into deeds and actions of genuine support for the Government of the United States. We refer exhibitors to page 1977 as an evidence of practical results from the meeting at Washington.

New Year's Forecast ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ ☞ By Louis Reeves Harrison

ONE thing is reasonably certain—it is going to be harder for a newcomer to achieve success in any department of motion picture production, distribution or exhibition than ever before. There is something new every year, because we are progressive in nearly all we do. We choose the best and preserve it, while we let what is inferior perish. There is natural selection going on in this new art, just as there is in Nature. The men who win out during 1918 will do so through foresight, experience and intelligent direction of their efforts.

There are some very serious faults to correct in distribution and exhibition, but in production, on which all else depends, we may look for the most decided changes. A very large number of producers who felt they could look forward to a future of continued success have failed and fallen down because they were indifferent to the demands of increasing audience intelligence. Just as they differed immensely in their ideas of what they should produce, so there will be a variation in present ideas of what the future may bring forth. Just as in the past, energy and capital will be wasted on vain effort.

When a man fails during 1918 he will ascribe it to the war, or to hard times, and no one will deny him the privilege of consoling himself in that way, but the real reason will be that he thinks he has nothing to learn, whereas the truth is that he has reached the limits of his intelligence. To have put out a product in response to a pressing demand has led many a producer to feel competent to respond to all future demands—he sits tight on the unshakable conviction that the mass of humankind is quite as stupid and non-progressive as himself.

There are ebbs and flows in motion picture production which involve incalculable waste. On one side we may have a flood of studio building and "star" gazing carried to ruinous extremes, on the other a reaction toward economy which destroys useful artistic elements along with useless overhead charges. Thus the cost of real progress becomes enormous through a perpetual strife between parties of extreme views. The follies of extravagance and parsimony do not balance each other—they are equal only in destructive effects on the entire business.

It is a peculiarity of motion picture production that it requires first a study of the whole subject from a broad viewpoint before men become occupied with the problems of detail to be solved in turn by themselves. Before the play, the direction and the interpretation are given attention, the question arises of suiting them all to popular demand. There is to be gravely considered at the outset the supplying of what the average judgment of an audience will cordially indorse as soon as presented.

Outside of the "get-rich-quick" idea, no thought, no plan, no purpose, has entered the production of motion pictures in many cases. Having some capital to invest is about as good an excuse as going to church Sunday furnishes for people to commit all manner of wrong six other days in the week. When it is not grasped that moving pictures represent a language, a means of communication, the industry of making them not only becomes a waste of money but gives rise to consequences of a disadvantageous character, neutralizing many of the benefits which might otherwise be secured. Part of their destiny, as will be seen before the new year expires, is that equalizing intelligence, which means the elevation, not the degradation, of our people.

It would be foolish not to expect that men will labor as hard as ever, and scheme as cleverly, to get possession of property other men have created—avarice is a part of human nature—but an end is coming, if it has not already come, to fraudulent pretense of bubble companies, to cooking accounts and financial prospectuses for the sake of stock jobbing deals. Wall Street has had its full of that sort of thing, and one result has been that new companies will find it exceedingly difficult to enlist the confidence of investing capitalists.

The future objective will be that of marketing a product of genuine merit and on its merits, and this means greater consideration for branches of artistry heretofore neglected or but little encouraged. It has been discovered that commercial methods alone are not successful, that individual effort in the departments of artistry is essential. The reason why people love moving pictures is beginning to be understood. The novelty long worn off, people go to the picture show to increase their enjoyment of life and to widen, though unconsciously, their knowledge.

Fine screen stories address a sympathetic sense of justice. We contemplate in others what we ourselves feel. We love the victory over cruelty and deception, the righting of wrongs, the human struggle for increased happiness, particularly when it is adequately rewarded. There is not the slightest doubt that those who feel the sting and humiliation of poverty revel in screen stories illustrating the principle of right when opposed to the cunning and cruelty of might. The temper of our people and their development under trying conditions will be more carefully studied in the future before an attempt is made to provide them material calculated to excite their interest.

Of the fine arts which appeal to the eye, sculpture, painting, architecture and landscape-gardening are expressions of the motionless, and there is limit of movement in the stage play, but there is a boundless variety of it in the New Art, with a possibility of calling forth the truest aesthetic sentiments of the still arts in a harmonious union of them all. Even a true reflection of Nature can be combined with all the visual arts in moving pictures and present the dramatic story as well, a blend of them all to excite pleasure of the purest and most exalted kind. It is just dawning on the best producers that so much can be woven into the general motion picture fabric.

We may reasonably expect leading producers, during the coming year, to give intelligent recognition to those story creators and art directors who are capable of seeing deep into the structure and treatment of the drama and its portraiture. We may reasonably expect that scientific departments will give us some wonderful appliances for supplementing the purely aesthetic elements. There will be some exact representations of startling clarity for educational purposes and some others of vague suggestiveness and dreamy beauty for flights of the imagination.

It is not at all impossible that we shall achieve a finer harmony than ever between the pictured story and that which stirs our sense with sound. The cultivation of music at picture shows has been the most startling development of 1917 presentation. More people are hearing fine examples of musical composition in this way than at all other forms of entertainment put together. Grand organ and grand orchestra have made fine music popular and are giving classic symphonies for common people. We are really just starting in to show what we can do.

American Troops Overseas Need Pictures—Now

TWO appeals have come to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in the course of the last week. They are eloquent appeals. They plead for motion pictures for the entertainment of soldiers—American soldiers, thousands of miles from home and kin; American soldiers, who by the time any shipments of film can reach them will be seeking relaxation from the shock of conflict, for a wholesome change from the condition of tense concentration such as can exist only in trench warfare, in night patrol work, in “going over the top” in the chill of the dawn, in hand-to-hand battle where the dominating motive must be “kill or be killed.”

One of these appeals is contained in the unusually interesting story from the pen of C. L. Grant, the Albany correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, printed in this issue. Mr. Grant has just returned from a journey along the battlefield in France, where as a member of the New York State special election commission he aided in the collection of the votes of soldiers and sailors from the Empire State. The other appeal is from a chaplain in the United States service in France; owing to the prohibitions of the national military authorities against revealing the identity of regular units or of the men composing them his name cannot be printed.

Both of these communications agree in whole and in part that motion pictures are vital for the entertainment of American soldiers, that the number of prints available for showing to the troops are far below the barest necessities. “The work is just beginning, and the need increases every day,” says the chaplain. “Moving pictures are doing more to keep our men in camp and out of temptation than any other thing.”

“Motion pictures are the best thing to maintain the morale of the camp that I know of,” an American officer tells Mr. Grant. “My observations justify the statement that they are second only to a letter from home,” says the correspondent at the end of his article. “No greater compliment can possibly be paid to moving pictures than that.”

Mr. Grant writes from the viewpoint of the trained observer, a sympathetic observer, to be sure. The chaplain writes as an officer to whom the moral welfare of the soldiers is an every minute problem. His knowledge of the requirements of the situation is intimate, first-hand, vital. The question of getting motion pictures to the troops is a matter very much on his mind, it is very near his heart. His appeal is for the benefit of men who are very much on the mind of all Americans, whose welfare is very near their hearts.

The chaplain tells us he has twelve operators but not that many machines, although more are coming. In time, he says, they will have many machines and plenty of operators, but not enough films, for a big army is coming. “Lumber and supplies are scarce, and moving picture houses come slowly and are not large enough,” the chaplain points out in his letter. “The Y. M. C. A. expects shipments of film from the United States and England, but the supply of American films will never be adequate. None of the Paris exchanges has films with English titles, and they charge $20 for a poor program for one night. We cannot charge admission, as most of our soldiers draw only $3 a month, the balance being in allotments for dependents.

“The films given me by W. A. Brady, Metro and Atlas have been a godsend to us. Three chaplains and three Y. M. C. A. groups have co-operated in making those films available to many thousands of French and American soldiers. Titles are announced in French.”

It is clear that the need of American soldiers for films is urgent. Likewise is it clear that the agencies which later on will be in a position to supply these demands are not at present in working order, that if films are to reach the men in France now they will have to come from those manufacturers and exchangemen who will give them.

To those manufacturers and exchangemen who may be willing to contribute heartening films to the soldiers in France the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be glad to advise as to details of forwarding. Should such film be sent to the New York office of the WORLD we will see that it is promptly forwarded to the chaplain who has appealed to us; and as we pointed out in our issue of September 1 he has made arrangements with other chaplains that will insure the widest circulation among the camps of any films that may reach him.

Take a look over your shelves. It may be you will find there some films, wholesome, clean and in good condition, which you will be willing to give to the men in France. There can be no worthier object. There can hardly be any nobler gift.

Sympathy versus Description

BY EDWARD WEITZEL.

EDMUND BURKE, in his essay “On the Sublime and Beautiful” devotes a portion of his article to words and their effect upon the passions. After giving an example from Milton, where he describes the travels of the fallen angels through their dismal habitation:

—O'er many a dark and dreary vale
They passed, and many a region dolorous;
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp;
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death,
A universe of death.—

the essayist points out the sublimity of the mental image raised by the last four words—A universe of death. He then continues:

“Here are again two ideas not presentable but by language, and a union of them great and amazing beyond conception, if they may properly be called ideas which present no distinct image to the mind; but still it will be difficult to conceive how words can move the passions which belong to real objects, without representing these objects clearly. This is difficult to us, because we do not sufficiently distinguish, in our observations upon language, between a clear expression and a strong expression. These are frequently confounded with each other, though they are in reality extremely different. The former regards the understanding, the latter belongs to the passions. The one describes the thing as it is; the latter describes it as it is felt. * * * The truth is, all verbal description merely as naked description, though never so exact, conveys so poor and insufficient an idea of the thing described, that it could scarcely have the smallest effect, if the speaker did not call to his aid those modes of speech that mark a strong and lively feeling in himself. Then, by the contagion of our passions, we catch a fire already kindled in another, which probably might never have been struck out by the object described."

The crux of the matter is displayed by Burke in one sentence: "We yield to sympathy what we refuse to description." And this analysis of the power of words is quite as applicable to the art of the moving picture. The thing sought is known by a number of names, "heart interest," "human interest," "dramatic feeling," "grip," and the like; but it is always something beyond the mere descriptive power of its medium. The best proof of this in the photoplay is the closeup and the intimate scenes where the sympathetic characters of the story reveal their inner feelings. The most elaborate reproductions on the screen of great historic events, battle scenes in which thousands of men contend with each other, have nowhere near the ability to move the spectator, to make the lump rise in his throat, that a simple incident often possesses.

This is true even of the pictures now being taken of the Great War. We watch with amazement a view of the battle front, showing the mighty guns hurling tons of metal at the unseen foe; but our eyes are wet with tears at seeing some minor happening with its touch of "human interest"—the face of a dying soldier as he dictates his last message to his loved ones, or the pride and trust of the little French lad marching, hand in hand, with the captain of a company of American soldiers as they pass through the village.

In "The Woman God Forgot" and photoplays containing similar scenes of conflict, the pictures never close with the biggest spectacular effects produced by the directors. The focus of events is narrowed down until only the destiny of two human beings is shown, as the "fadeaway" brings the story to an end. The finest moment in the Geraldine Farrar picture just mentioned is where the Aztec princess, who has been forced to flee from her people, looks out from the door of the mountain hut and sees approaching the man for whom she sacrificed home and kindred.

Were Edmund Burke alive today he would probably modify his remark about the "two ideas not presentable but by language," in view of the resources of the camera. His analysis of the photoplay would also make interesting reading.

BEN H. GRIMM NOW CADET AVIATOR.

Ben H. Grimm, one of the Moving Picture World's brightest young men, who enlisted in the army in September, has been transferred to the Army School of Military Aeronautics at Cornell University. He is undergoing a course of training to become a flier. In a letter to a friend Ben says he is studying and working about fifteen hours a day—and at that sort of stuff we know he will be right on the job.

ADOLFI LEAVES FOX FILM.

John G. Adolphi, director of the new William Fox-Annette Kellermann sub-sea fantasy, has resigned from the Fox Company after a two years' engagement which ended December 15, during which time he took June Caprice, inexperienced, and developed her into a box-office attraction of magnitude.

A desire for a rest was Mr. Adolphi's chief reason for tendering his resignation to Mr. Fox, as he has continually been in harness for more than three years, and although he has made plans for the future he is not yet at liberty to state just what they are. But it is known from reliable sources that he is contemplating an engagement with another big producing concern.

Exposition Plans Progressing

Twenty-one Companies Already Have Taken Space and Many Contracts Are Pending.

CONSIDERABLE progress has been made during the past fortnight in securing contracts for space allotment for the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace, February 2 to 9, 1918. The exposition will be held under the joint auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and will occupy three entire floors. Twenty-one companies already have taken space and negotiations are pending with nearly a hundred others. Contracts signed thus far are for larger individual spaces than has been the case at any similar exposition of the past and all of the present entrants plan to make comprehensive attractive displays that will be shows in themselves—not mere cubbyhole exhibits. Indeed the plans for the big show will embrace many new ideas in promoting an exposition to draw the public.

Among the largest companies exhibiting are the Famous Players, Lasky, Artcraft, Paramount, Metro, Pathe, Vitagraph, Fox, Universal, World Film, Frohman Amusement, Wharton and Triangle.

Supply and equipment exhibitors to date include the Nicholas Power Company, Precision Machine Company, Edison Lamp Works, National Carbon Company, American Coin Register Company, Dalton Adding Machine Company, Sampliner Advertising Company, Cooper Hewitt Electric Company and Marr & Colton Company, organs.

Requests for particulars and space diagrams are being received daily at the headquarters in the Times Building, New York City, and correspondence indicates that by New Year's the bulk of the available space will have been sold. General Manager Frederick H. Elliott's plan has been to line up the leading manufacturers first in order to have the exposition representative of the best that is in the industry. There is still desirable space to be obtained on both the main floor and second floor, although the bulk of it has been reserved.

Hodkinson Will Explain

In Next Week's World He Will Tell About "The Motion Picture, Plus."

W. W. HODKINSON announced last Friday that he will issue next week a supplement to the Moving Picture World explaining fully the new process film which he is preparing to release. This new process, which is called "The Motion Picture, Plus," Mr. Hodkinson describes as "Quality Insurance," for, he says, he cannot find in the industry, as at present constituted, any vehicle which can act as a guarantee to the public of quality.

"The new process picture," Mr. Hodkinson says in his announcement to the trade, "will bring you not only a bigger and better product on the screen, something which will lift motion pictures to a higher plane of public entertainment than it has ever reached or ever could reach in its present form, but also a guarantee and control of quality." He goes on to describe it as an "improved medium, a medium which is to the motion pictures of today what the modern disk phonograph is to the old wax cylinder, what the broad gauge railroad is to the narrow gauge line, what the motor truck is to the one-horse express wagon."

Next week's description of the new process will cover four pages, and will not only describe the nature of the "Motion Picture, Plus," but will answer, before they can be asked, all questions which will arise in the mind of the average exhibitor.

In addition to the supplements in the trade papers, the Hodkinson Corporation will have additional folders for mail distribution, upon request. Such of these requests as are received in time will be mailed from New York on December 26th, in order to reach the tremendous number of people in the industry who are interested as soon as the trade papers arrive.

BERMAN ON BUSINESS TRIP.

Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., left Monday last for an extensive sales trip through the East, South and West. Mr. Berman will visit all Jewel exchanges and will establish a new branch office in St. Louis. He will personally study business conditions in the various sections of the country with a view to finding the exact situation due to the war.

Joint Exhibitors' Convention at Washington By Sam Spedon

Harmonious Gathering of Theatermen at Capital Discusses Trade Conditions and Adopts Resolutions—Committee on Amalgamation Appointed

THE "joint" exhibitors' convention was held on December 11 and 12 at Perpetual Hall, Washington, D. C. The weather was the coldest experienced by Washington in years. The ground was covered with snow and all the trains bearing delegates, even from New York City, were from six to thirteen hours late.

Tuesday, December 11.

The opening session was called to order at 2 P. M. by Lee A. Ochs, who presided throughout. The chair appointed a rules and resolution committee, to go into caucus immediately. A motion to adjourn was made by William Brandt without being seconded. The chairman suggested that it would be unwise to adjourn, as there was so much that could be said on general business conditions, he thought an expression by representatives from different parts of the country would greatly assist the resolutions committee in their work. Mr. Brandt thereupon withdrew his motion.

F. D. Eager, of Nebraska; Sam Bullock, of Ohio; Joe Hopp, of Chicago; Ernest Horstmann, of Massachusetts; A. F. Black, of Maine; Frank Rembusch, of Indiana; Sam Berman, of Brooklyn; R. D. Craver, of North Carolina; C. H. Bean, of New Hampshire; Harry Bernstein, of Virginia; E. M. Clark, of Mississippi, and Benj. Schindler, of Illinois, all gave their views of conditions as they exist in their territories. The general opinion was that the exhibitors were in a bad way, particularly the smaller exhibitors who comprise about 70 per cent. A general discussion followed.

Jacob Conn, of Rhode Island and New Hampshire, said he thought it was a mistake to exclude the five-cent theaters from taxation. A great many exhibitors, whom he termed slackers, were taking advantage of this and opening up cheaper and poorly kept houses to the detriment of those who had tried to raise motion pictures to a higher level. His views were endorsed by a great many, who expressed themselves in favor of including the five-cent theater in the tax. Some advocated making all five-cent admissions free from the tax.

The sentiment against the "15-cent-tax" placed by distributors on all reels was very strong. It was considered unjust and unfair. Some were in favor of taking drastic measures against such distributors; others were in favor of getting together and trying to adjust matters, leaving anything radical as a last resort.

Rudolf Sanders, of Brooklyn, said: "Why should the manufacturers claim the power of the screen when they do not contribute a cent to the Government, but pass their taxes to us. Instead of drawing $100,000 a year salaries why don't they take $5,000. They could live on that and help bear the burden. Exhibitors have shown themselves to be patriots and they have what the Government needs—their screens."

Schindler, Levine and Pettijohn advocated that whatever was done by the exhibitors to adjust the tax or secure redress should be done by the exhibitors independent of the manufacturers and the N. A. M. P. I. Mr. Eager said he thought it would be inadvisable to ask for a reduction of taxes at this time. It would be better to ask for an equalization of them. Levine agreed that there was little chance for reduction. What is needed is equitable application of the tax.

Mr. Conn stated that he had derived an income of $40 a week showing commercial slides. Now he had cut them out to give place to Government slides, for which he received nothing. W. F. Crawl, of Norfolk, Va., was a strong advocate of increasing prices of admissions. He had found it successful. It was brought out that many of his theaters were located near cantonments. Notwithstanding he was in favor of higher prices.

Rembusch and Grossmann said most exhibitors were not so fortunately situated. Higher prices were impractical as the lower prices had made the industry what it is.

Motion to adjourn at 4 P. M. was adopted.

Wednesday, December 12.

The second session was opened at 11.30 A. M. By unanimous consent of the convention it was agreed that a representation of manufacturers who were in Washington with a proposition to the exhibitors in convention assembled be granted a hearing. Ike Hartstall was appointed a committee of one to escort them into the hall. After a short time he returned with the following gentlemen: Wm. L. Sherrill, Jos. W. Farnham, J. E. Chadwick, Harry Rapf, Joseph A. Golden, Lester Park.

Mr. Farnham acted as spokesman for those with him and said in part: "We are after the middleman, the exchange man, who gets the profits. We sold a picture to an exchange man in a southern territory for $3,000. He made $11,000. A producer was offered $1,500 for a picture, he wanted $3,000 for it. He tried the direct sales from producer to exhibitor. In eleven states in the South he showed a result of $2,275, and basing his results on the eleven states in the South he could count a net sale throughout the country of $85,000."

"The five companies represented by us here today can give the exhibitors fifty-two features a year, to be released over a circuit of exhibitors from our office in each state. All we ask is the cost of production plus 25% profit. We want suggestions from exhibitors as to story and stars or cast to minimize cost and give the exhibitors what they want. The permanency of the industry is the exhibition of pictures. Nothing else is permanent. Stars flicker out, directors come and go. State rights business is temporary, we may have ten today, two tomorrow. We, the five producers present, realize that we must deal with the stable element, the exhibitor. Advertising will be furnished exhibitors at cost, while under present conditions most exchanges make from 100 to 200% profit on advertising matter."

In reply to a question by Black, of Maine, Mr. Farnham said the question of first runs could be decided by lot, or drawing of slips. Each one paying his pro rata cost of production, which would be at a minimum of $25,000 and a maximum of $50,000 for a feature.

Pettijohn moved that the plan presented by Mr. Farnham be considered by a special committee, to be appointed by the chair.

Mr. Hopp said, in open discussing, that presidents of manufacturing concerns and managers of distributing companies were drawing fabulous salaries according to their ability to extract money from the coffers of the exhibitors.

Committee of Resolutions Reports.

After the producers had left the room the Rules and the Resolution Committees presented the following:

RESOLVED, By the Joint Convention of the members and representatives from the various motion picture exhibitors' organizations of the United States in convention assembled in Washington, D. C., this twelfth day of December, 1917, as follows:

That, Whereas, The United States Government has called upon the owners and operators of motion picture theaters in the various states to render certain assistance and perform certain services during the present war crisis, that it is now unanimously declared to be the sense of this meeting that all motion picture exhibitors of the United States do hereby pledge and tender to the United States Government their united and whole-hearted support in the carrying out and making effective all plans and all war aims, and we hereby tender our motion picture screens, stages, bill boards, and appurtenances thereto to be so used for such purposes. And be it further

RESOLVED, That the National Council of Defense and the Bureau of Public Information be forthwith notified that a permanent committee of exhibitors is hereby selected as follows: Lee A. Ochs, H. B. Varner, J. H. O'Donnell, Ernest Horstmann, F. J. Rembusch to present to said National Council of Defense and the Bureau of Public Information a copy of these resolutions and to assist in every way in devising ways and means to carry into effect such plans as have already been designated or adopted by the Government. Be it further

RESOLVED, That it is for the best interests of all motion picture exhibitors and for the motion picture industry at large that all exhibitors and exhibitors' organizations shall in the future stand united and work harmoniously together for our common cause to the end that our actions may be consistent and that fair and equitable solution may be found for the many problems now confronting us, and to the further end that the near future may see one large, harmonious, united organization of motion picture exhibitors in the United States, her provinces, and the Dominion of Canada, and that a committee be forthwith selected, representative of all motion picture exhibitors' organizations present, to formulate definite plans to effectuate the objects and intent of this resolution. And be it further

RESOLVED, That, in order that the motion picture exhibitors of the United States may know some of the subjects upon which the various exhibitors' organizations agree to stand against and oppose, it is the sense of this joint convention that all organizations are unalterably opposed to—

1. The advance deposit system.
2. The present exorbitant and unreasonably high salaries of certain stars.
3. The unbusinesslike and unnecessary waste in other branches of the industry by manufacturers and distributors.
4. The passing along of the fifteen-cent per reel manufacturers' tax.
5. The daylight saving plan.
6. Any suggestion upon the part of the Thrift Campaign Committee advising against attendance at motion picture theaters. And be it further

RESOLVED, That we are in favor of and indorse the following:

1. The issuance by the Government of a fifteen-cent coin.
2. The elimination of, or a proper definition for, Section 1007-A of the Revenue War Tax Bill.
3. The action of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Cleveland in their effort for legal relief from the arbitrary imposition of the 15-cent per reel manufacturers' tax, and to pledge the united support of all organizations in their future endeavors upon this subject.
4. A change in the present tax schedule to comply with the following:
 - a. The elimination of the present tax based upon the seating capacity of theaters.
 - b. The elimination of all admission taxes of children under the age of twelve years.
 - c. The addition of a tax of one cent on each five-cent admission for all persons over the age of twelve years.

FRANK D. EAGER,

CHARLES PETTIJOHN, Chairman.

L. L. LEVINE, Secretary.

ALFRED S. BLACK.

RESOLVED, By the Joint Convention of members and representatives from the various motion picture exhibitors' organizations of the United States in convention assembled in Washington, D. C., this twelfth day of December, 1917.

THAT, It is the sense of this joint convention that the film or so-called "footage" tax law should be repealed or so amended as to fix definitely the sources from which this tax shall be collected in such a manner that this tax may not be shifted to a different branch of the industry than the one for which it was intended.

FRANK D. EAGER,

CHARLES PETTIJOHN, Chairman.

L. L. LEVINE, Secretary.

ALFRED S. BLACK.

A resolution was adopted condemning the action of the N. A. M. P. I. in bringing a criminal action against the Brooklyn league.

Committee on Amalgamation.

Mr. Eager moved the resolutions be adopted as read, which was unanimously carried. He also made a motion to appoint a committee on the amalgamation of the entire exhibitors' organizations. This was approved and the following committee selected: C. C. Pettijohn, Joseph Hopp, A. F. Black, Louis Frank and Lee A. Ochs.

William Brandt read a resolution offered by the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association, denouncing the suit brought by the distributors of the N. A. M. P. I. against the Brooklyn Association, advocating that the National Exhibitors' League of America withdraw from the N. A. M. P. I.

Mr. Pettijohn advised that this resolution was inopportune. Mr. Eager brought out the point that the joint convention of exhibitors at Washington assembled could not pass on a resolution affecting the N. E. L. of America. It would have to be presented at a convention of the League, which this convention was not.

Chairman Ochs ruled the Brandt resolution out of order and agreed with Mr. Pettijohn that this was no time to bring up league matters, as this was the time to harmonize, not antagonize.

Mr. Eager moved a committee be appointed to present copies of resolutions adopted by the convention to the N. A. M. P. I. Mr. Rembusch was appointed as a committee of one to carry the resolutions to New York.

The convention was then open to general discussion. Sanders, of Brooklyn, brought up the resolution offered by Brandt and said exhibitors should show they are not afraid of the N. A. M. P. I. If the N. M. P. E. L. doesn't show its hand the N. A. M. P. I. will stick it into the League. Bullock said he was a man of peace, but Cleveland had a suit against the distributors in Ohio, where the exhibitors would even things up with the distributors. He sympathized with Brooklyn and thought it was too bad it could not give the distributors a bump.

At this point the question of meeting Mr. Varner's expenses while he remained in Washington as chairman of the Law and Legislative Committee was brought up. A guarantee of different sums was given by different exhibitors and leagues to enable him to remain in Washington for several weeks. Mr. Horstman, of Boston, was selected as treasurer of this fund, further contributions to be sent to him.

Harry Crandall, of Washington, said: "Another serious question faces us. The fuel commissioner says he may have to shut off all theaters and churches in the use of coal three days a week." He suggested referring the matter to the Law and Legislative Committee for Mr. Varner's attention.

Mr. Horstman spoke about the Internal Revenue Commissioner's attitude in regard to an exhibitor increasing the price of his admissions. He thought it presumption to question an exhibitor's right to charge five or ten cents more for admissions if he saw fit, any more than the right of a merchant to charge more for his goods.

P. C. Levy, of Fort Worth, Texas, was asked to recite conditions in Texas. He said they were not very flourishing at present, but whether it was just owing to general war conditions or drought he could not say. When they had a drought in Texas business was bad, and they had one now. He thought investments in Liberty Bonds had made people more saving, particularly where they paid small amounts each week. All he could say was that business is not good in Texas, the reason he could not exactly state. The public paid the war tax cheerfully in some cases, where it could not get pennies, the exhibitors accepted postage stamps.

W. H. Smyth, of Seattle, Washington, being called upon to speak, said he thought conditions were fair in his territory, but not what they should be. The war tax on admissions had been paid willingly. The fifteen cents manufacturers' tax on each reel had been opposed by the exhibitors as a body and prices had been so adjusted by the distributors that it worked to the advantage of the exhibitors.

On motion made and seconded the "joint convention" of exhibitors was brought to a close.

Among those in attendance were James Ginns, Wilmington, Del.; W. H. Smyth, Seattle, Wash.; Benj. Schindler, Philadelphia; C. M. Rapoport, Philadelphia; Joseph Mogler, A. D. Pappas, Chas. D. Kansas, St. Louis; Sam Bullock, Cleveland, O.; W. J. Slimm, Cleveland, O.; J. P. Morgan, Washington; J. H. Spencer, Winding Gulf, W. Va.; A. B. Saunder, New York City; Frank A. Hornig, Baltimore, Md.; Jacob Conn, Providence, R. I.; Henry Haring, New York City; Saml. I. Berman, Brooklyn; C. E. Geoghegan, Chase City, Va.; R. D. Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; H. J. Paradis, Wilson, N. C.; I. N. Hartstall, New York City; C. H. Bean, Franklin, N. H.; F. A. Abbott, Charlotte, N. C.; James A. Conway, Philadelphia; W. Brandt, Brooklyn, N. Y.; W. Foreign Representative of American Manufacturers Making New Alliances, Enlarging Home Offices and Opening Quarters in Paris

PAUL H. CROMELIN, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, in a conversation with a World man last week outlined some of the things accomplished by his company in recent months. Mr. Cromelin is planning to take over the entire tenth floor of the Candler Building, where the offices of his company are now situated—and somewhat cramped. There are in operation here two fully equipped projection rooms, one of goodly size and the second one devoted to examination purposes. Offices in Paris have been established.

Among the recent contracts executed by Inter-Ocean are for fifty-seven Christie comedies in the United Kingdom, with the first dozen negatives now on the sea; for Paralta Plays, under which the Inter-Ocean will distribute abroad all the productions of this company. Mr. Cromelin's company also will become the foreign distributors for the productions of the Hodkinson corporation, which in the United States is handling Paralta Plays; and the Inter-Ocean has the exclusive rights to the sale of Speer carbons outside of the United States and Canada.

"We have been concentrating for a year and a half," said Mr. Cromelin, "on what we conceive to be a highly specialized job. We take the position, although we have not been making much noise about it, that the best time to go ahead and get established in the foreign business is when the other fellow is shortening sail on account of the war. After establishing New York headquarters we opened our own branch in London and began operating in those territories more conveniently reached from England. At the same time we gathered around us men familiar with the conditions in and the languages of other countries; so as to give the foreign buyer when he visited us the feeling that he was more or less at home. We have closed contracts for World Film in every country except Italy and the Balkans, and a contract is pending now for them.

"Our aim has been to make agreements covering a whole year. In some instances we gave the licensee the right to take thirty-nine out of a possible fifty-two World productions and in others the contract is for one feature a week.

"In addition to the World subjects we have taken on various serials and comedies and placed them to best advantage wherever there was a prospect of doing business. Some contracts are at present in a condition of suspense because of the difficulty of shipments. For instance, we are temporarily unable to ship from here to Scandinavia. The necessity for obtaining export licenses has further complicated an already rather complex problem.

"Business has been very good with us, and we have been watching the growth of film distribution abroad with much interest. In order to supply gaps in the line we have from time to time added features which were peculiarly adapted to certain territories. To get a less expensive grade of feature we recently took on twenty-seven Art Dramas, which have been successfully placed in England.

"Last week we closed a deal for fifty-seven Christie comedies in the United Kingdom. The first twelve negatives are now on the water, and the rest are to be taken up at the rate of one a week.

"Heretofore it has been cheaper to print in England from negatives sent over from this country, paying duty on the negative going into England, but in recent weeks there has been an increase in the cost of raw material of 3 farthings a foot (about 1¼ cents United States), which makes the cost of printing in England about equal to the printing in this country plus the raw stock tax here. There is an advantage, however, of not having the half-cent a foot tax on the leasing of films printed in England for use there or for shipment from London to any foreign territory.

"The Inter-Ocean made a most important addition to its business a few days ago when a contract was closed with Paralta Plays by which we become the sole foreign distributors of that company. We have seen the first four productions of the company and they really are high-grade productions. The alliance has put us in the position in every country of having a complete line from the cheaper to the highest-priced subjects. We have also been appointed the sole foreign distributors of the Hodkinson Corporation.

"In order to get established in these respective territories we have sent travelers out and have done some very interesting pioneering during a rather difficult period and have laid the foundation for what we expect will be a very large international trade, destined to be greatly increased when the world's affairs become normal.

"The idea and theory back of our organization is to become a clearing house under the control of specialists which will stand between the American manufacturer and the foreign buyer. It would be difficult and unprofitable in most instances for an individual manufacturer to attempt to do what the Inter-Ocean is taking on. It becomes a perfectly practical, reasonably inexpensive proposition when we undertake the economical and scientific distribution of a number of lines that do not conflict.

"The expense is equitably divided and pro rated, and in this manner it is possible for the American manufacturer to procure a larger net profit after paying for the services of the expert middlemen's organization than he would get were he to attempt exporting on his own account with all of the complexities and problems which arise in each of the territories in which he seeks to do business.

"We have recently opened our own offices in Paris, at 43 Rue La Bruyere. From this point we expect to handle the Southern European and Mediterranean countries. All these territories are in good shape and hungry for more material.

"I might also mention we have the exclusive rights for Speer carbons outside the United States and Canada. Owing to the German product, which formerly was such an overwhelming factor in the world supply, no longer being available, we are shipping out Speer carbons as fast as they can be made."

KING PERRY MADE BUSINESS AGENT.

The Detroit branch of the A. E. A. has appointed King Perry, Business Agent of the organization. He will devote most of his time to association work, thrashing out complaints, getting new members, collecting dues, etc.

Ray Branch, State Organizer, will soon announce a Detroit office. He is still holding meetings in certain zones and endeavoring to get all the exhibitors together in the various zones. He is after members and he is getting them. Dues are only $2 per month or 48 cents per week, and the funds are needed to carry on the great amount of work being outlined. Michigan will surely have to combat Sunday closing and censorship in the next legislature, and a strong organization is the one way to combat.

DISTINGUISHED CAST SURROUNDS NAZIMOVA.

A celebrated cast has been engaged to support Mme. Nazimova in her second Metro production, which represents a strong drama of gypsy life, now in preparation in St. Augustine, Florida, under the direction of George D. Baker. Important in the supporting company appear Charles Bryant, Irving Cummings, Dodson Mitchell, E. J. Connelly, Frank Currier and Nila Mac.

Soldiers in France Need More Pictures By C. L. Grant

World Correspondent, Just Back from France, Tells How Important Films Are to American Troops

[As a member of the New York State special election commission, which handled the soldier and sailor vote abroad in November, C. L. Grant, who served as representative of the Moving Picture World at Albany during the session of the Legislature last winter, covered all the American camps in France and spent a week along the active British and French fronts. Mr. Grant made special inquiry in the American camps as to what the men wanted in the way of pictures. In one ruined city on the western front he enjoyed the novel experience of attending a movie in the early evening while the roar of cannons shook such walls as remained of the ruined cathedral where the pictures were being shown.]

IT WAS a late afternoon in November. I was driving through the ruined city of Arras. Barbed wire entanglements stretching across the tiny parks in the center of the city told their own story. Rifle shells in little clusters at street corners repeated the mute testimony of the entanglements and became witness of the hand to hand fighting but a comparatively short time ago. The roar of artillery resounded through the streets. Soldiers passed, apparently giving it no thought. With me it was a different proposition. I was wondering what would happen if the enemy should raise their cannon a point or two.

My attention was attracted to a novel sign in French and English. "Cinema Tonight. 6.30." A hand directed the way. I concluded to attend. In Arras, as well as in many of the cities and villages not only along the active front, but far inland, lights are absolutely under the ban. One sort of feels his way through the country and the fogs that hang everywhere in the late afternoon and through the night. The heavens are lighted by the flash of cannon, but it is not the sort of a light that one wishes to travel by, except perhaps if he is traveling in the opposite direction.

I made my way to the movie. It was in one of the old cathedrals, a common white cloth serving as a screen, the audience being made up of a strange mixture of humanity, French, English, Scotch, Algerian, New Zealanders and Australians. Myself and my driver were the only Americans. The picture was good and, even without orchestra accompaniment, or plush covered chairs, one enjoyed it. The show lasted perhaps forty minutes and the men went out with better controlled nerves, and there is no question in my mind that the effects of that picture and the hundreds of other pictures that are being shown in the war zone today improved the morale of the troops.

The problem of supplying motion pictures to the men at the front is an interesting one from any angle. I remember on reaching London a rather novel sign appearing over one of the motion picture houses. It read: "Moon or no moon, we show tonight." That advertisement brought home to me conditions that confront the theaters of London at the present time. One of the nights I spent in England was clear and cold. I went to one of the leading vaudeville theaters of London and there were exactly twenty-three persons there besides myself. The movies fare better, chiefly, I presume, because of the less admission charged and the fact that one does not have to go any great distance from home to visit them. People are not doing any great amount of traveling on London streets on clear moonlight nights. They seem to have a hankering for home life, and after one views the hole in the pavement in Piccadilly Circus and the shattered store fronts, the result of the Zeppelin invasion of several weeks ago, one cannot blame them.

In connection with my work for New York State, I covered the American camps throughout France. I found efforts being made everywhere to furnish the men with moving pictures at frequent intervals. In some of the camps, the pictures were shown in Y. M. C. A. tents or in buildings and everywhere they were extremely popular.

"How do the men like the movies?" I inquired of the commanding officer of one of the camps.

"Like them," he said. "They are the best thing to maintain the morale of the camp that I know of. The only thing is that we cannot get a tent or a building big enough to accommodate the men. Two or three hundred can be accommodated one evening, and the remainder have to wait until the succeeding nights. The tent is generally packed to suffocation and the worst part of it is that the villagers are all flocking in. It's pretty hard to bar them, for they are doing everything possible for our comfort. The other night we had eight guards around the tent in order that the men inside might not be jammed into even a smaller space by those who were clamoring for admission."

American soldiers have told me time and time again that they prefer the weeklies above nearly everything else. Cut off to a large extent from the outside world, with an occasional newspaper from home, the men in many of the camps find it rather difficult to keep track of current events. It is a well known fact that we back home know more about the war than the soldiers who are now serving across the seas.

The Soldiers Want Comics.

The soldiers want comics. Every nation under the sun can easily appreciate and laugh their troubles away with a ludicrous picture. They enjoy a drama, but of the sob stuff of the back home type, the men want none of it. They have troubles of their own.

Some solution will unquestionably be made over the lack of electrical power for the pictures. Where a camp is located near a city that has been unspoiled by the hands of the enemy, it is a comparatively simple matter to convey power out to the camp in sufficient quantity so that the pictures may be well displayed, even though the screen is not all that can be asked. In some places, a Delco system is being transported from camp to camp with fairly good results.

Officers are giving their heartiest cooperation in an effort to provide motion pictures for the men under them. They realize the beneficial influence. Suppose a soldier has been training throughout the day, and the evening offers no inducement except conversation with one's fellows, and that conversation is generally limited in the extreme. Given an hour's entertainment with the movies and the men retire with a feeling that they are not far from their friends and that the message which the pictures carry across the seas is one which perhaps may have been carried to members of their own family but a few weeks before.

I spent a day in Verdun. There are no movies there. I snapped a picture of what was probably one of the city's leading motion picture houses before the city was shelled to utter destruction. The corrugated sheet iron door of that movie, pierced in a hundred places by flying shrapnel, told a story of its own.

Along the British and French fronts one frequently encounters unique motion picture houses, if they can be classified as houses. Crossing from Albert to Bapaume and Peronne, I saw a novel motion picture theater close by the road. An old building had been partially reconstructed by the British. The road to the entrance was outlined by whitewashed stones. Some clever person had even rigged an entrance with bent boughs. Outside a sign boasted the fact that movies were given each night at so much a person. According to some of the men in the camp the place did a rushing business.

Any village of any size, destroyed or otherwise, occupied by either French or British, has its movie. Sometimes they are in a partially wrecked store, a factory, a dismantled church, but always they are advertised so that the men may attend and reap the benefits.

In Paris, the motion picture houses serve to attract many American soldiers who manage to spend their week-ends in the French capital. The houses appear to do a good business throughout the week and some of them have some most novel and attractive exteriors.

That the motion picture is bound to play a most important part in maintaining the excellent morale of the American troops in France is unquestioned, when one sees what the pictures are today accomplishing among the men who are "over there," ready and willing to shed their life's blood. My observations justify the statement that they are second only to a letter from home. No greater compliment can possibly be paid to the moving pictures than that.

REGARDING SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

Sensible statements of his position by Mayor Hart, of Cumberland, Wis., which first appeared in a local paper, are printed here:

"I have been criticised quite severely in some quarters because I refused to use my authority as mayor of the city to prevent the Unique Theatre from giving a performance on last Sunday afternoon. I want my position in this matter to be understood by all, and I therefore make the following statement:

"After the performance for last Sunday afternoon had been advertised one of the most worthy citizens of the city came to me with the request that I take steps to stop it, which I refused to do. Sunday a remonstrance signed by a number of members of the Congregational church was handed me and Monday I received a similar remonstrance signed by members of the Swedish Lutheran church. A resolution of the governing body of the M. E. church was also presented urging enforcement of the Sunday closing law.

"The law which makes the running of a motion picture show a criminal offence is not a city ordinance but a state law which has been on the statute books with minor changes since the state was organized. It is a very broad law and covers many acts. It is not now, or never has been, observed, either in letter or in spirit, by the vast majority of the people of this vicinity. I can go out any Sunday and in an hour find a dozen or two violations. Some of the very people who are insisting on its enforcement with reference to the theaters are themselves persistent violators of it. If a law is to be enforced, it should be enforced against all alike. It would require the closing of all garages and livery stables and many other places of business and the stopping of activities along other lines.

"If any citizen wants the Unique closed or any other violation stopped, he has the same right that I have to commence criminal proceedings. However, there is an old maxim which advises people who live in glass houses not to throw stones, and one of the maxims of law is that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands. I live in a glass house, my hands are not clean in this regard, and I am in no different position from a large number of the people of the community.

"I hold no brief for Sunday motion picture shows. I am entirely indifferent whether they are permitted or not. I merely decline to take the personal responsibility of attempting to stop them."

Paramount-Artcraft Expands in South

Organization Formed in Havana That Will Control Distribution in West Indies and Central America.

THE completion of a new deal involving the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in the West Indies and Central America has been announced. A new organization has been formed, headed by five of the leading business men of Havana, which will control the distribution in that section of the Americas of every Paramount and Artcraft picture produced.

The territory to be covered includes all of Cuba, with main offices of the company in Havana; all of Venezuela, all of Porto Rico, with head offices in San Juan; all the other islands of the West Indies and a large part of Central America.

In this territory there are over 1,000 theaters. Porto Rico has 65 motion picture theaters. There are 300 in Cuba, 20 in San Domingo and the others scattered throughout the rest of the territory. This will bring the Paramount and Artcraft productions before a new audience of over 15,000,000 people in this territory.

It is announced that all the pictures produced by Paramount and Artcraft, including the serial, "Who is Number One?" will be booked. This will bring to Central America and the West Indies all the productions of the companies' stars, besides the specially produced pictures made by Cecil De Mille, Thomas H. Ince, J. Stuart Blackton, the Paramount-Sennett comedies and the Paramount-Arbuckle comedies.

Heading the new organization, which has not yet been named, is O. A. Hornsby, as president. Mr. Hornsby is one of the leading bankers of the West Indies and is vice-president of the Trust Company of Cuba, with offices in Havana. A. W. Kent is vice-president of the new company, and was one of the most important factors in its organization. Mr. Kent is a prominent lawyer of Havana. The second vice-president is C. E. Sawyer of Havana, and the treasurer is Jacob Lychenhein of Harris Brothers, retail and wholesale general merchants of Havana. A. L. Pratchett is the general manager of the new organization. Mr. Pratchett has been in the film business for fourteen years and for the last year has been manager of the Universal in Havana.

One of the most interesting and illuminating facts in connection with the announcement is that all the pictures will be released with combination titles, in two languages. The upper part of all titles will be given in Spanish and the lower part in English. Here is a direct evidence of the influence of Americanization in the West Indies and Central America.

The deal marks the largest one of its kind ever made by Paramount and Artcraft. Its consummation is an evidence of the organization in a business-like way of the distribution in the foreign field. The West Indies and Central America are to be provided with the entire production of Paramount and Artcraft films, and the larger cities of the territory are to arrange for first runs in the same manner as they are booked in this country.

FLETCHER ENGAGED IN A NEW STAGE PLAY.

Cecil Fletcher, leading man for Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs," now being produced for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, has been engaged by Charles Dillingham to play the leading juvenile lead in "General Post," a new play which will have its premier shortly. In "The Song of Songs" he plays the part of Steve Bennett.

Michigan Association Non-Committal on Tax

President Moran Says Exhibitors May Use Their Own Judgment in Paying Extra Film Rate.

THERE is now a feeling among the Michigan branches of the American Exhibitors, as far as the tax is concerned, that any exhibitor who feels that he must have certain programs is perfectly justified in paying the film tax. The problem has come up in connection with the tax of whether one exhibitor who has agreed not to pay the tax and yet who wants a certain program should lose to his nearest competitor who is ready to grab at the chance to secure the program regardless of the tax which he is glad to pay.

A number of exhibitors have written to S. A. Moran, of Ann Arbor, president of the state organization, asking what stand he or the association has taken. He wishes to make this statement:

"The state association is not taking any stand on this film tax. We are organized for the uplift of the industry and to meet the big state problems as they arise. The film tax is fair or unfair—it all depends how you look at it—and furthermore, it will be paid or not paid depending on how much of a drawing attraction is the particular program that carries the tax. For instance, I know of some exhibitors who do not want to lose Hart, Fairbanks, Pickford and Clark at their theaters or would prefer to pay the film tax for protection. Then again I know of exhibitors who want to keep the Fox program; or they want to keep Vitagraph or Pathe, and so on right down the line.

"In justice to the exhibitors, and especially in view of the fact that there are nearly as many exhibitors willing to pay as are not willing, the state association does not feel that it has a right to take and stand one way on the other. The best way is to remain absolutely neutral and to let each exhibitor do just as he thinks best. Some are not paying the tax because they are glad to get rid of certain programs, and this gives them a good excuse to let it go. So again, I say to Michigan exhibitors, act as you individually think best."

SPECIAL NOTICE TO ALL SOUTHERN ILLINOIS EXHIBITORS.

The next regular meeting of the Southern Illinois Moving Picture Exhibitors' League will be held at Carbondale, Ill., on Sunday, December 23.

All members are requested to attend and exhibitors who are not members are cordially invited to be present, as plans which will be of interest to every exhibitor will be discussed.

Washington Managers Meet

Gathering at Seattle Largest on Record—Officers Elected for Ensuing Year.

THE Washington State Theater Managers' Association was called to meet in Seattle on December 4th to discuss, with David L. Rodgers of Minneapolis, national organizer of the Exhibitors' League, the result of the 10 per cent. war revenue tax and to hold the annual elections.

The exhibitors of the state were evidently quite ready to get together on this question, for several of the charter members declared the attendance to be larger at this meeting than at any in the history of the organization. There were not enough seats in the regular assembly room, and benches had to be brought in to accommodate the overflow.

After an address by Mr. Rodgers, outlining the disastrous effects of the 10 per cent. tax on theaters throughout the country and the plan to send delegates from every state to Washington to lay the matter before a committee from the internal revenue department, the association voted to send two delegates to represent the state at Washington. W. H. Smythe, manager of the Strand theater at Seattle, was the representative selected from the western part of the state, and Dr. Howard S. Clemmer, of the Clemmer theater, Spokane, for eastern Washington.

The association then turned its attention to the election of officers for the coming year. Those elected were: James Q. Clemmer, Seattle, president; John Hamrick, Seattle, 1st vice-president; Frederick Mercy, North Yakima, 2d vice-president; George Reizner, Raymond and South Bend, 3d vice-president; George Ring, Seattle, secretary; Louis Goldsmith, Seattle, assistant secretary; J. H. von Herberg, treasurer.

After the last performance at the theaters that evening a banquet was given at the Butler Hotel in honor of Mr. Rodgers.

Mr. Rodgers left for Portland on December 6, and from there he will continue his tour of the principal cities of the coast, stopping at Sacramento, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

DIRECTORS' BALL TO BE BIG EVENT.

A regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association was held at the Studio, 234 West 55th street, on Tuesday evening, December 18, at eight o'clock. Five new members were initiated and several applications were voted upon.

The dance committee, under its chairman, Wally Van, is working very hard to make the function a success, and from the present outlook it will be the event of the season in the screen circles.

The membership is growing very rapidly and as only those directors whose experience and ability can be vouched for are eligible the growth is a healthy one.

Several dinners are being arranged for and at least once a month the association will be addressed by men who are recognized as leaders in the motion picture and its allied arts.

Howells Returns from Trip to Orient

Foreign Representative of American Film Manufacturers Describes Picture Conditions in Eastern Countries.

DAVID P. HOWELLS has returned to his office at 220 West Forty-second street from his second round trip through the Orient, having covered since last January more than fifty thousand miles to exploit American moving pictures in foreign lands. He has called four times on the film importers and exhibitors of Japan, the Philippines, China, Malay States, Dutch East Indies and India. In opening up the Oriental territory Mr. Howells is carrying out his policy of making contracts for weekly supplies, which he began when he contracted World Features and Metro Pictures in Australia and New Zealand in 1915.

"My second trip to the Orient this year has been successful, everything considered," said Mr. Howells last week. "In the early months of the year I made an extensive trip through the Far Eastern countries to study their requirements in the line of moving pictures. With the first-hand knowledge thus gained I contracted a large quantity of film and in June returned to the Orient to place it.

"The Orient probably offers more difficulties for marketing American pictures than any other market. Not only are the Orientals unmoved by the thrilling climaxes reached in Occidental social dramas, but they fail to understand many themes which prove tremendously successful here and in Europe.

"Book information and statistical reports regarding the Orient are most misleading. They have deceived a great many picture dealers who are accustomed to computing the value of the territory by its population and the size and number of its cities. For example Peking, China, claims a population of 700,000, is the home of all the foreign legations in China, and yet has only one picture house and that with a seating capacity of only 500 and only one show a day. Contrast this with Sydney, Australia, a city of the same population, which with its suburbs has about one hundred picture shows, many of which run continuously from 10 in the morning until 10:30 at night. Another instance of judging territory by population would be to compare Peking with Los Angeles or San Francisco. There are cities in the Occidental world which support five or six prosperous houses where the city in the Orient of corresponding population would have no permanent picture show and would be visited only occasionally by a traveling show.

"In the Philippines I found a rather pessimistic outlook for the business, owing to the fact that nearly all the soldiers previously quartered there have been transferred and many of the Americans formerly employed in the Government offices have returned to the United States, being replaced by Filipinos. The Filipinos have always preferred European films. This preference is being overcome because European films cannot be obtained and also because the attitude of the Filipinos is much more friendly to the United States since the change in governmental policy. The prejudice against American pictures was partially done away with by the introduction of the better type of pictures produced here. True to the Spanish taste, these people delight other people of the Orient the Japanese are agitating for a bigger share in their Government. Business was also much disturbed because of the uncertainty of Holland's being able to maintain her neutrality. People were afraid of what would happen to them if she should join hands with Germany.

"Picture conditions in India were about the same as in January, when I was there last. They are planning a number of fine new houses on the completion of the war and are demanding the very best pictures to make up their programs. India is still heart and soul behind Great Britain and has sent thousands of superbly mounted horsemen, who have been among the most conspicuous troops in Europe, South Africa and Mesopotamia.

"Film dealers in the East are on the whole conservative but thoroughly reliable. I was much impressed with the courtesy and hospitality shown me by the Oriental film men.

"I was specially interested in visiting in Tokio the fine studio of the Nippon Katsudo Kabushik Kwaisha, otherwise the Japanese Cinematographic Company, Ltd., known as the Nikkatsu, for short, the leading producing company in Japan. It compares favorably with the studios in America, being supplied with many sets ingeniously contrived and artistically painted. This equipment is cared for by a host of carpenters, property men, and studio assistants. As yet no artificial lights are used in making the pictures. The script for the plays are carefully prepared and the company rehearsed. The director usually sits in a chair before the stage and reads the lines which the actors are to speak in their parts. Then he directs their action in a sort of rehearsal, after which the camera is started and the scene recorded. I saw them shoot several thrilling scenes and was much pleased with the work of the Japanese actors, especially the men who took the parts of women so cleverly. The Japanese picture theaters are equally as interesting as their studios, one of the most unique sights being the sandals of the audience left at the door, where they are neatly placed, each pair being checked by means of a big wooden tag."

MADAME PETROVA PURCHASES HOME AT GREAT NECK, L. I.

Following a long cherished ambition to possess a home outside the environs of New York, where she might enjoy the rest and quiet attendant upon country life, Madame Olga Petrova has recently purchased a magnificent estate at Great Neck, Long Island. The house, which stands upon several acres of land, was formerly owned by Sam Harris, the prominent theatrical magnate, and Madame Petrova's nearest neighbor in her new place of residence will be the famous American comedian and playwright, George M. Cohan.

ASTRA IN MARKET FOR BIG STORIES.

Announcement comes officially from Astra studios that they are in the market for really big stories with real heart interest. They report the usual deluge of mediocre and poor scripts, that are of no use for the quality of the productions demanded by Pathe, and are doing all they can to discourage this flood of poor stuff and encourage the best of authors to come forward with the best stories they have.

Only clean stories with plenty of heart interest will be considered, and no story of this kind and quality will be too big for conversion into a Pathe production.

in the beautiful and artistic and were often disgusted by the crude pictures of American manufacture which reached them. Manila is a charming and refreshing place. It seems good to reach the magnificent American hotel there, to find quick lunch counters and cafes and to be able to talk to people who speak and act like good old 'Americans.'

Pictures to Train Rookies

Intensive Military Instruction to be Faithfully Depicted for Benefit of Recruits.

THE motion picture screen is to play a far greater part in the present world war than even its most optimistic supporter would have ventured to predict. It is to be used for the intensive training of soldiers, the turning of recruits into the finished product.

After all other methods of direct instruction of recruits have failed of the desired results the United States Government has turned to the screen to bring the recruits to that degree of efficiency that will enable them to enter the first line trenches after a few weeks post graduate course in the direct military instruction school.

For several months Government officials, members of the War College and staff officers of the army have been seeking some method by which large bodies of men might be taught military tactics and evolutions by one instructor and at one time. More than thirty plans were suggested and all were rejected. Almost at the moment when the officials in charge of the training of the immense army, composed of absolutely raw material, had decided that the old drill ground method of instruction of man by man and squad by squad would have to continue, Leslie W. Brennan, a Utica financier, advanced the idea that properly taken motion pictures would solve the problem.

The suggestion of Mr. Brennan was met with skepticism, so much so, in fact, that he offered to stand the entire expense of proving that his suggestion was not only plausible but practical.

Secretary of War Baker issued orders that the Plebs at West Point, acknowledged to be the greatest military school in the world, be placed at the disposal of Mr. Brennan. With an expert camera man and assisted by Captain Matthew Tomlinson, instructor of the West Point Plebs, Mr. Brennan went to the big military school on the Hudson and started the pictures for which the Plebs posed in the Manual of Arms, School of the Soldier, School of the Squad, School of the Company, Semaphore, Arm Signals, Firing Positions, Grenade Throwing and Trench Work.

Upon the completion of the pictures they were screened for members of the War College and were demonstrated to be of such value that the War College assigned Captains Ellis and Gary, authors of the Plattsburg Manual, to enlarge upon the first efforts and the Government appropriated a large sum of money for the work.

Captains Ellis and Gary have been working for several weeks on the enlarged pictures which are about ready for distribution to the cantonments.

The original pictures as directed by Mr. Brennan and Captain Tomlinson show the proper method to perform each movement and are repeated several times in each print so that the movement may be impressed upon the mind of the recruit.

In the enlarged Government pictures, which take thirty thousand feet of film, all the ideas of Mr. Brennan are used, but Captains Ellis and Gary have gone even farther, showing the improper manner of executing movements. This idea of showing the improper method has caused considerable discussion among educators, many of whom insist that an improper method never should be demonstrated to a student, as it may convey the suggestion of executing the movement in the improper manner.

As a result of the success in working out the idea suggested by Mr. Brennan, it is declared that the next batch of recruits called into service will learn their military lessons in from sixty to ninety days less than the green men who preceded them into the cantonments.

Not only will the military tactic films be used in the cantonments but prints of the original Brennan film will be available for newly formed military companies, State Guards, Home Defense Leagues, Y. M. C. A.'s, schools, colleges and even public schools.

Adjutant General Charles H. Sherrill, of New York, the commissioned officers of the First Brigade, New York Guard, and several prominent educators attended a private showing of the tactic films in Wurlitzer Hall on Thursday evening, December 13, and were enthusiastic over their possibilities from a military educational standpoint. All left the Wurlitzer projection room firm in the conviction that another heretofore unthought of use for motion pictures had been discovered.

Government officials who are behind the universal military movement idea also are loud in their praise of the West Point films, declaring that these films solve the problem caused by the lack of military instructors, and also solve financial difficulties surrounding a military education which heretofore appeared insurmountable.

In many cities throughout the United States the authorities have been anxious to start a course of military training in the public schools. In almost every instance the desire had to be placed aside owing to the fact that military instructors are not available, and because the number of children to be taught would necessitate the employment of several instructors.

The West Point films, it is pointed out, overcome these difficulties, as several hundred children may receive military instruction at the same time and without the assistance of an experienced drill master. As a result it is expected that many municipalities will obtain projection machines for use in several of the larger schools and will use the pictures to make the students proficient in military knowledge.

Enter Toto, Comedian

WITH an ever increasing demand for good comedies Pathe announces that the much heralded two-reelers starring the famous Toto will begin on January 13 with the release of "The One Night Stand." The comedies will continue every second Sunday of each month thereafter.

Toto is characterized by Charles Dillingham, one of the most astute judges of box office value in the world, as the greatest attraction for children and grown-up children ever seen at the New York Hippodrome.

The Toto comedies produced by the Rolin Film Company under the direction of Hal Roach, the man who discovered Harold Lloyd, star of the "Lonesome Luke" and "Rolin" comedies, are claimed to be among the most expensive on the market. Yet, according to Pathe's policy of big pictures at proper rentals, the Toto comedies will be within reach of all good houses.

Toto's methods are new to pictures, though they have proved remarkably successful on the stage in New York

Toto.

City and the big houses in every capital of the world.

The Toto comedies are characterized by splendid direction; by an attractive leading woman, Clarine Seymour; a strong cast, including Bud Jamison; girls, and more girls, all of them young and pretty; and one laugh after another. Among the subjects completed in addition to "The One Night Stand" are "The 'Movie' Dummy," "The Junk Man" and "Fare, Please."

"The One Night Stand" with Toto as Props is one of the funniest burlesques of the "behind-the-scenes" at a theater. In "The 'Movie' Dummy" he plays the dummy used in making the thrill scenes, in "The Junk Man" he again has a wonderful title role and in "Fare, Please" he is the conductor, with Bud Jamison as the motorman on the "Not-at-all Express."

METRO ACQUIRES RIGHTS TO "THE CLAIM."

Metro has acquired the rights to "The Claim," a Broadway play written by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare, as a starring vehicle for Edith Storey. The play had a New York run earlier this season, with Florence Roberts in the leading role. Metro recognizes in this play an ideal vehicle for Edith Storey, who has made a name for herself in Western roles, and will give it an immediate production.

"The Claim" is a comedy drama with Western mining camp and dance hall atmosphere and possesses a red blooded Western plot. Miss Storey will play the leading role of Belle Jones, a dance hall singer and dancer.

First National of Ohio Incorporates

How Exhibitors Will Participate Explained—Organization Meeting Held Dec. 15.

FOLLOWING the incorporation of the First National Exhibitors Co., of Ohio, plans were given out by E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland, who has the franchise for the state, which disclosed the method of financing and operation of the new proposition.

The company's capital is given as $40,000. There are 2,000 shares of preferred at $15 per share and 4,000 shares of common at $2.50 per share. Mr. Mandelbaum holds one-half of the common stock for his work in organizing the proposition and for his franchise which was turned over to the new company. The balance of 2,000 shares of each kind of stock will be sold to the exhibitors of Ohio.

The state of Ohio is divided in districts by the parent organization of New York, and assessed $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent of the cost of each production bought or to be bought by the circuit. The same plan will be followed in Ohio, a division of districts being made. If, for example, an exhibitor in a certain town wishes to buy the franchise for that city and the cost is 2 per cent, he will be allowed to buy stock equivalent to half that amount, or 1 per cent of the total 2,000 shares of preferred and 2,000 shares of common. When the pictures are bought, he therefore pays for his rights to exhibit them, 2 per cent of the cost paid by the Ohio corporation.

The exhibitor owning the franchise then may play the pictures as long as he wishes during 30 days, after which the Ohio circuit will book, if possible, a second run and the profits from that second run will come back in proportion to the franchise holder according to the amount of stock he has bought in the company.

The exhibitor holding the franchise for that particular town may also plan return dates any time, which will cost him $1 per reel in cities of 5,000 or over and 50 cents per reel in cities under 5,000. This is particularly beneficial to exhibitors who play the Chaplin films on return dates.

The Ohio Circuit will buy the new Chaplin pictures, the first of which will be released in January. There are eight of them under Chaplin's contract. It also will buy "Empty Pockets," made by Herbert Brenon from the book by Rupert Hughes; "Alimony" and "On Trial." The Petrova pictures will be handled on percentage by the Ohio Circuit and no holder of a franchise in the state will be obliged to play any picture handled on percentage, if he does not want to. However, all franchise holders will be given first chance. They also benefit whether or not they play such pictures, as the Circuit benefits and consequently adds to the stock dividends.

Meetings were held during the week ending December 15 to perfect the organization.

Selig Pictures Enthuse Trooper

Canadian Soldier in France Revives Memories of Home Upon Seeing Western Subjects.

THAT Selig pictures are appreciated and enjoyed by the war-weary soldiers in France is testified by the following letter, a breath from the war zone, received at the Los Angeles studio from a soldier in France. It is written from a hospital behind the lines and the writer addresses it to the "Selig Riders" and begins with:

"Dear Boys: Just had the pleasure of seeing you all in 'The Country that God Forgot.' I, as well as the rest of the patients, was so tickled at seeing such a good picture, I thought I would write to show our appreciation. Myself, as a trick roper and up to coming to this country, fairly good all-round on a Victor Marden Number 5, it sure did my old heart good to see some real riders, good cow ponies, and best of all, some stock saddles. Our saddles here are O. K. for this work and I don't miss the horn as much as I used to. I had my own outfit with me for nine months before coming to this country, 'the land that God forgot,' and broke ponies for the Canadian Remounts. Now I have a number, 116633 Trooper A. M. McRae, Royal Canadian Dragoons.

"I've lost all track of everything over here, and you can't get a movie magazine or anything, but now that Uncle Sam is in the game we may be able to get some reading. I've seen all kinds of New York boys over here already in the U. S. Engineers and there are some troops with the French in training. We will hear from them presently. She is a great old War. Yea Bo! I am fine and dandy back here in the hospital where Fritz can't put any over. I've got rheumatism in my feet and they are pretty sore, but I guess they will get better. Had them frozen last winter. I hate the idea of putting another winter in over here in the mud up to your knees, when you have to get a stick and scrape the mud off your cayuse. There isn't much glory in dodging Fritz's whiz bangs or Jack Johnsons. A camera man would sure get all the action he wants over here when there is barrage on. It's absolutely beyond description. They started this war with rifles and now they throw factories at one another. There is a heavy bombardment on now, and we can hear the big ones going all night. Russia is sure putting the tin hat on things and they will be without a country if they don't cut out the slacking. Still, we got pudding for dinner, so we must be winning, as the boys say, so Cherio!

"Well, I don't want to know what color hair so and so has or anything like that, but good luck to Selig (Western) the real western, and my compliments to the little lady, the two mining partners and the boys in 'The Country that God Forgot.'

"Sincerely,

"A. M. McRAE."

Australian Paramount in New Offices

General Manager Alec Lorimore Unhampered by Disastrous Fire—Lord Mayor of Sydney Agrees to Open New Film Headquarters Formally.

ACCORDING to an announcement in the daily papers of Sydney, Australia, the Right Hon. Lord Mayor of Sydney, opened the new offices of the Paramount Service of Australia, on November 13, last. The British high officials do not as a rule, formally recognize any private concern and it is a significant fact that the new offices were dignified by the presence of the Lord Mayor.

The new offices were made necessary by a fire which completely wiped out most of the former offices and the building in which they were located. Alec Lorimore presides over the new establishment. He assumed charge of the Paramount Service of Australia on December 19, 1916. This company serves are of Australia and New Zealand. The new offices are located at 302 Pitt street, Sydney, in a modern five-story building with considerable floor space divided into well-equipped offices. There are about 60 employees in the organization and under Mr. Lorimore's able direction, are doing a greatly increased business. He has imbued his entire staff with the American business idea that "he profits most who serves best."

Despite the natural conditions due to the war, there is accelerated development in the film business in Australia, and a bright future ahead for the industry. American film productions are now shown all over Australia in much larger percentage than they were a year ago and are keenly appreciated by the picture theater audiences in this part of the world.

FOX STARS MAKE PERSONAL APPEARANCES.

Personal appearances by George Walsh and Miss Virginia Pearson, Fox stars, were features of the celebration of Wonder Week in four William Fox theaters. The dates selected were December 10 to 16 and the theaters were the Bay Ridge, the Crotona, the Folly and the Audubon.

The stars made two appearances at each of the theaters, Miss Pearson was present on nights when "All For a Husband," her last photoplay release, was being shown, and Mr. Walsh's appearances were coincident with the showing of "The Pride of New York," a drama of cantonments and the trenches, part of which was filmed at Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island.

Catherine Calvert to Be Starred

Will Be the Leading Player of Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, with Offices in Putnam Building—Mr. Keeney Has Many Vaudeville Houses.

BIG things are promised by the newly organized Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation in its initial publicity announcement. Frank A. Keeney, who runs a string of vaudeville houses in Brooklyn, Newark, N. J., and other cities, is president, and Ray C. Owens, general manager of Mr. Keeney's theatrical enterprises, is secretary and treasurer. A handsome suite of offices has been fitted up in the Putnam Building, Seventh avenue and Forty-third street, and a large and thoroughly modern studio with a garage attached is to be built within five minutes' walk of the executive headquarters.

The announcement states that the first star under contract is Catherine Calvert, who has had extended dramatic experience, although still very young, and has been in moving pictures since last March. Her success as a film star has been such that Mr. Keeney was impelled to engage her for a long term at a large salary; he believed her unusual beauty and winsome personality, with the generous financial backing he will give, would insure her popularity in films. She is remembered by theatergoers as the star in "The Deep Purple," "A Romance of the Underworld," and other plays written by her husband, the late Paul Armstrong. Her debut as a dramatic star was in a leading part in "Brown of Harvard," at the age of seventeen. For some time after her husband's death she managed all of his dramatic enterprises, demonstrating a high degree of executive ability.

Mr. Keeney is possessed of ample means to carry out his program. He recently inherited a large sum of money from the estate of his father, the late Seth L. Keeney, one of Brooklyn's wealthiest contractors and financiers. His success in his theatrical enterprises naturally will arouse much interest in his new venture. It is his present purpose to retain all of his theatrical holdings, and he is now going over plans with his architects for the construction of theaters in different cities, in which his photoplay products will be shown. He intends to engage other stars in the near future and feature them in original scenarios by some of the world's best authors and in screen versions of popular novels and dramatic successes.

On the windows of his Broadway offices Mr. Keeney has Miss Calvert's name in large gold letters, as "The Lady Beautiful of the Screen."

PARALTA EASTERN SCENARIO DEPARTMENT.

The Eastern Scenario Department of Paralta Plays, Inc., under the direction of Harry Chandlee, is gradually expanding. Recently Mr. Chandlee added two assistants. One of them, Miss Elizabeth B. Petersen, has been a scenario writer since her fourteenth year, when she sold her first scenario, "Their Mutual Friend," to Vitagraph. She was then in her first year in the high school. Miss Petersen since then has written a number of original scenarios which have been produced by leading companies.

Mr. Chandlee's other assistant is Miss Helen Christene Hoerle. Like Miss Petersen, Miss Hoerle is known as a writer for the best magazines, having contributed fiction to most of them. Her first work in the motion picture field was publicity and the editorial examination of scenarios. Miss Hoerle joined the Equitable scenario staff in September, 1915, as assistant editor. Later she went to the Fox scenario staff, where she remained for about a year, leaving that organization to become associated with Metro Pictures Corporation.

Illuminating Engineers Meet

Hold Session at Edison Bronx Studios to Witness Demonstration of Incandescent Illumination.

ON THURSDAY evening, December 13, a meeting of the Illuminating Engineering Society, New York Section, was held at the Edison studios in the Bronx, New York city, to listen to discussions and witness demonstrations upon the incandescent illumination by Miller Reece Hutchinson, chief engineer of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., of motion pictures. The affair was arranged by W. J. Clark, who had charge of the dinner which preceded. There was a large attendance on the part of those interested.

The paper for discussion was entitled "Motion Picture Projection With Tungsten Filament Lamps." It was prepared by J. C. Caldwell of the National Lamp Works, H. B. Dennington of the Westinghouse Lamp Works, L. C. Porter of the Edison Lamp Works and J. A. Orange of the Research Laboratories of the General Electric Company, the latter being selected by his collaborators to read the paper.

Mr. Orange held the undivided interest of his audience for fully an hour. At the end of his reading discussion was asked. F. H. Richardson asked Mr. Orange two or three questions and took issue on one or two points, upon which Mr. Orange afterward explained he had conveyed a wrong impression. There was no further discussion. The paper itself will be dealt with in good time in the projection department of this paper.

Following the reading two or three films were projected with the incandescent, the equipment being that put out by the Nicholas Power Company. Projection was by Operator C. Carlie. A half size lens was used. There was some travel ghost and the definition was subject to improvement. The lighting was very good, particularly when one considers the very poor quality of the screen used. The picture was fifteen feet wide; the distance of projection 90 feet. The light was strong enough for the subject shown, with the conditions of auditorium lighting under which it was shown. Under usual theater auditorium lighting conditions, with a good semi-reflective screen, there would have been ample light to illuminate the subject shown. The light was of good tone.

The demonstration gave ample proof that the tungsten filament lamp is right now able to give results approximating those supplied by a well handled 30 or 35 ampere a. c. arc, or a well handled 20 ampere d. c. arc, or a poorly handled arc of considerably higher amperage. That is the judgment of the writer after viewing the demonstration. The projection department will set this matter forth more in detail later.

Following the showing of the ordinary subjects came the surprise. The audience was informed that Mr. McClesney, manager of the studio, had arranged a practical demonstration of the taking and making of motion pictures. To the amazement of all present five hundred feet of film, taken less than two hours previous, showing the gathering at dinner, was shown. The showing was punctuated by exclamations of surprise and laughter. The cameraman had cranked slow, with result that the audience moved with tremendous and utterly ridiculous speed.

"The German Curse in Russia"

Pathe Offers Pictures Taken by Donald C. Thompson, Daredevil Camera Correspondent.

ANOTHER big scoop for Pathe is revealed in the announcement that this company, which has made such a success with its Official War Films, will be sole distributors of one of the most wonderful official pictures that has yet come from the war, "The German Curse in Russia," which had its first showing in America last week at the Strand Theater.

This remarkable motion picture was brought back to the United States by Donald C. Thompson, who has just returned after visiting every battle front in Europe and Russia, eleven months being required to obtain the Russian picture alone.

From the beginning of the first reel of this feature to the end there are hundreds of the most unusual battlefront scenes, and the most remarkable "over the top" charges that have ever been photographed. Every foot of the film that is shown helps to visualize for the American people the dastardly means that the Germans utilized in Russia to bring about food riots, street fighting and the final overthrow of the government which had been established for them upon a foundation of freedom and liberty.

The subject was reviewed at length on page 1805 of the Moving Picture World dated Dec. 22.

Chicago News Letter

Major Funkhouser Still Autocrat on Films

Tries to Prejudice Opinion Against Pictures by Assembling the Worst Cut-outs and Projecting Them.

AT the censorship hearings before the sub-committee of the Chicago Council's judiciary committee recently it developed that Major Funkhouser exercised his czarlike power by refusing to furnish a list of all cut-out made by the censor board since February 1, this year.

The request was made by Mr. Friedman, an attorney who represents moving picture interests in the city, and his purpose in making it was to show that Major Funkhouser was unreasonable in making many of these cut-outs. Mr. Friedman's intention was to show these cut-outs to the members of the sub-committee to prove his contention.

Mr. Friedman, on applying for the list, was refused by the major, who informed him he would give him only a list of cut-outs made in pictures owned by the interests he represented. He appealed to Chairman Steffen, of the sub-committee, and asked him to enforce the agreement made by Major Funkhouser before the sub-committee that such a list of cut-outs would be submitted. Chairman Steffen was much exercised by the refusal of the major, and in the course of his remarks referred to the fact that Major Funkhouser had invited the members of the sub-committee into his office, where he showed them the worst collection of cut-outs that he could assemble.

"He did not stop with February 1, but went back years," said Mr. Steffen. "He promised our committee that Attorney Friedman should have a list of all cut-outs made from the time mentioned, so that the moving picture interests could assemble cut-outs which they claim should not have been made. Major Funkhouser showed us the worst. Now we want to see the other side," said Mr. Steffen. "This list of cut-outs is not a secret document, and any citizen and most certainly the aldermen are entitled to it."

It appears that it took Major Funkhouser and certain members of his board a week to assemble the list of cut-outs shown the members of the sub-committee. Indeed, it is well known that the major has a selection of cut-outs, all put together in reel form, covering the cut-outs of many years, which he has shown at various times to certain gatherings for the purpose of impressing them with the evils which he has shorn from moving pictures.

It is now several years ago since I drew special attention to the unfairness practiced by Major Funkhouser in such cases. Only one or two of these cut-outs might have been taken from a film that passed censorship otherwise, and yet the major, by his method, would seek to judge that entire film subject by the one or two cut-outs made. At any rate, his showing of the cut-outs in such a way tends to prejudice the spectator against moving pictures and is grossly unfair.

The news has been received with a great deal of pleasure in Chicago film circles and by the members of the sub-committee of the Council's judiciary committee that the "Rose of Blood," condemned by Major Funkhouser, was approved by the Division of Pictures of the Committee on Public Information, at Washington.

Censorship hearings will be continued next week.

"Go-to-Movie Week" Again Comes Around.

The "Go-to-Movie Week" plan, originated by "Bob Reel," moving picture editor of the Chicago American, a year ago, gives big promise of eclipsing the success achieved in 1916. This plan means a general boost for moving pictures in Chicago from Christmas to New Year's Day, during which time it is the duty of every picture fan in the city to influence as many people as possible to visit picture theaters. One week out of fifty-two has thus been set apart, specially, in honor of the great popular amusement.

"Let's Be Cheerful" is the motto adopted by Chicago fans for the occasion, and it is eminently appropriate. The president of one of Chicago's national banks, who yields to no one in his support of good pictures, says of the motto already referred to, "I think the cheerful slogan is great for all Chicago and I certainly am for it."

Chicago exhibitors are on their mettle to make the week memorable for picture fans, and they have promised to provide programs that will include the very best pictures that can be secured during that time. Charles G. Stuart, field secretary of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., sent the following letter to "Bob Reel" last week, on behalf of that organization:

"Our organization is heartily in favor of your second annual 'Go-to-Movie Week' Christmas to New Year, and hereby pledges support to this week of cheerfulness. We have a membership of over 200, representing 250 theaters in this city, so you can see what an impetus we are giving this movement.

"If my memory serves me right, last year you got out a 'Go-to-Movie Week' slide, and this was a very good idea. You should do the same this year. Anything that we can do to further this 'Go-to-Movie Week' movement we will gladly do."

Chicago has taken the lead in many ways during her career. The establishment of "Go-to-Movie Week" is one that should be followed by every city in the country. The moving picture is the great popular entertainer and educator, and one week in every year devoted to its honor is a fitting tribute.

By all means make the observance nation-wide.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Margarita Fischer, popular star of the American Film Co., has just finished her second feature since rejoining that company. It is entitled "Molly Go Get 'Em," and was produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. This comedy drama was written by Beatrice Van and the adaptation by Elizabeth Mahoney.

After a brief vacation, Miss Fischer will engage in the production of "High Heels," written by Helen Starr, the third of the new comedy dramas for the American in which she will appear as the star. The first was "A Daughter of Joan."

Dwight Furness, formerly a member of the American Film Company's office staff in Chicago, is now official U. S. photographer at the aviation camp in Hampton, W. Va. He recently had his first flight in an aeroplane, in which he took eight pictures. When Dwight came to earth after this first flight, a number of friends in the camp gathered around him, moving their lips but uttering no sound, hoping to make him believe that the noise of the trip and the altitude had made him deaf. Dwight, however, merely winked at them and stoically interested himself in looking after his camera.

Fred S. Meyer, sales manager of the Minneapolis branch office for Universal for eight years, has been promoted to the position of manager of that company's branch office in Milwaukee.

E. C. Smith, owner and manager of the Idle Hour theater, Rossville, Ill., is now engaged in rebuilding and enlarging that theater, which, when finished, will be the largest and prettiest picture theater in that town. On reopening, Mr. Smith will show feature pictures four nights a week. He will open with the Jewel feature, "Come Through," and it is reported that he has signed up for all the Jewel features that will be released.

Eli Van Ronkel, of the Jewel offices in Chicago, recently visited Milwaukee and booked the houses of the Saxe Brothers' theater enterprises for Jewel features.

Robert Zoncada is the latest member of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's staff to enter the U. S. government service. He left for New York Saturday, Dec. 8, to enlist in the United States navy. George Gibson and Fred Nieman, two other members of the Rothacker staff, are now engaged in government service at Washington, D. C., and it is expected that several others will soon leave to work for Uncle Sam.

"Cleopatra," with Theda Bara, was under consideration several times last week at the censorship hearings. On Saturday, Dec. 8, when several more cutouts were ordered made, representatives from the Chicago office of the Fox Film Corporation withdrew the picture and announced that they would take it to court where it would be tried strictly on its merits.

At a special meeting of Chicago local, M. P. T. O. Association, held at headquarters, this city, Friday, Dec. 7, B. T. Beatty, L. H. Frank, August Zilligen, Jr., and J. Cooper were appointed on a committee which left for Washington, D. C., Monday morning, Dec. 10. This committee's mission has chiefly to do with a modification of the war tax on picture theater admissions. The next regular meeting of the Chicago branch of the Association will be held Friday afternoon, Dec. 21.

Harry H. Buxbaum, special representative of Pathe, passed through the city last week, on his way from Minneapolis to Washington to join in the efforts of other representatives from various parts of the country to have the admission tax on picture theaters modified. While here, Mr. Buxbaum stated that all trouble over the 15c. reel tax on films has ceased in Minneapolis. He stated that the exhibitors are paying it without protest and reported that business at the picture theaters was fair.

A "Hello" luncheon was given at the College Inn Wednesday, Dec. 12, to the press and others in honor of Wallace Reid and Kenneth McGaffey, who stopped over on their way from the coast to New York, where Mr. Reid will do some work in a picture. While here, Mr. Reid visited as many theaters as his time would permit, and gave a short talk to the patrons. The visitors left the same night for Detroit where a stopover will be made and they will afterwards visit Cleveland and other cities on their way east. Mr. McGaffey is coast publicity man for Famous Players and the Lasky Company.

The meeting set by the license committee of the Chicago council, to decide on the raising of licenses on moving picture theaters, of 400 seats and upward, was postponed from Friday, December 14, to Tuesday, December 18. The change was made on the request made by the committee of the Chicago Local, in Washington attending the National Convention and Conference, which could not return in time for the original date.

Harriet Vittum, Mrs. Frankenthal and Mrs. Stumer, members of the Women's National Council for Defense, were present at the regular meeting of Chicago Local, held on Friday, December 7. They requested that the exhibitors of Chicago devote the whole of the receipts for a certain day, to be named later, to their cause. The request was referred to the executive committee, with power to act.

Chief of Police Schuettler, the ranking officer in the Chicago police department of Second Deputy Funkhouser, appeared in the Federal court Thursday, December 13, before Judge Carpenter, in the suit for a writ of injunction sought by the Fox Film Corporation against the city authorities for refusing to grant a permit for the "Rose of Blood." Chief Schuettler declared, in his opinion, that the picture should not be given a permit. On being told that it had received the sanction of the War Department at Washington, Chief Schuettler said: "If the Government wants the picture shown, I will certainly do all I can to see that it is shown. The Government will notify me and that will be the end of the matter."

Monday evening, December 10, Taylor Holmes, Lillian Drew, Virginia Valli, Lawrence D'Orsay, Frederick Burton and Rod La Rocque left for Phoenix, Arizona, where they will remain for some time taking scenes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," the locale of which was near Phoenix. "Ruggles of Red Gap" will be the next six-reel feature in which Taylor Holmes will star after "Uneasy Money."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 16 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Cinderella Man" at The Strand.

MAE MARSH appeared at The Strand, for the week of December 16, in her third Goldwyn picture, "The Cinderella Man," from Oliver Morosco's stage success by Edwin Childs Carpenter. The story of the play is that of Marjorie Caner, the motherless daughter of a gruff millionaire, Morris Caner, who is anxious to get her married off so he won't have to bother with her. The father's attitude is deplored by his three middle-aged friends, Romney Evans, a lawyer; Dr. Thayer, a physician, and William Sewall, a celebrated composer; and they combine to give her the romance her nature craves and to see that she is married to a man who is worthy of her. The supporting cast includes Tom Moore, Alec B. Francis, George Fawcett, Louis R. Grisel, George Farren, Elizabeth Arlans, Mrs. J. Cogan, Dean Raymond and Harry Scarborough.

Victor Moore was seen in his latest comedy, "The Installment Plan," and a scenic study of exceptional interest is scenes taken along Vada in Turkey. A chapter of Raymond L. Ditmar's Living Book of Nature and The Strand Topical Review were also shown.

Knud Dalgaard and Vadine Legot were the soloists.

Double Bill at the Broadway.

"The Girl by the Roadside," from the Varick Vanardy novel of the same name, featuring the Bluebird star, Violet Mersereau, was one of the numbers of the double bill at the Broadway. The cast includes Cecil Owen, Ann Andrews, Allen Edwards, Robert F. Hill, Royal Byron, Kenneth Hall and Sam B. Minter. The story is a lively one, and deals with the schemes of the suitors for a capricious young girl's favor.

Herbert Rawlinson in a five-part production, "The High Sign," with "Brownie" Vernon, Hayward Mack in the cast, is the other feature. J. Grubb Alexander and Waldemar Young are responsible for the story. It shows Donald Bruce, a member of a secret society, who is expelled from college for participating in the activities of the organization. A comedy, Current Events and Universal Screen Magazine completed the program.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Pathe presented the Moscow Art Theater players in "The Painted Doll." Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Thos. H. Ince's spectacular drama, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" was shown.

IT'S LE-MEE-ZAY-RABBL.

The success of William Fox's production with William Farnum in "Les Miserables," has brought again to the attention of the world the difficulty of the pronunciation of the title. In order that the thousands who are going to the box office at the Lyric Theater in New York may pronounce the name correctly Mr. Fox has placed in the lobby by the box office of the Lyric the following sign:

To pronounce Les Miserables say it this way: "Le-Mee-zay-rabbl." The first "e" is sounded like "e" in the English word "let" and the "s" is silent. There is no accent on any syllable. The "l" in "rabbl" is blended in the syllable and is not a full sound.

Christmas, 1917

"So Hallow'd and So Gracious is the Time"

IN DAYS like these, when the souls of men are being tried in the furnace of international strife and the fires of hate and destruction are burning in almost universal conflagration, the old Message of Peace and Goodwill may sound strange to many. But the World's need of it is greater than ever and the larger vision will recognize that all which its words typify should be voiced still more fervently so that the Just Peace which Our Country is helping to win will find us ready and eager to act toward all in the Spirit of Christmastide.

Whatever of sacrifice we have made or are called upon to make, we should look to the future with serenity, for out of this pain and suffering, this wasting of men's lives and bruising of women's hearts, shall come good multiplied a thousand-fold; and unborn generations shall live to know the sweets of Freedom and to bless the Nations that gave so unreservedly of blood and treasure that the Message which has kept the hearts of Christendom warm with kindness toward its fellowmen might spread its benign influence over the whole Earth.

Creel Repudiates Funkhauser

Declares That the Government Wishes "The Rose of Blood" Shown Everywhere, and That the Major Does Not Represent the Government.

THERE is the same right to a free film that there is to free speech or a free press," declared George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, perhaps better known as the Government's official censor for newspapers and magazines.

Mr. Creel made this statement in a deposition which he gave in connection with the suit of the Fox Film Corporation of New York to enjoin Major C. L. M. Funkhouser, film censor of Chicago, Ill., from forbidding the showing of "The Rose of Blood."

Major Funkhouser, in refusing to grant an exhibition permit for "The Rose of Blood," declared that he had done so because he believed the exhibition of the photodrama was inimical to the best interests of the Government in the prosecution of the war against Germany.

The Committee on Public Information reviewed "The Rose of Blood" and unanimously approved it for exhibition. But Major Funkhouser still insists that he is a better judge of what the Government needs than the officials designated for this service.

Mr. Creel's deposition was taken by Charles P. Schwartz of Chicago, representing the Fox company, and by Assistant Counsel Frank P. Ayres of Chicago, representing Major Funkhouser.

Mr. Creel, on direct examination, said: "A very intimate contact had been established between the Government and the motion picture industry, and the producers of the nation have worked generously to place the purposes and needs of America before the people through the films."

As indicating the close co-operation of the motion picture industry of the United States and the Government, Mr. Creel said that, while there is no absolute authority vested in the Committee on Public Information to suppress a picture, there has never been, at any time, that such a request made by the Committee had not been complied with instantly by the producer.

"I dissent in a great many instances from Major Funkhouser's observations as to the views of the Government," said Mr. Creel. "I do not think he is qualified, nor has he the authority, to speak for a Government bureau in these matters."

Mr. Creel said the Fox Film Corporation had "very generously" placed its entire organization at the disposal of the Government in an effort to aid in the successful prosecution of the war against Germany.

"Our sole object is to prevent the exhibition of pictures that this committee believes to be prejudicial to the national interests," said Mr. Creel on cross examination by Mr. Ayers, representing Major Funkhouser. "Aside from that we have no interest in any commercial enterprise, nor would we feel at liberty to infringe upon the legal rights of any local authority, municipal or state. We simply declare our opinions with regard to these films when presented to us, and that declaration of opinion carries with it no authority other than that imposed upon the individual by his own patriotism."

"We do feel a very vital interest in getting producers to put emphasis upon patriotic subjects, and solely because of that we do have an interest in the presentation of commercial films. We have made a general request of the motion picture industry that it concern itself more and more with the production of patriotic films."

"As a Government official do you want 'The Rose of Blood' to be exhibited in the cities of the United States, including Chicago?" asked Assistant Corporation Counsel Ayres.

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Creel. "I want this picture to be shown because it violates none of the requests of the Government and seems to us to convey a patriotic message."

"If it should appear that this picture illustrates an uprising against a government which is a friendly government, would you still say such a picture ought to be exhibited?" Mr. Ayres continued.

"The policy of this Government," declared Mr. Creel, "is to let the people know the facts in every case, and the suppression of facts or happenings is opposed to this policy."

"If it should appear that this film portrays an uprising against the Romanoff government of Russia at a time when that government was on friendly terms with this Government, would you say that such a picture should be exhibited at this time when we are at war?" persisted Assistant Corporation Counsel Ayres.

"The President of the United States himself has declared his full sympathy with that revolution," was Mr. Creel's answer. "It is absolutely opposed to the policy of this Government to suppress the news of world happenings, no matter whether such is liked or disliked by any nation. The Russian rebellion is a fact. We have accepted that fact and any newspaper, pictorial or film presentation of that rebellion is absolutely entitled to presentation so far as the Government is concerned. We do not object in any degree to any showing of that revolution on the ground that the Romanoffs were the heads of a friendly government."

Mr. Ayres then set out Major Funkhouser's objections to "The Rose of Blood," stating that "it portrays the revolutions which have occurred and are occurring in Russia, depicting the effects of bombs, firearms and poison. It consist principally of a series of unlawful actions of one mob after another," and asked whether Mr. Creel would object to the showing of the taking of human life on the screen.

"There is the same right to a free film that there is to a free speech and a free press," declared Mr. Creel, "and when the newspapers of the country comment daily upon the destruction of human life it is stupid to try to keep it from the screen."

The injunction proceedings will be heard in Chicago before Judge Carpenter, in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois during the present week.

HERMAN LIEB APPEARS IN "DAYBREAK."

Herman Lieb, an experienced player of the legitimate and vaudeville stage, appears in the prominent role of Herbert Rankin, the attorney, in support of Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of "Daybreak," the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. June Mathis and the director, Albert Capellani, made the adaptation.

He began his motion picture career in 1909 with the Essanay Company in Chicago. With this organization he wrote and directed one-reel pictures for some time. During the past summer season Lieb played a successful engagement with the Lieb & Harris Stock Company, of which he was half owner, at the Wilson Avenue Theater in Chicago. Lieb's character portrayal in the Metro picture, "Daybreak," is a noteworthy delineation.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Harold Lockwood and his company of players have returned to New York after spending three weeks in the lumber camps in the White Mountains of New Hampshire making exterior scenes for Mr. Lockwood's forthcoming Metro wonder-play, "The Avenging Trail," an adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo of Henry Owen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," under the direction of Francis Ford.

EMPIRE ALL-STAR QUILTS.

Existing arrangements with the Empire All-Star Corporation, which was organized last January to exploit Charles Frohman's successes in motion pictures, have been terminated. Charles Frohman, Inc., are again in the market to dispose of their plays to various motion picture companies as heretofore.

DURANT JOINS GOLDWYN.

H. R. Durant, until recently advisory head of the editorial department of the Empire All-Star Film Corporation, has joined the Goldwyn scenario staff. His able work for many years as assistant editor of the Munsey publications equipped Mr. Durant with a keen sense of story values.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

A WELL KNOWN motion picture critic commented upon the beautiful tint of one of my educational subjects recently which caused me to smile. Little did even this film critic suspect that we were showing a straight black and white film, but through a little trick in projection were showing on the screen a film of various beautiful tints. The idea is so simple and yet so wonderfully effective that it readily warranted my smiling. The Strand Theater very often receives black and white educational pictures and without touching the film itself we project the same film in beautiful tints. An assortment of inexpensive color gelatine plates, such as used in the ordinary colored spot light, does the trick. These plates are placed over the square opening in the projection booth through which the light is projected from the machine to the screen. We have had a set of these color gelatines made up into little windows which fit a frame surrounding the square opening through which light is projected. When a black and white picture, which we desire to tint, is thrown on the screen we drop a little colored window in the frame, causing the light to shine through the gelatine and giving a beautiful tint. A change in the color of the tint is made by the operator at a time when a title is on the screen. Recently we projected an entire feature photoplay which could not be tinted at the laboratory in time for our show, in this way.

As mentioned in my last article, the Strand endeavors to give, each week, a novelty bearing on the patriotic. My latest patriotic "bit" was presented right in the middle of the news weekly, when the audience least expected it, thus getting the always-desirable surprise element among the spectators. Immediately following the announcement in the newspapers that the "Rainbow" regiment had reached France, I obtained a news weekly of several months ago from the Strand Library, showing this contingent on parade in New York. Linking up those pictures with timely titles concerning the boys who had just arrived in France resulted in inciting wild applause among the audience. Just as the newspaper has a morgue and will tie up a news story with an old photograph, so has the Strand a Library of News Pictures, completely indexed. This "Library" does not mean that we carry a cellar full of film on hand all the time, but merely represents a card index, which is kept by one of our stenographers, telling just where pictures of every public event can be obtained, when they were first issued, etc. Thus, when the extra appeared on the streets that the Rainbow Division had just landed in France, which was the first news concerning this regiment for a number of weeks, we referred to our file, found out when and by whom the latest news pictures of this regiment were issued and with the aid of a few titles were able to show a timely news subject in less than an hour after the news appeared in the papers. I have never seen a news picture receive such wildly enthusiastic applause as was displayed in the case of this film.

In the middle of the news pictures showing the Rainbow boys in camp the house was dimmed, the screen raised and there on the stage in a night scene gathered around a campfire were four Sammies dressed exactly like the soldiers on the screen. Immediately a hush came over the house as the audience gazed at the camp scene with its twinkling lights in the distance. For these soldiers I engaged a splendid quartette who sung "Tenting To-Night," "There's a Long Long Trail," "Keep the Home Fires Burning" and "Smile! Smile! Smile!" With the second chorus of the last song there appeared in the dark blue sky immense paintings of Lincoln and Washington and then with the last line of the song, between the two highly illuminated paintings, appeared one of President Wilson which brought the house to its feet. Immediately upon conclusion of the last song the screen was lowered and the pictures of the soldiers in camp were continued on the screen.

Another effective bit which drew much applause was the rendition of "The End of a Perfect Day," by Herbert Watrous, basso. Before a lake-drop the song was commenced with stage lighting to represent twilight which faded gradually with the singing of the song until at the end of the second chorus the moonlight played upon the lake.

Educational pictures at their best seldom receive more than a mere ripple of applause. This is not due to the fact that they are not appreciated, but merely because such pictures seldom contain scenes that would extract spontaneous applause. On a series of pictures showing camping life I experimented with the scissors in an effort to obtain the unusual. Beautiful scenes showing camping life on a mountain lake presented views of exceptional artistic merit, but in order to sustain the interest the same views, showing such acts as the announcement of dinner with the campers preparing for the feast offered nothing unusual. By cutting out every third picture in the film itself the action of the scene was quickened so that when dinner was announced the figure just flew around in feverish haste. Hands and faces were washed in a flash, dishes were thrown in front of the campers and the food was consumed in record time. Several other scenes were speeded up and for the first time in the history of the Strand we were able to show a scenic picture which at every performance was accorded a riot of applause. In scenes of unusual beauty and actual educational value, we left the film as it was. Thus we had an educational film that was amusing as well as interesting.

Other numbers on the program were Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer," Violin Solos by Mery Zentay, natural color educational pictures, a Victor Moore comedy, "Toothaches and Heartaches," an organ solo and the orchestral opening number under the direction of Cal Edouarde, "Irish Rhapsody."

CAVALIERI WILL BE HERE.

While Mme. Lina Cavalieri is being shown on the screen in New York in the role of "The Eternal Temptress," she is enacting a very different part in Chicago, Illinois. Among opera devotees and music lovers of that city it is well known that Mme. Cavalieri is a most devoted wife to Lucien Muratore, tenor of the Chicago Opera Company, and one of the finest artists who has ever appeared in that city, according to the critics.

At the beginning of the war, M. Muratore braved the dangers of submarine warfare, which was then at its height, and returned to France, his native land, enlisting in his old regiment. There he served a year, was honorably discharged, and returned to America to rejoin the Chicago opera forces.

When the Chicago opera forces arrive in New York on January 22 to begin their season here, Mme. Cavalieri will be with them.

VIDOR, Florence. Born in Houston, Texas. American parentage. Is five feet, four and one-half inches tall, and weighs 125 pounds. Olive complexion, dark hair and brown eyes. Miss Vidor has had no stage experience, and went into pictures "just for the fun of it," but it was profitable fun, for she was able to make good, and, as she phrases it, she was "discovered by the general public; not by a director." Her debut was made in November, 1915, in Vitagraph's The Yellow Girl, and in addition to her connection with the western Vitagraph company, she played with Morosco and Fox. She is now playing leads in the Lasky productions. Notable parts have been Mimi, in A Tale of Two Cities; Mrs. Armstrong, in The Cook of Canyon Camp; Betty Armstrong, in Ameri- can Methods, and opposite Hayakawa in The Japanese School Boy. She likes golf, tennis and autoing, and is fond of animals, particularly birds and dogs.

Florence Vidor

REVELLE, Hamilton. Born in Gibraltar. His father was English and his mother a Spaniard. He is five feet, eleven inches tall and weighs 170 pounds. Black hair and brown eyes. Mr. Revelle made his stage debut when he was but sixteen years of age, starting as a member of the famous Augustin Daly stock company. In the past twenty years he has played for Belasco, Frohman, Fiske and the Selwyns. His screen debut was made in 1912 in Italy, for he has had the invaluable experience of a year with Ambrosio at Turin, his first picture being his original role of de Cosse-Bussac in Dubarry. He was a leading player with Metro for a year and is now with the Goldwyn Company playing leads in support of Mary Garden in "Thais" and "A Splendid Sinner." Other notable parts have been in "Lest We For- get," Armand Duval in "Camille," Dufresne in "Zaza," Don Luis in "Rece of the Rancho" and Jean in "Sapho."

Hamilton Revelle

RISDON, Elisabeth. Born in London. English parentage. Is five feet, five inches tall and weighs 128 pounds. Fair complexion, light brown hair and green eyes. Miss Risdon made her stage debut in 1908 and has played under Granville Barker, Lee Shubert, Winthrop Ames and William Faversham, and has been connected with productions at all the important London theaters before coming to this country. Her screen debut was made last year in "The Manxman," in which she played Kate. She has also done the name part in "The Mother," Hypatia in "Misalliance," Fanny in "Fannie's First Play" and other well-known stage plays. In her moments of leisure she is fond of needlework, knows and loves old books and out of doors she finds her recreation in walking, rather than in automobiling.

But her most profitable fad is a hunger for learning about things she did not know before, and the studio is still a land of novelty.

Elisabeth Risdon

CHESTER, Virginia Evelyn. Born in San Francisco. Her father was English and her mother Irish. She is five feet, five inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Fair complexion, blonde hair and blue eyes. Miss Chester made her screen debut back in November, 1910, her first appearance being in "The Yaqui Girl," a Pathe production. She has also been leading woman with the old Bison-101 Ranch Company and the Universal. Miss Chester is at present at work on a film suggested by the race suicide propaganda and formed the Mena Film Company for its production. She is an enthusiast on the subject of better babies and it was this interest that led her to write the scenario and arrange for its realization. But she is not altogether a faddist and in a press clipping she sends in she admits to a passion for pinochle, which whiles away the dreary waits in the studio. It's the best indoor sport.

Virginia Chester

PETROVA, Olga. Born in Warsaw, Poland. Her father was English and her mother of Polish birth. She is five feet, five inches tall and weighs 125 pounds. Auburn hair and green eyes. Mme. Petrova made her stage debut in 1905, and is famous as a stage star on both sides of the Atlantic. Her repertoire has included Shakespeare, Ibsen and the general run of classical drama. Her screen debut was made in "The Tigress," but she has been seen in many other screen productions and after numerous starring engagements she now heads the Petrova Picture Co. Unlike some of the stars who have come from the dramatic stage, she has heightened her reputation by her picture work, for she has inherent ability as a pantomimist and has never trusted wholly to her elocution to gain her effects. Perhaps one secret of her success is found in her statement that her work is her fad, and this is not a merely ornamental "for publication" remark.

COMPOSERS AND AUTHORS.

Here is a list of American composers and authors belonging to the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Some members have withdrawn since the society was formed, and these names I have omitted so far as I know them. Others have come in since the society was organized, and these I have included so far as I know them. It is not likely that any list of names nor of music can be expected to remain permanently either IN or OUT of the society. However, such as it is here is a list corrected up to date so far as I am able to get it. There may be further changes by the time this appears:

Abrahams (Maurice), Felix Arndt, Harold Atteridge.

Ball (Ernest R.), Philip Bartholomew, Max Bendix, Theodore Bendix, Irving Berlin, Henry Blossom, George Botsford, Robert Hood Bowers, John W. Bratton, J. Keirn Brennan, Ernest Breuer, George H. Broadhurst, A. Seymour Browne, Alfred Bryan, Vincent Bryan, Gene Buck, Harry T. Burleigh, R. H. Burnside, Benjamin Hapgood Burt.

A BOOSTER.

Mr. James O'Neill, who says his business keeps him traveling between New York and Winnipeg and that he is an ardent picture fan as well as a musical one, writes:

"I was in the 'Star Theater' in Kitchener (Ontario, Canada), and was struck by the excellence of the music they had there. The picture was Mary Pickford in 'Romance of Redwoods,' and I was surprised to hear such good music in so small a town. The pianist was operating a combined organ and piano and his efforts were worthy of a first-class house in a larger city. Now I made it my business to see him, and asked him how he could manage to play so exactly and he showed me some spare ideas of music and said he got his ideas from Clarence E. Sinn's page in the Moving Picture World. He is an Englishman, a clever musician and deserves much credit for his performances, I think, so I thought I would write you about him, and ask you to mention his good work. I am sure he would appreciate it."

Now, friend O'Neill, how could I help using your letter when the subject of it speaks so delightfully about my page in the Moving Picture World?

I cannot speak from any recent experience, but I have been led to believe that good music is no real novelty in small towns. Mr. O'Neill's experience seems to indicate that it is a rarity. Whichever way it is, one fact stands out:

the small town musician seldom if ever gets any credit for his (or her) good work, while the city musician receives a bit of printed applause occasionally. And this goes for the small town exhibitor, too. I am glad to take Mr. O'Neill's word for it that the young man deserves a boost, and will add that the manager also is to be included. He is evidently a showman who knows what he wants and gets it even though he has to import it. I'll bet a dollar the operator showed the picture the way it should be put on, too.

THE CINEMA MUSIC COMPANY.

I wish to acknowledge the receipt of violin parts of some moving picture music issued by the above named firm. Judging from the parts sent me I should say their music is attractive as well as useful. It is called "cinema incidental music," is printed on one side of separate sheets (loose leaf style), and the playing time of each is indicated at the top of the page. For example, No. 1 is a dramatic theme and is divided into five numbered sections; that is, each strain is numbered. At the top of the page is the announcement:

From 1 to 2.....	40 seconds.
" 2 to 3.....	19 "
" 3 to 4.....	40 "
" 4 to 5.....	42 "
Coda	30 "

Total 4 minutes, 10 seconds.

No. 2 (A Pathetic Andante) is divided into four numbered strains and the playing time is given as 3 min. 25 sec.

The firm announces that three more numbers are now in press, viz:

"Dramatic Recitative".....	By Sol. P. Levy
"Dramatic Agitato".....	By Henry Hough
"Heavy Mysterioso".....	By Sol. P. Levy

I am requested to say that this music is not subject to any music tax.

REMICK DROPS OUT.

The following printed statement is being circulated among the members of the American Federation of Musicians:

MUSICIANS TAKE NOTICE.

November 27, 1917.

The undersigned beg to announce that they have tendered their resignation to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and that all our publications are free from tax wherever played.

CAREY WILSON JOINS FIRST NATIONAL.

Carey Wilson, one of the best-known figures in the New York film sales field, last week assumed the management of the First National Exchange, the New York distributing offices for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Wilson resigned from the Fox Film Corporation some two weeks ago.

Mr. Wilson's active film experience began as an exhibitor eight years ago, from which field he joined William Sherry when the latter opened the New York Exchange for releasing the first Famous Players film, "The Prisoner of Zenda." This association continued until three years ago, when he joined the Fox organization for the purpose of installing the contract system of bookings throughout the United States. In this task he acquired active experience in every exchange city of the country. Shortly after he opened the Canadian offices for Fox and left Canada on two days' notice to go to Australia and New Zealand. During 1916 Mr. Wilson covered over fifty thousand miles of territory, opening the Fox offices in Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide (Australia) and Wellington, N. Z. It was at this time he renewed his acquaintance with J. D. Williams, manager of the First National circuit.

Returning to America, Mr. Wilson's first task was the metropolitan booking office for "The Honor System."

Mr. Wilson's association with the First National Exchange is expressed in his own words as follows: "We have the one universal attraction in the industry, Chaplin, and lined up with him we have pictures such as 'Empty Pockets.' The men at the head of this organization are men with big ideas—and big plans for carrying out the ideas."

Mr. Wilson is situated at the newly established First National Exchange, at 509 Fifth avenue, where has been prepared one of the finest and best equipped exchanges in the city.

Madge Kennedy

FEW actresses lay claim to the number and variety of talents that have been developed by Madge Kennedy, one of the ablest of American comedienne, who has but recently added to her list of accomplishments her appearance in Goldwyn Pictures.

Miss Kennedy will always be remembered as the comedienne who made America laugh in a series of comedy successes. This was not because she lacked other talents, but because the others were subordinated to the one that made her famous.

But first of all Miss Kennedy was and still is a painter of such ability that had she not taken up a career on the stage through chance she might have been widely known as an artist.

Miss Kennedy also is a capable cartoonist. Her rare sense of humor has generated many comic creations, some of which have been published, and which have attracted the attention of noted comic artists. Only recently, while busy with her first screen production, the little comedienne created a new idea in comics, which was praised by Harrison Fisher, who expressed the opinion that the new idea would meet with great success. Shortly before that Miss Kennedy painted a patriotic poster.

Miss Kennedy's earliest ambition was to be a painter, and she still hopes to make a name for herself in that field. Leaving her home in California while she was yet a young girl, she went to New York, where she joined the Art Students' League. Her work attracted considerable attention, and she was making rapid progress when the turn of fate changed the course for her career.

She had gone to a camp in Maine with other art students, where there was also a group of actors. Some theatrical performances were given for the party's amusement. Miss Kennedy took part in some of them. Henry Woodruff applauded her one day, and she asked him for a chance. He gave it to her in "The Genius."

The fortunes of the stage soon brought Miss Kennedy to Cleveland—out of work—where she joined the Colonial Stock Company.

That was six years ago. Two years in the stock company prepared the comedienne for the opportunity she had waited for. She was offered a part in "Over Night," the first comedy in which she ever had an important role.

From that time her success was assured. Her rise in the last four years is familiar to most theatergoers. It was accomplished with such successes as "Little Miss Brown," "Twin Beds," "Fair and Warmer." Now, in turning to the screen, she has been seen in another of Margaret Mayo's great stage successes, "Baby Mine," and in Edgar Selwyn's comedy-drama, "Nearly Married."

AND THE GAME WENT RIGHT ON.

In the making of the new William Fox photoplay, "The Kingdom of Love," one of the most important scenes is laid in a dance hall in the Klondike. Director Frank Lloyd thought he had put on the last touch of realism when he had a real bar and a real dancing floor and real card tables. But even then he was to be taught that these things sometimes can be made truer than they seem. It happened that on the corner of a stage was a group of men who often played cards together.

"Those men over there are acting splendidly," said the director. "Let us get them in the picture."

So the cameraman went over and took the men playing. "That is all," said the director when he had what he wanted. "I am through. You men can stop."

"But the scene is not through," answered one of the men, without looking up. Then to the other players he said with a satisfied expression:

"I'll play these."

"Beach Heroes" (Universal).

A LUCID illustration of the efficiency of the professional life saver of our coasts and of his equipment is given in the Screen Magazine No. 52. Here we learn that a man stationed day and night in the lookout tower of the life saving station is constantly on the watch for distress signals. The answer to distress signals calls into immediate service the beach cart which carries the necessary equipment, the Lyle gun which fires a whip line 400 yards, and the life saving crew. In the picture we see the triangle brace set up on the shore for the support of the whip line, and also the conveying of a life buoy to the victim, who is then hauled ashore over the whip line.

"Making Nature Study Real" (Universal).

A remarkable subject, even though it may be somewhat unpleasant, illustrates in a clear and interesting manner just how replicas of the natural environment of animals and serpents from different parts of the world is manufactured and set up in the American Museum of Natural History. This includes also groups of animals belonging to this particular environment. In the present instance the actual chloroforming of a snake is shown, the making of the mold in plaster of paris, the pouring of the melted wax into the mold and finally the coloring of the artificial snake copied from the live snake, which is allowed to wriggle about on the artist's table. Then there is the preparation of the 200-year-old turtle for the group and the erection of trees, with foliage and fauna in imitation of a spot in the Florida Everglades, contained in Screen Magazine No. 52.

"Fishing for Fish" (Educational-Bruce).

A beautiful and interesting scenic made by Robert C. Bruce on his recent trip across the continent. This picture, which consists principally of scenic beauties, was taken on the middle fork of the Flathead River, on the northern boundary of Glacier National Park. The fishermen in question in their keen interest in fishing for fish forget that they are approaching the rapids, and suddenly thrust into them they have all they can do to right their boat. But in spite of it all the main fisherman continues to swing his line. Beautiful glimpses of distant scenery, or reflections of surrounding mountains are among the pleasing features of the picture.

"The Pearl of the Atlantic" (Pathe).

Delightful views of Belle Isle, off the coast of Brittany, are presented on the Pathe program. These views, which are nicely tinted, cover a half reel of film and are interspersed with explanatory subtitles which tell us much about this isle, which was used as a detention camp in the time of Napoleon III. The coast line is rugged and gives evidence of the constant breaking of the waves against it. Villages and towns and specimens of quaint architecture, including the home of Sarah Bernhardt, are also shown.

"Lake Louise" (General Film-Essanay).

A delightful scenic number in which we are shown the beautiful Lake Louise in the Canadian Rockies and much of interest in that vicinity, including the valley of the Ten Peaks, Mount Saddleback, a panorama of Paradise Valley and Mount Temple and the edge of the Great Divide. The lovely cascade of Lake Agnes and the "lakes in the clouds" form an interesting part of the picture. This number of the Essanay scenic series will be much enjoyed.

"Skiing at Colorado Springs" (Paramount-Bray).

To sport lovers this subject contained in the 98th release of the Pictograph will be found unusually interesting. The majestic Rockies form a background for the exhilarating sport of skiing. Here we see amateurs as well as professionals taking the most daring of leaps on the natural skiing ground provided by the mountains. The photographing of the marvelous leaps of the sports-men has been done with a view to getting them at every angle.

"Strange Fresh Water Creatures" (Pathe).

A half-reel, in which are included many closeup studies of water needles, snails, blind water shrimp and various other diminutive creatures which live in pools and sluggish streams, is coupled with the scenic entitled "The Pearl of the Atlantic." The picture is tinted and is intensely interesting as an illustration of these peculiar little creatures and their traits.

"The Rotagravure Section" (Pathe).

An entertaining and instructive half-reel study is shown in a current Pathe release. This picture explains in detail the rotagravure process of printing now in vogue in the magazine sections of Sunday newspapers. In the picture we see among other things how the full-page photographic plates are made, and also the taking of carbon tissue prints and the etching of the cylinder. The subject is one of general interest and gives a clear idea of this new method. An amusing animated drawing follows this subject.

"A Substitute for Butter" (Paramount-Bray).

Among the hints to housewives presented in the Pictograph, one of the most useful is found in the 98th release, when we are shown how to make what seems to be an excellent substitute for butter in cookery. This substitute as formulated by the Home Economics Department of Cornell University, in conjunction with the New York State Food Supply Commission, consists in the main of rendered animal fats and sour milk. A pie with the crust made from this concoction looks very appetizing.

"How Doth the Little Busy Bee" (Paramount-Bray).

A nice illustration of how the "little busy bee" manufactures sweets second to none is given in the 98th release of the Pictograph. Here we are shown the various kinds of bees which are necessary in the bee hive, such as the queen, the drone and the worker bee. Many points of interest in the daily work of these insects is shown. At a time when the acquisition of a sufficient supply of sugar is well-nigh impossible our attention is drawn to the fact that a larger cultivation of bees might be a move in the right direction.

Family Night

A Report from Waterville, Kansas, Spells Encouragement for Conquest Pictures as Well as Faithful Workers.

IN the small towns and in the residential sections of our cities what is known as "Family Night" at the moving picture theater is becoming more and more of an established institution, according to reports received from time to time through the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films, as well as through other sources. In Kansas, Utah and Washington the activities of the Affiliated Committees are being largely felt, and the Kansas State Federation of Parent-Teachers' Associations, of which Mrs. J. L. Beggs is chairman, has been sending to social welfare organizations throughout the state a letter describing how to organize special family night performances. This includes about five hundred towns and cities, from which it is hoped that encouraging answers may be received.

The following report from Mrs. Florence M. Palmer, of Waterville, Kansas, tells its own interesting story:

In telling of our "Family Night" at our moving picture show it may be of interest to some to know just how we started this Better Films Movement. Waterville has a Y. M. C. A. organization of over forty boys ranging from eight to sixteen years in age. About a year ago some little difficulties made it seem necessary, in order for the leaders of those boys to do their best work, that the parents co-operate with them and get more closely in touch with the boy life outside of the home.

The mothers of these boys decided to get together, not as an organized club, but as a band of mothers to work together for the best interests of their boys; to exchange experiences and help each other in every way possible. At the first regular meeting the question came up, "What can we do first to be of real help to our boys and girls?" and the vote was unanimous to ask a night at a picture show suitable for our young people. Information and lists of suitable films were secured. A petition was drawn up requesting that one of these pictures be shown one night each week, which was signed by the ministers of our churches, our school board and teachers, and, with a very few exceptions, by our business men and citizens. The ministers gave very nice announcements of the movement from their pulpits; the school superintendent gave notices of our Family Night Programs each week in the school, and valuable assistance was also given by the school teachers and our newspaper. Our Family Night has been established for six months, Conquest programs having been given for the last five weeks.

Too much cannot be said in praise of these programs. They fill the need of an evening's entertainment for the entire family. Already our young people have shown a decided preference for their night over others. Our picture show management has given us its hearty co-operation.

Judge Brown as Producer

Children's Advocate to Release Characteristic "Stories of Youth" Through General Film.

ONE of the most interesting acquisitions in many months is announced this week by General Film Company. It is a series of two-reel stories by Judge Willis Brown, the great children's advocate and author of numerous successful film features. Beginning about Jan. 1, this new series will be distributed at intervals by General Film Company and will constitute an important advance in the presentation of photoplays, appealing to young and old alike. The California Cinema Company at Los Angeles, recently incorporated, is sponsor for the productions.

Judge Brown is the country's foremost authority on juvenile matters and has originated many unique and worthwhile legal and educational methods in behalf of minors. He originated and was the administrator of the Parental Court of Gary, Indiana, the first of its kind, and was the founder and first judge of the Utah Juvenile Courts, said to be the most advanced juvenile court in the world. He also originated the Boy City movement at Charlevoix, Michigan, and devised the Boyville civic plan, an educational system of boys' work based on preventative lines, and has done more than any other authority to improve and advance conditions with regard to the status of juvenile cases in and out of the courts of the land.

Judge Brown's appearance as a film producer is not casual nor experimental. As a writer of photoplay stories of youth he is already a sensational success. Three of his most recent film successes are "The Saint's Adventure," featuring Henry B. Walthall; "The Girl Who Won Out," featuring Violet MacMillan, and "The Spirit of '17," in which Jack Pickford is starring. For some months he has had in preparation the new screen material written in his characteristic vein to be known as the "Judge Brown Stories." For the most part juvenile actors will be featured in these new stories, and they will be rich in the sympathetic human interest element which the author so charmingly picturizes. Judge Brown's talent needs no introduction to the exhibitor and public and it is predicted that his new photoplays will receive an eager reception.

Prison Reform in Mexico

Interesting Series of Views Calling Attention to Mexican Reforms Snapped by Universal Cameraman.

WITH the bulk of public attention centered on war-ridden Europe it has been easy for the moment to forget that under the natural law of constantly changing conditions something has been going on for better or for worse in that country of our Southern border, so recently in the throes of bloody revolution. The Universal Screen Magazine No. 52 has something of especial interest regarding Mexico to tell American audiences, something of cheerful outlook, and something beyond the dreams of those who have known the Mexico of old. It tells us by means of realistic illustrations that the Carranza government has remodeled the whole prison system of Mexico, that capital punishment has been abolished, and that the Juarez prison, Merida, Yucatan, has become a splendid reformatory under Governor Salvador Alvarado.

Under Porfirio Diaz, we are told, about 3,000 prisoners were confined at the Juarez prison, that sometimes as many as ten men were thrown into one cell, and that they were subjected to other frightful cruelties. At the present time the prison, which is patrolled by guards night and day, has 98 inmates. The Maya Indian Guard, by the way, is inspected daily. Among other reform measures instituted at the Juarez prison, the profit from sales of furniture made by the prisoners is given for the support of their families. Each day these prisoners are required to attend a school which is maintained at the prison, for several hours each day. There is also a complete modern hospital ward there, where ailing prisoners receive the best of care. Nourishing food, which is daily inspected by Warden Posada, is served in the prison; and in the main corridor of the prison friends and relatives of the prisoners may visit them between the hours of 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. The chief occupation of these prisoners is the making of rope and hammocks.

The Universal Film Company is to be congratulated on being able to give the public this hopeful morsel.

Interesting Physical Culture Number

Second Issue of MacFadden Physical Culture Magazine Holds Interesting Material.

IN the second issue of the Physical Culture Magazine, which is being prepared by Bernarr MacFadden for the General Film Company, will be found considerable to interest. Bernarr MacFadden, himself fifty years of age, illustrates a method of arm movements by which the shoulder and arm muscles may attain marvelous power, reducing flesh and adding symmetry to that part of the body. The swimming pool is another interesting and attractive feature, where athletic, well-developed young women prove their ability to swim and dive. This includes closeups, in which the movements of the body can be clearly discerned. "Waterloo Tag" is just a bit of play in which these same young women and the water hose play the principal parts. A simply contrived gymnasium for children, erected on the lawn, will interest parents, and it is here that we are privileged to see the eight-year-old daughter of Bernarr MacFadden chin the pole fourteen times in succession with evidently little exertion.

As this "magazine on the screen" develops we may hope for many useful hints with regard to keeping in good repair the muscle machinery of our bodies.

Strand Exhibits Beautiful Scenic

Wonderful Colored Views of Yellowstone National Park, Its Terraces and the Grand Canyon Photographed by Ralph Earl and Presented by Pathe.

ONE of the most beautiful specimens of colored film that we have seen recently is contained in the views of Yellowstone National Park, with its terraces and the Grand Canyon, in the bottom of which runs the Colorado River, and which was exhibited at the Strand Theater the week of December 2. The vivid colors of the Canyon, for instance, have never been copied more accurately, and the waterfalls and other beauties of Yellowstone are almost beyond description as they appear in the Ralph Earl scenic, which is being released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a part of the series entitled "Our National Parks."

This series of scenics may be truthfully recommended to the exhibitor as a feature of his program.

Film for Roman Catholic Propaganda

"The Victim," Multiple-Reel Production, Idealizes Priestly Character as Proving True to His Trust in Confessional.

FOR those of Romanist faith a film produced and presented by the Catholic Art Association, entitled "The Victim," will be found pleasing and interesting in theme. The picture was directed by Joseph Levering and has a strong human appeal, as well as containing authentic church scenes. Special attention has evidently been paid to the proper costuming of church officials, and to the maintaining of the dignity due the portrayal of the ceremonies of any religious body.

A review of this picture will be found on another page of this issue, where the story of the priest who placed his right to live second to the trust placed in him in the confessional, will be fully told.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

According to the December Bulletin of the Affiliated Committee for Better Films, the following longer dramatic pictures have been used successfully for special programs.

Artaft—"The Woman God Forgot," "The Little Princess," "The Silent Man;" Fox—"Les Miserables," "This Is the Life;" Famous Players-Paramount—"Arms and the Girl," "Bab's Burglar," "Bab's Matinee Idol," "The Antics of Ann," "The Clever Mrs. Carfax;" Goldwyn—"Spreading Dawn," "Nearly Married;" Ince-Paramount—"Son of His Father;" Ince-U. S. Exhibitors—"The Zeppelin's Last Raid;" K-E-S-E (Essanay)—"Two Bit Seats;" (Edison)—"Courage of the Commonplace;" Metro—"Draft 258;" Mutual—"A Game of Wits;" World—"Adventures of Carol."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

That National Publicity.

SUPPOSE you look at the national advertising campaigns of the various film makers in a new light. Did you ever stop to realize that perhaps you are one of the reasons? Of course it is understood that the men who rule the destinies of the big companies are not making million-dollar advertising appropriations merely because they have kind hearts or because they like to see their names in print. They are advertising to popularize their brands; to make business for themselves by making business for the exhibitor, but did you ever realize that right down at the bottom of the whole matter the companies are advertising to the patrons and possible patrons direct because so much of the local advertising is inefficient? That is the real reason that lies at the bottom of all these campaigns. They have to go out and get new patrons for the exhibitor because the average exhibitor does not get new patrons for himself, as he should. If he did, the companies would have to advertise only in the trade papers with an occasional appeal to the public. As it stands, they must create a demand on the part of the public because too many of the exhibitors overlook the need for building up the business in general. Far too many exhibitors are not advertising the picture business, but certain picture titles, and these only, and these they are advertising to the fans; those who have been converted to pictures. If John Smith likes Hart or Chaplin, he comes when you advertise a picture in which the star is to be seen, but the average exhibitor never thinks to advertise the delights of motion pictures as such. He makes no new business. He simply struggles to hold that which he has. Why not take a leaf from the book of the advertiser and seek to popularize your house? Make people come to the theater because your house is the trade mark of good shows. Don't ride on the popularity of a brand. Do just what the brand has done. Take your own personal trade mark to the public and drive it home. Get all the benefit you can from the popular trade marks if you use those brands, but make it plain that the reason that a show is good is because it is at the Star, or the Lyceum, or whatever your house is named. Point out that it is not merely the film that gives pleasure, but the right films in the most advantageous surroundings. Talk of your music, of the comforts of your auditorium, tell of your projection and the care you take in the selection of your programs. Point out the little services your house staff has been instructed to perform. Tell that you give all these and the advertised brands and it will not be so necessary for the large companies to advertise for new patrons with which you may keep your house open in order that they may do business with you. Paramount and Goldwyn and others in advertising to the patron seek to create a demand that will necessitate your use of their product. Follow the leaders and create in the minds of the local public that your house is as necessary to the enjoyment of the films as are the films themselves. Then make it so.

Took Liberty Bonds.

Sidney B. Lust, to advertise "The Cold Deck" in his territory around Washington, D. C., advertised that Liberty Bonds would be accepted in lieu of cash for rental of the subject, stipulating that the bonds must be of the second issue, then current. The immediate response was about $3,000 in bonds, and they are still coming. He used for his slogan "Let W. S. Hart buy your Liberty Bonds."

Search Us.

During the recent terrible floods in China the Empire, Tientsin, was one of the sufferers, and the editor of the Revue, their house organ, tells this amusing story:

When the flood waters were approaching us at the Empire we followed the example of everybody else and commenced to barricade and cement all available openings into which water was likely to penetrate.

Our staff, with commendable energy, commanded every thing likely to be of service in this direction, and today there can be seen adorning our main entrance one of our large bill boards banked up with mud, with half a poster still visible on which can be seen in large letters a very appropriate commentary on the floods.

WHO'S GUILTY.

It will make good pick up copy for American printers. But the editor is commencing to scrap with the opposition house. It doesn't help any. If the Arcade is all he says it is, which it is not, then there is no reason to be afraid. If it is, the loss said about it is better. We used to love the suppositious Arizona Kicker for the slams at its esteemed contemporaries, but in real life it does not work out the same way.

Throwaways.

Throwaways are not, as a rule, a good form of advertising, but they are more or less useful in emergencies where there is no time to resort to newspaper advertising, where there is no daily paper, or to supplement the work in the paper; particularly in the case of the weekly paper with a special attraction showing some days after the day of the paper's issue. The throwaway, as its name implies, is at best an impermanent form of advertising. It is printed on cheap stock, with little care, and generally in a hurry. It is read and thrown down, seldom being carried, and the essential is that it should get its message to the recipient at a glance. There may be some supplementary text, but the three chief factors of day, place and attraction should be so displayed that these can be taken in at a single glance. But because throwaways are a cheap form of advertising, it does not mean that the work may be carelessly done. For the very reason that you stand but half a chance of reaching a reader, the copy should be written with extreme care and the job should be followed to the printer's to see that the type selection is such that the paper lines stand out.

Through the courtesy of the Hardwicke Brothers, of Clevis, N. M. who sent on a complete set of their throwaways of several months, we have been able to get some good examples of throwaways of different types, but the Hardwicks apparently lift their material from the columns of the daily papers, making one composition cost serve for two jobs. This is an excellent scheme for cost cutting where the copy is such that it will serve both ends, but the copy that is excellent for newspaper work may not always show to as good advantage on a throwaway, though a throwaway, if well set, should work well as a newspaper advertisement. One thing we particularly like about the Hardwicke advertising is that even in their throwaways they always date their days. Most advertisers consider the "tonight" ample for their use, arguing that the man who gets it will not suppose that the attraction will be shown next Monday if he gets the paper on a Friday. This is true to some degree, but we think it is best practise to date every piece of advertising. One man may get the copy and know that "tonight" means the day of receipt. Another may pick up the discarded bill and not know whether that "tonight" means today or yesterday and he may not be sufficiently interested to look the matter up.

The first example shown presents two attractive throwaways for Marguerite Clark in two of her plays. The copy is well written and well displayed, but they are too much alike to be issued within eight days of each other. There is apt to be the unspoken suggestion that the same thing has been seen before and it is discarded without reading. It is the same principle precisely, as the store window that is never redressed. The display becomes so familiar that you pass it by without notice. Unless the same form is invariably used, so that the very form of display is in itself an advertisement for the house, it is best to vary the form as much as possible, that each piece of advertising may be distinctive. Of the two pieces of copy, that on the right seems the better, yet the upper and lower case name to the left is more easily read than the all-capital line, just as the punch line is more easily followed. But "Vowed never to lose her heart," is simple and direct, therefore better than the similar line with the prefix of "The story of the girl—" A better line for that would have been merely, "She could not tell the truth." The line used is that from the company press work, but the shorter line tells the same thing more strongly in fewer words and therefore is to be preferred. We know it is a story. The left-hand advertisement is better in that it gives the times of performance, but the one on the least get them in for the Pickford and then tell them on the screen of the fine attraction for the following day. Do not offer a choice lest indecision cause the prospect to stay away from both.

The fourth example also uses a stock frame, and in an effort to make the use of the frame plain, it features the minor attraction above Chaplin. This would serve if the name of Chaplin were played up more strongly, so that it stood out above the other, but this is not done and the value of the advertisement is almost negative. The fifth display is too much small type for a throwaway. It is good copy if it is read, but unless the throwaways are sent into the residential district few will have the time to read all the copy. It would have been better to have played up "If your Father" in larger type, even at the cost of pulling the leads from the Roman. Then, by breaking the title to two lines, interest could have been roused to get some, if not all, to read in between. As it stands, the full face is too nearly the size of the body type to attract. The last specimen is about the poorest of the lot. The type is jumbled and the use of the small cut is even worse than the square of Fairbanks. A cut that size might work well with considerable copy and other cuts in a half or quarter-page layout, but it is too small to be impressive on a small sheet. It looks unimportant. It will convey the subtle suggestion that the subject is unimportant. A cut is an attractor only when it is large enough to seem worth while and a thumbnail cut has no place on a throwaway of any size, even when used in combination with others. It is too small to stand out and, therefore, too small to be used. Where it could be used, the name should fall below the cut and not above it. A cut four times that size (twice as wide) might have worked well, for then it would look like something, but this is too small to be used for any throwaway work. This does not apply with equal force to the trade-mark cuts, for a trade mark is not supposed to be as important as a star, but the mind instinctively argues that if Fairbanks or Miss Stewart were important they would have larger cuts.

The next display offers three samples, each about five by eight inches. Here the cuts are large enough to look important and so serve their purpose as attractors. That on the right has an odd use of rule right uses fewer words to describe the story. This descriptive matter is apt to be read by but few of those who get a throwaway and the shorter the paragraph the more likely it is to be read. One hundred words that will be read are better than a thousand that only ten per cent. will read. This holds equally true of the throwaway and the newspaper advertisement. The brevity that is not gained at the expense of clearness is the thing most to be desired in any advertisement from the 28 sheets down to liners. In preparing copy it is always a question as to whether the star or the attraction should be played up. Generally it is the star, unless the play is so well known that the mention of that title is apt to draw better business than the star. Broadway Jones without George M. Cohan should be featured above the chief player, but Broadway Jones with Cohan should name the author above the play. Both advertisements are well displayed in type, but the Hardwickes have their printers trained and well trained.

The next reproduction shows six small slips about two by six inches each, though some are slightly wider than others. Compare first the two Fairbanks advertisements on the left. The first of these is a jumble of type. Nothing stands out distinctly and there is far too much to be read. You do not know what to read first to get the information and so nothing is read, but the slip is apt to be thrown down. On the other hand, the second example is almost ideal in that it permits the reader to see at a glance that Douglas Fairbanks in "Flirting with Fate" is to be seen at the Lyceum theater. Here the word theater seems to have been added to the house name to give balance to remainder of the advertisement. The rest of the display is in double lines. A single line for "Lyceum" would have spoiled work, but to some extent it isolates the name of the house and the date from the name of star and attraction. On a throwaway this is less important than it would be in a newspaper space, but it is best to enclose all of the matter within the same rule if it all relates to the same subject. The arrangement of type is good in both of the outside examples, but Fairbanks is better connected with his portrait than is Farnum. It would have been better had the Farnum text kept up in 36-point through two more words, making the display line read, "If Dustin Farnum Isn't Irish," dropping to twelve for the matter that follows. The important line is not "If Dustin Farnum," but if he is not Irish, and the display should be kept up to carry the message over. By doing this the value of the line would have been increased many times. The middle example is all right as to copy, but the printer went wrong on this. The honor of offering Sothern is not worth what is virtually an eighteen-point face. The honor would have the effect. In general the word "theater" is supposed to be understood, but here it gives balance, and so its use is good form. The copy for the second advertisement is also more direct. The lines run, "Douglas Fairbanks hired a professional assassin to end it all when the girl he wanted to marry became engaged to another man in 'Flirting with Fate,'" and goes on to tell how the girl changed her mind and Fairbanks had a lively time sidestepping his hired murderer. In a few lines it gives a good idea of the story, an idea that will tell the person of average intelligence that the story should be a good one. It will make him want to see it that he may tell how it came out.

The third example uses a stock cut. Note how the black "today" and "tomorrow" hide the titles. It obscures the name of Miss Pickford, almost wholly obliterates the title of her play and reduces the other title to nothingness. As a general thing it is a mistake to advertise two attractions on the same throwaway, and it is always an error to use the same paper for two days with different programs. Get them the Pickford today and get after them on the screen for the next subject on the tomorrow. If you cannot afford two throwaways, at been as great in an eight-point italic, and this would have given about twenty-four points for the name of the star, using a condensed letter to get the same width and a greater height. Similarly, the line that follows could have been cut down to give greater display to the play title. As it stands the lines are too nearly of equal value for any one of them to get the proper display. This is a matter that calls for personal care. The printer will not do it for you. You must tell him. If he knew enough to always play up the most valuable lines, he would be in a position to get a job as advertising man that should pay him better than sticking type. Here, too, it is a tactical error to announce Chaplin on the Sothern bill. They should be coaxed to see Sothern. They are more likely to come for the Chaplin without persuasion. To announce Chaplin is virtually to take some of the business from the Sothern night. Of course it is necessary to announce him before the day of playing, but not on the same bill.

The next sample is not unlike some that we reproduced last summer. The layout is particularly good, but apart from the layout the display is well planned for a model. The chief facts are given at the top of the display. If you read the copy at all you will know that Valentine Grant is at the Lyceum in "The Daughter of McGregor" on Monday, May 7. The times of showing and the prices of admission are also clearly indicated. If you are interested you can read the small type, but about five lines pulling up the big facts would be better still, perhaps—

She ran away from her strict Scotch father.
And by joining a traveling circus she was able to go to Her uncle in the lumber camps of Florida, where She foiled a band of desperate thieves.

This picks up the big facts and hands them to you in brief.

The last examples give two sizes of advertisement. The smaller is 7½ by 7 inches, and the other 10 by 7. The former (on the right) is the better planned; not because it makes a prettier display, though this helps not a little, but because there is no distraction. The larger space seeks to give equal display to two big attractions, and it cannot be done. It is better to drive home one title than to merely mention two without making an impression for either. Three cuts are not three times as attractive as one cut. They are three times more confusing. One cut is an attractor, two or more are distractors. Even the two Arbuckle cuts would not be as good as a single cut, as a rule, and with Miss Clark in between the effect is really confusing. You have neither the time nor the space in which to drive home a lot of facts, and to attempt to display two or more subjects on a single sheet is to waste most of the endeavor. It is better to tell one title well than to advance two of them indifferently.

And here is a little thing to be remembered. A portrait cut should invariably face the copy and not seem to be looking away from it. The best cuts are those which seem to face the reader. The next best are those which seem to be looking directly at right angles, but they must be looking at the copy to which they belong. In the case of the Clark cut she has turned her back upon her own type, and is directing attention to the Arbuckle copy. The two displays should have been reversed to get the proper effect.

The rules for throwaways are very simple.

Say as little as possible and say it as strongly as possible.

Get the house, the time, and the attraction in letters so much larger than the rest of the type that these facts cannot be overlooked.

Trust to type rather than to small cuts for attraction.

Use the plainest possible type consistent with a good looking job.

Have the job as neat as possible, but not fussy. Elaborate rule work and ornamentation are out of place.

Try to drive but one fact home. If you have two days, use two bills.

A Noisy Ballyhoo.

A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., sends in the photograph of a recent ballyhoo for a Fairbanks. The film was played for the benefit of the Central School and the boys all helped with the ballyhoo. Mr. Middleton seems to make a point of standing in with the march of local events, and we know of nothing better to help business. The school is given a benefit. Every youngster in the school immediately becomes a plugger, not alone for that particular show but for the house in general. This is a scheme too many exhibitors overlook. They do not realize that the best way to make money is sometimes to give some town movement a chance to make money too. The work must be done with intelligence, but with proper discrimination charity cannot alone be made directly profitable at the moment but can be made to yield permanent results.

A Feature Contest.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., has sprung its "eyes, nose, and lips contest." It shows the eyes and nose and mouth of some star, and asks to whom the features belong, offering a free admission to persons correctly naming the owner. The first five correct replies get two tickets each, good for any day. Replies are not to be sent in before Tuesday nor after Saturday of the week following the publication of the program. The cut shows the placement of the cuts on the program, front. The scheme is not wholly new, but if the cuts are made from photographs not generally used the results will be surprising. It is shown that many notifications will be made, and probably in many weeks the correct replies may not equal in number the five pairs of tickets offered, but general interest will be excited, and it will make talk, which is the main point. Also it may add to the mailing list. It must be remembered, however, that in order to keep away from any entanglement with the post office department it will be necessary to give programs to any persons applying for them, and tickets must be sent those who win. They cannot be required to call at the theater for them. This might be held to be the valuable consideration that in part determines a lottery. The Third Street seems to be working the scheme in an entirely safe way. That is the way they do most things. It is also well to remember that if you offer only one prize or a first prize of greater value than others, in the event of a tie a similar award must be made the others. Another way to work the scheme is to use it for the launching of a serial or a new star. Use the features from a photograph largely used in the advertising, and then offer a free admission to any person presenting the same at the door with the identity of the star and the name and address of the person making the tender written on the back. Here the cut is so like the rest of the advertising that most persons will identify the features and will come down, many of them being people who would not use the customary form of free tickets.

The Public Be—

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., sends in one of the most vividly red cards we've seen in a long time. It is 11 by 14, printed across the long way, and it runs:

PUBLIC OPINION

Demands the manager of the Third Street theater to place mattresses in the aisles so patrons won't hurt themselves falling off their seats while laughing at Charlie Chaplin as "The Adventurer," on Friday and Saturday, November Ninth and Tenth.

Safety First Committee.

The "Public Opinion" is much larger than the other matter, and stands out as an eye-catcher somewhat similar to the old "Public Notice." That "Public Notice" did vallant service. Why not revive it? And use this, too, along with the other. You don't have to use Chaplin in "The Adventurer." It will work with any good comedy of better than average merit. Take it up.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Judgment.

THREE letters in one week asked where the services of a good critic might be obtained, as the writers wanted to know whether to keep on working or quit. A fourth letter carries this phrase: I've not sold any stories yet. I've not written any. And when I do write a story I'll know it.

This last refers to fiction stories and is from a photoplay writer who announces his turning to the other field. He went through the photoplay end and no one had to tell him when he had arrived. He sold until the company he dealt with went out of the market. Now he'll start work on fiction and wait until he can write before he seeks to sell. He is writing stuff steadily, but he knows that what he has written are not stories. And here is another line that speaks of the right way:

I have Esenwein's book and find it helps, but I am doing as I did with photoplays. I am studying stories themselves and not books.

That is not what he really means. What he does mean is that having a book of technical rules, he is now gaining an understanding of those rules through the dissection of current fiction as well as his own experiments. If you will do that, you'll soon know whether or not you can eventually write plays or fiction. No one can tell you. The knowledge must come from within. If you do not know that you can, probably you cannot and never will succeed.

Some Do.

Most writers declare that there is no market, and they are right if they find none, but some still seem to be selling. Mrs. Bertie Moyer wrote the other day to announce the sale of her sixth script to Sidney Drew (which is one better than we could do), and she added that she averages $75 a week from her plays. This is exceptional in the present staff writer craze, but it shows that it can be done, even now. And Mrs. Moyer sells both one-reel comedies and five-reel dramas, which is still more unusual.

Quit Kidding Yourself.

The technique of photoplay writing is the art of telling a story in action instead of in words. It is a waste of time to ignore this for the trick work and stunt stuff. It is very true that a knowledge of the possibilities of the camera is essential to the proper telling of a story, but these are accessories and not the end aimed at. It is easier to study the technique of form, and for this reason too many do so. They split hairs over close-ups and resplit the same hair on dissolve and fade, they proudly invent phrases such as "circle-to-full-screen," "diaphragm-and-sold-open-at-half-field," and stuff like that and feel that they are making progress. They are, but it is in a rearward direction. What sells a story is a good idea and not a light effect or a new scheme for leaders. Use effects as a means to an end and not as an ultimate goal. Perhaps the novice is not to be blamed when he sees so many releases that depend upon sky shots and similar stuff, but he should remember that this is the work of incompetent studio writers who cannot originate stories and trust to effects. He cannot compete with these on their own grounds. He must make attack through a different angle and offer the ideas the studio writers lack.

Be a Surprise.

We think that some—indeed, many—authors make a mistake in plugging too hard at the market. They start sending out when they begin to write, and stop only when they quit through discouragement. They argue that some editor might, at some time, take a story. Very true, but there is danger that before they achieve success the editors will have grown so tired that they will find no appeal in the stories. You see yourself in the glass every day. Unless you suffer some physical or mental worry there is no perceptible change from day to day. You notice no alteration, nor do the friends with whom you come in daily contact. But you meet a friend you have not seen for a year, and at once he notes the changes that are imperceptible to those who see you daily, and yet clearly discernible to one who has been absent. He comments that you have lost or gained flesh, and you are surprised.

You have not noticed this because the change has been so gradual. It is the same way in sending in stories. If you make improvement slowly, the change is so gradual that an editor does not notice it. If you stay away for a year, and then come in again the editor will see a pronounced difference. It is hard to hold off for a year, but it will pay the beginner.

Changing Demand.

According to late reports the demand for rough comedy in England is abating and a more polite form of entertainment is required. The English people have passed the stage where they desired enforced gaiety and now there will probably come a market for an appeal to the gentler emotions. Their characters have ripened under the hand of war, and the human interest story is more nearly what is wanted. It is probable that over here a somewhat similar condition will prevail. For a time the rougher comedies and stressed drama, without reference to war, will be the demand, changing back to heart interest as we become more used to the actual war condition. But at no time is the purely war drama going to be in demand, for we have war in our real lives and have no desire to see repeated on the screens the worries of the day. The picture theater is pre-eminently the theater of the masses and it is foolish to seek to make appeal to producers with war dramas. The time for these will come twenty years after the war, not now.

Holding It.

What you find out for yourself sticks. What you are told is soon forgotten. Learn to do your own remembering.

Even Worse.

There is just one thing less in demand than a patriotic story just now and that is a peace propaganda story. Comedy and comedy drama will be increasingly in demand, and studios are going to count their production costs more carefully than has been their wont, so do not write stories that are expensive in production. Try to get your effects through less costly means. And more than ever be careful to avoid giving offense of any sort.

Getting Facts.

Be inquisitive. Get all the facts you can. Some day you can use some if not all of this material, and you can never tell what part you can use. Keep your eyes open. If you see something you do not understand, ask someone who knows. On the elevated roads here in town the conductor puts a key into a box above the door of the second coach and takes out a slip of paper. He does it each trip and thousands see this done, but scarcely one in each thousand knows that the little strip he takes out records the saving in current consumed, and that he gives it to the motorman, who turns in his slips at the end of the day and gets a bonus on the current saved, yet anyone who asks the conductor will be told. It is the same wherever you go. Get facts and when you have enough facts you can make your stories more real. Some of the best stories written have been suggested by the most ordinary facts, looked at with the creative imagination. Get the facts and cultivate the imagination.

Contentment.

The first requisite to authorship is a contented mind, but contentment does not mean self satisfaction over one's own stories or progress. It means an acceptance of the conditions as they are instead of discontent.

Do It All.

Don't write a halfway good story and offer it to the editor with the suggestion that you are certain that Miss Blank's charming personality will do the rest. Do it all yourself and you'll have the personality as an added attraction.

Reversing.

The true story is too true to be good.

Manufacturers' Notice.

I F IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Condition of Film.

From Halifax, Nova Scotia, comes a letter and box of cutouts. At this time it is not my purpose to name names. The complaints as against the exchange in question are and have been many and just what it may eventually become necessary to do in the matter I cannot say, but hope the producer in question will see his way clear to remedy the intolerable conditions complained of. Halifax writes, in part, as follows:

Am sending, under separate cover, a box containing one hundred and two (102) cut-outs from the feature _____, used at this theater yesterday and today. The cutouts show the exact condition of the film as received from the _____ exchange, Montreal; also it is an average sample of the service received from this exchange each week. My manager has taken the matter of film condition up with the exchange repeatedly, and Mr. Wall, our Nova Scotia censor, has been after them pretty strong, but it does not seem to remedy matters. Last week I personally sent Mr. _____, Canadian General Manager for the _____ service, 84 cut-outs from _____, our feature for that week, together with a bill for services in overhauling and putting the films into runable condition. To date that gentleman has not even had the orinary business courtesy to reply to my letter. Aside from the unfairness in compelling me to do hours of labor each week for nothing, our films do not arrive until 11 A. M. of the day of showing, and it is no unusual thing to lose a dinner hour in order to put this JUNK into runable condition. The other portions of our programme, viz., the Greater Vitaphone, World and Goldwyn, is invariably in excellent mechanical condition. Now if you can do anything in New York City to wake the Montreal and St. John branches of the corporation in question up, you will certainly confer a very great favor on Nova Scotia exhibitors and operators.

Upon receipt of this letter and the box of cut-outs I immediately addressed the following to the General Manager of the producer in question:

Attached hereto find self-explanatory letter from Halifax, N. S., which same I would commend to your very earnest consideration. I presume to bring to your attention a few points which I believe you will concede to be of very decided importance. First: The moving picture industry, as such, has certain RIGHTS in matters of this kind, by reason of the fact that any production which is displayed on the screen of any theater in any other than the best possible way is a DIRECT blow at the popularity of the motion picture as a form of high-class theatrical amusement. This is, I think, a fact which you will admit cannot be seriously questioned. It therefore follows that the producer owes a distinct duty to the industry in matters of this kind. The producer is not altogether a free agent in the matter, because his act may work serious injury to others. Interlocking rights are involved, which each individual producer must be made to understand and respect, if the industry is to reach and maintain that high plain its inherent possibilities suggest for the future.

Second: I would call your undivided attention to the fact that the theater patron is an involuntary partner with you in matters of this kind. The theater patron reads your advertisements setting forth the beauty and excellence of your production. He or she purchases a theater ticket on the presumption that the production in question will be displayed on the screen in the best possible way. He trusts to the honesty of the theater manager to see to it that it is properly projected and correctly interpreted on the screen. He or she must also, perforce, trust to the honesty of your corporation to, through its exchange, supply films to the theater which are in mechanical condition such as will permit of their being properly projected and interpreted on the screen, and not in condition to be dangerous, as were the films in question, from which more than 100 defects were cut out by the operator. To send out films in such mechanical condition that their proper

May the coming year hold for you good cheer and prosperity in abundance. Thanks to you, my friends, to dear old Santa and to the New Year.

F. H. Richardson

projection is a physical impossibility IS NOT HONEST WITH THE THEATER PATRON.

Third: But by no means least, the projectionist (operator) is employed to project the films and interpret the dramatic action contained therein. He is not paid to inspect and repair films, and to attempt to compel him so to do, without offering adequate financial remuneration is—well, my dear sir, I leave it to you to decide whether or no it is right, fair, just, decent or honest. But remember this: Unless the operator can and does place upon the screen high class projection—unless he can and does correctly interpret upon the screen the work of your high priced artists, then the work of those artists on that screen will not be equal to their original performance and your corporation must and will inevitably suffer. Of what use to expend many thousands of dollars in the production of a splendid screen drama and then, by reason of films in bad mechanical condition, film racing or other faults which mar their screen interpretation, either ruin or largely detract from the value of the finished result on the theater screen. Answer me that, if you can.

The possible claim that your films cannot be kept in good mechanical condition by reason of tax, duty and other high expense in Canada absorbing the profit is met by the fact that films of other producers are kept in good mechanical condition. I was just recently in Canada, and while your company is not the only offender, it is unquestionably the very worst; also some exchanges keep their film in excellent shape, proof that it can be done.

In closing let me add the thought that when in a given field it becomes necessary to allow the films to go unattended in order to make a profit, it is high time to abandon that field.

In response to this letter the following was received:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Your letter of November 3 has received my consideration, together with the attached letter from the complaining exhibitor. First of all, let me say that I, of course, agree with you most heartily on the three points you mention to the effect that bad condition of film is unfair, unnecessary and a hardship on the exhibitor. I have already taken steps to remedy immediately the conditions causing the complaint from the Maritime Provinces, and intend to give my personal attention to the effort to secure better service for the exhibitor in this line throughout the United States, for I realize fully as seriously as you do the tremendous handicap to the entire industry caused by the improper care of film.

I wonder, however, if you have given a moment's thought to the fact that as producers and exchanges, we do not project the film, and that, therefore, practically all of the damage which puts the film in improper condition is caused by the operator. In saying this, I am not attempting to establish ourselves in a position where we disclaim the responsibility of keeping film in good condition, but merely point out that if it were not for inefficient handling or poor apparatus in the theater it would never be necessary for the exchange to do more than give the film on its return a superficial going-over. This company has for the past three years made numerous attempts to secure co-operation from the exhibitors through its various branch offices on the subject of taking care of film. I realize that from your angle, receiving the complaints of various operators, the condition must look unjustified and serious, but if you could study it from our viewpoint, perhaps you would bear with us more patiently. I have frequently had instances brought to my attention by our managers in which absolutely new and unused prints have been returned to us after only two, three or four days' showing absolutely ruined, and hardly a day goes by but that something like this happens where serious and unnecessary damage is done to a good print because of carelessness and negligence on the part of the operator. Naturally, therefore, to shoulder the entire burden ourselves, we would have to scrap such injured prints and at once replace them with new ones, and I can assure you that these things happen with such frequency that if we should attempt to do this, it would probably mean the use of four to six prints on every subject for each one we are using at present, which would, of course, be prohibitively costly and unprofitable to the exhibitor as well as ourselves. The best we can do is to put such prints, where it is possible, in good condition and use them until we feel warranted in issuing a new print on that particular subject. The subject of poor condition of film has been one which has been a source of expense and agitation for years. Yet we are placed entirely on the defensive. Probably the operator who has ruined one of our subjects beyond repair would utter loud protest if the next subject he received from us were in anything but absolutely perfect condition. We maintain in every office a sufficient staff of as competent people as is possible to secure. We have installed an inspection system whereby it is always possible for us to trace just which theater causes any damage to a film, and yet we are without any come-back, since I have yet to find an exhibitor or an operator who would admit that he had damaged an inch of positive. Yet surely someone damages it, for it hardly seems that sprocket holes can be torn, film can be scratched and otherwise mutilated while being inspected in our exchanges. The problem resolves itself into a situation where we are always wrong, and must make the best of circumstances utterly beyond our control save for that repairing and replacing which is feasible and judicious to do.

We maintain in our home office in Newark several projecting rooms with competent operators and perfect equipment, and I have personally seen with my own eyes sample prints of subjects which are being revised, or re-edited, projected through our machines literally dozens and dozens of times, yet such prints show a minimum of wear and tear, and after being projected perhaps thirty or forty times, show less damage than a film run for only three days by some supposedly first-class theaters. Mr. Richardson, this question costs organizations like ours thousands of dollars a year unnecessarily, and as you say, it costs many theaters dissatisfaction with their service, and many patrons dissatisfaction with the picture the theater projects for them. Do not think we are ignoring it, as you may depend we realize it is to our best interests to extend every possible means to improve the situation. But we must have the co-operation and help of the operators, for as I said before, film is not damaged materially save when it is improperly projected and improperly rewound. We can always trace where the damage is done, yet we have been forced to consider it a necessary evil to repair the damage to the best of our ability and still receive blame unprotestingly. I want to thank you for the co-operative spirit in which your letter was written. Please consider us always as willing, indeed anxious, to do more than "our bit." I can assure you the matter is receiving my personal attention.

Very truly yours,

GENERAL MANAGER.

If the General Manager had followed the work of this department as he might well do, since it is the one big agency which for eight years has striven to improve the knowledge of the operator and the presentation of the photoplay on the screen, he would have known that we have long since recognized the conditions he has named, and that we have for eight long years been beating it into the head of operators and theater managers that in outraging the films they simply eventually outrage themselves more than any one else. The evil complained of is a many-headed one, therefore a hard one to kill since one "head" accuses the other and thus responsibility is shifted. The manager is all too often penurious and stingy in the matter of repair parts. The manager in a large number of cases demands that the films be enormously overspeeded; the manager when employing an operator looks first at the price and next at the item of ability—often not at the latter at all if the first be low enough; the manager demands of the operator that he not only project the pictures but that he do many other things as well, and these various items collectively and individually make for inefficiency in the operating room and damage to the films. The operator is all too often an operator in name only, having little or no real knowledge of his work; the operator is in all too many cases not only lacking in knowledge but in addition to that is careless, proceeding on a sort of I-should-worry basis, which is outrageous in view of the valuable property entrusted to his care, almost criminal. Machine manufacturers send out new projectors with the tension set so tight that heavy damage is done to every foot of film and operators do not know enough about their business to reset the tension or else are too infernally shiftless and careless to do it. And so it goes.

We fight these evils continuously for years, only to have the General Manager of a large producing corporation "wonder if we have ever given them a moment's thought." Heaven's man, I have been one of the most cursed men in the entire industry because I have done that very thing and have insisted on the remedying of the very things you speak of. I have demanded higher grade talent in the operating room. I have demanded better working conditions to the end that the men could have a chance to do their work right. I have demanded of the operator that he take every possible care of the films entrusted to his care and have raked him fore and aft times without number for his failure in that respect. I have demanded of the manager that he employ higher class ability in the operating room, that he supply necessary repair parts to keep the projectors in first class condition, that he stop overspeeding, in itself a prolific source of damage to films. And for making these demands I have been abused by exhibitors as a trouble maker who might better mind his own business and let them run theirs—into the ground.

But this editor, nevertheless, intends to continue the war on conditions which make for film damage. Only last summer he made a tremendously hard 10,000 n. m. trip, lecturing to exhibitors and operators, and more than one-half of his address had directly to do with damage to film. The Moving Picture World stood the entire expense for this by the way.

The conditions General Manager complains of are still bad enough in all conscience, but God only knows what they would have been but for the work of this department during the past eight years, aided by our handbooks on projection. I think no one who knows and who is unbiased, will dispute the fact that those two agencies have accomplished much, but there is, unfortunately still much to do. We are glad to have awakened the corporation in question to the importance of this matter and trust it will not rest until every possible means has been employed to induce its exchange managers to keep their films in first class mechanical condition. There can at least be no excuse for loose patches, broken sprocket holes and other purely mechanical faults.

Old Scheme Resurrected.

Ralph Martin, Los Angeles, has dug up a scheme for condenser correction which was suggested and to some extent investigated by the editor some six or seven years ago. At that time he submitted it to the Scientific Department of the Bausch & Lomb Company and was by them informed that it was not practical. They gave reasons for this finding, but I have forgotten what they were and my files do not reach back that far. Brother Martin says:

Something of this kind was suggested by the President of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in one of his recent reports to that body. For this reason my plan may be of interest to that body as well as to yourself and your readers.

As shown in accompanying drawing, the corrugated lens principle works out fine—on paper—for the purpose of correcting spherical aberration in the condenser. Results shown in drawings were all obtained by carefully made calculations and they certainly do show possibilities, at least to the extent of eliminating enough spherical aberration to prevent any considerable loss of light from that source. Various experiments have proven conclusively that the correction of spherical aberration will produce a whiter light at the spot. The critical point of practicability of this design lies, to my mind, in being able to have such a lens accurately ground and polished to the required curvatures. Aside from this possible obstacle I can imagine nothing to prevent its working out and being adapted to present equipment.

Well, friend Martin, one obstacle would be that with given curvatures your net result would be changed with different lots of glass. Such a lens could be pressed alright, once the proper forms were made, but grinding and polishing would require the construction of special and very costly machinery, if it could be done at all and keep within practicable cost. Your heavy curvature meniscus I could not agree with, nor your spacing the lenses so far apart. When I received the last drawing (the one submitted herewith) I took it up to Eberhardt Schneider, who makes lenses, usually for special purposes only, and has very high standing as a maker of special motion picture apparatus for the testing out of ideas of various kinds. Mr. Schneider examined the drawing and expressed the opinion that the plan would not succeed, if for no other reason that that of glass variation. Such a lens could, he said, be made, though he would express no opinion as to its probable cost in quantities. Mr. Schneider's view supports and strengthens the opinion I myself formed when I investigated the matter six or seven years ago. Had the President of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers watched the work of this department he would have known that this idea had long since been examined and rejected. That, however, does not mean that the underlying idea involved may not be utilized successfully in some other way, nor does it place you at fault because it occurred before your time. Still another objection to it would be that stereo slides could not be projected with such a lens, since the corrugation rings would inevitably show on the screen, the surface of the front condenser being in focus, or very nearly so, thereat.

The Rialto of New York City.

Until recently the editor had not entered the Rialto theater. The reason was that its managing director, Mr. Rothapfel, and he had had several heated arguments, while he, Mr. Rothapfel, managed the Strand, concerning speed of projection. I admired Mr. Rothapfel for the many things he had done and deeply regretted what I considered to be his sin in this one, but hugely important item. I had, however, of late been told that my objection would no longer obtain, so, having met Rothapfel personally and buried the tommyhawk, I took courage in mine hands, planked myself down in a Rialto orchestra seat and waited to see what I would see, with result that at the end of the show I fared forth, piled added loam on the sepulchre of the afore-said implement of war, hoisted the olive branch and declared peace, sweet peace.

For, taken by and large, what I saw was good, from the speed-of-projection point of view, I mean, that being the only point on which Rothapfel and I have differed. The theater is a beauty, but has already been so often described that further setting forth of its charm would be but as the carrying of coals to Newcastle. The orchestra is an immense affair, and when it is playing the screen is rather badly light struck, but this is, I think, unavoidable and is counterbalanced by the brilliancy of projection. This latter also excuses the comparative absence of dark colors near the screen. Some of the minor films preceding the feature might have been justly criticised in the matter of interpretation (speed), but on the whole the Rialto performance is remarkably well balanced, and since it is not to be expected that anything in this wicked old world of ours will be perfect, could not be subject to other than praise and admiration. The Rialto, a twenty, thirty and sixty cents admission, is, in my opinion, giving far better value, dollar for dollar, than are nine out of ten of the surrounding legitimate theaters. Proof of this is found in the fact that the Rialto is filled to capacity, whereas a large percentage of the legitimates are playing to losing business.

The main feature was splendidly presented. It was "The Woman God Forgot," a magnificently spectacular production. Brother Joseph Basson was on duty in the projection room, and not once during the entire run was there ground for criticism in the projection of interpretation of the drama. It gives me more than ordinary pleasure to say this, because of my former differences with my now friend Mr. Rothapfel.

Can You Answer This, Mr. Operator?

A certain man connected with one of the institutions conducted by Greater New York City, submits the following. Now, I am not myself, certain as to exactly what happened, though I have my idea and have told the correspondent what it is. I will go down shortly and see if I am right. Let us see how many of you can do out the right answer. The correspondent says:

Inclosed find forty cents for which send both sets of question booklets. If the following query comes under the head of matter which may not be published in the department, please answer by mail and attach bill therefor.

What is the reason for the round light on the screen, as projected with a Power's G-A by applicants for New York City license before the examining board. I have held a New York City license for a number of years, but let same expire and in consequence had to be re-examined. I failed miserably on the projection end. Am not and have never claimed to be a real operator. Am an electrician by trade and only used the license to operate a Motlograph outfit for the benefit of patients in this hospital, which has more than 5,000 inmates. Recently we have added a Simplex motor driven projector to our equipment and give a show once a week, same lasting about two and a half hours. I now have a licensed operator run the machine for these shows.

Since failing in the examination I have done considerable studying, using your Handbook and the department, and, needless to say have improved my weak spots. What bothers me most is the round, fuzzy light on the screen, and the scissor effect I got in same when adjusting the arc. The outside circle of light, while not bright, remained a true circle. When I adjusted the carbons the light on the screen did not get much brighter but produced two half-circles, with meeting lines in the center of circle. I now realize that I had a poor light at the arc; also that the examiners had my goat. But I got home and tried it out with our two machines. I was unable to produce the same effect, no matter what I did. The nearest thing I can liken the screen effect to is found in Plate 17, page 136 of the Handbook. Was unable to get a clear spot at the aperture, no matter what adjustment I made with the carbons. With but a limited knowledge of the projector, but with an abiding determination to know more, I will await your answer.

Personally I am inclined to think two things were wrong and am betting with myself as to whether or not I am right. What is your opinion, friend reader? Will give you the right dope later. Read the thing over carefully. You will observe that there are two distinct difficulties named, which apparently point to two separate seats of trouble. Now some of you wise guys get busy and let's see what kind of reasons you have. With the answer I will tell you whither or no I, myself, am right or wrong.

A Model Motion Picture Laboratory.

Ask any movie fan where the celluloid drama, the food that makes the movie giant grow, is produced, and he will doubtless tell you in California, New Jersey and New York. He has read his motion picture magazine and he picks up a lot of press agent gossip in the newspapers. You can't tell him much about Los Angeles in the West or the important studios in the East. He knows them as well, by name at least, as he does the bright and hectic features of Broadway's Rialto. Tell this same movie fan that one of the greatest plants in this extraordinary great industry is in Detroit, Michigan, and no doubt he will experience some surprise. He knows about Detroit's automobiles, pills and stoves, but he has never associated the City of the Straits with moving pictures. Yet had you told him so, you would have told the truth.

Detroit has one of the finest equipped and most productive motion picture plants in the country; and, curiously enough, it is merely a part of the organization that is making and selling one of Detroit's famous motor cars—the Ford.

And what have the movies to do with Ford cars?

Just this—they are used as one of the important mediums to disseminate the Ford idea in a very big and broad way—the Ford idea in manufacture and social and industrial welfare. And, incidentally, they instruct and entertain by putting the public in touch with world events.

Just how much of a factor in the movie world the Ford Motor Company's moving picture department has grown to be is indicated in the following facts:

Four million people are now viewing the Ford Animated Weekly every week in the year in 2,000 or more theaters in this country.

As it is estimated that about 35,000,000 people attend moving pictures each week, the circulation of the Ford weekly is eleven and three-sevenths per cent. of the whole.

All this has developed in two years and the department is growing faster than the proverbial weed.

It was in April, 1914, that the Ford Motor Company determined to organize a moving picture department. It started with one man, and no equipment—merely a desk in a corner of the advertising department.

Now the department has a staff of 24 men and stretches for several hundred feet along the fourth floor of the plant, directly back of the administration building; equipment for taking pictures and manufacturing films the equal of any in the country and better than many of the great film concerns familiar to the public; and a distribution that any of the great exchanges might envy.

The principal product of the Ford's moving picture department is the Ford Animated Weekly. This consists of a brief film, running from 10 to 15 minutes, which is made up of miscellaneous topical events and an occasional picture of a Ford scene or Ford feature. The interesting events of the hour, wherever they may happen, are filmed for this weekly. Fires, parades, races, athletic events, the laying of a corner stone, the President opening the baseball season, the launching of a ship—any event that is important, interesting or picturesque, is sought for the Weekly.

Camera men are constantly on the road securing the pictures; and the equipment of the department includes an especially constructed Ford car for the carrying of motion picture apparatus used in the taking of news events in and around Detroit.

One hundred and ten of these Weeklies are now made each week and distributed directly to 2,000 theaters. The miscellaneous films, which are being made constantly and amount to about 200,000 feet a year, consist of industrial subjects, examples of educational work with employees and the "Safety First" idea as carried out in the Ford factory.

The Ford idea, if only suggested in the name and the radiator design on the Weekly title, is thus brought before millions of people every week—most of whom have not had and never will have an opportunity to visit the factory. As the Ford cinema executive says, it's a "circulation" 100 per cent good, because not one of the millions misses it, unless he goes to the movies to sleep. As a matter of fact, the Ford Weekly alone has a circulation larger than that of any national publication.

In the distribution of the Weeklies large posters are used to advertise them on billboards and in theater lobbies. In addition to covering the United States from coast to coast the Weeklies are now being circulated in the Hawaiian Islands, France, Italy, South America, England and Australia.

Industrial films, which show factory scenes, processes and methods, are now being made with Spanish titles and "leaders" for use in South America and Mexico. Many of the miscellaneous films go to schools, colleges, various societies, and Y. M. C. A.'s, and recently quite a distribution has developed in penal institutions.

In the series of studios, dark rooms, laboratories and work shops that confront the visitor to the Ford moving picture department, certain features stand forth prominently—notably cleanliness, order, system, fire protection and lighting arrangements. The production of moving pictures demands a high degree of manufacturing efficiency. Extreme care is taken by the Ford management to keep the motion picture department neat and orderly and to provide every possible means for fire protection.

At every hand are steel receptacles for scrap. Moreover, the floors are kept scrupulously clean, and every day at six o'clock the scrap is carried outside of the building, where it is burned. Numerous steel cupboards and cabinets hold stock and finished products. Radiators are covered with wire mesh. Fire extinguishers are easily accessible and there is a chemical fire station with hose and complete apparatus just outside the door of the department. Moreover, the staff is drilled to respond to a system of fire alarms, so that at the given signals every man knows instantly what to do and where he is expected to be. Like all the Ford factory, this department is thoroughly equipped with automatic fire sprinklers.

Discipline, order and system prevail everywhere and the department thus presents an excellent example of modern industrial good house-keeping.

In some sections of the department a great deal of light is needed; in other sections there can be scarcely any, and that little only of a certain kind. In the studio where interior pictures are taken are large movable batteries of the Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor lights. These give an intensified light of great power and they provide the light for all the shop interiors, being moved about as needed.

Usually a photographer's dark room is literally dark, so that it is impossible to read a printed page. Not so in the Ford dark room. This department is illuminated by a safe light which has no actinic effect, and after one becomes accustomed to the peculiar radiance it is perfectly easy to read and write in this room. The effect is attained by placing an orange and red filter over the light, which is then thrown against the ceiling to be diffused indirectly.

There are about thirteen main sections to the Ford moving picture department. These are arranged in order as follows—Administration, Studio and Art, Stock, Enlarging Room, Developing Room for 8x10 still pictures, Laboratory, Title-Making, Printing of Films, Perforating, Developing of Films, Drying Room, Assembly Room, Shipping Room.

Interior scenes of considerable elaboration can be taken in the studio. All art work is done in this room and the art staff includes an experienced cartoonist, who makes the animated cartoons that are now a feature of Ford Weeklies. The Photographic Department also prints all its own titles.

As far as possible nothing is left to chance and the human element is eliminated in the making of Ford moving pictures. This is illustrated in an interesting manner in the title-making department. The titles of films are printed in an ordinary manner in white on a black cardboard. These must be filmed as though they were moving objects. If the filming were left to the judgment of the camera operator he might crank off too many feet for one title and thus waste footage, or he might not run off enough. Moreover, his speed would necessarily vary with each title. The filming is therefore done automatically and according to a standard scale. An electric motor operates the camera at a uniform rate and the operator has a schedule that tells him how many feet to grind out for a certain number of words.

Some pictures are taken in a very bright light, others with less light. This must be considered in printing the positive films, for the light exposure must vary from heavy to light according to the needs. Previous tests have been made to determine the various degrees of exposure required for certain results desired. These are worked out in chart form and the printing machine produces the exposure desired by means of a special punching device operated by means of the arbitrary chart.

All the film used by the Ford plant is perforated on their own perforating machines.

In the developing room the tank system is used, and as the temperature is accurately controlled development is not done by inspection but by the more accurate method of timing according to standards fixed by previous experiments. One of the features of the laboratory is the system of silver recovery from spent hypo.

"Spirit of '76" Film Called Part of Plot

Picture Incites to Mutiny Is Allegation—Producer May Be Given Penitentiary Sentence.

AS stated in this department last week, "The Spirit of '76," a feature issued by the Continental Producing Company, was seized by Federal officers on Thursday night, November 30, at the Clune's Auditorium where the film was exhibited. Robert Goldstein, producer of the picture, was taken in custody by the Federal agents, charged with violation of the Espionage act. The Federal grand jury acted on the case Tuesday, December 4. An indictment against Goldstein was returned on three counts.

Only a few witnesses were examined by the grand jury, the list including W. H. Clune, at whose theater the picture was shown; C. White Mortimer, British vice consul, and two witnesses representing the American Protective League, at whose instigation the presentation of the picture was stopped by the seizing of the film.

When the inquisitorial body had made its report to Judge Bledsoe, Assistant United States District Attorney Gordon Lawson asked that the bond of Goldstein be increased from $5,000 to $10,000, as was originally recommended when Goldstein was arraigned before United States Commissioner D. M. Hammack.

"Does the investigation by the grand jury indicate a pro-German plot in connection with the exhibition of this picture?" the court asked.

"It does," replied Mr. Lawson.

"Then the bond of Robert Goldstein is fixed at $10,000," said Judge Bledsoe.

Under the indictment Goldstein may be sent to the penitentiary for a period of two years on each count, or six years in all. The first count alleges a violation of section 3 of the Espionage act; count two, a violation of Section 22 of the act, and count three a violation of Section 37 of the Penal Code relating to the selective service act.

It is charged that on November 28 Goldstein "wilfully and unlawfully attempted to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny and refusal of duty on the part of the military and naval forces of the United States," in that he presented at Clune's Auditorium a certain moving-picture play entitled "The Spirit of '76," designed and intended to arouse antagonism, hatred and enmity between the American people and the people of Great Britain, at a time when the defendant well knew the government of Great Britain, with its military and naval forces, was an ally of the United States in the prosecution of a war against the imperial government of Germany.

The second count asserts that by the exhibition of the picture Goldstein attempted to influence those not yet called for military duty, who had so far failed to present themselves to the proper military authority.

The third alleges that by the exhibition of the picture Goldstein conspired with others to influence those who had not yet been called to selective service.

Theaters Observe National Red Cross Day

Monster Benefit at Mason—Many Prominent Stage and Screen Stars Participate.

NATIONAL Red Cross Theater Day was observed Friday and Friday night, December 7, by Los Angeles theaters, the entire proceeds being given to the American Red Cross. Many thousands of dollars were raised through the theatrical performances. Locally the monster benefit performance at the Mason Opera House attracted the largest crowd. A program of fifteen numbers was presented. Three orchestras of thirty musicians provided the music. Talent was secured from various other theaters in the city and from local musical ranks.

Standing out as the premier attraction was Maggie Teyte, prima donna soprano of the La Scala Grand Opera Company. Trixie Friganza, breezy and witty, always a Los Angeles favorite, was enthusiastically received. An original sketch, "For France," with Lewis Stone, Miss Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, David M. Hartford and Sam Wood, scored heavily.

Baby June Hovick, billed as the miniature Pavlova, also delighted. "Food," an intensely interesting and funny travesty on the food situation presented by Louise Huff, Raymond Hatton and Herbert Rawlinson, and the ballet "La Vogue" presented by the Celeste School of Dancing, were two especially good numbers.

Miss Frieda Peycke in musically illustrated poems; Miss Ella Carlisle, whistling soprano; Willard, "The Man Who Grows"; Aveling and Lloyd, S. R. Parmegianni and a double sextettes of saxophones; Toto, the famous clown; the Rolin Four, Mercedes, and Charles Murray, screen comedy star, took part in the program.

Russian Embassy Visits Universal City.

The members of the Russian Embassy at Washington who have been touring the country appealing for moral, financial and material help for Russia as an ally, who, as they said, will rally from the unfortunate position into which it has been plunged by the radicals, went to Universal City during the few days they spent here recently.

The members of the mission were extended the courtesies of the plant by the officials of the company and devoted several hours to their journey over the city of make-believe.

Jones Directing at Universal City.

A new member among the directors at the Universal studios is Edgar Jones, who has started the filming of a story entitled "The Quest of Joan," in which Louise Lovely will be featured. Philo McCollough, a player new to the Universal ranks, will appear opposite Miss Lovely.

Just prior to joining the Universal Company Jones completed the staging of "Who Is Number One?" a Paramount serial. During a year's engagement with the Metro company he filmed a number of feature productions. Previous to his connection with Metro he had been with the Lubin Company for nearly five years.

Miss Clifford Gets Loving Cup.

Kathleen Clifford, diminutive serial queen, was the honored as well as a most surprised guest at the recent party given Fatty Arbuckle by the Horkheimer Brothers in their new glass studio, at the Balboa studios. Miss Clifford was on the receiving end of a presentation ceremony in which Arbuckle, on behalf of President H. M. Horkheimer, bestowed upon the little woman a handsome silver loving cup in appreciation of her loyal and faithful work in filming "Who Is Number One?", the serial now running on the Paramount program. The trophy was nearly as large as the star, and it was with difficulty indeed that Miss Clifford was able to tote it around to show her many admirers.

Donald Crisp Leaves Lasky.

Donald Crisp, well known picture director, who gained fame through his work in directing "Ramona" and "The Eyes of the World" for W. H. Clune and pictures starring Wallace Reid, Julian Eltinge and George Beban, has finished his contract with the Lasky company, and will take a month's vacation before returning to the harness. He will take his vacation in and around the Yosemite, with a gun and a dog as his companions.

Mr. Crisp has been offered a renewal of his contract with Lasky, and has received also a number of other offers from various firms.

George Ovey Leaves Horsley.

The Rialto had the news that George Ovey, the Horsley comedian, has left that concern to make a new affiliation. The announcement came in the nature of a surprise, as Mr. Ovey has been featured by Horsley for the last two years.

In that time he was starred in over 150 single-reel comedies under the well known brand name of the "Jerry" series, which were released on the Mutual program. Mr. Ovey has not as yet determined which of several offers to accept and will not endeavor to decide upon the matter of his new affiliation until his return from a vacation in the mountains.

Miss Fischer Working on "High Heels."

The complete cast of the American Film Company production, entitled "High Heels," featuring Marguerita Fischer, has been announced. It includes Jack Mower, David Howard, Golda Madden and Perry Banks. The present production is Miss Fischer's third of a new line of comedy dramas. Miss Helen Starr wrote the story, and the scenario is the work of James E. Hungerford.

Auto Race for Russell Picture.

A thrilling auto race between Eddie Hearne and Eddie O'Donnell, first and second in the Liberty Sweepstakes staged at Ascot Speedway, Thanksgiving Day, will be an added feature of the American Film Company's production, "Detective Dan Cupid." The picture contains an entirely new role for Big Bill Russell.

Honors for Mary Miles Minter.

Mary Miles Minter, American star, has been honored by an appointment as California State President of the Children's Patriotic League of America, by Miss Lillian Bell, of Chicago, National President of that organization.

Washburn Temporarily Blinded.

Owing to temporary blindness as the result of working too long a time under a battery of lamps, Bryant Washburn has been confined to his home for several days. For two consecutive nights he worked in a hotel barber's shop from 9 in the evening until 6 in the morning making scenes for his first Pathe release, "Kidder and Ko."

Mena Company Building Stage.

Work has commenced on the new stage for the Mena Company, which will be glass inclosed, 100 by 120 feet, and will be thoroughly equipped with the most modern and scientific lighting system. A concrete tank 20 by 30 feet is being installed under the stage, which with specially installed water connection can be filled within a very short time. Separate compartments around the tank will provide for camera room, and glass apertures in the sides of the concrete walls will permit underwater scenes to be made.

In addition to the new stage, property rooms and new equipment for the enlarged laboratories, concrete vaults are being built for the storing of film.

Griffith Working on War Picture.

David W. Griffith, with Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Bobby Harron, has been doing some quiet work at his old location in East Hollywood and an inclosed space has protected them all from the dust caused by the destruction of the big "Intolerance" set. Soon Mr. Griffith will be cutting and assembling his film made in several countries, including scenes taken at the French front and in England.

Emerson and Loos Leave Fairbanks.

It is understood that John Emerson and Anita Loos have left the Fairbanks organization and are due to take a trip East in regard to a new affiliation. "Doug" has not announced who will take the place of Mr. Emerson as alternative director with Allan Dwan.

Myrtle Gonzalez Weds.

On Saturday morning, December 1, Miss Myrtle Gonzalez became the bride of Captain Allen Watt of the Three Hundred and Sixty-third Infantry, at Camp Lewis. Mr. Watt was a former assistant director at Universal City. The couple were married in the Gonzalez home at 908 West 13th street, this city. Only their parents and two or three close friends were present. An informal reception was given in honor of Captain and Mrs. Watt the evening following the ceremony. Watt won a commission as captain of infantry and went to Fort Sill, Okla., for musketry instruction. Captain Watt left for Camp Lewis on Friday, December 7. His bride will remain here until the first of the new year, when, with her parents, she will go to the military camp to join her husband.

Mary MacDonald MacLaren Resumes Work.

After an absence from the screen of several months, Mary MacDonald MacLaren, the Horsley star, has returned to the screen and is to start work upon a new state-right feature under the Horsley banner. Miss MacLaren's vacation was occasioned by her being injured a month or so ago in an automobile accident.

Lee Arthur, Playwright, Dies.

As a result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident, Lee Arthur, the noted playwright and screen scribe, died on Saturday, December 8, at the Clara Barton Hospital. Mr. Arthur was confined to the hospital for ten weeks with several broken ribs and his death was caused by pneumonia setting in. The interment was in Louisiana.

Paramount Secures Fred Stone

Famous Comedian of Stage as New Comedy Star for Paramount Pictures.

FRED STONE, famous scare-crow of the "Wizard of Oz," star of a dozen of America's most popular and successful musical comedies, and at present playing at the Globe Theater in his greatest success, "Jack O'Lantern," is to become a comedy star of the moving pictures under the auspices of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and Jesse L. Lasky.

Following the completion of his present theatrical season, Mr. Stone will leave for California early next summer to begin work on the first of a number of new pictures, the scenarios for which will be provided to exploit the personality and accomplishments of one of the most popular and successful comedians on the American stage.

Concerning his new venture into the motion picture field, Mr. Stone said: "In the past few years I have received many flattering and tempting offers to become a film star, but I have always felt a natural hesitancy about signing up in this new field until I could be assured of entering it under the same high-class management as has made happy my long and pleasant association with Charles B. Dillingham.

Fred Stone.

"This new association with Mr. Lasky has solved that problem and I may say in all sincerity, I am glad to be affiliated with a company of such high standards as those attained by Paramount pictures."

Since the days of "The Wizard of Oz," when the famous team of Montgomery and Stone first scored their country-wide success, Fred Stone has been one of the greatest character comedians on the stage. The long string of successes in which he appeared with his late partner, Dave Montgomery, included "The Red Mill," "The Old Town," "The Lady of the Slipper," "Chin Chin" and others. After the death of Montgomery, Stone appeared as a single star and has achieved the greatest success of his career in "Jack O'Lantern."

Mr. Stone is known almost as well for the many, varied "stunts" he has been able to introduce in his work as for his own inimitable powers as a dancing and pantomimic comedian. Lariat throwing, tight-rope walking, bare-back riding, ventriloquism, pantomimic piano playing, skating and a number of the most difficult of the "Fairbanks" stunts were all grist to his mill in the course of his various appearances in one new success after another.

Mr. Stone's appearance in the silent drama will not be his first essay at pantomime. Several years ago he appeared as a pantomimic star under the management of Robert Arthur in London and Liverpool. His success in pictures is already assured, by reason of his world-wide popularity, his extraordinary powers as an eccentric comedian, his indefatigable capacity for mastering whatever he goes into, his well-defined powers as a pantomimic artist, and his extraordinary likable and magnetic personality.

NEW EDITOR FOR AMERICAN SCENARIO DEPT.

Will Ritchey has been engaged this week for the American Film Company scenario department at Santa Barbara, and will henceforth be editor-in-chief of the whole works. His staff will consist of Charles Turner Dazey, James E. Hungerford, Chester Blinn Clapp, Elizabeth Manning and Myron M. Stearns. Better stories for Letter pictures is the order of President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American, no matter what they cost.

Fred Wright Rejoins Pathe

Returns to Scene of His Earlier Successes After Absence of Three Years.

THE directorial forces of Pathe Exchange, Inc., have been augmented by the return to the fold of Director Fred E. Wright after an absence of three years from Pathe activities. Mr. Wright has the distinction of being one of the oldest directors in the industry and one of the first stage directors to devote his services to the production of picture plays. His theatrical experience commenced at the age of sixteen as an actor in the company with Thomas W. Keane, where he served an apprenticeship of three years. Later he was associated with Oliver Doud Byron, A. M. Palmer, Augustin Daly, and Frank Mayo.

Just prior to his entering into the world of pictures he acted as stage director for many well known stock companies in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Denver and Seattle. His first work as a director of picture plays was in the independent field where the quality of the productions made under his direction attracted the attention of the old Pathe Company, then known as Pathe Freres. He remained with Pathe Freres until 1914 and then became a director for Essanay, producing many of the best features released by that company during the three-year period of his contract.

Mr. Wright started work for Pathe immediately upon the expiration of his Essanay contract and is now engaged in the direction of "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle, supported by Milton Sills and Warner Oland, the famous trio of shining lights that made up the brilliant cast of "Patria," and Caesare Gravina, who distinguished himself in "The Fatal Ring."

"The Song and the Soldier"

One Reel Production by Plimpton Epic Pictures Calculated to Promote a Greater Use of Music—Part of National Plan.

UNDER the auspices of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, the Plimpton Epic Pictures, Inc., has just completed a one-reel subject, entitled "The Song and the Soldier," the first of a series of similar subjects intended to encourage the more general use of music everywhere. By pictured illustration of the manner of using music and the good that can be accomplished by its use the National Bureau hopes to make music more general in its application to American life. No special form of music or method of presenting it is suggested, but every instrument and all worthy compositions are to be encouraged. The head of the National Bureau is C. M. Tremain, formerly with the Aeolian Company.

Scene from "The Song and the Soldier" (Epic).

"The Song of the Soldier" presents the subject in a very understandable and impressive manner. There are scenes in the home, in the trenches and in the hospital which prove how valuable music is as a comfort and even a remedy to those in mental or physical distress. There is a touch of home life portrayed that is certain to reach the heart of those who witness the picture and to impress the fact, known in medical practice, that music is almost invaluable in certain cases of great nervous stress.

The idea of applying motion pictures to this use is peculiar and new. Mr. Plimpton seems to have caught the inspiration in his first production which not only illustrates the principles but holds the attention and stirs the soul.

There should be a market for this series of subjects on both entertainment and educational grounds.

Frieda Hempel in Pictures

FRIEDA HEMPEL, Gatti Casazza's famous dramatic prima donna, who has been a favorite of the Metropolitan Opera house for several past seasons, will certainly add to her popularity in connection with her now heralded appearance in motion pictures. While there are unquestionably many singers in the first rank of artistry, it has been almost a rule that their voices make up what is lacking in dramatic action. In Frieda Hempel and occasionally in one or another the exception to this rule is found.

None can fail to be impressed by the aspect of this splendid woman, who seems to gain height by reason of her wondrous lines, and who moves toward her audience with a simple, natural majesty. In presenting this remarkable luminary to the moving picture screen, one can be assured that Frieda Hempel will soon subject countless numbers.

The scenario that is being prepared for the starring of Frieda Hempel will be the product of several collaborators, who, making a close study of her personality, will present a story especially suited to her varied artistry.

Work on her picture was to start some time in January, but the Edison Phonograph people have succeeded in contracting for her exclusive services at so attractive a figure that the beginning of her screen work will perhaps be delayed for a month or two.

The Edison Phonograph people, who are to feature her as their leading star, are reported as entering into a tremendous advertising campaign for the product featuring Frieda Hempel. Unquestionably this will be a great asset for the pictures that are to be made starring Miss Hempel, for after all the two entertainments—motion pictures and the phonograph—are the most popular known in the world.

PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON RETURNS FROM SANTA BARBARA.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, has returned from a quick trip to the Santa Barbara studios, where he found everything started in good order for the winter's work.

Among the Picture Theaters

Big Theater Opened in Montreal

Loew Adds to List of Spendid Picture Houses in Canadian City—Rich Decorations One of Its Features.

MONTREAL'S new million dollar theater was opened Monday evening, November 19, when 3,400 people crowded into the doors, eager to see what Loew's had in store for them. Critics say that this is one of the largest and loveliest moving picture theaters on the continent. Every contrivance and innovation that modern ingenuity has devised for the amusement and comfort of the pleasure-seeking public has been provided. The decorations of the interior are of classic design, with the severity of the antique tempered somewhat to suit the love of ornamentation of today. Cameos are used extensively, and medallions in white and gray appear charmingly on every side. The color scheme of the interior is, strictly speaking, rose, gold and gray. The walls are paneled with old rose brocade to match the thick carpet and the draperies that sweep in long lines between the Corinthian pillars of the boxes. Everywhere the seats are dull gray, on the balcony, in the orchestra, and the light cane chairs in the boxes. Gold sunbursts and wheels are effectively used in the mural and ceiling decoration, and the proscenium arch that outlines the stage is made of a lacy fretwork painted gold. The oval above the lounge is gilt, broken in the center with cameo medallions. The frescoes are exceedingly fine, depicting classical scenes and mythological deities in pale pastel colorings. Throughout the theater, marble has been freely used, which heightens the richness of effect. The greatest triumph of all is the marble staircase in the lounge. The lighting of the theater embodies all the latest theatrical devices. Nowhere is there a sign of an electric bulb, but nevertheless light seems to radiate from every part of the building. The glass background of the proscenium arch lights up, forming a huge glowing semicircle. From the center of the ceiling hangs a dome of colored glass with a number of smaller domes around it. When these lights are lit the effect is rich and subdued. Rather a novel device is the glass panels underneath the balcony which are transformed into brilliant slabs at a turn of the lever.

To describe the plan of the theater is almost the task of an architect. On entering, one passes through the marble lobby into the rotunda. This apartment is oval in shape, and is provided with comfortable seats and sofas, where the men may smoke. A huge fireplace gives a final note of coziness to the whole scene, and doors lead into cloak rooms or telephone booths. At this point the ticket holders of balcony and orchestra seats part company. The marble staircase leads down into the main body of the theater, while a short sloping corridor brings one up into the mezzanine balcony. Besides the row of brass-railed boxes in the front of the balcony, there are six boxes on each side of the stage. The stage itself is large, being some thirty-four feet deep with a forty-five foot front. Japanese cloths predominate, and the curtain is aglow with gorgeous oriental coloring. Hidden in the unknown recesses of the theater are the dressing rooms with modern lighting and plenty of mirrors. Special care has been taken to insure a good view of the stage from every seat in the house, and the balcony is swung without a single pillar. The safety of patrons has been given especial thought. Probably no other theater has a better system of fire escapes. The vast auditorium can be emptied in two minutes.

With the opening of Loew's, Montreal has two large moving picture and vaudeville houses, in addition to two other large theaters devoted solely to pictures. A third picture and vaudeville show will shortly enter the field, when the new Princess Theater is finished.

EMPRESS THEATER NOW OPERATED BY GRAND MANAGEMENT.

The American Amusement Company, Faribalt, Minn., which operates the Grand Theater in that city, has taken over the Empress Theater, also in that city. The Empress was formerly conducted by Louis Holmen, who, owing to bad health, had to go South. The Empress is a successful house and was in Mr. Holmen's hands for the past three or four years. The American Company will redecorate its new house.

GRANTS PASS, ORE., HAS DANDY LITTLE THEATER.

A dandy little theater in the Willamette Valley, managed by one of the most progressive exhibitors in the territory, is the Bijou, Grants Pass, Ore. The house seats 250 and now charges 5 and 20 cents. The programs used are Perfection, Metro, Triangle and Vitagraph and the management is always ready to book the big specials.

The members of the Caldwell family, which operates the Bijou Theater, Grants Pass, Ore.

Bijou, are old timers in the show game, and all the work, from operating to music, is done by a Caldwell. The Caldwells came from Nez Perce, Idaho, where they also conducted a photoplay theater. When they took over the Bijou it was considered a "Jonah" by the Portland wiseacres, but real showmanship soon put it in good shape and it is now one of the most popular little theaters in Southern Oregon.

New Allen Theater, Toronto, Ont.

First of the Large Downtown Houses to Be Devoted Exclusively to Pictures—Has No Balcony or Gallery and Tiers of Seats Rise in Amphitheatre Style—Owned by Allen Family, with Extensive Interests in Film Business.

THE first large downtown theater in Toronto to be erected exclusively for the presentation of moving pictures is the Allen Theater at Richmond and Victoria streets. The house was opened on Saturday evening, November 10, under most auspicious circumstances, great crowds of enthusiastic people filling the amphitheater for the two performances. No special ceremony was staged to commemorate the birth of the beautiful structure and this feature, or the lack of it, merely reflects the Western nature of the man who has been placed at the rudder, J. B. Cronk, formerly manager of the Allen Theater, Calgary. When he was placed in charge of the house three months ago he did not set about to have a special gathering of notables at the opening performance.

"The people I want to see at the first performance are those whom I may expect to see in the theater the following week and the following," declared Manager Cronk with emphasis when questioned by the Toronto correspondent of the Moving Picture World. "I do not want to have it said that our prospective patrons were not given a look-in on the opening night. If the theater is good enough for them afterwards it is good enough for them when the first picture is screened."

Thus Cronk makes friends, and judging by the attendance on the first night the Allen Theater appears to have a lot of good second and third nighters.

The Allen Theater is one of a prominent string of big houses in the Dominion controlled by the Allen family. It is their only theater in Eastern Canada, although they made their start with a mere store show in Brantford, Ontario, ten years ago. Incidentally, the home of the manager, Mr. Cronk, is in Brantford, and he started with the Allens in their first theater venture there. The first theater erected by the Allens in the West was the Monarch at Calgary, after which they secured Allen theaters in Calgary and

New Allen Theater, Toronto, Ont.

Moose Jaw. They built the Rex Theater at Regina, Sask., in 1912 and other houses in their Western chain are the Rex of Winnipeg and the Allen of Brandon, Manitoba. The latter was opened last July. While in the West the Allens became interested in the distribution of films as the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, with six branches of the company to cover the country. Two years ago they moved their headquarters to Toronto. Today they control the exclusive distribution in the Dominion of all Artcraft, Paramount, Select and other releases.

The company which operates the Allen Theater, Toronto, is known as the Temple Theater Corporation, of which B. Allen, the father, is president; Jule Allen is secretary-treasurer, and Jay J. Allen is vice-president. The staff of the theater includes Manager Cronk, L. B. Goodman, formerly of the Famous Players Film Service, who serves as assistant manager; S. Sternberg, treasurer; A. Cohen, formerly of the Allen Theater, Calgary, chief operator; C. Dettlebeck, second operator; H. Chauncey, assistant operator; H. Linch, stage manager, and M. Cavendish, house superintendent.

As might be expected, much attention has been paid to the detail of music. Luigi Romanelli, formerly of the Strand Theater, Toronto, is the musical director, and under him is an orchestral organization of sixteen pieces. The organist is Roland Todd, an artist of renown. Naturally, the orchestra played a prominent part in the proceedings on opening night, and its presentation of the overture from "Phedre" (Massenet) as the opening number was received with enthusiastic acclaim. A special musical number was the premiere of Estell Beder, the young Russian concert pianist, a pupil of Djane Lavoie. The young artiste has been raised in an atmosphere of music, as his birthplace was Vilna, West Russia, the natal place of Cesar Cui, the Russian composer. The film feature of the opening program was Artcraft's "The Little American," starring Mary Pickford. Other film numbers were a Christie comedy, the Universal Screen Magazine and Gaumont Weekly. The program was continued throughout the week.

The presentation of moving pictures has been accorded a magnificent setting in the new Allen. The theater is absolutely new from the ground up and many of the details are innovations. The dominant color scheme is old rose, gold and gray, with the carpets, rugs and draperies in old rose. The decorations are dainty and not ultra-ornate or gaudy. The house possesses a cozy and comfortable atmosphere without an evidence of crowding. There is no gallery or balcony, the tier after tier of seats rising in Roman amphitheater style. The great slope is roughly halved by a semi-circle of "auto boxes" in which are found attractive white wicker chairs. These are reserved as well as the proscenium boxes. The "auto boxes" and various sections of the auditorium are bounded by white fences of neat design. There is no stage in the ordinary sense of the word, the orchestra having been placed immediately under the screen with a low fence of classic design and in a semi-circular form separating the orchestra from the seats of the public. There are no stairways, access to various portions of the auditorium being provided by means of inclined runways. Immediately opposite the main entrance is a cozy rendezvous which invites ease of mind. To the right and left are the retiring rooms, which are substantially fitted. Because of the absence of an airy upper structure over the "stage" and of the usual balconies, the acoustic properties could hardly be improved. There are numerous aisles and exits, with the result that seated patrons are little disturbed by those entering or leaving the theater.

The Allen has adopted the policy of presenting programs by the week and the theater is opened at noon each day. Evening performances start at seven and nine o'clock. The adopted schedule of admission prices is not high. All seats at matinees, with the exception of boxes, are 15 cents except on Saturdays and holidays, when evening prices prevail. The night price is 25 cents for all seats with the exception of the boxes, which are 50 cents. The matinee charge for boxes is 25 cents.

For the opening week the management issued an elaborate twelve-page souvenir program in which the policy of the theater, its constructional features, coming attractions and other details were described, and which also contained the opening program and a house directory. The finesse of this book was only in keeping with the grandeur of the building.

North Yakima to Have $10,000 Theater.

Frederick Mercy of North Yakima, Wash., is building a $10,000 moving picture theater in that city. Mr. Mercy also operates the Yakima, where road shows are the main attraction. The new house is expected to be ready for business in a few months.

Hood River Gets New Theater.

In the not very distant future there will be opened in Hood River, Ore., a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 500. The new amusement house will be known as the New Liberty, and as indicated by the plans nothing will be omitted that would contribute to the convenience and comfort of the patrons. In short, it is to be one of the most up-to-date picture houses in the State of Oregon.

"The Land of Promise"

Paramount Presents Billie Burke in a Domestic Comedy-Drama of Unusual Opportunity, in Which the Star Is at Her Best.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN many ways "The Land of Promise" is a peculiar story, but it opens up a unique situation, and it offers a characterization for Billie Burke which brings out the finest quality she has yet shown as an actress on stage or screen. A composite of her previous roles would be that of "Miss Smirk"—in this case she gives a portraiture of submissive and enduring womanhood under trying circumstances, occasionally revolting against her narrowed environment, forever straining on the leash, yet led back again to the inevitable imprisonment of her individuality by a dominant sex trait, that of sympathy. The characterization is so admirably conceived and so consistently interpreted by Miss Burke that it holds attention through a wandering story, which often gets away from the main line of interest, clean and clear to the end.

The girl goes the limit of human patience as the companion of an invalid who promises a great reward at her death, but death comes unexpectedly, and the only will is one dated ten years back. The girl is left penniless, and goes to the farm of a brother in Manitoba. Here the crudest sort of domestic life is in progress, and no little amusement is brought out of contrast with the life the girl has known. There is slowly developed, but nevertheless surely, an antagonism in this household which makes it impossible for the girl to remain, but she is without resource and has nowhere else to go. One of the hands is a powerful and coarse-fibred young farmer who has been unfortunate with his own crop and compelled to hire out until he can raise money enough to start again, and this he obtains. He decides that he ought to have a "woman" to clean house and cook his meals, and, as it is purely a matter of business with him, he will find a wife at an employment agency. The forlorn girl, now at the end of existence in her brother's house, torn by conflicting emotions because of her early refinement and high hopes, desperately seizes this opportunity and becomes the primitive young farmer's wife "in name only," it being understood that the relation is merely one of mutual service in field and household.

Scene from "The Land of Promise" (Paramount).

He is manly enough, and a hard worker, but he is so utterly and hopelessly coarse that she does not succeed in refining him, much less loving him. He is beginning to revolt her later on with rather crude overtures, when she receives a belated remittance of money, one large enough to enable her to quit her hateful surroundings. Her new plans are upset when he forces the door of her room one night and brutally compels her to be his real wife. She decides next morning to leave him forever, but she learns that all his labor has been in vain—his farm crop is doomed to official destruction because his place has been over-run by a prohibited weed, whose spread means the destruction of neighboring farms. He is once more in the depth of misery, and his penitent mood softens her more than his misfortune. Out of a deep well of native sympathy she decides to give him the money she has received to stay with him as his loving and faithful wife, and the story so ended to the satisfaction of a large audience at the Strand theater.

"Beloved Jim"

Five-Reel Universal Special Production Features Priscilla Dean, Harry Carter and Joseph Girard in Christmas Offering.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A CHRISTMAS story filled with genuine Christmas sentiment at the beginning and leading up to a strong series of emotion situation—such is "Beloved Jim." It goes a step further than the usual Yuletide narrative, several steps in fact, in that it combines a real story with the customary holiday atmosphere. And Jim's heart problem is not an obvious one, for the observer is kept wondering until the very close whether sorrow or happiness is to be his final lot.

Scene from "Beloved Jim" (Universal).

Harry Carter makes his first appearance since "The Gray Ghost" in the title role, which he handles with pleasing skill. Priscilla Dean, who had the feminine lead in "The Gray Ghost," plays the part of the orphan girl, Mary, around whose past the story centers. Joseph Girard, who wrote the present piece, plays the part of the "Derelict," and J. Morris Foster appears as the scapegrace nephew, Donald.

With this well balanced cast the story is given strong and convincing treatment. It opens with the return of Jim's nephew, Donald, for the holidays, and pictures the way in which the youth and his friends are caught badgering a hungry old derelict at the club. Jim takes the derelict home, where he is bathed and properly clothed and fed. The old fellow then enters Jim's employ.

A second Christmas rolls around and Jim has been persuaded by his three friends, known as "The Trinity," to marry the orphan girl.

Donald returns again from college and he and Mary recognize one another. Donald knows something of her past, and he trades upon this knowledge in a way that compromises her good name. Jim, thinking her untrue to him, accuses both his wife and Donald of treachery. The old derelict, who suspects Donald of all the guilt, chokes the truth out of him. The confession, to which Jim listens, clears Mary from any suspicion, past or present, and restores happiness to their home.

The holiday atmosphere is well suggested all through this number, which was directed by Stuart Paton. Others in the cast are Charles Hill Mailes, Frank Deshon, Sydney Deane, Ed. Brown, and Mrs. A. E. Witting.

"Runaway Romany"

Marion Davies Featured in Colorful Five-Reel Story of Gypsy Life—Produced by Ardsley, Released by Pathe.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a great deal in "Runaway Romany" that will appeal to the imagination of the public. Its opening scenes unfold the beginning of a story of the highly romantic type, a tale in which commonplace probabilities are disregarded in favor of the picturesque and the beautiful. It has the charm and color of the open road, and carries the observer away from everyday affairs.

The cast is an attractive one headed by Marion Davies, who was given the title role in the Dillingham-Ziegfeld revue, "Miss 1917." She has a naive beauty that fits her particularly well for the part of Romany, the missing heiress, reared by a band of gypsies. The story and scenario are also credited to Miss Davies. W. W. Bitner appears as Zelaya, chief of the gypsy band, and Pedro de Cordoba as his son, Zinga, who desires to marry Romany. Matt Moore plays the part of Bud Haskell, the fortunate suitor; Ormi Hawley appears as Anitra, and Gladden James as "Inky" Ames, the press agent who precipitated the trouble. Joseph Kilgour plays the father.

The story opens with "Inky" Ames searching in desperation for some means of bringing his star into publicity. He reads that the wealthy Theodore True is searching for his daughter lost many years previously, and writes a yarn to the effect that the actress, Anitra, is the missing girl. He even induces the actress to paint a birth mark on her shoulder by which to further aid the deception. Theodore True falls a victim to the plot and accepts the actress as his daughter.

The scene then shifts to the far West, where Romany is discovered with the wandering gypsy tribe. The settings here are chosen for their romantic character, and the subtitles, with their artistic embellishments, aid very nicely in achieving the glamour of the wild. The millionaire carries Romany back East with him much to Anitra's disgust, and in the course of certain rather melodramatic events the true story comes out. Anitra's deception becomes known, and Romany's position as the real daughter is established. The full dramatic effect of several situations is not obtained, but the story interest is strongly developed and holds the interest well.

The number was produced by Ardsley Film Corporation and directed by George Lederer.

"The Victim"

Joseph Levering Produces Interesting Roman Catholic Propaganda Story for Catholic Art Association.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT IS a well-known fact that clergymen in general have been none too well pleased with the manner in which their "cloth" has been made to serve the moving picture. Directors with little knowledge of and less regard for the etiquette of the church have repeatedly made annoying mistakes which have been held as just grievances by the clergy of different denominations. The producing of "The Victim," a multiple-reel picture, directed by Joseph Levering, appears to be not alone a matter of propaganda for the Roman Catholic Church, but an effort of the church to set itself right in the eyes of its people after a long line of such grievances.

The picture, which as exhibited at Aeolian Hall on the evening of Dec. 6 requires considerable cutting for the purpose of concentrating the action, is based on an interesting story of a priest at whose door a friend was found murdered, stabbed with a knife belonging to the priest. The secret of the story, cleverly withheld for a disclosure at the end, is that the knife, dropped on the lawn by a child to which it was given to whittle a wooden plaything, was picked up by the real murderer and used to slay the victim. In terror the murderer, having avenged a supposed wrong, rushes to the priest at sight of approaching policemen and confesses to him. The priest, bound by honor of his faith not to disclose what is told him in the confessional, allows himself to be dragged to the electric chair on circumstantial evidence. The news of the dying confession of the murderer reaches the prison just in time to save him from death.

Prominent in the cast are Robert T. Haines, Joyce Fair, Inez Marcel, Harry Benham, and Armand Cortez.

"My Unmarried Wife"

Carmel Myers in Five-Part Bluebird Adapted from Novel by Frank R. Adams Is Pleasing as Unconventional Heroine of Story with New Twist to Old Theme.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A HASTY marriage where the heroine or the husband consents to the wedding for entirely practical reasons and then learns to love the other party to the contract has been a favorite theme with authors long before the invention of moving pictures; but "My Unmarried Wife" has a new twist to the complication. This five-part Bluebird, adapted from the novel by Frank R. Adams, and known as "Molly and I," opens very seriously, but develops into a comedy-drama with a fair share of amusing situations. Phillip Smith, a young novelist reduced to his last penny, is injured by an explosion, and the pretty young nurse in the doctor's office where he is taken falls in love with him. Fearing that he will always be blind, Phillip determines to end his life, but the nurse reaches his room in time to prevent him from firing the shot. She gains his consent to marrying her at once by telling Phillip that a large fortune will become hers if she has a husband within a certain time. In return for making her Mrs. Smith she agrees to give him money enough to employ the greatest experts for his eyes, and to let him get a divorce whenever he desires. Phillip goes abroad for treatment, and his wife returns to her old position.

His sight restored and back in this country, Phillip earns a reputation and a handsome income with his writing. He hasn't the slightest idea of what his wife looks like, and doesn't bother to find her. Mrs. Smith is not so indifferent. She dresses herself as an Italian girl, and obtains a position as cook and housemaid for her husband. Phillip has a friend named Pat Calhoun, an artist, and the two men grow very much attached to Molly's cooking and to the way she keeps the apartment and finally to Molly herself. A wealthy young widow who has fallen in love with Phillip threatens to interfere with Molly's plan to win her husband's love herself. The ex-nurse heads off the danger cleverly, and the picture closes with Mr. and Mrs. Smith preparing to spend the rest of their lives like real married folks.

The acting and production are of good quality. A pleasing personality and a gift for comedy make Carmel Myers more than acceptable as the nurse. Kenneth Harlan acts Phillip in a satisfactory manner, and Beatrice Van, Pat Calhoun, Mark Fenton, and Jack Hutchinson round out the cast.

E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM'S novel, "The Hillman," is the source of "In the Balance," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature directed by Paul Scardon. The story has for a hero a sort of modern caveman who has always dwelt among his native hills and knows little of the outside world or of women. Chance throws a celebrated stage beauty in his path and she is entertained at the hero's home. The actress was on her way to the castle of the Prince of Seyre, when her automobile broke down. She goes back to town, and Strangeway, the hillman, follows her. He is deeply in love, and ready to pick a quarrel with the stage lover he sees embracing the object of his affection at a rehearsal.

The hothouse life in which he finds himself is not at all to Strangeway's liking, but he is ready to go any place if only Louise Maurel is there. The prince learns of Strangeway's devotion, and also that the actress is growing fond of him. The titled gentleman tries to entrap his rival by introducing him to a dancer of the vampire type. Strangeway refuses to be caught, and makes such good headway in his wooing that the prince intimates the worst possible about Louise. The hillman promptly knocks him down, has a brief interview with the actress, and takes the next train for home. He is just about to drink confusion to all women, when Louise walks in and confesses she was on her way to become the mistress of the prince at the time she met Strangeway. The meeting showed her what a mistake she was about to make, and she learned to love the hillman from that moment. Realizing that Louise has always been a good woman, Strangeway proposes that she become his wife with as little delay as possible.

This romantic story is capably acted by Earle Williams, Grace Darmond, Miriam Miles, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, and Templar Saxe.

"Alias Mrs. Jessop"

Fine Metro Picture—A Triumph for Emily Stevens' Acting—Has Ably-Handled Plot and Shows Sense of Proportion in Direction.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE extremely high quality of the recent Metro picture in five reels, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," is due in large measure to the artistic work of Emily Stevens. Artistic reputation is a fickle jade, but there are some who get hold of it by power and keep their hold. Emily Stevens plays the gamut of her art instrument with technical perfection and something more that puts at her command a faculty rare even in a world full of players. This picture of Blair Hall's story, scenarioized by A. S. Le Vain and directed by Will S. Davis, gives Miss Stevens a splendid chance in a double role—a woman without character and her sweet-natured cousin—and she makes excellent use of it. The other characters, among whom are Howard Hall, as the English aristocrat, who marries the willful woman and later finds his true mate in her lovely cousin, and Donald Hall, as the man the bad wife lures to destruction and who kills her, help carry the story with a reasonableness that is markedly pleasing. As a director, Will S. Davis has another excellent picture to his credit.

The story is something like the better known "Masquerader," but with a different angle and much more interesting, to my mind. Of two girls, cousins who look exactly alike, the characterless and selfish one marries a rich man and heir of an earl. She disgraces her position and the husband leaves her. Their son is in charge of a faithful nurse. The father of the wife falls sick in America and she goes to him solely so she can be near a man "friend." In America she persuades her cousin, in disgrace on account of one of the bad woman's early escapades, to take her place by her father's bedside as his daughter, Mrs. Jessop. Track of her is then lost. The alias Mrs.

"Uneasy Money"

The First of Essanay's Special Features Gives Taylor Holmes a Fine Opportunity to Show His Stellar Ability, and He Meets It Worthily—The Supporting Cast Is Strong.

By James S. McQuade.

IT has long since been accepted that the story is the chief asset of a successful photoplay, whether it be comedy or drama, and "Uneasy Money," while it can claim an excellent cast and efficient direction, can best of all boast of a story that holds the spectator in its meshes from the first to the last scene.

This fine comedy-drama has been adapted by Raymond E. Dakin from the story by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, which appeared some time ago in the Saturday Evening Post, and it is hoped that Mr. Wodehouse will be moved to furnish us with other stories that will make as strong the appeal to popular favor when adapted for screen service.

Lawrence C. Windom has so happily directed the production that the screen version retains the enjoyable comedy attractiveness of the written story, besides furnishing in person the living characters in their snappy comedy situations.

In brief the story shows how Elizabeth Nutcombe (Virginia Valli), niece of Ira Nutcombe (Chas. Gardner), an aged American millionaire, is left only a solitary quarter of a dollar in the last will and testament of that cranky old gentleman, while Lord Dawlish (Taylor Holmes), an Englishman, is left five million dollars. And this remarkable bequest was made Lord Dawlish because he had been kind and patient enough to teach the old millionaire, during one of his visits to England, not to "slice" when playing golf!

The English nobleman, seeing the unfairness and the brutality shown his niece by the dead millionaire, comes to America to find her and to share equally with her the million pounds bequeathed him. He writes Elizabeth Nutcombe to that effect, but she returns a sharp reply and refuses. Then he contrives, through Elizabeth's scapegoat brother, "Nuttie" Nutcombe (Arthur Bates), to visit incognito the chicken ranch on which Elizabeth makes a living. There the most amusing incidents of the comedy-drama take place, and I leave it to the screen to conclude the story.

A minor comedy, in which some of the principal characters of the main story figure, is contained within the narrative which has to do with the love passages between his lordship and Elizabeth Nutcombe, and it furnishes much enjoyable entertainment.

Taylor Holmes will impress the critical observer by his nice versatility in the role of Lord Dawlish. This will be enjoyably apparent to those who have seen him in his former roles on the screen. In his impersonation of this honorable nobleman Mr. Holmes shows most happy method. No vulgar effort is made to win a laugh at the expense of the character. Culture, breeding and the indefinable something that stamps a gentleman of this type are always present in his characterization of Lord Dawlish.

The scenes in which the nobleman figures at Elizabeth Nutcombe's chicken ranch, near Brookport, N. Y., are veritable explosions of the mirth line. His attempt at washing the dishes after his first breakfast at the ranch is a scream. So is his effort to whitewash the chicken coops, which he pronounces "jolly good sport" to his task mistress, who is slowly losing her heart.

Virginia Valli is a most likable Elizabeth Nutcombe. Everybody will admire the forceful American way in which she makes Elizabeth acknowledge her love for the man who had willed to her the entire five millions left him by her uncle, and then had gone away to face the future and his great loneliness.

Space forbids capitulation of the merits of other characterizations by the fine cast; but praise is due Arthur Bates as Nutty Nutcombe, Virginia Bowker as Lady Wetherby, Fred Tiden as Lord Wetherby, Lillian Drew as Claire Edmont, James F. Fulton as Mr. Pickering, Charles Gardner as Ira Nutcombe and Rod La Rocque as Johnny Gates.

This special feature in six reels will be released by George K. Spoor, January 1, through the George Kleine system.

"The Fair Barbarian"

Vivian Martin Is Featured in an Entertaining Paramount Comedy with an English Locale.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "The Fair Barbarian," a Paramount comedy released December 17, Vivian Martin shows how a girl of the West attempts to inject pep into a slow English village—and with entertaining results. Director Robert Thornby has surrounded Miss Martin with a large and competent cast. The scenario was written by Edith M. Kennedy from the story of Frances Hodgson Burnett.

The picture at no time strikes any high level, nor, on the contrary, does it hit a low one. It will make good straight entertainment. There is zest in the action and in the titling. Miss Martin has the role of a pet of a rich father; Octavia Bassett brings up herself in her own willful and winsome way, and father, mildly protesting, yields whenever between them issue is joined.

The story opens in the West, but soon shifts to England, where Octavia goes to visit an aunt in a small community. Lady Theobald is a dictator of matters social, and she and those dependent on her are properly shocked at the unconventional and direct methods of the breezy daughter of the West. It is possible the English may not be disposed to confirm the impression the picture gives of rudeness on the part of the village dwellers to those whom they may not like, but it is understandable why they should not heartily welcome one who in manner and speech is so far removed from their conception of the normal.

Jane Wolfe finely portrays Aunt Belinda, the prim Englishwoman who changes her garb in accordance with the suggestions of her niece, to the consternation of the female villagers. Charles Ogle is father Bassett. Josephine Crowell is Lady Theobald, the boss of the parish. Al Paget is a wholesome mill owner, and Charles Gerard is a rather unmilitary captain as we conceive him here. Helen Jerome Eddy shows what a real leading woman can do with a bit when in the role of the maid she appears in a costume bestowed upon her by Octavia. It is a ball gown with all the orthodox absence of roof. The maid wears it for her coming-out party, but the part of her that is not covered by the gown is completely shielded by a garment, perhaps of flannel, that comes well up on the neck and down to the wrists. The combination looks good for a real laugh.

The picture does not depend for its interest on a love theme—although Olivia has a fiancé in the beginning, and in the end characteristically retracts her rejection—but it does not have to.

Charles Ray Coming December 24.

One of those stories which go straight to the heart, awaken a new appreciation of American manhood, and prove beyond the peradventure of a doubt that success is won only by consistent effort is "His Mother's Boy," in which Charles Ray will star for Paramount. The production is to be released December 24, and was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. The story is a picturization by Ella Stuart Carson of Rupert Hughes' story, "When Life Is Marked Down."

Following this picture, in which Mr. Ray is supported by a fine cast of players, the star will be seen in "The Hired Man," by Julian Josephson, to be released in January.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, Carlyle Blackwell, Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, Evelyn Greely, June Elvidge, and Montagu Love are introduced in the studio scenes of "The Volunteer," a five-part World photoplay featuring Madge Evans and Henry Hull. Little Miss Evans appears as herself in the picture, and her father and mother are supposed to enlist for service in the war, one as a soldier and the other as a Red Cross nurse. It is decided to send the child to her grandparents, and it is when she goes to bid the other World stars good-bye that they are brought into the action. The rest of the story shows Madge's life with the old people. Her grandfather is a stern old Quaker, who is a most decided pacifist, and will not hear to his son Jonathan becoming a soldier. He has already quarreled with Madge's mother for marrying outside of the Quaker faith, and treats the little girl with coldness. When he learns that she is an actress he is horrified, but when one of his granddaughter's pictures, "The Little Duchess," is shown in the village and the rest of the family go to see it, Friend Timothy sneaks in and enjoys his first visit to a theater.

Madge also helps to win her grandfather over when Jonathan enlists on his twenty-first birthday and the young man is leaving home without his father's blessing. Another of her acts is to mount the platform at a recruiting rally and plead for volunteers. The picture has good heart interest, and its novel features should add largely to its commercial value. Harley Knoles was the director.

Henry Hull is starred jointly with little Miss Evans. He plays Jonathan excellently, and Jack Drumier gives a strong character portrayal as the old Quaker. Muriel Ostriche, Victor Kennard, Kate Lester, and Capt. Charles have important roles.

"Without Honor"

Triangle Five-part Photoplay from Story by C. Gardner Sullivan, Featuring Margery Wilson, Has Well Constructed Theme.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WOMAN'S devotion is the foundation of "Without Honor," a five-part Triangle photoplay, from a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, directed by E. Mason Hopper. The scenario is the work of George Elwood Jenks, and Margery Wilson is the featured player. Jeanie McGregor marries Roy Hanford to reform him and after two years of happiness is forced to choose between claiming that no ceremony was performed or seeing the man who has deceived her arrested for bigamy. She allows her sentimentality to overcome her common sense, and Hanford goes back to his first wife. Jeanie has a struggle with poverty and at last finds a refuge near the village Hanford came from. His father is a stern religious bigot, and when Jeanie meets him at a church service he denounces her before the congregation.

Not satisfied with this, the old deacon calls a meeting and persuades the church members to accompany him to the farmhouse where Jeanie is staying and drive her from the community. The plan has a different ending. The right man, who has always loved Jeanie, arrives just in time, makes her produce her marriage license and turn the tables on the deacon. His son, having had the decency to fall over a cliff and break his neck in the meantime, the little woman and her baby start life anew with the right man.

Taking on its own grounds "Without Honor" is an interesting and well-constructed story. It does not go very far beneath the surface of things, and its characters are of the ordinary everyday type, but it builds up to a climax that rewards virtue and punishes vice in a most satisfying manner.

The picture is acted with excellent effect by the entire cast. Margery Wilson as Jeanie McGregor wins all the sympathy possible for the character and acts with feeling and judgment. Arthur Moon presents a breezy impersonation of a flesh-and-blood traveling man, who is also the right man of the story. Darrel Foss gives a convincing portrayal as the spineless Roy

"The Hand of the Hun"

Harry Raver Has a Novelty Picture Made in Italy—In a Boy's Dream His Toy Soldiers Come to Life and Fight.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A TOUCH, deep and sincere, of sentiment and a good deal of fantastic and amusing comedy, mark "The Hand of the Hun," a four-reel novelty film, owned by Harry Raver. It has been staged by Giovanni Pastrone, the producer of "Caviria," and shows an artistic and painstaking care for little things that works to its advantage as entertainment. It was shown in a church a few weeks ago at a Red Cross show in Glen Head, L. I., and pleased the audience. Primarily, it may be called a children's film; but, on account of the freshness of the idea behind it and the comic touches and the smoothness with which its producer has overcome the difficulties of his material—it is made largely with little toy soldiers as players—it will likely delight most of the older patrons.

It is light entertainment and has a poor name. If the spectator comes with the idea of seeing a great war melodrama, he may feel disappointed, while if he comes to see a children's picture he will certainly be tickled by it. In a couple of its scenes there is shown a charge of cavalry, a row of wooden horsemen, built to show the correct perspective, go over the field to capture a fortress. A miniature country-side had to be made to give setting for much of it and it is all astonishingly well done.

As a specimen of its comedy, one of the Hun's big black Berthas is made to shoot poison gas over the valley. On the other side, the Allied soldiers bring a bellows into play and capture all the gas which they bag. The bags are marked "Return to the Sender." Again we see the Grand Emperor come out on his wooden horse to distribute iron crosses. The charger is not forgotten and, on having his cross hung around the neck, salutes his master like a major.

All this is in the dream of a child whose father is away fighting the Hun. We are first shown the heart-break of the war, and then get the comedy relief. The reviewer enjoyed the picture.

"The Auction Block"

Goldwyn Releases a Drama of Strong Motive and Elaborate Treatment by Rex Beach.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE photodramatization of Rex Beach's story, "The Auction Block," aims high and hits the mark in its symbolism.

Its purpose is strongly enforced in the beginning and end, and the costly elaboration of development between, worked out with great care, is almost extravagant in prodigal settings, rich costumes, crowded ensembles and breadth of cast. Mere flashes are given of scenes wrought with all the care and nicety of detail required of "high points" in the average screen story of importance. With a dozen line types in the cast and the characterizations well-balanced, it is difficult to select those of highest merit, but popular attention will be attracted to the performers of largest opportunity, Rubye De Remer, as the pretty country girl whose family sends her to the auction block of metropolitan life, the girl show, is a star in the making, just now too much inclined to sit for her picture, facing camera-ward, and not deeply enough interested in the feelings of a pure-minded girl struggling with an environment of New York theatricalism to be entirely convincing. Eager, earnest and sweet to the eye, she is still preoccupied with the impression Rubye De Remer is going to make, a common fault among screen debutants. Looking the part also, Mr. Tom Powers is a most interesting young spendthrift, and possibly true to life in his characterization so far as the sons of Pittsburgh millionaires are concerned. He has a much more winning personality than could be found among the gilded youth of New York—he also lacks some of their savoir faire, French for knowing what to do in society.

One of the strongest impersonations in "The Auction Block" is that of Florence Deshon as the daughter of a Pittsburgh mill worker gone to the bad in New York, where she learns the futility of vengeance after blackmailing and murdering her father's heartless employer. Her story on the screen is one of those side tracks which are easily handled in a novel, while they are dangerous in a screen product, but it is brought naturally to the main line of interest and serves to complicate a situation after the heroine is married. It also serves to divert attention from the theme. Miss Deshon's interpretation, slightly exaggerated at times, is on the whole so satisfactory that she may be easily classed as a winner. George Cooper, Alice Francis and others of screen experience add greatly to the generally satisfactory performance.

Rex Beach adds the big element of zip to the presentation with his forceful and appropriate sub-titles. When all else fails he can easily find work as a writer of titles. They are effective even when he philosophizes. He wrote the story in illustration of woman's tremendous influence for good, or for evil, over organized society, ourselves as we live, move and have our being, with always that generous view of broadminded men that women are more sinned against than sinning. He has taken a strong-armed way of enforcing the theme, scattering his forces at times, but getting there in the end. He will get there more surely and swiftly when he adheres to a single line of interest, cuts his cast in two and concentrates his action into as brief a time as possible. The unities are more essential in screen production than in that of the stage. The release should prove a big winner on the grounds of determined purpose and rich story development.

"Nan of Music Mountain"

Remarkable Cast Supports Wally Reid in Fine Western Drama Produced by Lasky.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A REMARKABLE cast supports Wally Reid in "Nan of Music Mountain," a strong western production coming from the Lasky studios and released by Paramount December 17. Some of the players in this story of a country reached only by railroad stage, of outlaws and straight shooting property defenders, are Anna Little, Theodore Roberts, Charles Ogle, James Cruze, Raymond Hatton, Hart Hoxie and Guy Mason. There's a combination which would do much with a weak story, and "Nan of Music Mountain" is in no such category.

George Melford has staged the subject in the big tree country; there are picturesque views of shady valleys and distant mountains. He has incorporated a snowstorm, blinding, pitiless in its ferocity, one that is rare in photodramas. Beulah Marie Dix has written the scenario from the story of Frank H. Spearman.

Mr. Reid has the role of Henry De Spain, a railroad employe who is given the task of straightening out affairs in a lawless country, to clean it up. Adventures are pretty surely to follow close on an assignment of that sort, and they do here. In the course of his work he meets Nan Morgan, the daughter of the chief of the men who do as they please unretarded by consideration of the representatives of the law or the railroad, which in earlier days was one and the same thing. Mr. Reid gives a fine performance.

Miss Little finely fits the role of Nan. The part might have been written around her. Nan is no soft-hearted female who implicitly follows the instructions of father when those instructions run counter to her own plans. She is a chip of the old block, standing her ground in the family differences of opinion as to who shall be her husband, and taking adequate measures to frustrate the designs of her father and carry out her own.

Messrs. Roberts and Ogle are Duke Morgan and Sassoon, the chief and his assistant. They put into the portrayal of their parts the skill and art of which they are masters. Mr. Cruze is Gale, the nephew of Duke and a suitor for the hand of Nan. There is a long cast.

The picture is above the average in quality and should go strongly in any house.

THE eighth episode of the Paramount serial, "Who Is Number One?" is entitled "Walls of Gas," for the reason that the T-T-T, in an attempt to possess the fortune of Graham Hale, make use of a poisonous gas, the fumes of which cannot be withstood without the aid of gas masks. The episode is well staged and interesting despite the fact that the star, Kathleen Clifford, has less to do than usual. Considerable footage is taken up with good effect by scenes showing the activity of the T-T-T previous to the blowing up of the bank vault in which Hale's fortune is confined, the actual severing of the vault door, and the escape with bags of what they believe to be money, but find out later to be filled with bogus coins. Effective scenes portraying the effect of the gas on the policemen and others who attempt to enter the building are followed by the breaking of the news of the burglary to Hale.

"New York Luck"

William Russell Featured in Five-part Comedy of Entertaining Quality for Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the best of William Russell Productions is "New York Luck." An amusing theme has been used as the basic idea of the picture; and while the most interesting part of it is contained in an imaginary continuation of the real story by the hero in a letter written home during his New York sojourn, the production as a whole has quite a strong appeal in a comedy way. At times the impersonation of the raw country youth by William Russell lacks in subtlety, while at other times the spectator experiences a sense of total satisfaction with the work of the star. One of the most fetching pieces of business given him to do is found in the hero's imaginary story where he registers a comical embarrassment at having dropped his bow tie in the presence of the girl he adores.

The story treats of the fulfillment of the desire of a country youth to come to New York—a city of dreams and realized ambitions. After a series of disappointments during which time he continues to write glowing accounts of his luck in the big city, his imagination leads him to tell a wonderful tale of how he found his way to the home of a beautiful girl, whose purse he had picked up in his home town, where the train on which she passed through had been side tracked. This tale includes the rescue of the girl and her father from the machinations of a pair of crooks with whom he grapples successfully. This part of the picture, by the way, presents an aspect of thrilling melodrama. The return of the real story, from which we suddenly realize that we have departed some time ago, brings on the scene a moving picture director originally from the youth's home town. After reading the letter picturing acts of wonderful prowess, the director tells the youth that if he can turn out stories of that calibre he will give him one thousand dollars on the spot and a steady position. The actual meeting of the youth and the girl, who is a moving picture actress, takes place later and is quite amusing. Francelia Billington plays in her usual fascinating way the role of the girl. The picture was ably directed by Edward Sloman.

IN the careful adaptation of "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking" and "Two Renegades" the O. Henry flavor is as distinctly evident as in the short stories themselves. It is scarcely too much to say that one familiar with the racy, ironic style of this well known writer would recognize the touch in a screen presentation of one of his tales whether he had read the original story or not. Which might go to prove that more of a writer's individuality lies in his conception of a story than in the manner of its presentation.

Both of these new offerings, presented in two reels each, adhere closely to real life and character even though the plots are of a whimsical, humorous sort. The direction has been carried out in an intelligent way, and such subtitles as are used are in line with the development of the action.

"Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking" is a timely number, featuring George Cooper as the hobo here and Adele De Garde as the girl in the case. Dick is first seen emerging from a box car whistling "The Wearin' of the Green." This genial performance wins him a drink from a kind-hearted cop, which gives his day a pleasant start. He then hits the open road, and picks up a silk stocking dropped from an automobile by a pretty girl. In the course of the tale Dick saves a house party from a raid by his fellow hoboes on Christmas eve. He is abundantly fed and given lodging for the night, but when morning comes he creeps out of the window and resumes his travels in characteristic fashion. The characterizations are excellent, and the settings very attractive.

"Two Renegades" is one of O. Henry's fanciful yarns of the Panama country. The chief character is one Bernard O'Keefe, admirably portrayed by W. L. Rodgers. O'Keefe, while a Northern man, is discovered in a Confederate Soldier's Home, and, when asked for an explanation, tells the way in which he first claimed adherence to the "stars and bars." The yarn is an enjoyable one, full of humorous touches, and the Panama settings are unique and pleasing.

The two pictures were directed by George Ridgwell and David Smith, respectively.

"Blue Jeans"

Seven-Part Screen Version of Famous Old Melodrama Presented by B. A. Rolfe, with Viola Dana as June, Should Duplicate Its Former Success—Released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MELODRAMA with good "heart interest" and a sensational punch in the proper place will always have a large following. "Blue Jeans" was a record-breaker when produced on the stage, and the screen version, presented by B. A. Rolfe, with Viola Dana as June, should duplicate its former success. Joseph Arthur, who put the original play together, did not attempt to introduce any fine writing into his work, but he did understand how to appeal to that large class of theatergoers that belong to what Lincoln called the common people. The trials and tribulations of the little heroine of the story were made very real to the audiences that filled the theaters whenever the play was given, and the sawmill scene never failed to impart a most delightful thrill.

The screen version of "Blue Jeans" retains all the old "heart interest," has a remarkably realistic arrangement of the sensational rescue in the mill, and dispenses with some comedy characters and scenes that are not necessary to the advancement of the story. June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor, who made the scenario, have shown excellent judgment in their choice of material, and John H. Collins, the director, has managed his share of the production admirably. The correct atmosphere is maintained throughout, and the action moves forward with but little interference in the way of cutbacks.

Rising Sun, Indiana, in the early '80s, is the scene of the story, and June, the heroine, is an orphan girl who runs away from the poorhouse and comes to the town where her grandparents are living. She marries a young fellow who is claimed by another woman, and fate so mixes up matters that she is led to believe that her husband is her own brother. While the man she has married goes to find the proof that his first wife had a husband living when she went through the ceremony with him, June is left to face the ordeal of motherhood alone. Her grandfather turns her from his home for marrying a man he hates, and the minister refuses to baptize her child because he and his congregation believe that June is not the legal wife of its father. Sue Eudaly, the woman in the case, succeeds in fascinating Ben Boone, an unscrupulous politician, and when June's husband returns with the proofs against her Sue influences Ben to try to murder the man she deceived. The scene takes place in the sawmill. The two men have a struggle. Boone overpowers his opponent, throws him upon a log and starts the saw. He is rescued by June just in the nick of time. And once more attention should be called to the fact that this situation is a "thriller" of uncommon power.

Following a long line of stage Junes, the screen star, Viola Dana, quickly proves her right to her heritage. All the qualities called for by the character, the youth, charm, fine sincerity and adequate art are supplied by her in full measure. Robert Walker is an upstanding and likable Perry Bascom, and Sally Crute gives Sue Eudaly the necessary attractiveness and want of good morals. Russell Simpson is a Jacob Tutwiler drawn from life. Henry Hallam as Col. Henry Clay Risenor, Margaret McWade as Cindy Tutwiler, and Augustus Phillips as Jack Bascom are all competent. The picture was photographed by John Arnoud. The only drawback to "Blue Jeans" is the backgrounds for the subtitles.

"The Narrow Trail"

After Many Days the Hart-Artcraft Picture Is Shown in New York—Has Thrills and Heart Interest.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A STIRRING picture is "The Narrow Trail," the William S. Hart-Artcraft picture the showing of which has been delayed in New York and its vicinity by reason of an injunction. It will rank with the best of the Hart productions. It has real heart interest. It has thrills, several distinct specimens of that most desirable photodramatic accessory, in fact. Standing out above the others, perhaps, is the battle in which Ice Harding engages with a half-dozen or more of the habitués of the Barbary Coast resort. The scrap will bring grown men to the edge of their seats. It is no fifty-foot affair, but runs long enough to give a sufficiency to even the more than ordinarily pugnacious. It ought to rank with the big fist-fights of the screen, and Hart has made some notable contributions to these.

Then there is the getaway from the sheriff following the stirring horse race in which Fritz wins a thousand for his owner, the county authorities waiting for the rider to claim his winnings in order to arrest him as a highwayman. Harding has overheard their plannings. He has warned Betty Werdin to be out on the track after the race. Harding takes the money, knowing the sheriff is standing at his back. Scarcely looking behind him he bowls over the county executive, jumps from the platform to the back of the horse, and reaches down and picks up Betty. As the horse with its double load jumps the fence inclosing the track several women members of the Board of Censors audibly betrayed their excitement—and they were not to be blamed.

It is likely, too, that "The Narrow Trail" will be remembered by many photoplaygoers because of its marking the valedictory of Fritz, the pony of Hart—that is, so far as such riding is concerned. For three years this fine animal has held the regard of the admirers of his owner. Fritz passes from the screen as its one famous equine performer. His rider gives him full play in his farewell, and we can see that like the real actor he goes out in all his strength.

The story is written around a highwayman and a woman of the honkytonks who at first in their effort to win each other's regard conceal their past. Later the man discovers the truth in regard to the woman and flies into a rage. In cooler blood he meets her and begs her pardon—and reveals his own wrongdoings. He proposes and is accepted. Sylvia Bremer is Betty, the girl who rebels at her surroundings. Somehow Miss Bremer does not look the part, it is not easy to believe a girl living in such surroundings can possess a face of such apparent ignorance of the seamy side of life—to put it more plainly, perhaps, a face of innocence. Likable she is, beyond question.

"The Narrow Trail" is a western that will stand out.

Victor Moore in "Oh! U Boat."

Klever Pictures, Inc., will release on Dec. 31, a timely comedy called "Oh! U Boat," featuring Victor Moore. It was written by Thos. J. Gray and directed by Chester M. DeVande.

The comedy tells a story about Vic, who hates water so much that he has to be blindfolded before he will take a bath. His wife is a regular mermaid, and at the beach she dives swims like a fish. This comedy will go very big and lots of laughs and excitement. It is so far anywhere. Moore is supported by a bevy of Beach Beauties who are in

"The Fighting Trail"

Vitagraph's First Serial Lives Up to the Claims of Producers and Is Filled with Interest and Action from First to Last Episode.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE release of "Out of the Flame," episode fifteen of the Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail," completes the J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady story, in which William Duncan and Carol Holloway are the star players. The pictures lives up to the claims of its producers as "The Most Marvelous Melodramatic Photoplay Serial of the Great Outdoors," and is filled with interest and action from first to last episode. Much of the credit for the success of the serial belongs to William Duncan, who directed the production, as well as acted the role of the hero, John Gwyn. Everything connected with the picture, cast, locations and the realistic and hair-raising "stunts," leave nothing to be desired. Lovers of melodrama will find a steady stream of thrills in each one of the episodes.

Carol Holloway, as Nan Lawton, the sweetheart and companion of John Gwyn, demonstrates her fitness for the position in each of the numbers released. No incident has been too strenuous or too full of danger to daunt her. George Holt, as "Deep Cut" Rawls, and Joe Ryan, as "Shoestring" Drant, contribute strongly-drawn character studies.

Aside from the speed and punch of the story, it contains touches of heart interest and neat bits of construction that add greatly to its merit.

"Wages No Object"

Metro-Drew Comedy in Which a Gloomy Cook Causes the Family of Two Much Distress.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

RATHER an original idea has been found as a basis for the Metro-Drew comedy, "Wages No Object." Among the frequent domestic troubles of the Minor family arises the necessity occasioned by Mandy's decision to return to her home in old Kentucky, of looking for a new cook. A nicely worded advertisement which states that the party in question is more desirous of gaining a good home than a high wage lures Mr. Minor to investigate and causes him to return with a refined and gentle person who proves a delight as far as the table is concerned, but who breaks into tears at the slightest demonstration of affection in the Minor family. Mrs. McGuire's propensity for gloom finally gets on the nerves of first one and then the other, and finally when the opportunity to get rid of her presents itself in the shape of a western friend looking for a cook for his ranch, the unhappy cook is easily disposed of. A few months later brings the news that in spite of her faults Mrs. McGuire has succeeded in placing herself so firmly in the affections of her employer that he has married her.

This number is not quite as amusing as other Drew comedies we have seen, but it makes good on its refinement and originality.

Flynn Serial in Twenty Episodes"

Big Secret Service Story of German Intrigue in America Will Command Wide Attention.

EVERY facility of the great Wharton studios, at Ithaca, N. Y., is being utilized in the production of the new serial, "The Eagle's Eye," founded on a story by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service. This attraction will be presented in twenty episodes, each complete in itself, but making a part of a powerful story possessing a wonderfully compelling love interest and thrillingly sustained suspense. The character in this serial will be played by a large and very competent company, headed by King Baggot, who will play the role of the hero, and by Marguerite Snow, who will act the part of the heroine. Both these players are popular stars and widely known through their appearance in many notable productions.

While this production is a private enterprise, it has a great public purpose behind it and it is believed that it will prove a powerful factor in the propaganda of the United States Government to arouse the public of this country to the menace of the Imperial German Government's secret spy system now in active operation in this country.

The constantly increasing influence of the motion picture as a moulder of public opinion is now recognized and appreciated by every thoughtful person. Its singular power in this direction has been most effectively demonstrated since the declaration of war by the United States against the Imperial German Government—that insidious and conscienceless autocratic machine which, for more than thirty years, has plotted against the peace of all nations, even of Germany itself, to the attainment of the realization of a dream of world-power conceived in ultimate criminal interest against the peace, prosperity and self-government of all peoples.

To the attainment of this purpose the Imperial German Government created two wonderfully effective forces—a military organization of greater efficiency than any in the history of the world and a secret power—a political, military, naval and industrial spy system, with a scope and potency almost beyond appreciation by the human mind.

This spy system was extended all over the world, the German industrial secret service being its actual foundation. Although this government was at peace with Germany, autocracy's secret spy system, numbering many thousands of men and women, soon began to make itself felt here in sabotage, incendiarism and other crimes to the detriment of the Allies and in the carrying out of a propaganda which would influence public opinion in this country adversely to the Allies and against taking any part in the war, no matter what provocation the Central Powers might offer.

The trend of events leading to the Government of the United States entering the war—in effect as an antagonist to the personal ambitions of the Kaiser to rule the world—the conspiracies to invade Canada, to blow up the Welland Canal and to embroil this country in a war with Mexico, the repeated sinkings of unarmed American merchant ships at sea in contravention of international law and in disregard to the protest of the President, the fomentation of labor disputes, the breeding of class hatred and of alien interference in governmental affairs, are known, but the powerful secret influences behind them are little appreciated by the people in general.

The story of "The Eagle's Eye" deals with these events only in so far as they may have effect on the future by making known to the American people, in a practical and convincing way, something of the hidden intrigues of the Imperial German Government against the United States and the safety and well being of its people.

While the incidents, founded on fact, pictured in Chief Flynn's serial, will relate to cases of the past, investigated and finished, there will be much in them that will prove very enlightening as to the present and the future. In the telling of the story such noted German Government representatives as Count von Bernstorff, Captain von Papen, Captain Boy-Ed, Wolf von Igell and Dr. Albert, the arch-conspirator of them all, will be seen in very convincing impersonations. While they are no longer in this country, they have left behind them an organization of far-reaching power to harass and endanger the safety of the people, and it is believed that the publication of Chief Flynn's serial will give to the public such a clear insight into the enemy's spy system now at work that this organization will soon find itself under such scrutiny as will result in greatly curtailing its activities. General public vigilance on every hand will undoubtedly deter enemy spies from carrying out some of the dastardly plots they may now contemplate putting into execution.

High Speed at Astra Studios

Pathe Plays and Gold Rooster Productions Keep Entire Staff Busy.

THE greatest activity prevails at both Astra studios, where the entire directorial force is at work on the forthcoming big-star, big-story Pathe features.

George Fitzmaurice is directing the Al. Woods stage success, "Innocent," with Fannie Ward in the star role supported by John Milner, playing the same part he interpreted in the stage production. In this feature many scenes are laid in the Far East, and Mr. Fitzmaurice's long residence in the Orient will assure accurate atmosphere.

Albert Parker is directing the screen version of the Al. H. Woods stage hit, "The Other Woman," in which Peggy Hyland, Milton Sills, and Anna Lehr will have leading roles.

Hobart Henley is putting the finishing touches to "Mrs. Slacker," a story of present day war conditions by Agnes Johnston that will arouse the last drop of latent patriotism even though it is not a war story. In it Gladys Hulette, Creighton Hale, Walter Heirs, and Paul Clerget, the famous French pantomime artist, make up an irresistible cast.

"Convict No. 993," adapted from Wallace Clifton's baffling mystery story, "The Frame-Up," with an all-star cast including Irene Castle, Harry Benham, Warner Oland, Helen Chadwick, J. H. Gilmour, and Paul Everton, has been completed under the direction of William Erker. It is released January 6.

"The Mysterious Client," a mystifying tale with many gripping situations, is rapidly rounding into shape under the direction of Fred Wright, who recently rejoined the Pathe directing forces. Playing in this picture are Irene Castle, Milton Sills, and Warner Oland, the famous trio of stars of the serial "Patria," and also Cesare Gravina, who distinguished himself in "The Fatal Ring" serial.

New Arrangement of L-Ko Directors.

President Julius Stern, of L-Ko Comedies, remains on the Pacific Coast for another month to observe the outcome of several changes he has made in consultation with Director General J. G. Blystone at the Hollywood studios, where L-Kos come from. There has been a general shift of players and directors brought about by the addition of new stars for the L-Ko list, and the new schedule of operations is depended upon to work a general benefit to the product.

W. S. Frederick came to L-Ko with Mack Swain to direct the "Ambrose" comedian in a series of releases that will bring that character to the screen once a month. Vin Moore, directing Myrtle Sterling, will have Al Forbes as his principal comedian. Gale Henry is being directed by Robert Kerr, with Hughie Mack and Bobby Dunn doing the leading male comedy.

Dave Morris, transferred from Nestors, is being supervised in his offerings by Archie Mayo. The female contingent of assisting players in the various companies include Babe Emerson, Kathryn Young, and Rae Godfrey in prominent places, and the assemblage of bathing girls, "villagers," and supporting beauties has been liberally augmented. L-Ko is going in for better results than ever, according to advance promises.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

TOO MUCH ELEPHANT (Selburn Comedy).—A one-reel comedy featuring Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby. The action takes place in a small town. The hero is forced to attach a trained elephant from a circus, as payment for hay and grain. The elephant's tricks are very amusing and there is also the usual love story. The number is slight in plot, but entertaining and well presented.

ON THE LOVE LINE (Sparkle Comedy).—A rough and tumble number which follows the fortunes of a waitress named Letty. After a mix-up in the restaurant, she returns to her home, where an entangled love affair between her "rube" lover and a count ensues. The action is of a burlesque nature and gets up a fair amount of humor.

A DISAPPOINTED LOVE (Jaxon Comedy).—This number features Burns and Stull in the characters of "Pokes" and "Jabs." Some of the action is funny, but the connecting plot is too slight to get the best effects. The most amusing episode is that in which Jabs tries to kill himself by taking powdered sugar, which he thinks is rat poison.

PHYSICAL CULTURE SCREEN NO. 2 (Physical Culture Photo Plays).—This entertaining subject shows Bernarr Macfadden in numerous muscular poses, Vera Roehm in breathing exercises and various acrobatic, dancing and swimming feats by trained athletes. There is also a demonstration of a children's gymnasium framework and a game of "water tag." Instructive and informing along physical culture lines.

LAKE LOUISE (Essanay).—A splendid scenic subject, showing Lake Louise and its picturesque environment in the Canadian Rockies. Views of the Victoria glacier, Bow river, the Chateau hotel and innumerable natural wonders are included. This scenic will appeal to a wide public, many of whom have seen the actual wonders depicted.

TWO RENEGADES (Broadway Star Feature), Dec. 22.—An O. Henry story of the Panama country, directed by David Smith and featuring W. L. Rodgers as the narrator and chief character. The yarn pictures the adventures of Barney O'Keefe in Panama, where he joins a party of revolutionists and is sentenced to death. His friend, a doctor, purchases his freedom with confederate money. The offering contains much good humor and is very enjoyable. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

WHISTLING DICK'S CHRISTMAS STOCKING (Broadway Star Feature), Dec. 15.—A typical O. Henry story in two reels, directed by George Ridgwell and featuring George Cooper and Adele De Garde. The tale centers about a genial knight of the road, who picks up a silk stocking, dropped from a passing automobile. He saves a house party from being raided by his fellow-hoboes, is then fed and promised a good job. But he resumes his travels on the road. The number is strong in presentation and very entertaining. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

MY UNMARRIED WIFE (Jan. 7.—Taken from the novel "Molly and I," this five-part Bluebird feature, with Carmel Meyers at the head of the cast, contains a number of amusing comedy scenes. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

George Kleine System.

UNEASY MONEY (Essanay), Jan. 1.—This special feature in six reels can be commended as a mirthmaker of a high order. Taylor Holmes shows talented versatility in the chief role and is ably supported by Virginia Valli and an excellent cast. For detailed review see another page, this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

THE AUCTION BLOCK, Dec. 2.—An elaborately developed story of metropolitan cabaret life, replete with striking ensembles and forceful in purpose, by Rex Beach. A large and interesting cast, all well typed and a general presentation of decided merit and importance.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

IN THE BALANCE (Vitagraph), Dec. 15.—Five-part screen version of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Hillman," this Blue Ribbon Feature, starring Earle Williams, tells a romantic story of a modern caveman's love for a famous actress. The girl has promised to become the mistress of a prince, but the hero saves her and makes her his wife. The picture is well acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

OUT OF THE FLAME (Vitagraph), Dec. 15.—The last episode of "The Fighting Trail." This is not a strong climax. The troops fight the outlaws and win. Von Bleck, the agent of the central powers, commits suicide, leaving a note saying, "I have lost. It is the fortune of war."

Metro Pictures Corporation.

ALIAS MRS. JESSOP.—A five-reel picture in which Emily Stevens plays a double role with great ability. It is an interesting story and is commendable for any audience who will appreciate a really artistic presentation. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY'S BOARDING HOUSE (Cubi, Dec. 12).—A fairly entertaining number of the Jerry comedies, which, by the way, are improving by degrees. The girl element having been eliminated and a semblance of plot having been incorporated in each, we find considerable to be thankful for. In the boarding house episode Jerry and associates, for non-payment of board, are treated to rough usage by the boarding-house keeper and her husband, who is trying to hold down his job. Some funny near escapes occur which will be found very laughable to some audiences.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 155 (Gaumont), Dec. 16.—The opening scenes in this number show some of the fire scenes at Halifax. Interesting scenes from the battle of the Aisne follow, showing big guns in action, prisoners being sent to the rear, etc. Auto races at Los Angeles and Navy Relief Day at Boston are among the other features.

NEW YOR KLUCK (American), Dec. 17.—A five-part production, featuring William Russell with Francella Billington playing opposite him. The production takes the form of a comedy and is one of the best of the William Russell pictures. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

ALONG THE VARDER (Pathe), Dec. 16.—A half-reel subject, taken in European Turkey, apparently during the present war. The views are exquisitely tinted and the scenes include pleasing glimpses of a winding stream and unique bridges.

THE PEARL OF THE ATLANTIC (Pathe), Dec. 23.—A tinted half-reel, picturing scenes on Belle Isle, off the coast of Brittany. The villages and towns of this historic spot, with its rocky, picturesque shore line, make an attractive subject. Foquet castle and the home of Sarah Bernhardt are also shown.

STRANGE FRESH WATER INSECTS (Pathe), Dec. 23.—On same reel with above. These are tinted microscopic studies of the water nautilus, snail, blind water shrimp and other tiny inhabitants of small pools and sluggish streams. An interesting nature study.

BASHFUL (Pathe-Rolin), Dec. 23.—Another amusing variation of the familiar comedy plot in which the hero must obtain a wife and baby in order to get his inheritance. Harold Lloyd, the hero of this subject, gets a wife and a whole room full of babies. The situations are very laughable and some of the small humorous touches are exceptionally good. Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard are also in the cast.

RUNAWAY ROMANY (Ardsley-Pathe), Dec. 23.—A five-reel feature, written by Marion Davies, who also appears in the leading role. The story concerns a girl, named Romany, who had been lost years previously and was reared by a band of gypsies. Her wealthy father is successfully imposed upon by an actress, who poses as his daughter, but in the course of the tale the truth comes out and Romany obtains her rightful place. There is also the usual love story. The number is particularly notable for its romantic flavor and the picturesque character of the opening reels. The melodramatic scenes are not so strongly developed, but the number is one that will have wide appeal. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL ROUND-UP—PENDLETON, ORE (Pathe), Dec. 30.—This event, taken from the actual round-up at Pendleton, Ore., this year, gives a comprehensive view of both the old West and the West of today. It leads off with the grand parade through the streets of Pendleton, a lively western city, headed by full-blooded Indians from eight different tribes. Other features are a cowboy band stage coaches and other vehicles and notable western riders gathered for the big event. Thousands of visitors are assembled at the circular track, where the cowboys and cowgirls do competitive racing, fancy roping, trick riding, steer "dogging" and other stunts. The events are full of excitement and numerous accidents and injuries are recorded. The bucking broncho contests and wild horse race are features that would be hard to duplicate. A strong three-reel feature.

ARGUS PICTORIAL NO. 4 (Pathe), Dec. 30.—A diversified number, leading off with scenes depicting fox hunting in Virginia. The next subject deals with "garden monsters" giving close-up views of the cricket, June bug, robber fly and other tiny creatures, some of which look more alarming under the microscope than might be expected. Pictures drawn by a swinging pendulum, regulated in some way by a system of numbers, makes an interesting feature. The number closes with "Stereographs," consisting of animated cut-outs by French, an item that will particularly amuse children.

OVER THE HILL (Astra-Pathe), Dec. 30.—A quiet, naturally developed story of a small town in which some young men are trying to succeed with a "yellow" newspaper. The heroine and her grandfather are book agents. In the course of the story the girl obtains employment on the newspaper and sets fire to an entire edition of it in order to save her friend from scandal. The story interest is quite strong in this number, though it lacks something of the suspense and dramatic development it might have had in places. It is a simple story of considerable human interest. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE LAND OF PROMISE, Dec. 10.—An unusual domestic comedy-drama, with Billie Burke in a characterization more human and interesting than any in which she has hitherto appeared.

THE FAIR BARBARIAN (Lasky), Dec. 17.—A comedy, opening in the West and transferred to England. Vivian Martin is featured. It is an entertaining subject, as is pointed out in a review on another page.

WHO IS NUMBER ONE? NO. 8 (Paramount),—Dec. 17.—The eighth episode of the serial "Who Is Number One?" is entitled "Walls of Gas," and holds the interest well. The big point in the episode is the unsuccessful attempt made by the enemy to possess Hale's fortune. This attempt is made in a forceful way and encompasses a thrilling attack on the Hale bank by means of a poisonous gas. As firemen, trying out a new method of extinguishing a fire, they manage to get by the watchman, blow open the vault and get away with bags of what turns out to be bogus money. A review will be found elsewhere.

Harry Raver.

THE HAND OF THE HUN (Raver).—A four-reel novelty film, made by the producer of "Cabiria." It is more a child's picture than one for older people, but on account of its fresh comedy and artistic handling and also on account of the sincere sentiment of its introduction, will go well in most places, especially in neighborhood theaters. A longer notice is printed on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

WITHOUT HONOR (Triangle), Dec. 23.—C. Gardner Sullivan is the author of this five-part photoplay which shows the extremes of a woman's love. The story is well constructed, and the cast, led by Margery Wilson, does it justice. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 2 (Universal), Dec. 12.—The chief features of this number include arrest of four alien enemies in Chicago, Omaha military agent, new draft call, music at bluejacket training station and first aid for Halifax. Other features and cartoons by Hy Mayer are shown in this entertaining topical subject.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 31 (Universal), Dec. 15.—U. S. declaration of war on Austria, Queen Wilhelmina opening the Dutch parliament, New York hotels entertaining our fighters, scenes from the third battle of the Aisne and cartoons from various newspapers are the important features of this diversified issue.

BELOVED JIM (Universal), Dec. 17.—A five-reel number, written by Joseph Girard, featuring Harry Carter, Priscilla Dean and the author. This has a strong holiday atmosphere and tells a story of unusual sentiment and emotional strength. The chief characters are a middle-aged bachelor, an orphan girl whom he marries, an old derelict whom he befriends, and his rascally nephew whom he banishes from his home. A strong holiday offering. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

GUY AND THE GUYSER (Nestor), Dec. 24.—A comedy number, by Craig Hutchinson, featuring Dave Morris, Gertrude Astor, Wadsworth Harris and Gladys Tennyson. The scenes occur on a mountain top and Mr. Engerbritzen pushes a man over a cliff. A great time is had in hauling him up the side. Later a fake geyser creates considerable excitement. An amusing offering of the nonsensical, slapstick sort.

AMBROSE'S ICY LOVE (L-KO), Dec. 26.—A two-reel comic, featuring Mack Swain in his familiar character of Ambrose. The knockabout action is very funny at times and the leading characterization is laughable as usual. Ambrose is foreman of an ice house. An abduction, a bomb and a bear are features of the number. A good subject of the type.

THE BURNING SPAN (Universal Special), Dec. 29.—Episode No. 11 of "The Red Ace." This instalment witnesses the dash of the foreign agents for the United States, bringing with them the stolen platinum. Virginia and Winthrop escape from their jail confinement, after much delay, and follow in an auto. The number closes with a daring leap in the auto across a blown-up bridge. This has a real thrill at the close.

THE FIRE GOD (Universal Special), Dec. 29.—Episode No. 5 of "The Mystery Ship." This continues the adventures on the "Island of Hate." Betty, seeing Gaston struck down from behind, has compassion on her enemy and tries to save his life. Later Gaston and Jack Fay go to rescue her when the natives threaten to offer her as a sacrifice to the burning volcano. This serial has a strong story interest, which develops nicely as it proceeds, and the adventurous happenings are carried out with good illusion.

World Pictures.

THE VOLUNTEER, Dec. 24.—Madge Evans and Henry Hull are featured in this five-part novelty picture which introduces all the World stars and has a good heart interest besides. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE VICTIM (Catholic Art Association).—A multiple reel production, which it is assumed is to be used entirely for propaganda purposes by the Roman Catholic Church. The picture, which was directed by Joseph Levering, is fully reviewed elsewhere.

Future Bluebirds

Some of the Features That Will Appear During the First of the Year.

VIOLET MERSEREAU, star of Bluebirds, will appear February 4, next, in a picture that reflects war but not the present strife. "Morgan's Raiders" is the new title, illuminating and self-explanatory, of Bess Meredyth's story and scenario from which Wilfred Lucas worked in directing Miss Mersereau's latest Bluebird. The initial title was "The Wild Cat," and the picture has been thus referred to in previous mention, but "Morgan's Raiders" has been decided upon as its permanent caption for distribution.

Previous to her appearance in "Morgan's Raiders," Miss Mersereau will appear as the star of Bluebird's December 31 attraction (New Year's week), playing "The Girl by the Roadside," screen version of Varick Vanardy's novel of the same title, scenarioized by John C. Brownell and directed by Theodore Marston, with Allen Edwards leading man for Miss Mersereau. "The Girl by the Roadside" is being pre-released this week (December 16-22) at the Broadway theater, New York.

Another feature that has been fixed for the Bluebird program is at present titled "The Catamount," in which Franklyn Farnum will appear week starting January 28, next. The story was written by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, the scenario having been prepared by Charles Kenyon. Joseph DeGrasse, who has produced all of Franklyn Farnum's later Bluebirds, directed the feature. Before the picture is marketed a new title will be selected. Edith Johnson, who became Mr. Farnum's leading lady with the production of "The Scarlet Car," to be distributed December 24, will be featured in the new attraction as the star's chief support.

"My Unmarried Wife," shown at the Broadway during the past week, will be Carmel Myers' second Bluebird, and will be released on the regular program January 7. Mae Murray will furnish the January 14 fixture, appearing in "Face Value," as her second Bluebird. For January 21 the attraction will be Dorothy Phillips in "Broadway Love," rounding out a list that is set nearly two months ahead.

With the Bluebird program arranged well into February stars and directors are busy on locations with future subjects for release in the early months of the New Year. With the exception of Violet Mersereau, who operates at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) studio, all of Bluebird's stars are working on the West Coast, with Universal City as their base of activities.

Mae Murray, under direction of Robert Leonard, has just completed "The Eternal Columbine," written for her by H. Sheridan Bickers, especially created to introduce Miss Murray's dancing. Carmel Myers will be the star of "The Green Seal," to be released late in February, with Ashton Dearhold her new leading man. A. G. Kenyon prepared the scenario from a book written by Charles Edmund Walk, and Stuart Paton, who has lately been directing Universal serials, supervised the production.

"The Girl Who Dared" will present Dorothy Phillips as a February star among Bluebirds, with William Stowell and Lon Chaney featured in her support. Allen J. Holubar is just finishing the production from a magazine story written by James Oliver Curwood. Priscilla Dean will, in this feature, appear for the first time in Miss Phillips' support, the company also including William Burress, Harry DeMore, Joseph Girard, J. Gordon Russell, and Frank Brownlee.

Two features starring Ruth Clifford, with Monroe Salisbury sharing the advertising honors, have been created by Rupert Julian. "The Highest Card," from a story and scenario by Elliott J. Clawson, and "His Wife From Arizona," contributed by the same writer, are depended upon to maintain the popularity of the Clifford-Salisbury-Julian combination at the standard lately obtained through their Bluebirds of artistic excellence. Both plays were produced in the foothills of the Sierras at Seven Oaks, Cal., where three companies from Universal City were, at one time, profiting by the scenic beauties of the natural surroundings.

SCENES IN "NAULAHKA" DOUBLED.

George Fitzmaurice, who directed Pathe's de luxe production of Rudyard Kipling's great story of adventure, "The Naulahka," on the production of which over $100,000 has been spent, says it is the most interesting picture he has ever staged. The original scenario called for some 400 scenes, but Director Fitzmaurice increased this to 800 scenes. The additional scenes doubling the number originally laid out were added as a result of the inspiration that Mr. Fitzmaurice says came to him as the work progressed.

DWYER BROS. OPEN CINCINNATI BRANCH.

The Dwyer Bros. & Company, formerly known as the Columbus Equipment Co., have opened a branch office at 631 Walnut street, Cincinnati, Ohio. A complete line of Simplex Projectors and theater supplies will be carried in stock to supply the wants of exhibitors in Kentucky and Southern Ohio. Arthur H. Fix, well known to the trade in and around Cincinnati, will act as manager.

Abramson Reveals Large Plans

Graphic Head Announces First Production for Release During February—"Moral Suicide" in Seven Parts.

IVAN ABRAMSON must be accounted one of the most serious men in the film business. When he engages upon the making of a production his whole being is centered in it, he becomes a part of it, and, to quote his own expression, "prizes it as his own child." The success of his productions while he was directing for the Ivan company attests that he consistently struck the responsive chord in the moving picture theater-going public. The realism of his work, artistically handled in his "One Law for Both," "Sins of Ambition," and features of that kind, has resulted in prompt and generous salability both in this country and throughout the foreign market.

Now that Mr. Abramson has launched the Graphic Film Corporation, which is located in the Godfrey building temporarily on the seventeenth floor, but shortly to occupy one half of the fifth floor as soon as M. H. Hoffman, Inc., settle in their larger quarters on the third floor of the same building, the independent market can expect even superior features, if possible, from the subject of this article. As president and general manager, as well as director general of the Graphic organization, Mr. Abramson will have full scope for the application of his art and ability.

As his first offering in his new surroundings he promises a seven-part photoplay under the title "Moral Suicide," to be released during the month of February. The story is the creation of the director himself, and is said to be a vibrant, virile exposition of certain forms of human cowardice and selfishness that will afford ample opportunity for the co-starring of ten prominent screen artists in the ten principal roles. The cast, as well as the male and female leads, have not as yet been selected, but this phase of the work is already under way, and announcements concerning the cast are to be completed by the holidays, at which time Mr. Abramson will depart with his organization for the Pacific Coast, inasmuch as the majority of the exteriors concern themselves with life as it exists in San Francisco. The interiors will be made in an Eastern studio, except such as belong to Pacific atmosphere.

The Graphic head intends following this up with another production to be released late in March or early in April. The story, though not yet revealed, has been selected, and is related to be a typical vehicle for the able director to extract the fullest reality therefrom. It will also be a seven-reel production, and a worthy successor to "Moral Suicide."

Moses A. Sachs has been engaged as head of the scenario department, and other appointments in the business departments are being made this week. The Graphic company will conduct its own exchange for the territory of Greater New York, and this will occupy part of the space on the fifth floor of 729 Seventh avenue along with the parent concern. All other territories will be state righted, however. An exclusive exhibition room will also be installed.

The state rights field can well look expectantly toward the time when "Moral Suicide" will be offered it.

ARTHUR F. BECK HEADS STERLING.

The Sterling Pictures Corporation announces this week that they have concluded negotiations with Arthur F. Beck, whereby he assumes full control of its destinies. In order that he may be unhampered and have full authority to handle all future business deals and policies, Mr. Beck has been elected president and general manager, plus a stock interest in the corporation, and will hereafter confine his activities to the sole interest of Sterling Pictures.

Mr. Beck is authority for the statement that the Sterling Pictures Corporation was organized by men who are connected with the theatrical and motion picture industry—two being affiliated with the Shubert Enterprises and Klaw & Erlanger, and one with a motion picture manufacturing concern. "We are organized and financed," so the Sterling head announces, "to purchase and handle independent feature productions for all or any portion of the U. S. and Canada. We will purchase full negative rights or the rights to just one territory depending upon the nature and quality of the production. We will maintain a selling organization out in the field at all times—within the next ten days two of our men will leave for an extended trip to see the independent exchangeman right on his own stamping ground—the better to get at the situation and obtain the correct viewpoint. My own experience of eleven years in the exchange business enables me to feel and see the present crisis in independent exchange operations, and the plan we have worked out, in my judgment, cuts the Gordian knot of operations between the producer and the exhibitor."

"Mickey" For State Rights

Mack Sennett Comedy Spectacle Featuring Mabel Normand Ready for Market After Two Years in Making.

MABEL Normand in "Mickey" is the latest plum to be offered the state rights market. Mack Sennett has completed the final assembling of this big feature, and the world rights have been purchased by the Western Import Company, who will exploit this production.

Mack Sennett has always been conceded a master producer of comedy in this country. He has developed most of the leading screen comedians in the business, and his name in connection with a picture has come to mean the best. For a long time he had been anxious to produce a real big feature, one which would mark the arrival of something new to the screen and which would set a standard for all future work for picture producers. To that end he set to work upon the producing of "Mickey," and selected Mabel Normand as the star, because of her remarkable comic abilities.

The picture has taken two years to complete for the market and was made at a cost of $200,000. However, the time and expense has been justified by the result, and the combination of Mr. Sennett's genius and Miss Normand's talents, has created a picture that is reputed to be epoch-making. In announcing the release, an official of the Western Import Co. delivered himself in this wise:

"As 'Mickey,' Mabel Normand is placed in a class by herself. She has always been considered the leading comedienne in the screen world and her versatility in this production is beyond belief. She surpasses everybody and does everything. A prominent critic, who was present at a recent screening, expressed himself singularly—for a jaded patron of the theater. He said, 'there is nothing which she does not attempt and accomplish.' In fact, every one who has seen the picture is of the same opinion. They all say it is the best interpretation that has ever been put upon the stage or screen.

"If you have ever known what it is to laugh and cry at the same time, 'Mickey' will put you in that predicament. Miss Normand takes her audience back to the delightful days of childhood, for both troubles and joys are doubly magnified. She combines an impish devilry with a tender pathos which goes straight to the hearts of every one. The picture has the human touch. It is real.

SILVERMAN SPRINGS NEW IDEA.

The announcement of plans for a co-operative film distributing company, to be formed in this city in the near future, has been made by Mayer Silverman, owner of the Liberty Film Renting Company, 928 Penn. avenue, Pittsburgh. Mr. Silverman, who is organizing the new concern, states that it will be composed exclusively of exhibitors, and its purpose will be the buying of state rights productions and handling them co-operatively. A distinctly new movement toward one the development of which will be keenly watched by independent exchangemen elsewhere in the country.

Harry Rapf—A Man of Constructive Capacity

His Career Presents a Remarkable Rise to the Top of the Manufacturing Element in Three Years' Time.

BUT three years ago, Harry Rapf, a producer who needs no introduction to our readers, turned over his vaudeville agency and producing interests to the keeping of his partner, Lew Golder, and embarked into the producing of motion pictures as president of the Premo Feature Film Co., 11 East 14th street, New York, until then the long-time office of the Biograph company.

His product was successful from the start, a fact which promptly catapulted him into the limelight. This condition was no mere luck. On the contrary Rapf succeeded because he put the money into each picture, not lavishly, but judiciously and generously. Furthermore, he succeeded because he employed capable directors, featured popular stars, supported them with a cast that moulded itself with harmony and adaptability, and because what is essentially a Rapf intuition, fitted the story to his star, and the star to the production. The result proved the salability of Premo wares, even though they were independently produced, quite as many of the other state right pictures of the current day. During the year and ten months of the existence of the Premo organization, Harry Rapf surrounded himself with such standard directors as Harry Knoles, now head director for William Brady, and later Ralph Ince, who is now the directorial authority for the output of the Advanced Film Corporation, Leonce Perret, and James Kirkwood, just returned to Paramount. As for stars, the Premo list included Robert Warwick, Adele Blood, Ethel Clayton, Nat Goodwin, Cyril Maude and Carlyle Blackwell.

Of the product, "The Supreme Sacrifice," "The Devil's Toy," "His Brother's Wife," "The Master Hand," and "The Greater Will," the four first-mentioned were released through The World Film Co. during 1915 and 1916, while the last named was distributed through the Pathe Exchange.

By this time, Mr. Rapf was ready for a bigger step, and so organized the Robert Warwick Film Corporation during the last half of last year. Success again accompanied the move and such productions (all featuring Robert Warwick) as "The Argyle Case," "The Silent Master," "The Mad Lover," and "The Accidental Honeymoon" resulted. As leading ladies, Rapf engaged such favorites as Anna Little, Olive Tell and Elaine Hammerstein. The war and the star's patriotism abruptly interrupted the further activities of this company—for now it is Captain Robert Warwick at Camp Dix, New Jersey. However, before beginning training, the star had the satisfaction of knowing that "The Argyle Case" and "The Silent Master" were consigned to the Selznick enterprises, and "The Mad Lover" to the state right department of Pathe. "The Accidental Honeymoon" has not as yet been given to any concern for distribution, but the bidding for it is said to be quite spirited.

Mars only diverted Harry Rapf's capacity to a greater effort, which brought about the engagement of Florence Reed as star and Ralph Ince as director. The result was one of the standard productions of the period, and one which deserves the longevity that its artistic merit will achieve—"To-day." This feature is one of the best profit-making subjects on the market, as Tom North, head of the state right department of Pathe, will doubtless agree.

The reception accorded the film prompted Mr. Rapf to sign Miss Reed for four more pictures, the first of which, entitled "The Struggle Everlasting," is now finished and had its trade-showing at the Shubert theater Sunday evening, Dec. 16, the review of which will be found in next week's issue. The trade is willing to accept that it will be a winning production, though it will have to be measured against the high and critical standard of the last Reed offering. In the supporting cast appear Milton Sills, Wellington Player, E. J. Ratcliffe, Fred Jones, E. N. Hoyt, Albert Hall, and Irving Cummings. James Kirkwood directed the production.

This is the record that Harry Rapf has already made. It will not be surprising to find that his personal representative, Louis Jerkowski's, prediction that "The Struggle Everlasting" will surpass every previous Rapf undertaking, will be substantiated to the fullest.

"THE WHIP" SALES CLOSED OUT.

Hiller & Wilk, who have been the selling agents for "The Whip," the Tourneur picturization of the successful Drury Lane melodrama, feel highly gratified at the completed American sales record of this production, because it has vindicated their faith in "The Whip" since the first time they saw the picture in the Paragon projection room.

To the Superfilm, Ltd., of Canada goes the honor of being the first purchasers of territorial rights. They secured the rights to the Dominion of Canada. Other holders of rights to "The Whip" are the American Feature Film Company of Boston (New England); Marcus Loew (New York); J. Frank Hatch (Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia); Sidney B. Lust of Washington, D. C., (Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and North Carolina); the Civilization Company of Newark (New Jersey); the H. Lieber Company of Indianapolis (Indiana); the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville (Kentucky and Tennessee); the Special Features Company of Knoxville (Georgia and Florida); the Yale Photoplays of Kansas City (Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska); the Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis (Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin); the De Luxe Features of Seattle (Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana); the All Star Features Distributors, San Francisco (California, Nevada and Arizona); the Supreme Photoplays Corporation of Denver (Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico), and Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago (Illinois).

SECRET SERVICE SERIAL IN DEMAND.

Foursquare Exchange in all parts of the country are being delighted with applications for bookings on the new Wharton American serial supreme, "The Eagle's Eye," written by Chief William J. Flynn, of the United States Secret Service. Communications from M. H. Hoffman, now enroute to the home office, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, report an unprecedented volume of applications in Detroit, Cincinnati and Cleveland where he has been during the past week.

Manager Samuel Rubenstein, of the Boston Foursquare Exchange, writes that numerous New England exhibitors are eagerly awaiting the announcement of the release dates, and that the volume of business indicates that all serial booking records will be surpassed. Frank J. Flaherty, of Chicago, and Sidney J. Baker, of St. Louis, are two Foursquare managers who find exhibitors in their territories appreciative of the qualities of this serial supreme—which is to expose the machinations of the Imperial German Government against the United States.

In the New York Foursquare office, Manager Hy Gainsborg is receiving applications galore for "The Eagle's Eye." All other Foursquare offices throughout the country are experiencing similar inquiries from exhibitors, and hosts of contracts are being signed—even in advance of the trade showing.

ANIMATED PRESS SYNDICATE ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Cinema News Syndicate, who formerly released the "American War and News Weekly" on the General Film program, has been absorbed by the Animated Press Syndicate, who will issue the "Independent-American Weekly" beginning Dec. 20, and weekly thereafter.

They report a staff of cameramen in all parts of the world, besides corresponding cameramen, and are gradually increasing this force.

Frederick W. Brooker, who was the president of the Cinema News Syndicate, is in charge of the affairs of the new company, and all technical matters are handled by Russell E. Ball. Territory is being closed with great rapidity for all parts of the United States and Canada. When all details are complete, they assert that they will be represented by the cleanest and strongest exchange organization in the motion picture business.

BRENON FEATURE OPENS NEW THEATER.

When the new Forest Hill theater in Newark opens on Christmas Day, New Jersey will have its first glimpse of Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

The house is now receiving its finishing touches under the direction of its owner, Arthur W. Moore. It is one of the most magnificent, in points of architecture and modern improvements, in the East.

The first New Jersey showing of the big Brenon historical production will be under notable auspices. Mr. Moore arranged with Mr. Brenon to present "The Fall of the Romanoffs" at a special invitation performance at the new theater on Friday evening, December 21. This opening will be attended by the foremost city officials of Newark and the leading exhibitors of all Jersey. A number of prominent New York screen men are planning to be present.

HORGAN VISITS NEW YORK.

Dan Horgan, general manager of the Hub Pictures Corporation, the state rights exchange, opened but six weeks ago at 53 Church street, Boston, Mass., visited New York during the past week on one of his buying missions. Several deals were entered into, the nature of which will be reported by Mr. Horgan upon his return to his New England territory.

"The Woman Eternal"

Hiller and Wilk Will Represent Advanced M. P. Corporation—Elaine Hammerstein Stars—Ralph Ince Directs.

THE second production of the newly organized Advanced Motion Picture Corporation, entitled "The Eternal Woman," in seven reels, is now being assembled by its director, Ralph Ince, for early trade projection and subsequent exploitation.

As a stage production some years ago, with Augustus Thomas as sponsor, it was offered as "The Battle Cry," after the novel of that name by Charles Neville Buck, it met with emphatic public acceptance.

"The Woman Eternal" is a dramatic reflex of the eternal clash, where a strong man loves and a woman hesitates.

Ralph Ince is said to have immeasurably surpassed himself in this newest manifest of his gift for appreciating big situations and transferring them absorbingly on the screen. Elaine Hammerstein, who essays the title role in this new picture, as she did in the first issue of the Advanced, "The Co-Respondent," is reported to be a veritable revelation in her tragic realization of a young society girl who, following her best instincts and social traditions, finds herself swept beyond herself by the compelling storm of a great heart note. The supporting cast includes many stage and screen favorites, principally Lawson Butts, George Anderson, Carlton Macy, George Macy, Violet Palmer and Cecil Chichester.

Hiller and Wilk represent the producers. Their announcement concerning the production will be found among the advertising pages of this edition.

S. R. D. NEW JERSEY FRANCHISE CHANGES HANDS.

O. Mell Simmons, general manager of the State Right Distributors, Inc., is authority for the statement that the New Jersey franchise to his organization, originally secured by Fred Falkner of the Masterphotoplays Corporation, Newark, has been sold at a decided monetary advantage to Herman Jans, head of the New Jersey Metro Exchange, on Thursday of last week.

Manager Simmons has arranged, immediately after the holidays have passed, to embark upon an extensive tour around the S. R. D. circuit of franchise holders. By that time, several new productions will have been secured. Incidentally, a telegram arrived on Tuesday last, announcing the safe arrival of President Sol. L. Lesser at his California stamping-grounds.

MURPHY RETURNS TO OLD EXCHANGE NAME.

Frank J. Seng desires to inform the exhibitors in the New England States that Fred B. Murphy, announced as the distributor of "Parentage" in that territory, will use the name of the United Film Service, Inc., for his two exchanges—one in Boston and one in Springfield, Mass.—instead of the name of the Liberty Film Co.

Mr. Murphy discovered that another organization had prior rights to the "Liberty Film Co." title. A trade showing of "Parentage," given in the Fenway theater, Boston, on the 6th of December, brought out a very large attendance of exhibitors. This augurs well for the success of "Parentage" in the New England States.

MORE APPOINTMENTS BY FRANK HALL.

Recent additions to the sales staff of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation are R. S. Clarke, formerly of the Vitagraph and other film concerns. Mr. Clarke will supervise the marketing in the New Jersey district. He will make his headquarters in the Frank Gersten Exchange, New York, from which U. S. Pictures will be distributed in the New Jersey territory.

Harvey E. Gausman has been appointed to take charge of the Los Angeles district. He will establish headquarters this week in the Foursquare exchange, that city.

Walter Hopkins has resigned from the Mutual Film Corporation, New York office, to join the home office staff of the U. S. He will have charge of the shipping and purchasing departments.

VALENTINE GRANT AT HEROLAND.

Another Sidney Olcott production has been used to boost the patriotic cause at Heroland, the bazaar, which last week drew New Yorkers to the Grand Central Palace. Number one was "The Belgian," now the property of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation—last Wednesday it was an old Olcott Famous Player production, "The Innocent Lie," featuring Valentine Grant, also the lead in "The Belgian."

During the day, Miss Grant took her place on the floor of the bazaar, and assisted Lady Kingston, who is in this country raising funds for the Irish Soldiers' Disabled Fund, by selling her autographed photograph and armfuls of shamrocks. Of course, it is unnecessary to add that both Mr. Olcott and Miss Grant can trace their ancestral allegiance to Erin.

GROSSMAN RETURNS.

H. H. Grossman, president and general manager of the Oro Pictures, Inc., returned on Friday, December 21, from Los Angeles, where he has spent the past month on details of production. The trade can expect a comprehensive announcement concerning Oro activities, now that the head of the house has returned to New York.

GASKILL WORKING ON "CLEOPATRA"

Several years ago when the Helen Gardner production of "Cleopatra" was produced it was hailed by critics and connoisseurs as one of the greatest motion picture dramas ever made. The dramatic quality of the Gardner picture has never been surpassed in any production made since, according to the Cleopatra Film Company, who are offering the Gaskill-Gardner feature to the state rights market. Her wonderful exposition of the charm and lure of the Lady of the Nile has lasted, for it may be said now as when it was first seen that it "is of the quality of genius, the rare art of the true artist." Harrison Fisher, the artist, pronounced Miss Gardner not only the most beautiful woman in the picture world, but its most talented actress. Nat Goodwin, whose judgment has never been questioned, added that the production of Miss Gardner's Cleopatra was the supreme pictorial expression of the woman supreme. Louis Reeves Harrison, the dean of picture critics, after witnessing the production, said that he "arose from his chair with the feeling strong upon him that he had not been looking at a picture, but the actual flesh and blood of life," and that "he could hardly tell whether he had been watching Miss Gardner's shadow or the living, breathing, pulsing form of Cleopatra."

This production is being remodeled to conform to the present standards of screencraft, and will be reissued at an early date. Charles L. Gaskill, the author and director, with Miss Gardner and a corps of assistants is now busily engaged in making many additions to the old production. An army of men and women, magnificent settings, tremendous battle scenes, and all the pomp and sumptuousness that combine to insure the big spectacle will be found in the revised production. This is all being accomplished without in the least degree spoiling the dramatic values of the original.

PATCH WORKING ON SECOND SERIES.

Work was commenced last week on the cutting, assembling and titling of the second series of official Italian war films which have just reached the United States and which are being handled for the Italian Government by the Fort Pitt Theater Company of Pittsburgh. William Moore Patch is supervising this work which will take about two months. He plans to give the second series of films an even more elaborate exhibition than that of the first series, "The Italian Battlefront."

A title for the second series has not been decided upon as yet. It is said, however, that he intends giving the pictures some such name as "Italy's Lesson for America."

Many of the scenes of the second series were filmed during the recent retreat of the Italians from the Gorizia. It is also said that the heroic stand of the Italian Army under General Diaz at the Piave River has also been photographed.

Joseph M. Gaites, manager of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, has arranged initial exhibition in the Pitt theater in Pittsburgh on or about February 1. After a two or three-weeks' engagement there they will be brought to a theater in New York. Private showings are being arranged for officials of the War Department in Washington and at the Military and Naval Academies at West Point and Annapolis.

"THE WARRIOR" AN AID TO PATRIOTISM.

Phil Kauffman, General Manager of Globe Films, reports this week that arrangements are complete whereby a great patriotic demonstration, in which "The Warrior" will play a prominent part, will be held at Massey Hall, the biggest place of exhibition in Canada.

The rally in question is being held under the direction of the Italian Consul and has the hearty support and endorsement of many of the leading Italians in Toronto. It has been deemed advisable to bring home to the resident Italians in the Dominion of Canada the wonderful exploits of the Italian army, as set forth in many of the scenes in "The Warrior."

Raver Has Energetic Plans for 1918

"The Public Defender," "Enigma," a Series of "Foolshead" Comedies and an Italian Vampire in Four Productions a Portion of Releases Announced.

HARRY RAVER'S enterprises for the opening months of the coming year promise no less than twenty-five productions, all of which are in preparation or actually completed. Among the list are "The Public Defender" and "Enigma," master crook, which serves to introduce Edmand Breese in a similar role to those which made him famous. Alma Hanlon plays the leading female role. An original drama of timely appeal by the dean of dramatists, Augustus Thomas, is now under way and will be ready in February or March. An all-star cast is being used for the Thomas production.

Seven spectacular comedies will be issued by Harry Raver, in which the international character, "Foolshead," will appear. These productions will be made on an elaborate scale, much consideration being given to special settings, unusual effects and large numbers of actors. The type of comedy accomplishes its purpose by the reckless destruction of buildings and other equipment. The modern "Foolshead," however, is improved by real stories and timely situations. The new comedy series will range from one to five reels each.

Mr. Raver assures a new star Italian importation, who promises to out-vampire all the sirens of the stage and screen. She will appear in "The Soul of a Vampire," from the book by Carlotta Murillo, and three other productions during the first six months of 1918.

"Motherland," a patriotic drama from the pen of Francis Allison West, will also reach the screen through Mr. Raver's production forces. "The Fires of Inspiration," a poesy in pictures; "Father and Son," a war-time story, and several additional manuscripts by well-known authors are included in the list of Raver productions.

RENOWNED SECURES "THE PUBLIC DEFENDER."

The Renowned Pictures Corp., of 1600 Broadway, henceforth will exploit the Harry Raver-Goldman-Harris production, "The Public Defender," by means of territorial franchises throughout the United States and Canada. The deal was closed last week between Messrs. Raver, Weinberg and Fleckles, before the latter departed for Washington. Messrs. Weinberg & Fleckles, of the Renowned organization, have arranged for daily showings of "The Public Defender" in their private show rooms, and a campaign of publicity will be used to assist buyers in creating a demand for theater bookings.

Herbert Landsdown, the English artist, has just completed a complete line of poster sketches, to be used in the exploitation of "The Public Defender." Seven colors are indicated by the artist for each style. A twenty-four-sheet, carrying panel portraits of the trilogy of stars, Frank Keenan, Robert Edson and Alma Hanlon, three one-sheets, two combination three-sheets and one symbolical six-sheet are the styles to be used.

Two shipping points have been established by Renowned Pictures Corporation for the distribution of advertising matter. Points in the extreme West and eastward to Pittsburgh will be covered by shipments from Milwaukee. Eastern points will be served from New York. This method of supplying advertising matter will minimize delays and also reduce express rates.

Posters for "The Public Defender" will be furnished franchise holders at cost to produce.

ELEVEN CHRISTIE SERVICE STARS.

A service flag bearing eleven stars was raised this week over the Christie Studios by Al. E. Christie. Former Christie players are now serving the United States in various branches of America's fighting forces.

PYRAMID COMEDIES READY.

Featuring Ray Hughes, an eccentric comic, who, for a number of years past has been in vaudeville and musical comedy lines, the Pyramid Comedies, Inc., will begin the distribution of their product within the next few weeks.

Arthur Werner and Charles Abrams, during a visit to a Boston theater, saw Hughes and were conquered. They hired him forthwith and, securing studio arrangements in Manhattan, completed four comedies, under the direction of a former Keystone director, William A. Seiter. Hughes' work in these four comedies so established him with his producers that he was contracted for a long period of years and is now busily at work on others of the forthcoming twenty productions which will complete the twenty-four annual features a year that is planned to characterize the Pyramid activity.

Hughes' work in "In and Out," "Beach Birds," "Love and Lunch" and "Beauties and Bombs" secured him his long-term contract, and the showing of the finished product to one foreign buyer succeeded in selling England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, France, Italy and the Norwegian countries, and it is worth noting that they are the first American comedies to reach the Italian market since the war began. Inquiries now coming in forecast the quick disposal of all American territory.

Director Seiter has secured permission to make one of his forthcoming Pyramid comedies at Yaphank. It is to be called "Drafted" and will depict the humorous side of camp life.

BOOSTERS FOR "MOTHER."

In furtherance of the plan which Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., conceived some time ago for a specially written poem to be used in the exploitation of "Mother" arrangements are contemplated whereby the verses of "Mother" may be used as a means of exploitation. It is planned to issue reproductions of the poem in herald form and also on slides in order that the various exhibitors who will run the George Loane Tucker picture may use it to advertise the coming of the McClure production. The verses in question are said to be particularly appropriate, as they typify exactly the spirit of the photoplay.

JACK LAIT WRITING "WARRIOR" SUB-TITLES.

James R. Grainger, manager of the Allen Film Corporation, Chicago, which company controls an extensive part of the Middle West states for "The Warrior," announced this week that Jack Lait, well-known author and playwright, had been engaged to create a series of special comedy subject titles for several scenes in the spectacle.

Mr. Lait is the author of "Help Wanted," a Broadway success of a few seasons hence, and is especially well known for his stories, which are at present appearing in one of the leading Chicago dailies.

"THE PROSPECTOR" DUE JANUARY 1.

Billy West will start the new year as a prospector in the latest King-Bee comedy, to be released Jan. 1. Billy goes looking for gold but finds nothing but trouble and excitement.

The King-Bee company went into the "Rockies" to make this two-reeler, and it is said to be full of wonderful scenes and atmospheric splendor. It is to be released under the title of "The Prospector."

A trade showing is slated for the current week.

"PEG O' THE SEA" FOR STATE RIGHTS.

The Sterling Pictures Corporation have closed for the negative rights to a production in five reels featuring Jean Sothern entitled "Peg o' the Sea." The Sterling Pictures Corporation have made arrangements for a special line of distinctive advertising, and within the next two weeks will announce the date for trade showing of both the film and all advertising accessories.

Furthermore, "Dakota Dan," "Double Crossed," "The Last Card," "A Knight of the Trail" and "A Square Deal" have been sold to the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, 286 Market street, Newark, N. J.; Masterpiece Film Attractions, 1225 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. M. Simonds, Inn Hotel Bldg., Carondelet street, New Orleans, La.; Wm. Hart Feature Film Co., 1920 Main street, Dallas, Tex (for Texas and Arkansas).

Furthermore, "The Bad Man," "The Fugitive," "The Gentleman from Blue Gulch," "The Silent Stranger," "The Marked Deck," "Horns and Hoofs," "The Convert," "Taming of the Four-Flusher," "Mr. Nobody," "Across the Great Divide," "Shooting Straight" and "The Grudge" have been sold to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Atlanta, Ga.; Electric Theater Supply Co., 13th and Vine streets, Philadelphia, Pa.; Wm. Hart Feature Film Co., 1920 Main street, Dallas, Texas (for Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana).

Furthermore the same series has been sold plus the one two-reeler, "Double Crossed" to the Foursquare Pictures Corporation, 1735 Welton street, Denver, Col.

This indicates that the W. H. Productions Company is establishing records in the sale of territories for its various productions.

The W. H. Productions Company announces the following territories sold on William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" in six reels:

Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming to the Foursquare Pictures Corporation, Denver, Col.; Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas, Standard Film Corporation of Omaha, Minneapolis, Chicago and Kansas City; Wisconsin, to the Wisconsin Film Corporation; Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee to the Jake Wells, Inc., Richmond, Va.

The Merit Film Corporation, 130 West 46th street, announce that they have purchased from the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., the exclusive rights for New York and northern New Jersey of the Franko-American Company's release, "The Birth of Democracy."

This picture ought to prove a very big success at this opportune moment, when democracy is the great issue the world over.

Over 5,000 people are said to have been employed in the making of the picture.

The W. H. Productions Co. announce that William S. Hart, in "The Bandit and the Preacher," with a supporting cast of the following stars, Robert Edeson and Rhea Mitchell (5 reels), has been sold for California, Nevada and Arizona to Sol Lesser of All Star Feature Distributors, San Francisco; Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana to Mike Rosenberg of De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle.

The Philadelphia-Ideal Film Exchange, of 235 North Thirtieth street, Philadelphia, has bought the rights to "Hate" for Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Washington, D. C. The deal was consummated by Gus Mohme, of the Biograph Laboratories in New York, who has exclusive selling rights for this production.

The Animated Press Syndicate, who announce the Independent-American Weekly, advise that Nathan Gordon, of the Globe Feature Exchange in that city, signed a contract to handle this release in the New England territory.

Nathan Hirsch, of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has bought the exclusive rights to John W. Noble production, "Shame," featuring Zena Keefe, for New York State and Northern New Jersey. Jules Burnstein arranged the deal with the Pioneer head.

General Manager C. E. Wallace of the Cosmofotofilm Company announces the sale of the George Loane Tucker production, "I Believe," starring Leona Flugrath, and not Elizabeth, as erroneously stated in our last issue, to Samuel Krohm, Dayton, Ohio, for the state of Michigan. It is surmised that the latter will conduct his bookings through the Dawn Masterplays Company, of Detroit.

Hiller & Wilk announce the sale of the two-reel Douglass Fairbanks reissue, "The Mystery of the Leaping Fish" to Jack Lannon, of Seattle, for the state of Washington.

A complete list of the state right holders who possess the various territorial rights to "The Whip," as sold by Hiller & Wilk, will be found on another page in this department of this issue. The Alma Hanlon-Irving Cummings feature is now sold for the entire continent.

Exhibition rights to the new Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," have been sold for Japan, China, India, Burma, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies, Philippines and Hawaii Islands.

Rights to "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian," the three first releases of the U. S. Corporation, have been disposed of for Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corp., announces the purchase of "Persuasive Peggy," the six-part Mayfair production for Greater New York, including Westchester county and all of Long Island. Shallenberger and Priest engineered the deal.

W. H. PRODUCTIONS OFFER KEYSTONE RE-ISSUES.

On the heels of the successful exploitation of the Hart productions, W. H. Productions Company announces that they now intend to release on the state rights market twenty-eight of the most successful Keystone Comedies, featuring many of the standard comedians on the screen, viz., Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Sydney Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling and Charles Murray. The W. H. Productions Co. makes the following statement:

"We are launching this campaign at this time for the purpose of helping the exchangeman and the exhibitor. It will be noted that we are first distributor to come out boldly and state the price we intend charging for these subjects to the exchange, $80 per reel. This price assures to the exchangeman the greatest galaxy of comedies and stars on the screen today at a price that will bring to them bigger profits than they have ever made before, and it will also assure a reasonable rental price for the exhibitor. In addition to this we also intend to pay the war tax on these subjects. We are getting up striking one and three-sheets, and careful attention is being given to the titling on each of these productions. Hal Reid is doing this work."

INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURERS IN CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT WITH EXHIBITORS.

The attention of the followers of this department is herewith directed to another section of this issue, further in the front of the book, where is to be found the story of last Wednesday's (December 12) session of the joint exhibitors' associations, whereat Joseph Farnham, spokesman for Harry Rapt, president of the High-Class Film Corp.; William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corp.; I. E. Chadwick, president of the Ivan Film Corp.; Joseph A. Golden, president of the Triumph Film Corp., and Lester Park, general manager of the Ogden Pictures Corp., was given the opportunity to lay before the assembled exhibitors a proposition of far-reaching importance to the industry in general.

While moulded after the exhibitor-manufacturer co-operative idea already in vogue, the plan carries with it a purpose of further significance that makes it advisable for our readers to turn to the page in question as well as to read the report of the proceedings as presented on page 1919. The Moving Picture World will follow this movement faithfully and record all future developments.

GOLDBURG EQUIPS OFFICE.

Jesse J. Goldberg, state rights expert, now in business for himself, as announced in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, has finished the equipment of his office, which he took over from the Ogden Pictures Corp., on the eleventh floor of the Times Building. Comfort and efficiency are the striking features of his abode.

HILLER AND SPITZER BACK AGAIN.

L. L. Hiller and Nat. H. Spitzer, officials of the King-Bee Films Corporation, Inc., have finished for the time being with the joint traveling that this pair have been engaging in the past ten days. Their visits took them to Chicago, Boston and Washington.

WOLFBURG RETURNS HOME.

Harris P. Wolfberg, head of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, has finished his tour, embracing the principal cities of the Middle West, and is once again to be found in the home offices of his institution.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Australia Flourishing Field for Films

That Is, for American Product, Says Harold Bolster, Goldwyn Representative.

FILM conditions in Australia, like all belligerent countries, suffered at one period a setback due to the war, but are now flourishing, according to advices from Harold Bolster, a Goldwyn executive, touring the Orient in the interests of that corporation.

"Both from personal investigation and from conversations with the leading film men of Australia and New Zealand, I have received a most optimistic impression of the state of the market for American films here, and the prosperity of theaters and exhibitors," he writes. "Australia has suffered in the past from the war, both materially and spiritually. Depression, I hear, was particularly acute following the costly failure of the British at Gallipoli, where Australian troops lost heavily. But since the British fortunes on the battle field have improved, the war conditions at home have grown normal, the attendance at motion picture houses has steadily improved. For a time this year labor unrest also played a part in creating an unsatisfactory state; but the Government speedily solved the difficulty, and now the islands of Australia and New Zealand are in a steady and most satisfactory condition.

"The first film men to whom I spoke on landing at Auckland, N. Z., and Sydney, showed the warmest interest in American films and in what I had to tell them concerning Goldwyn's plans and accomplishment.

"Americans who reach Australia these days might think themselves at home in the United States, by a look at the posters outside the theaters. While English films have a certain 'home folks' appeal, the American products enjoy one advantage that outweighs at this time even the superior workmanship which our films in general display. It is the simple fact that the thousands of extra miles that England lies beyond the United States add immeasurably to the uncertainties and difficulties of shipment created by the war. Even for the American film company this has become a very serious consideration."

"CARNIVALS AND CANNIBALS" (L-Ko).

Woman's rights and prevailing fashions on the Cannibal Isles are featured in the L-Ko to be distributed through Universal exchanges January 2, with Myrtle Sterling star of the proceedings. Vin Moore directed under the supervision of J.

Scene from "Carnivals and Cannibals" (L-Ko).

G. Blystone, who is general director of all L-Kos. The Cannibal Chief will be Russell Powell, and Babe Emerson will have Al Forbes to share the lead in the supporting company.

Gifts of beauty often fatal to some folks proved a lifesaver for Myrtle Sterling when the Cannibal Chief decided to make her the base of a New Year's feast. Instead of converting her into a meal the chief fell in love with her, and she became Mrs. Chief No. 23. That's the story of "Carnival and Cannibals" minus all the mirth-provoking embellishments that go with the usual L-Ko.

"BUSTED HEARTS AND BUTTERMILK" (Nestor).

The Nestor to be released December 31 will be conspicuous among Universal comedies because of the membership of the presenting company, players who usually devote themselves to tense dramatic situations having, this time, turned their talents to light comedy of high speed and farcical construction. Hayward Mack, who has appeared in numerous Universal City features as a straight man, is the leading comedian. Adele Farrington and Roberta Wilson, names well remembered by devotees of the program type of pictures, will divide the work of provoking laughter with a selected company supporting them. "Busted Hearts and Buttermilk" was selected as one of the four comedies that were intended to continue Nestor's for a temporary period following Universal's decision to abandon them. It is believed that the excellence of this number will create a demand from exchange men and exhibitors that the series now be continued.

STRONG VEHICLE FOR PAULINE FREDERICK.

A combination of happy circumstances in the productions of "Mrs. Dane's Defense," for Paramount, as a starring vehicle for Pauline Frederick, should make this picture of exceptional interest from every point of view. In the first place, it is far from the famous drama by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, and affords Miss Frederick a role that fits her perfectly. Its emotional qualities are far above the average, and the tensely dramatic situations are exactly suited to screen purposes.

Secondly, Hugh Ford directed the production. Mr. Ford has worked with Pauline Frederick both in legitimate and motion picture productions. He directed "Joseph and His Brethren," one of the last stage plays in which the star appeared. Third, a cast of highly competent players, many with individual records for splendid screen work, supports the star. Fourth, the setting and costuming of the production are the last word in excellence.

"Mrs. Dane's Defense" will be released by Paramount in January, and will be later followed by "Jealousy," the huge allegorical spectacle in which Pauline Frederick will be the star.

COMING FROM WEST COAST TO GET FASHION HINTS.

In order to make a survey of the present fashions and those of the near future according to metropolitan standards, Alpha-rette Hoffman, costume director at the Lasky studio in California, has started for New York City, and during her stay in Manhattan will get ideas for gowns to be worn by stars in Paramount and Artercraft pictures, that will be absolutely up-to-the-minute.

Owing to the fact that pictures are frequently made several months before they are released for the public, and also because the feminine fashions are constantly undergoing changes, it is necessary for the costume director to keep well ahead of the modistes.

"I Love You" Next Triangle Feature

Production Will Contain Many Unusual Scenes—A Bell with a History Used—Quaint Old Italian Houses Reproduced.

FOLLOWING the releasing of the first Triangle seven-reel production, "Because of a Woman," with Belle Bennett, on Dec. 16, the next seven-part feature will be "I Love You," starring Alma Rubens, scheduled for release Jan. 13. The seven-reel pictures are a part of the new Triangle service recently announced, that of supplying a seven-reel feature on each month's program without extra cost to the exhibitor.

In producing "I Love You," Director Walter Edwards has spared no expense in order to produce one of the most elaborate pictures yet featured on the Triangle program. The scenes throughout are said to be distinctly striking and, as many of them are laid in France and Italy, the ingenuity of the Triangle scenic artists at the Triangle studio was taxed to the utmost.

In one case the manuscript called for a Venetian scene, and Director Edwards had two palaces and the Grand Canal of Venice reproduced, for which especially brilliant night effects were made. A street carnival was also taken. Quaint old houses, with thatched roofs, the kind to be seen in Italy, were built especially at the Hartville ranch studio. The construction of these buildings resulted in a natural effect being secured and more than "local color."

Other features of great attractiveness that were used in making this picture, included relics of the days of the padres in Southern California. One was an old mission bell, formerly used in the days now long gone, by Fathers to call the Indians to worship. This relic was obtained from one of the first missions founded by Father Junipero Serra, the Franciscan monk. The historic bell was used to toll the Angelus in Director Edwards' picture. Another beautiful scenery effect was obtained when a vast acreage of chrysanthemums in full bloom was photographed, to be used as a garden setting, and furnished a wonderful background.

The cast selected for "I Love You" includes, besides Alma Rubens, Wheeler Oakman, one of the best-known leading men in the country, and Francis McDonald, also a well-known heavy. Both Mr. McDonald and Mr. Oakman are new to Triangle pictures. Others in the cast are: Frederick Vroom, Lillian Langdon and John Lince.

The story deals with a French artist who paints a beautiful Italian girl. She learns to love him, but the artist leaves her brokenhearted. A wealthy Frenchman, after seeing the painting, falls in love with the model and goes in search of her, and they are married. Later the artist tries to win back the girl's love and finally does take her from her husband, but in the end he is brought to justice for his actions. "I Love You" was written by Catherine Carr.

HALIFAX HORROR SHOWN FIRST IN MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 155.

The news of the explosion of the munition ship in Halifax harbor, followed by the greatest holocaust in recent history, which killed four thousand outright, wounded thousands of others, and made twenty thousand persons homeless, had hardly been flashed over the wires when staff cameramen of the Gaumont Company were speeding to the scene. As a result the first motion pictures of this disaster are shown in No. 155 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly. These pictures were on the screen of the New York theaters within a few hours after the first cameraman returned with his negative, and were shown in other theaters throughout the United States as fast as prints could be rushed by fast trains.

Direct from the front, the first official pictures of the battle of the Aisne, that glorious victory which the French troops won with such intrepid valor, are also shown in this issue of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly. Actual scenes of fighting; the handling of the famous French 75's and the big 400 m/m guns which pounded the Huns incessantly; the movement of the tanks in the early dawn to clear a place for the infantry; the rescue of the wounded; the capture of twelve thousand Germans and 180 guns, and the noble work performed by the Red Cross—all are graphically illustrated in the many scenes taken on the actual battlefield. Particularly enlightening is one of these scenes, taken while an icy rain was falling, which pictures thousands of German prisoners shivering in the insufficient clothing furnished by their "Fatherland."

Prominent among the news events pictured in the United States in the last auto race which will be held during the war, the Liberty Sweepstakes staged in Los Angeles, where fifty thousand spectators saw Eddie Hearn win, and an open-air concert in Boston by two world-famous actors, David Warfield and Harry Lauder, in which they aid a thousand "Jackies" in raising funds to help the dependents of naval men.

IRENE CASTLE IN NEW PATHE FEATURE.

Irene Castle, immediately upon the completion of the last scene of "Convict 993," the first of the "big star—big story" Pathe features to be released during 1918, commenced work in "The Mysterious Client," a big mystery story, the release date of which has not yet been announced.

In "The Mysterious Client," Miss Castle will be supported by an all-star cast that includes Milton Sills, Warner Oland and Caesare Gravina, all of whom have gained fame in the Pathe serials.

"THE FOURTH IN SALVADOR" (General Film).

A stay of several months in Central America enabled Henry to gather material for one of his most humorous stories. "The Fourth in Salvador," the current release in General Film Company's Broadway Star Feature series. This is a rollicking story of a tea-cup revolution and what happened to it when it collided full-force with a small but exuberant party of Americans bent upon celebrating the Fourth in the gold old-fashioned way.

This is one of the group of "o Henry" stories produced the western studios and features Chet Ryan, W. L. Rodgers, Jack Wetherby, Charles Wheelock and others. The action starts with the difficulties in which Billy Casparis (Chet Ryan) finds himself with regard to his ice-making concession. He attempts to palm off a block of glass as a chunk of ice in order to prevent the foreclosure of his concession, but is detected. With ruin staring him in the face, he spends his last cent to help celebrate the Fourth in good style. Complications ensue when a revolution breaks out and the defeated rebel general flees to the Americans for protection. The latter, thinking the regulars are bent upon suppressing their celebration, turn in and give the army a good licking. As a reward the new president officially declares the block of glass to be ice of the finest quality, and Billy saves his forfeit money. The two reels of this film are crowded with stirring incidents and some of the most humorous action seen in many a day.

"THE KINGDOM OF LOVE" (Fox).

Jewel Carmen, in her first production as a star, will be William Fox's Christmas week offering to exhibitors. The first photoplay which Miss Carmen may call her own will be released December 23 as a Fox special feature. The production, which is titled "The Kingdom of Love," deals with a situation developing from a girl being left alone in the Klondike through the death of her father.

The father, it appears, was a gambler who deserted his wife and son in the States. The son turns up eventually in the camp where his sister is and she learns his identity through a letter which he shows her when he asks aid in going to the bedside of his sick mother. Not telling the youth of the relationship the girl raises money for his trip by selling herself in the camp. The camp minister "bids her in," mortgaging himself to a saloonkeeper to obtain the necessary cash. Interested at first only in the girl's moral welfare, the minister eventually falls in love with her. The debt is canceled by the saloonkeeper's death.

"The Kingdom of Love" was made in the West under the direction of Frank Lloyd, who has thus occupied himself while William Farnum was taking a much-needed rest. The cast includes Nancy Taswell, Genevieve Blinn, L. C. Shumway, Fred Milton, Ernest Wade, Joseph Manning, G. Raymond Nye and Murdock MacQuarrie, nearly all of whom are well known to motion picture theater patrons. The story was written by Doty Hobart.

BLACKTON LEAVES FOR COAST.

J. Stuart Blackton, producer of the novels of Sir Gilbert Parker for Paramount, left Wednesday, December 5, for California, to engage in further production work under the same auspices at the Lasky Studio. Mr. Blackton took with him Albert Dorris, his film editor, who is an expert cutter as well. Preparations are under way at the Lasky Studio for the reception of the producer, and a special building has been erected to house his personal office and the offices of his executive staff. The first picture that Commodore Blackton will make for Paramount in the West will be "Wild Youth," written by Sir Gilbert Parker, and said to be one of the author's most fascinating romances.

Triangle Program Features

"Without Honor" and "Until They Get Me" Will Be the Features on Triangle Program for Week of Dec. 23.

CONTINUING its efforts to furnish the most enlightening and most interesting photodramas of the day, Triangle offers two features for the week of December 23 that bear out the policy of the company. Triangle believes that in these days of war and trouble that the public should be given pictures so constructed that they will detract from thought of stress and woe.

"Without Honor," scheduled as the first release of the week, is a drama dealing with a true situation in life, and is one of a series that offers unusually realistic portraits of American life. It is a story of narrow minded Deacon Hanford (Walt Whitman), whose harsh policies and bigoted ideas cause nothing but trouble. Margery Wilson, in the stellar role as Jeanie McGregor, is said to achieve another success to be added to her long list. She has risen from the ranks solely on the strength of her work in parts demanding complete sympathy. Others in the cast who do excellent work are Walt Whitman, who does some of the best acting of his career, and Darrell Foss, who plays the part of the son with a realistic finish. Arthur Moon, Laura Sears, and Anna Dodge, who appear in this feature, are recent additions to the Triangle force.

"Until They Get Me," the second release of the week, is a dramatic story of the Northern country, showing the work of the Northwest Mounted Police in an interesting manner, and emphasizing most strongly the characteristics of this organization. Paulin Starke, the sixteen-year-old star, has the leading role in this feature, and her unaffected acting is said to be one of the best parts of the picture. Cast as the waif Margy, she puts real feeling into the character, and, according to reports, really is Margy, in no instance having to act the part. "Until They Get Me" has already been shown on the screen at the Rialto theater, where it enjoyed a week's run, and was generally praised by critics. There is an agreeable suspense maintained throughout the drama, and in the closing scenes, Miss Starke does the love scene in a manner that promises to relieve the boredom of the stereotyped fadeaway. Joe King as the mounted policeman and Jack Curtis as the outlaw, both make the best of their opportunities in this picture and produce real effect. Frank Borzage directed the production and Kenneth B. Clarke wrote the story.

In the Keystone comedy, "Afraid to Be False," also scheduled for release December 23, Milton Sims plans to elope with Dorothy Hagar in spite of the fact he already possesses one wife, in the person of Maude Wayne. But when the appointed day for the elopement arrives, Milt quits cold on the proposition and goes home to his wife and a mighty big surprise. Lloyd Bacon has designs on Milt's wife, and when Sims arrives home a lively scene follows.

"A Counterfeit Scent" and "A Birthday Blunder," one-reel Triangle Komedies, are also included in the week's releases.

MAE MARSH A MODELER IN CLAY.

The familiar press agent story of the versatile feminine star who rides, plays golf, cooks, dances and swims with consummate skill makes the not infrequently truthful press department of Goldwyn Pictures a little bit diffident about telling people who might never believe it that Mae Marsh is an honest-to-goodness sculptor. But she is, and there seems no getting around making the fact public.

Mae Marsh and the Portrait Bust of Herself Which She Made for Her New Goldwyn Production, "The Beloved Traitor."

Goldwyn has known since Miss Marsh came under its wing as a star that she possessed this unusual talent, but it was with an interest not unmingled with skepticism that persons in the New York offices of the company regarded a photograph sent from the studios showing the little star at work on a life-sized clay statue, unmistakably of herself.

Inquiry revealed the astonishing fact that Miss Marsh had modeled the statue herself for one of the important scenes in "The Beloved Traitor," her newest Goldwyn picture. And she did it because her leading man, playing the role of a sculptor, hadn't enough knowledge of the art to have plastered the clay foundation on the dummy frame of the statue.

The statue was of Miss Marsh's own face and figure because the film scenario demands that it be just that. The hero, a poor Maine fisherman, has an undeveloped talent for sculpture which he exercises by making sand heads of the heroine, Miss Marsh.

The action of the story requires that the big statue modeled by Miss Marsh be broken in the course of a fight between the hero, now approaching fame in his new profession, and a rival. The star had the painful experience, therefore, of seeing her handiwork broken to bits to make a single scene. Needless to say, this "take" wasn't "shot" a second time.

LOUISE FAZENDA COMING IN "KITCHEN LADY."

Louise Fazenda, the empress of mirth, again comes into prominence with "The Kitchen Lady," to be released by Paramount January 13. This is a Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy of the screaming variety. It parodies social customs and paints the woes of the downtrodden servant girl in ludicrous hues. Miss Fazenda is thoroughly at home in this character, for she possesses the burlesque ability to a marked degree, so necessary for the rendition of this sort of type.

This bare skeleton of the plot gives no real idea of the hilarious humor of the comedy. The picture is made doubly laughable by the fact that so many of the animal actors of the Sennett studios are introduced—including a trained fish. Beside Louise Fazenda, Slim Summerville, Glen Cavender, Alice Maison and Eva Thatcher appear in the cast. Ed Cline is director and the production was made under Mr. Sennett's supervision.

Preceding this, comes "Taming Target Center," December 30, with Polly Moran and a cast of star laughmakers.

"THE HOPPER," COLLIERS' STORY, BY TRIANGLE.

Director Thomas Heffron, whose last picture under Triangle colors was with William Desmond in "The Sudden Gentleman," has begun work on "The Hopper," a screen adaptation from Meredith Nicholson's story by the same name, which appeared in Colliers' Weekly. Jack Cunningham did the continuity.

It is a crook comedy story, with a reformed safe-blower in the title role, and in this story the man who wanted to go straight finds himself forced into a kidnapping and a robbery. How he escapes the penitentiary and instead finds some warm friends, is the surprise of the story. Included in the cast are such well-known Triangle players as William V. Mong, who has the title role, Irene Hunt, Walt Whitman, George Hernandez and Peaches Jackson.

Bill Desmond, Triangle star, whose last picture was directed by Heffron, is so proud of his Irish ancestry that he has a harp and shamrock with his initials on his automobile, and now Bill is busily engaged in denying the rumor that his initials are "B. V. D.," for, from a distance, the harp between his initials B and D certainly does look like a V.

"HER SECOND HUSBAND" COMING DECEMBER 31.

Miss Edna Goodrich, one of the most popular and brilliant of the speaking-stage celebrities who have won additional fame on the screen, has a splendid dramatic vehicle in her new Mutual production, "Her Second Husband," a story of society based on Wall street and the strange social and financial alliances formed there. "Her Second Husband" comes to the screen December 31.

The plot has to do with a striving young capitalist's effort to make his charming and beautiful young wife pull his financial chestnuts out of the fire by diverting the men to whom he is heavily indebted.

The story is most skillfully constructed and its plot is one that suits Miss Goodrich admirably. In it she is given an opportunity to display her genius for characterization and to wear some of the most beautiful gowns ever turned out for a motion picture play.

SPOOR'S BILLBOARD CAMPAIGN IS ON.

The opening gun of George K. Spoor's campaign of billboarding the entire country in advertising the ultra features to be produced by him during the year has been fired and as a result the contagious smile of Taylor Holmes is beaming from coast to coast and lakes to gulf.

"Uneasy Money," a comedy-drama featuring Mr. Holes, is the subject of the first poster drive. Twenty-four sheets in six colors are being used exclusively. The first went on the boards December 15.

Following the Holmes' drive will come another twenty-four-sheet campaign for Mr. Spoor's second feature, Mary MacLane, the daring authoress, in a picture from her own pen, "Men Who Have Made Love To Me."

Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," another Spoor ultra feature, with Taylor Holmes in the role of "Ruggles," will be the subject of the third drive.

Muir Describes Conditions in Canada

Says Exhibitors There as Here Are Suffering from the Upward Tendency in Rentals.

THE serious state of affairs in the motion picture industry, as outlined by Samuel Goldfish recently in his sensational interview, finds ample confirmation in a statement on conditions in Western Canada made by J. R. Muir, owner and manager of a chain of theaters in British Columbia, including the Dominion of Vancouver, the Dominion theater of Victoria, the Dominion of Nanaimo and many other houses in those and neighboring cities.

"The film business is in a critical condition, from the exhibitor's, quite as much as from the manufacturer's, point of view," says Mr. Muir. "Of course, we have the Canadian war tax to face out there, as well as a local levy, and the new Victory Loan. I feel that the last-named, while it is the largest begetter of economy among theater patrons, is also purely transitory. In a short time the pocketbooks will be adjusted to the new outlay and people's normal and constant craving for amusement will rule.

"But I know, as Mr. Goldfish contends, that exhibitors everywhere in Canada as in the United States are suffering from the upward tendency in rentals, due to lack of organization among the producers and to reckless bidding for stars. It is the exhibitor and his patrons who have made these players famous, and when they hold out for huge sums of money which prevent producers from making legitimate profits off any but excessive rentals they are biting the hand that has fed them.

"The producers who have 'come back' by placing such stars in 'specials' are doing almost as much to ruin the legitimate picture business. It gave me immense satisfaction to learn that Goldwyn would release Mary Garden in 'Thais' at the regular rental price to its exhibitors, because I knew it was honest business, good business, and far-sighted business, not only for me and for other exhibitors, but for the whole film industry as well.

"As to public taste in war time—and Canada has had a longer seige than the United States—it is most decidedly away from the heavy and morbid. The people still relish pathos of the finest sort, but it must be pathos relieved by comedy touches. That was the reason why Mae Marsh in 'Polly of the Circus' went so big with us."

"MADAM WHO" (Paralta).

The splendid story of the great spectacle is found in the second Paralta Play, Bessie Barriscale in "Madam Who," by Harold MacGrath, such as the stages of the legitimate theaters can give only in mere glimpses. The "moon" element in "Madam Who" is large, effective, and splendidly handled.

Not that "Madam Who" is a mere spectacle. In fact the spectacular element is present only as a colorful background for the supreme art and emotional acting of the star, which won from Alan Dale, dramatic critic, his seldom given, wholehearted approval. He wrote, after having seen "Madam Who" at a private showing, that in it Bessie Barriscale did the best emotional acting he had seen in many a day.

In this artistic and thrilling photoplay, Miss Barriscale travels through a great emotional range in such a way as to cause the dramatic critics who saw the feature at private showings to declare that she had an art so great that there was in it no hint of any limit of her powers. In other words, she fully created illusion, was entirely natural in seeming, and never showed a training after effect. All of which is the very highest praise to any player anywhere in the world.

FOX TO FILM LORIMER STORY.

"Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, is to be filmed by William Fox. It required some persuasion, accompanied by a large sum of money, to get Mr. Lorimer's consent to picturization of his successful tale. Mr. Fox conducted the negotiations which finally made it possible.

Mr. Lorimer's "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" appeared in serial form and its human interest appeal made it a notable contribution to fiction of the lighter vein. Its introductory chapter, in which young Spurlock, at Harvard awakens after a wild night and discovers a bear with boxing gloves on his feet in his bath-room, which he had brought home as a "lark," compels the reader to settle in his chair anticipating an "out of the ordinary" tale—and he is not disappointed. Irresistible humor, convincing "horse sense" philosophy, appealing human interest touches, a wee bit of love romance and a dash of pathos, all blended by Lorimer's adept hand, make a charming story and one especially adaptable to picturization. What happened to Jack Spurlock—Prodigal might happen to any red-blooded young American—it is entirely within the range of possibility. That's what helps make "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" so interesting.

The story was read by millions of persons and clippings from twenty-five hundred newspapers testify to the unusual interest it awakened and if the Fox people can convey to film even a tithe of its humor and philosophy the result ought to be gratifying.

HALIFAX DISASTER IN ANIMATED WEEKLY.

The week's number of Universal's Current Events presents one of the most striking series of pictures ever shown upon the screen—scenes in the stricken city of Halifax. Immediately upon receipt of the news of the disaster that had befallen the Nova Scotia capital Jack Cohn, manager of Universal's news-reel department, made arrangements for the transport of a corps of cameramen on the Red Cross Relief train, first out of New York for Halifax. Every possible effort was made to rush the train through, and the Universal photographers were among the first American photographers to arrive there. No time was wasted in getting to work, the result was a collection of views startling in the vision of terrible destruction they present and of highest importance from the news point of view. Despite all Americans have read of graphic description of the horrors wrought in Halifax by explosion and fire, the actual pictures presented on the screen bring a realization of the disaster that words cannot produce.

In this same number of Current Events are shown realistic views of Jerusalem, the Holy City, the one great gift the war has brought to Christian and Hebrew alike, a gift in which both rejoice.

In Animated Weekly No. 2 are shown pictures portraying some of the work wrought by German emissaries. They succeeded in Chicago in destroying by fire a $400,000 warehouse filled with munitions, and causing a series of violent explosions. Wind and intense cold turning into ice the columns of water poured upon it made the work of firemen battling with the flames tenfold more difficult—striking pictures of the fight with the flames are shown.

A NEW WESTINGHOUSE CATALOG.

The Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company have issued an eighty-page catalog of direct current motors and generators of which that portion devoted to the illustrations, diagrams, and detailed description motor-generators for motion picture service will interest our readers.

The specifications of each size and type of generator and its accessories are very complete in detail, and will prove valuable as references when deciding upon new equipment.

Those who desire a copy of the book should write for same to the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., East Pittsburgh, Pa., requesting catalog 39, and mentioning the fact that they saw it mentioned in the Moving Picture World, thus identifying themselves as interested parties instead of curiosity seekers.

Artcraft Announces January Releases

Pretentious Array of Attractions for First Month of New Year—Pickford, Hart and Ferguson the Stars.

A PRETENTIOUS array of attractions for the first month of the new year was announced last week by Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, presenting Mary Pickford, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson. In these productions Artcraft has three of the most notable releases ever presented by this company.

As the initial release, Artcraft offers Elsie Ferguson in "Rose of the World," an emotional drama of exceptional merit. The book, by Agnes and Edgeron Castle, has had wide circulation. Adapted from the book by Charles Maigne and staged under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, it is expected this picture will outshine "Barbary Sheep" and "The Rise of Jennie Cushing." Supporting Miss Ferguson are Wyndham Standing, Percy Marmont, Ethel Martin, June Sloane, Clarence Handysides, Marie Bendetta, Gertrude Le Brant and Sloane De Masber. Maurice Tourneur directed.

William S. Hart in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Wolves of the Rail," is Artcraft's second offering in January. In this production "Big Bill" appears in the part of an upholder of the law and order rather than an outlaw. As Buck Andrade, a railroad detective, Hart is just as fearless and daring as when opposed to the law, and his business of ridding the railroad of outlaws affords him particular opportunity to present heavy dramatic work such as won him present great popularity throughout the country. The story is by Denison Clift. Volva Vale heads the supporting cast.

"Stella Maris," adapted from the famous novel by William J. Locke, will be Miss Pickford's January offering. The two parts portrayed by "Our Mary" in this picture, those of Stella Maris and Unity Blake, are of exceptional contrast. Marshall Neilan staged the picture. Frances Marion wrote the scenario. The supporting cast includes Conway Tearle, Camille Ankewich, Ida Waterman, Herbert Standing, Josephine Crowell and Mrs. Coonleu.

UNITED DETROIT OFFICE MOVES.

L. J. Gardiner, the popular local manager of the United Theater Equipment Corporation, reports that the Detroit office of the U. T. E. has been moved to the New Film Building, 57 East Elizabeth street, where a large showroom has been equipped for the display of modern theater equipment and supplies. A large and complete stock of motion picture accessories is carried on hand, and special attention is given to machine repairing. Expert workmen only are employed and all work is guaranteed, it being the policy of the U. T. E. to use only genuine parts on machine repairs.

"HER SISTER" (Empire-All Star).

Lavish stage settings and a celebrated cast have been combined with the charming personality and rare talent of Olive Tell in the production of "Her Sister," Mutual's feature release of December 24. "Her Sister" comes from the studio of the Empire-All Star Corporation, which is engaged in the production of Charles Frohman's most popular stage plays in motion pictures. It was directed by John B. O'Brien. The supporting cast is made up of Frohman players headed by David Powell.

Scene from "Her Sister" (Mutual).

Miss Tell wears gorgeous raiment in "Her Sister." She is cast as a modern New York girl and as an Egyptian priestess. As "Isis, the Seer," Miss Tell wears costly robes. The scenes for this part of the picture are laid in a replica of an ancient Egyptian throne room.

"Her Sister" is the Frohman play in which Ethel Barrymore played to big crowds on Broadway. It deals with the experiences of two girls, sisters, left to support themselves in New York.

The dramatic value of the story and the play has been effectively worked out by Director O'Brien, who staged the play for the camera.

MUTUAL RELEASES END OF "LOST EXPRESS."

Carrying a real punch, the mystery of "The Lost Express" is solved in the final chapter of this exciting railroad serial, in which Helen Holmes has exhibited feats of daring as thrilling as they are novel. In chapter 15, "The Return of the Lost Express," released by Mutual Monday, December 24, Director J. P. McGowan has worked up a high spectacular climax in which an entire town is destroyed by fire and Helen is seen in a scene of rescue from the flames that border on the foolhardy.

Scenes taken in the bowels of the earth where the locomotive and cars were hidden, required special electrical equipment for photographic illumination, while a special piece of superstructure camouflage is instructive in showing how this art is applied.

Learning the secret of the hiding place of "The Lost Express" from one of the syndicate who is dying, Helen, after a wild drive into the mine, her high-powered car and a desperate fight with two of the syndicate, succeeds in backing the iron monster out into the main road.

The solution of the mystery has taxed the imagination of mechanical inventive geniuses and has sustained an interest that culminates in a remarkable climax.

BEST "ARGUS PICTORIAL" YET FOR DECEMBER 30TH.

Argus Pictorial No. 4, released by Pathe the week of Dec. 30, is probably the best issue yet of this animated magazine in one reel, produced by Argus Laboratories, Inc., of which Horace D. Ashton is president.

The famous Piedmont Valley of Virginia, which boasts the finest pack of American fox hounds, is shown in the article on "Fox Hunting with the Piedmont Hounds," showing picturesque scenes in the wild country of Virginia.

Another article is "Garden Monsters," showing the giant garden fighter, the Cicada (who is happy because his wife has no voice), the male harvest fly, the field cricket, the June bug, the robber fly, and other queer insects with which we come in contact in every-day life but which we rarely recognize.

"Numbers that Draw Pictures" shows some of the most amazing effects ever obtained on the screen, establishing a mystical connection between Art and Mathematics.

Another article is "The Anthileptus," a curious little formation found in streams near aquatic plants, usually about 1-500th of an inch in length and mostly colorless.

An unusual novelty is "Scissorsgraphs," showing what a clever hand can do with a pair of scissors and a scrap of paper.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY" FIRST PETROVA RELEASE.

In order to co-operate with the many Petrova exhibitors to the fullest extent possible, the week of Dec. 23, which embraces the Christmas holidays, has been chosen in which to release "Daughter of Destiny." The co-operation of many newspapers throughout the country who devote large space to motion pictures have been enlisted and the exhibitors and dailies in each town will work together to attract the attention of the screen patrons to "Petrova Week."

In order to further the plan, arrangements have been made whereby those picture patrons who witness "Daughter of Destiny" during Christmas Week, also "Petrova Week," will be presented by the local exhibitors with an autographed new portrait pose of the famous Polish star and widespread advance publicity will be given this innovation by the use of the theater men's screens and the columns of the newspapers which are interested in the project.

"LOVE LETTERS" (Paramount).

Thurston Hall, who appeared opposite Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark," her first Paramount picture produced by Thomas H. Ince, will again be seen in the leading male role of "Love Letters," which will be released December 24.

Aside from the fact that it is a thrilling story, "Love Letters" also teaches a practical lesson, and is a powerful argument against writing letters of a dangerous character, unless it is certain that recipient may be depended upon for his or her discretion. Shannon Fife is the author. It is said to be a remarkable example of dramatic construction.

Having completed "Love Letters," Miss Dalton is working on her next picture, a production having its scenes somewhere in the rugged western country.

"WORK" NEXT ESSANAY—CHAPLIN RE-ISSUE.

Charlie Chaplin never worked harder nor more effectively in the making of a comedy than in General Film's current release in the new edition of Chaplin's early successes made by Essanay and, quite naturally, it bears the name of "Work." This is the fifth in the series of Essanay's Chaplin pictures, and it is a riot of fun from start to finish. Exhibitors everywhere are finding the new editions of Chaplin pictures one of their best box-office bets, and the bookings for these subjects are equally as good as the demands for these pictures when they were first issued.

Olive Tell Leads Mutual Christmas Week

Other Featured Players on Program Are Helen Holmes, Billie Rhodes and George Ovey.

MUTUAL'S Christmas offering will be "Her Sister," a Charles Frohman play in pictures, starring Miss Olive Tell, whose work in "The Unforeseen" established the quality of her screen work and her value at the box office. The subject, which is released December 24, is a picture adaptation of the Broadway success in which Miss Ethel Barrymore scored a sensational hit. This picture was made at the Empire Long Island studios under the direction of John B. O'Brien. In the supporting cast is David Powell, Eileen Dennes, Anita Rothe, Mrs. Clarat-Bracy, Harriett Thompson and Martha Dean. In the concluding chapter of "The Lost Express," "The Return of the Lost Express," released December 24, is cleared up the mystery of the missing train. Helen, after a thrilling series of adventures, in which all previous "stunts" are put in the shade, discovers the train and drives it back to the main track.

Billie Rhodes in the Strand comedy, "Mary's Boomerang," takes the part of a girl who attempts to prove that her chum's husband is a flirt, gets them all mixed up in a family mess, which almost leads to a divorce, but finally emerges from the affair a sadder but wiser girl.

"Oneta," a superhorse with almost human intelligence, is a co-star with George Ovey in the Cub comedy, "Jerry's Best Friend." This equine does stunts that are amazing and rescues Jerry from a band of cattle thieves and outlaws.

Mutual Weekly is full of topics of timely interest, covering a diversity of subjects that are pertinent. It is released Monday, December 24.

BILLIE RHODES GETTING ON IN COMEDY.

Billie Rhodes is meeting marked success in Mutual-Strand comedies, being booked in big houses from coast to coast. Miss Rhodes owes her extraordinary success no less to the fact that she has provided a class of clean comedy that is full of legitimate fun without a trace of slapstick.

Aside from being one of the prettiest girls on the screen, Miss Rhodes is given credit for shrewdness, since it was only through her determined insistence that the new style comedy was substituted for her for the old.

DEVOTES 24 HOURS TO CHANGING COSTUMES.

In looking over the figures of some of the Goldwyn studio's recent statistical tabulations, comparing them with figures got together by the auditing department, the amazing cost of the time it takes a star to change her clothes is seen in black and white. This is especially worthy of note in the case of Mary Garden, who has just completed her work in "Thais." Her costumes were many and elaborate, involving complete renewals of robes, sandals, togas and numerous jewels as the pictures progressed. As it happened, it was not always possible for Director Frank H. Crane to occupy himself with scenes not demanding the presence of Miss Garden, while the actress changed from Thais' grotto costume to her complicated cloth-of-gold gown for the splendid scenes in the courtesan's palace.

Mary Garden in "Thais."

Thus it was a matter of necessity to take account of Miss Garden's time when in her dressing-room. Altogether the minutes spent by Miss Garden in divesting herself of one gorgeous gown to be decked out in other more splendid apparel consumed just twenty-four hours of Goldwyn's golden time. Just how golden the time may be reckoned is not for publication. The point of the story lies in the high degree of efficiency which makes it possible to submit such figures. The monetary equivalent of those hours in the day of this celebrated woman must always be the subject of conjecture.

Universal Combination in Minneapolis

Laemmle and Universal Exchanges Now Under One Roof—New Managers Named.

E. H. GOLDSTEIN, general manager of Universal Exchanges, returned Monday from a two week trip to Minneapolis, Detroit, Indianapolis and Chicago. In the latter place, Mr. Goldstein achieved the consolidation of the Laemmle Film Service and the Universal Film Exchange, one of the recent important film movements, and saw the two factors housed under one roof at 229 South State street before returning East. I. L. Lesserman will have in charge the Universal office. C. R. Plough will father Bluebird affairs and I. Van Ronkel will handle Jewel products and Alice Howell comedies. "Exhibitors in Chicago, through the consolidation of the Laemmle Film Service and Universal Film Exchange, will be insured the very finest degree of service," declared Mr. Goldstein, commenting on this important change.

In Minneapolis, Mr. Goldstein was the guest of Ben Judell, popular Laemmle Film Service manager. In Detroit, where Mr. Goldstein spent Thanksgiving, he appointed C. G. Kingsley manager of the Bluebird office to succeed W. W. Drumm. J. H. Calvert, manager of the Laemmle Film Service, Omaha, Neb., visited with Mr. Goldstein during his stay in Chicago and was appointed by him manager of the Omaha office to succeed F. A. Van Husan, who recently resigned. Barney Rosenthal, of the St. Louis Universal office, was also called to Chicago by Mr. Goldstein to discuss important affairs of his territory.

"THE BLUEBIRD" A RECORD PRODUCTION.

When Artcraft releases "The Bluebird," the big Maeterlinck spectacle, it will have established new records in film production. Maurice Tourneur, the director, has had the exclusive use of the Famous Players-Lasky studios at Fort Lee, N. J., where the regular force of carpenters, electricians and mechanics has been greatly augmented and has been working day and night building the scenery and effects.

The theme is allegorical and symbolical, and great numbers of people are being used in the production. There are a great many characters doing specialties and various well known people have been engaged. Rose Roland, from "Over the Top," now playing in New York, leads several symbolical dance numbers, and Gertrude McCoy impersonates "Light."

Maurice Tourneur has been at work on this production for about six weeks, and expects to complete it in a fortnight. He has already used 130,000 feet of negative, and will need 25,000 to 30,000 feet more to complete the picture. A great deal of this is in double and triple exposure.

ESSANAY SUBJECTS ON KLEINE LIST.

Essanay timed the release of its novelty Perfection Picture, "The Dream Doll," so as to give it to the public during the holiday season. And that it sensed the appropriate time for its releases it evidenced in the heavy holiday week bookings, already reported by the George Kleine offices.

Though not a Christmas picture, "The Dream Doll" is particularly appropriate for holiday programs, as it shows that some remarkable acting is done on the part of some fourteen-inch dolls.

Mary McAlister, the six-year-old Essanay actress, has completed her latest picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven," adapted from the story published in Good Housekeeping. This production includes some remarkable acting by a small dog, "rented out" by a Michigan farmer. The little animal shows remarkable aptitude for obeying the director. It is released December 24 through George Kleine as an Essanay Perfection Picture.

WALLACE REID IN NEW YORK.

Wallace Reid, favorite of a great body of photoplaygoers and star or leading man in numerous Paramount and Artcraft pictures, will soon be "in our midst"—taking New York as the terminus of his transcontinental journey. He left Los Angeles in company of Kenneth McGaffey, west coast publicity director, on December 5 and, after stopping for personal appearances in a number of the cities en route, reached the big city on the 17th.

While in the East Mr. Reid will be filmed in "The Source," and probably "Believe Me, Xantippe," from the Harvard Prize play, will also be produced on the Atlantic side of the continent.

Mr. Reid has completed two western productions—the first, "Nan of Music Mountain," to be released by Paramount, December 17, the day of the star's arrival in New York.

"FINN & HADDIE" COMEDIES.

In the current series of Sparkle Comedy releases, General Film Company introduced a new comedy team, Finn & Haddie, who present some of their novel fun-making stunts in "Their Model Career" and "Their Fishy Footsteps." Finn & Haddie appear again in a new series of six Jaxon comedies to be released about the middle of January. Billy Ruge and Walter Stahl, two comedians noted for their ability to crowd laughs into a reel of film, compose the Finn & Haddie team. The new series will retain all of the rapid-fire comedy value of the five preceding series of Jaxons.

Pathe Program

Schedule for Week of December 30 Offers Many Excellent Subjects.

GLADYS HULETTE, Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton are the box-office stars on Pathe's program for the week of Dec. 30, and there is also a special cowboy thriller in three reels and an especially interesting issue of the Argus Pictorial.

Gladys Hulette appears in "Over the Hill," a Gold Rooster play in five reels, produced by Astra, story and scenario by Lois Zellner, directed by William Parke. This is one of the best, if not the best, of the Gladys Hulette features.

In "Over the Hill" Gladys Hulette is the wide-awake little business "man" about whom a delightful story of humor and pathos, which is also brought to an exciting and interesting climax, revolves. She gets a job on a little country newspaper, falls in love with the business manager, saves him from disgrace, and, by landing a big contract, puts the paper "Over the Hill" to prosperity. The supporting cast includes J. H. Gilmore, Chester Barnett, as the hero; Daniel Mason, Richard Thornton, William Sullivan, as a young baseball pitcher, who attempts to "marry" the daughter of a wealthy man; Paul Clerget, the famous French actor; Joyce Fair, a star in her own right, and William Parke, Jr., as a young scapegrace. "Over the Hill" is a sure winner.

Doris Kenyon appears as the star in the sixth episode of "The Hidden Hand" serial, under the title "The Flower of Death"—produced in two reels by Pathe. In an attempt to prove that she is the daughter of Judson Whitney, Doris is trapped by the Hidden Hand. She and Ramsey start up the stairs of the church which lead to the steeple. At the top, Ramsey grabs the coiled bell rope. Doris grabs one end and starts down the steep roof and over the edge. The Hidden Hand fires at the rope with his revolver. He hits the rope and it starts to unravel. Doris is falling as the Hidden Hand starts to crawl toward Ramsey with his revolver drawn.

"The Eighth Annual Round-Up, Pendleton, Oregon," is a three-reel topical special. It is characterized as a great cowboy thriller. It takes you to the great West. The West that is fast disappearing. The performers are not professional players. They are real cowboys and cowgirls, white men and Indians, champions of the world in riding wild horses, wild steers, etc. The picture shows broncho-busting, wild horse racing, bull-dogging steers, horse racing by some of the most famous Indian squaws, roping cattle and riding them.

Argus Pictorial No. 4—an animated magazine in one reel—is produced by the Argus Laboratories, Inc. It shows four very interesting articles under the headings: "Fox Hunting with the Piedmont Hounds," "Garden Monsters," "Numbers that Draw Pictures," "The Anthileptus" and "Scissographs."

"Rocky Mountain Park" is a Combitone travel picture in one reel, showing beautiful scenes in the Rocky Mountains, taken by the famous Combitone process.

An International cartoon and educational split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 1 and No. 2, complete this program.

MARIE DRESSLER STRONG FOR THE IMPROMPTU.

Some people are born with the knack of being funny in motion pictures, some achieve it by diligent work and others acquire it by accident. In this latter category is Marie Dressler, star of "Fired," now being distributed by Goldwyn.

Miss Dressler gives credit to her long and honorable experience in Weber and Fields burlesque for the comedy training that has made her a laughing success on the screen. The secret of her popularity in the newer medium is due not so much, she confesses, to her ability to be as funny as the scenario of the motion picture allows as to her skill in outdoing the script by comedy improvisation.

"The old Weber and Fields shows were really funny," says Miss Dressler, "because the players never considered it necessary to stick to the lines written for them. Sometimes whole scenes, devised on the spur of the moment, were interpolated. Joe would say something funny to Lew and Lew would have to come back with something funnier. It was a matter of honor with them. In these circumstances the book of the production was often laid aside for improvisation really better than the original.

"I find that this game of nip-and-tuck with which I had the pleasure of having a hand in in the old days, helps me beyond measure in my motion picture work. Directors have complained that I don't follow their scenarios, but they've been obliged to agree when I finished a picture that there were some funny situations they hadn't thought of."

UNIVERSAL INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT BUSY.

The Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, under the personal supervision of Harry Levey, has made the most important strides since the organization in the early autumn and this week announces the successful negotiation of eight of the biggest contracts in the business. They are: The Western Electric Company, The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, The Fleischmann Yeast Company, The National Cash Register Company, Warner Bros., makers of corsets, E. Z. Van Raalte, veil manufacturers, The Society for Electrical Development and The Disston Saw Company. Its scope is nation wide.

"Cleopatra" to Put Out Forty Shows

It Is Expected All These Will Be on the Road by the First of the Year.

WITH Miss Theda Bara portraying the role of the Siren of the Nile, "Cleopatra" has met with such phenomenal and unprecedented success at the Lyric theater, New York, and in other cities where it has been shown, that William Fox has determined to put out forty road companies.

This spectacular drama not only caused the greatest comment and talk but broke all business records in New York, Washington, Buffalo and Schenectady and has been booked for return engagements. This, too, at a time when theaters playing legitimate attractions are complaining of "bad business."

Some idea of the success of "Cleopatra" may be had from the box office figures in cities in which it has already been shown: New York City, Lyric theater, eleven weeks, $77,000; Buffalo, Teck theater, one week, $9,300; Washington, Belasco theater, one week, $9,100; Schenectady, Van Curler opera house, two days, $1,951.

In the four cities there was a great diversity of audiences. In Washington the most fashionable people of the city attended and the business increased each day until toward the end of the week it was impossible to obtain seats. In Schenectady it played to the industrial workers and both days were sell-outs. In every city "Cleopatra" has exceeded the receipts of "A Daughter of the Gods" by from 30 to 40 per cent.

Samuel F. Kingston will manage the booking department for "Cleopatra," and expects to have all the forty companies on the road not later than January 1.

The spectacular drama has passed every censor board in the United States and has received the commendation of the National Board of Review, which issued a special report on "Cleopatra."

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, of the Ohio Board of Censors, passed "Cleopatra" without eliminations.

FAIRBANKS TO WIND UP ARTCRAFT'S YEAR.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation will wind up its release schedule for 1917 with the new Douglas Fairbanks production, "A Modern Musketeer," now being finished at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. Written and directed by Allan Dwan, whose past association with Douglas Fairbanks has played an important part in the success of various popular photoplays, the newest vehicle for the athletic star offers a unique theme. The story deals with the chivalry of days gone by brought up to date by the reincarnated D'Artagnan—Ned Thacker, a youth from Kansas, whose chivalrous deeds get him into many difficulties.

In the production of this film the Douglas Fairbanks players experienced one of the most strenuous expeditions ever made by a motion picture company in staging a photoplay. The entire Fairbanks producing organization made the trip from the rim of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, down to the Colorado River, a descent of over seven thousand feet and a distance of over thirty-five miles, along narrow winding trails that were barely wide enough to allow space for the mules carrying the players and supplies.

After spending two weeks at the Grand Canyon, the entire company of fifty people departed for the Canyon Du Chelly, ninety miles by pack mule from Gallup, N. M. Here a number of other scenes of rare beauty were obtained as backgrounds for the new production. Among the high cliffs of the Grand Canyon, as well as the Canyon Du Chelly, many opportunities for new Fairbanks thrillers were found and taken advantage of by the energetic star.

Supporting him are Marjorie Daw, Kathleen Kirkham, Frank Campeau, Eugene Ormonde and Tully Marshall.

ESSANAY GENERAL FILM RELEASES.

Arthur D. Hotaling, Essanay comedy director, is adding to his staff of comedians for his one-a-week General Film releases. Arthur Bates, who supported Charlie Chaplin in several of his Essanay productions, is to be featured as a character comedian in forthcoming pictures, as are Amedee Rastrelli, the French comedian newly come from the trenches in France, and Howard Higson, an English contortionist.

Essanay's one-reel scenic General Film releases for December 29 is "Through Canada From Coast to Coast," showing the country to the north from Nova Scotia "Where the East begins" to the coast of British Columbia, "The valedictory of the West." The picture includes the showing of wooden ship building and scenes of the great "Soo locks."

For January 5, Essanay has provided General Film with the scenic, "How Canada and the Farmer Cooperate in Grain Raising," instructive to those interested in the soil industries and scenically artistic.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA AND PARTY MISS STEAMER.

Sessue Hayakawa, Paramount's Japanese star, together with his director, George Melford, and party were marooned on the shores of Hilo when a storm came up and prevented the boats from the schooner in which they were to sail back to Honolulu reaching the port where they were located. Thus, after cabling the date of departure for California, they missed the steamer and were forced to remain for a later boat.

"Price of a Good Time" a Winner

Jewel Production Is Greeted by Capacity Houses in All Parts of the Country.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., are decidedly pleased with the remarkable success of their feature, "The Price of a Good Time," which has met with capacity houses and "repeat" bookings in all parts of the country. The story of the picture, it will be remembered, deals with the struggle of a young girl employed in a metropolitan department store to resist the temptations which beset her on every side. She loves good clothes and wants to have a "good time." She finally gives in and sells herself to a young spendthrift who gives her all that she desires in the way of clothes, money and jewels, but she discovers too late that love formed the essential part of her scheme of life and comes to an untimely end in an automobile crash.

Lois Weber's direction of the delicate situations involved, and the appealing acting of Mildren Harris as the "little drab shop girl," have received considerable attention by the press of the nation. Critics everywhere have commented favorably on the production and there is yet to be said anything which could be construed as a "knock."

Twenty-six of the largest and most popular photoplay theaters in New York, Brooklyn and Newark have or are at present playing the feature. At Fox's Terminal theater in Newark, Sunday, Dec. 9, the crowds which were waiting to gain entrance to the performance were so great, that they finally broke through the police lines and smashed their way through the main doors of the theater. Reserves were called out to disperse the crowd and the run of the feature ended with a "record" box-office statement.

In some parts of the country the feature received personal attention from some of the anti-vice societies which witnessed it with a view to censoring, but decided instead to endorse it as a powerful weapon for good.

Every publicity help which could be extended to an exhibitor was furnished those who booked the picture. Heralds, one three, twelve and twenty-four sheets were ready to shout from the billboards the quality of the production. "On the spot" publicity was furnished by the various zone exchanges and many of the exhibitors arranged elaborate lobby displays to further attract the public.

The result of all this aid is now centering in "return dates." An example of this is the action of the management of the Mount Morris theater at 116th street, New York, which, after playing the feature as a "first run" for three days, is again to play it day and date in opposition to the same feature booked in Moss' Regent theater in the same locality.

Officials of Jewel Productions, Inc., are confident that when the final returns are all in, the feature will prove to be even a greater attraction than "Where Are My Children," and every exchange manager in the thirty-two Jewel branch offices is striving to make predictions become reality.

FORBES-ROBERTSON BIDS FAREWELL TO AMERICA.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the eminent English actor, who came to America to take part in Herbert Brenon's production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," has folded his tent like the Arabs.

Having completed his role of the Stranger at the Brenon studios last week he has taken his departure for England. He will arrive in London in time to spend Christmas with his family, it is expected.

The last public appearance of the distinguished British actor was at Hero Land, where he spoke briefly in behalf of the Allies' cause and its needs. His final journey to America was made solely for the purpose of fulfilling the contract he had made to appear before the camera in the screen production of Jerome K. Jerome's famous drama.

Another Shorty Hamilton Comedy

W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company Announces Another Release, Named "The Snail."

IN ACCORDANCE with a statement recently made in the trade papers relative to the "Shorty Hamilton Comedies," consisting of twelve five-reel comedy dramas per year, the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company now announce another release, entitled "The Snail," a Chinese-American story. This title, however, does not suggest in any way the activities of "Shorty" in telling of the story. From its very beginning and continuing through the entire unfolding of the tale there is a rapid fire of action and mirth-provoking incidents with the star in the lead.

Favored with a seemingly inexhaustible fund of real humor, there is a refreshing absence of the slap-stick methods or the over-acting in order to get a laugh. The story is told with a full recognition of its dramatic value and interpreted by a company of recognized screen favorites. The W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company operates in its own studios and laboratory and with every modern facility for turning out the highest type of product. With a guaranteed release on the first of each month, a franchise covering the entire series is of great value to the exhibitors, inasmuch as it permits the announcing of a definite program, and under a financial arrangement which must prove most inviting.

The marketing of the "Shorty Hamilton" series is being negotiated in the Ernest Shipman offices, 17 West Forty-fourth street, New York City, both for the domestic and foreign rights.

HOW LOWRY GOT NIGHT TRENCH PICTURES.

Handling thousands of men at night is not an easy job, even for a movie director, who is not expected to acknowledge any difficulties.

In making "For the Freedom of the World," Ira M. Lowry's spectacular patriotic film now being extensively booked by Goldwyn offices, the director faced the problem of keeping in touch with thousands of men in both our own and "the enemy" trenches. Megaphones of various sizes were experimented with, but when the gun fire began the director realized that this system would not work. A hurry call was sent out for telephone instruments and a complete system of trench telephones was constructed.

Exactly duplicating conditions at the front, transmitters were placed in the dugouts in each trench sector, and the officers were thus able to get the word to charge simultaneously. As a result, not only the actual construction of the trenches and the use of real star shells and light rockets made the battle scenes realistic, but the conduct of the troops was regulated in exactly the same way.

NEW YORK SENSATION IN "THE NAULAHKA."

Doraldina, who will be seen with Antonio Moreno in the Pathe de luxe production "The Naulahka," is creating a tremendous sensation on the vaudeville stage at the famous Palace theater, New York City.

Doraldina is credited with being the most accomplished Oriental dancer that has ever appeared on the boards in New York City, and in "The Naulahka" the screen will be given a special dance, evolved from a number of native East Indian dances that are even more clever than those with which she is creating the present sensation.

In addition to her dancing, according to announcements from the Pathe Company, Doraldina has proved herself to be an exceptionally clever screen actress. It is said that Doraldina will prove to be the best vampire that has yet been seen on the screen.

This would seem to indicate that "The Naulahka," with its strong cast, headed by Antonio Moreno, and supplemented by a current New York sensation, will be one of the big screen successes of 1918.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN LOS ANGELES.

Constance Talmadge, Select's brilliant young comedienne, who left Los Angeles less than a year ago, comparatively unknown, returned to the Coast this week in a blaze of glory, a star in her own right, with seventy-foot electric signs on Broadway. And her friends made her arrival in the West the occasion for an enthusiastic demonstration.

Miss Talmadge will begin work shortly on "The Shuttle," which has been arranged for the screen from Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's widely-read novel of the same name. Since her immortal story of Little Lord Fauntleroy, Mrs. Burnett has written nothing more fascinating than this tale of international love and marriage, and the role of Betty Vanderpool, fearless, straight-forward and lovable, is one particularly suited to the star's personality. "The Studio Girl," which Constance Talmadge finished just before leaving New York, is now being titled and cut and, upon release, will be distributed through Select Exchanges.

"TROUBLEMAKERS" GETS GOOD START.

"Troublemakers," featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, released December 9, found immediate favor with the public, or at least this is the substance of announcement by purveyors of Fox publicity, and it is further stated that it is based upon reports from Fox exchanges.

Triangle Studios Busy

Ladies' Home Journal and Colliers' Weekly Subjects Begun as Rapid Fire Production Schedule Is Followed.

WITH two pictures completed and two new subjects begun, the Triangle Culver City studio continues to keep pace with the exceptional production schedule set by General Manager H. O. Davis, and several dramas of exceptional merit are now in the preliminary stages of production. The scenario department is busy on the screen adaptations of some well known magazine stories and novels by popular authors, and the staff of authors is also working on several promising original photoplays.

Director Frank Borzage has just put the finishing touches on his latest Triangle offering, "The Gun Woman," featuring Texas Guinan. Supporting Miss Guinan are several well known Triangle players, including Ed Brady and Francis McDonald. In the closing scenes Director Borzage worked with a bevy of Triangle beauties as dance hall girls and all of the cowboys from the Hartville ranch as western atmosphere when "The Gun Woman's" saloon and gambling hall was "shot." The picture is now in the hands of the film editors.

Director Cliff Smith has finished the latest offering starring the Triangle cowboy star, Roy Stewart, who scored a decided hit in his latest western release, "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Stewart's new vehicle is "The Law's Outlaw." Fritzie Ridgeway again supports him in this drama of western life.

A new subject on which Director Smith has started work and in which Stewart will be featured, is the screen adaptation of Randall Parish's well known novel, "Keith of the Border." An exceptionally large cast will support Stewart in this picture. The opening shots are being made with the star in typical western atmosphere. As yet the complete cast has not been announced.

Following "Keith of the Border," the cowboy favorite will appear in the screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel, "Boss of the Lazy Y," declared by Alvin J. Neitz, continuity expert on western subjects, to be the greatest two-gun man story he ever handled. Stewart plays the first four reels as an unshaven rough-neck, bursting forth as a well-groomed gentleman in the closing canto.

Director Thomas Heffron has started work on the screen adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's crook comedy, "The Hopper," which appeared recently in Collier's Weekly, and in this drama William V. Mong, cast in the title role, is shown as a reformed safe-blower who, through a strange trick of fate, is forced into a kidnapping and robbery. Mong's supporting cast includes Irene Hunt, Peaches Jackson, the four-year-old child star; Walt Whitman, George Hernandez, Eugene Corey, Lillian West and Louis Durham.

Other directors who have practically completed their latest Triangle pictures are Jack Dillon, E. Mason Hopper, Raymond Wells and Gilbert P. Hamilton. Directors Jack Conway, Walter Edwards and Frank Borzage are waiting for new stories.

Director Dillon is working with Olive Thomas on the final scenes for the star's fifth Triangle picture, "Limousine Life," from Ida M. Evans' magazine story of the same name. Supporting Miss Thomas are Joseph Bennett, Lee Phelps, Leo Willis and Virginia Foltz, former musical comedy favorite. In this story a great part of the action centers around the shop of a fashionable modiste, and a half score of pretty Triangle girls appear as models in the fashion show included in this subject. Peggy Hamilton, Triangle designer, will show feminine fans some rare works of art when this picture is released.

Robert F. Hill, who has just been added to the Triangle scenario staff, has completed the continuity on Henry Albert Phillips' story, "Heiress for a Day," which will be Olive Thomas' next vehicle.

Director E. Mason Hopper and company are at work this week in a beautiful garden at Sierra Madre, California, where they are taking the exterior scenes for "Mr. Butterfly," a direct reversal of characters and situations in the famous "Madame Butterfly." While Director Hopper is at Sierra Madre, Triangle artists are busy converting one of the big glass stages into an Oriental palace. The set now being erected for Hopper is one of the most beautiful ever built at the Culver City studios.

Many well known actors appear in this picture, among them being Darrell Foss, who has the title role, and Teddy Sampson, who is cast as a beautiful Geisha girl. So many well known Japanese actors appear in this picture that the list of names on Director Hopper's force resembles the directory of "Little Tokio."

Director Raymond Wells, whose last picture was "Man Above the Law," a story of life with the Navajo Indians, is making rapid strides on his latest subject, "Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau," from the story of the same name which appeared recently in the Ladies Home Journal. In this photoplay Margery Wilson, who has the lead, plays a dual role, first appearing as a young stenographer and then disguising herself as an old woman with white hair. The transformation is so complete that her most ardent followers will find it difficult to recognize the titian-haired beauty as the silver-haired matron. Supporting Miss Wilson is Jack Mulhall, well known leading man, who is making his first picture with the Triangle. Others in the cast include Aaron Edwards, Wilbur Higby, Percy Challenger and Anna Dodge.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton is well under way on his latest subject, "Captain of His Soul," from Eleanoret Kinkade's story, "Shackles," and is working with an all-star cast, including such well known favorites as William Desmond, Charles Gunn, Jack Richardson, Walter Whitman, Eugene Burr, Mitzi Gould, Ann Kronan and Claire McDowell.

IRENE CASTLE IN "CONVICT 993."

When the "Convict 993" is released by Pathe on January 6, exhibitors will have an opportunity of offering Irene Castle in a production entirely different from anything in which she has hitherto appeared, and one that has furnished the Publicity Department of the Pathe Company with an opportunity to work up several unique advertising stunts.

The story furnishes Miss Castle with every opportunity for a display of her artistic talents, and for an exhibition of a gorgeous array of gowns. It also has the virtue of a happy ending after working up a great amount of sympathy and compassion for a popular heroine who finds herself in an apparently helpless situation.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG IN "THE MARIONETTES."

In "The Marionettes," the third Select Picture produced by Clara Kimball Young with her own company, Miss Young has used an exact replica of her own bedroom.

Scene from "The Marionettes" (Select).

"The Marionettes" has been arranged for the screen from Pierre Wolff's brilliant French play of marital life, and deals with the transformation of a dowdy wife, who determines to win her husband's love. From an unattractive frump with personal surroundings as drab as herself, she suddenly blossomed out into a gay Parisian butterfly.

As Fernando, Miss Young is enabled to give free rein to the whimsical humor which marks her comedy work, and her study of the chrysalis-wife is one of the most interesting things she has done. "The Marionettes," which was produced by Miss Young, following "Shirley Kaye," will be distributed by Select Pictures Corporation. This subject was directed by Emile Chautard.

THE undersigned committee of the Allied Exhibitors' Organizations of America elected by the Joint Conventions of all Exhibitors' Organizations, held at Washington, D. C., December 11th and 12th, hereby request the fullest co-operation and assistance of every motion picture exhibitor in America.

We are charged with the duty of gathering the exact and absolute truth of how the war tax is affecting every motion picture theatre, with a view of securing through united effort a readjustment of the war excise taxes on motion picture theatres and film for presentation to Congress.

Therefore we respectfully request each and every exhibitor to fill out the following blank, giving the full facts and figures available, the experience of each theatre, and forward immediately by mail to:

FRANK REMBUSCH,
Secretary, Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee, Indianapolis, Ind.

How does the business of your theatre for the month of November, 1916, compare with the month of November, 1917?

Have you suffered a comparative loss? and to what do you attribute same?

Did the war tax affect your business? and to what extent?

General remarks:

Your answer will be doubly effective if you send it immediately.

A letter of explanation will be very acceptable.

New England Filmdom Doings of Past Week

U. S. Exhibitors' Corporation Opens Exchange—New Grandun Film Exchange Established—Other Interesting Trade Notes.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—The U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation has organized its New England exchange and established headquarters at the office of the Globe Feature Film Corporation, No. 20 Winchester street, this city. C. R. Osborne, formerly of the Boston office of the General Film Company, has been appointed general manager, and has already inaugurated a vigorous campaign to firmly establish the new organization in New England territory.

Manager Osborne announces the appointment of F. S. Truda, formerly of Goldwyn; Frank J. Larkin, formerly of the Globe Feature; George B. Toomey, formerly of the Globe Feature, and E. R. Tinker, formerly of the General Film, as sales representatives for New England. All these men are experienced film salesmen.

Grandun Film Opens Exchange.

Boston, Mass.—A new state rights organization, the Grandun Film Company, has sprung up in the film section of this city, and has established headquarters at No. 48-50 Piedmont street. The new concern is in the market for big features, and already has two pictures which are being successfully exploited throughout New England. They are "The Modern Lorelli" and "Her Bargain." In addition to these pictures the new company has secured the Lincoln-Parker travelogues for New England, which are going over big.

John E. Dunne, one of New England's foremost film men, is manager of the Grandun Film Company. Mr. Dunne traveled for the Famous Players in New England for over three years, and for the past four years has been associated with Louis B. Mayer, who is now with Select Pictures.

Mr. Dunne declares that he has been more than successful since the new company was organized. He has appointed Miss Marion Naiherseg, well known in New England film circles, as his office assistant, and Frank Vennett, formerly manager of Bliven's opera house in Westbury, R. I., will travel for the new firm.

Providence Prepares for Movie Ball.

Providence, R. I.—Elaborate preparations are being made by motion picture exhibitors of this city for the grand "movie" ball, which will be staged sometime after the first of the year.

Arthur Ashley Visits Park Theater.

Boston, Mass.—Arthur Ashley, celebrated film star, was a visitor in Boston last week, and during his stay in the city was treated royally wherever he went. He appeared at the Park theater, one of the Hub's leading downtown moving picture theaters, on Monday, and after making a short speech to the audiences held a reception in the lobby of the theater, shaking hands and answering the questions of hundreds of admirers. He declared he expected to be "Somewhere in France" in February, as he had already enlisted, and was awaiting a call to active duty.

Notice as to Hours for Bright Signs.

Boston, Mass.—The Edison Electric Illuminating Company, of this city, prints advertisements in all Boston newspapers notifying theater owners that they may burn signs over the entrances giving the name of the theater and the name of the attraction only from one-half hour after sunset to one-half after the time fixed for the beginning of the evening performance. Moving picture theaters giving continuous performances may burn such signs from one-half hour after sunset to one-half hour after the beginning of the last performance.

Treat For Boston Schools.

Boston, Mass.—The Boston school centers have arranged for a series of motion pictures entitled "Our Allies—Yesterday and Today," designed to bring before the people a complete view of our European allies in their civil and military activities. The first program, "Under the Stars and Stripes," will be of films showing the training and development of our overseas contingent. The course is under the direction of Mrs. Eva W. White, director of the extended use of public schools.

Films of New England Camps Finished.

Boston, Mass.—W. F. Niebuhr, of the National Committee on Public Information and former member of the United States cavalry forces, who is in charge of the work of taking moving pictures of the American troops in training, has just completed his task of filming the doings of the National Army soldiers at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., and other army camps throughout New England. Pictures were also taken of naval posts in different sections of New England.

Theaters Aid Red Cross Drive.

Boston, Mass.—Moving picture theaters and legitimate houses "went over the top" in the huge benefit of the American Red Cross which was staged in this city last week. In every theater, from moving picture houses to theatrical houses, Friday of last week was Red Cross Day, and large audiences testified to the popularity of the appeal. $9,700 was realized for the Red Cross Fund.

Included among the moving picture theaters which donated their matinee receipts were the Beacon, Modern, Orpheum, Columbia, Olympia, Scollay Square, Olympia, Park, Huntington Avenue, Fenway, Washington, St. James, Bijou, Shawmut, Old South, and Allston.

Manager Fecke Gets Silver Cup.

Boston, Mass.—Manager George M. A. Fecke, of the local office of the World Film Corporation, was the recipient recently of a handsome aluminum desk set presented to him by his office staff as an appreciation of his unceasing efforts to secure a new office building.

For several weeks Manager Fecke has been looking out for a new building, and finally secured one on Pleasant street, this city, which proved to be very satisfactory for a film exchange after a few necessary changes in the structure had been made. Complete renovation of the building has been commenced, and it is expected the new exchange will be ready for opening about December 15.

Waltham's New Theater Nearly Ready.

Waltham, Mass.—Waltham's new Central Square theater, in this city's most important business section, will be completed in a few days, it is stated. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,100 and will be equipped with every modern convenience and appliance.

The Kingsbury-Bendsev Corporation, which was dissolved recently, controlled the Waltham, Rex and Park theaters. E. H. Marsters, prominent Boston banker, became president of the organization after Mr. Kingsbury resigned. Mr. Bendsev remained with the corporation.

Business Notes of Interest.

Boston, Mass.—"The Warrior" is scoring a tremendous success in New England," declares Herman Rifkin, president and general manager of the Eastern Feature Film Company, of this city. "My bookings on this film are already enormous, and I believe that I will establish a record in the exploitation of this great picture in New England," Mr. Rifkin continued.

Boston, Mass.—Manager Edward L. McEvoy, of the Strand Film Company, a newly organized state rights concern in this city, is enthusiastic over the success of the William S. Hart pictures and the King-Bee comedies which he is exploiting in New England.

"Every Inch a Man," "The Squealer," and "Prowlers of the Plains" are three Hart films which he states are going over big in this territory. He has signed up Marcus Loew's Orpheum and St. James theaters for first run of the King-Bee comedies. He has also booked the entire Poli circuit for these comedies.

Boston, Mass.—"Her Unborn Child" began its four week at the Globe theater in this city this week. Tremendous success is attending the exhibition of the film in this city. This is almost a record period for any moving picture to show in this city.

Boston, Mass.—Over one thousand persons attended the private trade showing of "Draft 258" at the Park theater, one of Boston's leading downtown photoplay houses, last week. In the audience were exhibitors from every section of New England and more than 900 naval reserves from the Receiving Ship at Commonwealth Pier, this city. The exhibitors were the guests of Edward J. Farrell, general manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, which is exploiting the picture, while the jacksies from the pier were invited by Manager Thomas D. Soreiro, of the Park theater.

Philadelphia Items of Interest.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. Ernest, of the Fairhill Amusement Company, 2402 Germantown avenue, reports fairly good business. He states that the war tax has not affected the attendance of this house up to the present time. Aircraft, Paramount, World, Select, Peerless, and the General programs are exhibited. Recently two new Power's No. 6 motor driven machines were installed to improve the projection. Beginning December 18 the first episode of the Paramount serial, "Who Is Number 1?" will be shown.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A. G. Buck, manager of the local branch of Foursquare, 1325 Vine street, announces the new serial, "The Eagle's Eye," by William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service, which tells the inside story of plots which the Imperial German Government planned against the United States.

Baltimore Film Trade Doings of Past Week

Operators' Local 181 Elects Officers for the Year—No Annual Ball—Many More Patriotic Benefits—Newsy Items of the Trade.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The annual meeting and election of officers of the Motion Picture Operator's Union, Local No. 181, took place in the offices of that organization in the Gayety theater building on Sunday, December 2, and the following officials were elected for the ensuing year: G. Kingston Howard, president and business manager; Sam Isaacson, first vice-president; Nelson Baldwin, second vice-president; Norbert Haefele, third vice-president; Otto J. Niquet, financial secretary-treasurer; James C. Whalen, recording secretary; F. Clarence Grote, assistant business manager; John Grauling, sergeant-at-arms.

For Board of Trustees: Charles A. Teddy, Joseph Quade, William George.

For Delegates to the A. F. of L.: Sam Isaacson, Arthur Stewart, George Gregory. For Delegates to the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O.: G. Kingston Howard and Otto J. Niquet.

For Delegates to the Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor: Sam Isaacson.

Mr. Howard is an able man to be at the helm of the Baltimore branch of the Operator's Union, knowing the business from A to Z, and is well liked by all the brothers in the organization. He was elected without opposition, and succeeds himself as president.

There will be no movie ball held by the organization this year.

Benefits Still Going Strong.

Baltimore, Md.—While the many benefits that are being given by Baltimore exhibitors are not actual bayonette thrusts against the Kaiser still they aid in a very material way the morale and the strength of the men who are making sacrifices for Democracy.

On Sunday night, December 9, through the courtesy of Charles E. Thropp, manager of Nixon's Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, a benefit concert was held under the auspices of the East Baltimore Branch of American Jewish Relief Committee to aid the suffering Jews in Europe, and $2,000 was donated to the cause by those assembled.

On this same Sunday night, Myer Fox, president of the Linden Company, operating the Rialto theater, North avenue at Linden, and Arthur B. Price, manager, gave a benefit performance under the auspices of the Women's Twentieth Century Club for the Maryland Boys' Christmas Fund. Mary Pickford in the stirring picture, "The Little American," was screened.

On the afternoon and evening of this Sunday benefit performances were given by Manager Charles Nolte at the Linwood theater, 902 South Linwood avenue, under the auspices of the Kenwood Democratic Club for the selected men in the First Ward now at Camp Meade.

Twenty Pennsylvania Film Men Fined

Disregard of Censor Eliminations the Principal Charge—Alleged Offenses Are Mostly Old and Witnesses for Defense Hard to Find.

By T. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Magistrate Beaton fined over twenty exchangemen Monday, December 9, on charges preferred by Frank Shattuck, chairman of the State Board of Censors. The principal offence charged by Shattuck was regarding eliminations, which he claims were not carried out as ordered. A majority of the aforesaid offences were reported to have been committed back in July, August, and September, for which the usual fine of $25 and costs were paid. No appeals were made, except in one instance. The majority of the managers could not obtain witnesses who saw the pictures in question two or three months back. In most instances the exchangemen try to follow out the instructions for eliminations as ordered by the board, and because they do not happen to cut scenes according to the censors' conception it constitutes sufficient cause for prosecution, or so it seems.

The outcome of the affair, it is reported on good authority, will result in the organization of an Exchange Managers' Club for their mutual protection.

Local Scenes Shown Weekly at the Stanley.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The management of the Stanley theater has added another feature to make the regular Stanley programs more enjoyable. This is the screening of important events and people who figure in the news of this busy city. It will be the work of the Stanley camera man, the ubiquitous fellow who secures the pictures of all the happenings in which the public is generally interested. Every day at the noon hour the Stanley cameraman can be found industriously engaged in taking pictures of the crowds at that busy intersection of Broad and Chestnut streets, and the result of his work at these corners and others where big things are going on are displayed on the screen at the Stanley theater.

Represented Pennsylvania at Convention.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The following men were delegated to represent the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, at the convention at Washington: J. Conway, A. H. Nace, H. Green, J. S. Evans, B. Shindler, C. Rappaporte, A. Bonnen, and President J. O'Donnell.

Geo. J. Gormley Now Metro Salesman.

Philadelphia, Pa.—George J. Gormley, formerly a popular local exhibitor, has joined the Metro's large staff of expert salesmen.

Wedding Bells for Benjamin Harris.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Benjamin Harris, who is in charge of the shipping department of the Masterpiece Film exchange, will embark on the sea of matrimony with Miss Sarah Liebowitz, and will be married on Sunday, December 23, by Rabbi Levinthal. After a reception, which will be given at the bride's home, the young couple will leave for their honeymoon for a trip to Baltimore and Washington. Upon their return they will reside at 1942 North 31st street.

Notable Films of the Week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Notable photoplay productions which made their debut here during the week of December 10 were:

"The Devil Stone," with Geraldine Farrar, which made a big hit at the Stanley.

Mark Twain's famous hero, "Tom Sawyer," with Jack Pickford, was given a good reception at the Arcadia in conjunction with a new O. Henry story entitled "One Dollar's Worth," which was exhibited all week.

The Victoria played "Alimony" and "The Man of Painted Post," with Douglas Fairbanks, during the first half of the week, and Emily Stevens in "Alias Mrs. Jessup" during the last part of the week.

At the Strand, "The Judgment House," with Violet Hening, and "Bab's Matinee Idol," with Marguerite Clark, shared honors during the week.

The Loceust presented Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon" during the entire week.

Parkway Will Entertain Wallace Reid.

Baltimore, Md.—It is now announced by Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway theater interests, that during the latter part of the week beginning December 17 the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, will have Wallace Reid as its guest. Several other well known stars may visit the Monumental City while Mr. Reid is here. While in Baltimore, Mr. Reid and the other popular actors and actresses will appear in person at the Parkway, and a special reception is being planned so that they may be introduced to many of their Baltimore admirers. When "The Woman God Forgot" was shown at the Parkway and Strand theaters in Baltimore recently it played to crowded houses.

Personal Notes and Business Items.

Baltimore, Md.—L. A. Sears, formerly with the Milo Film, of Baltimore, is now a member of the 313th Infantry at Camp Meade. During his spare moments he is writing scenarios.

The revised edition of "Quo Vadis" began a week's run at the Auditorium theater on Monday, December 17.

"The Birth of a Nation" began a week's run at Ford's opera house on Monday, December 17, with an orchestra of 24 pieces, and admission prices of 25 cents to $1 at night; 25 and 50 cents for matinees.

Goldwyn's film version of "The Auction Block" proved a great drawing card at the New theater.

Washington Exchanges Can Rest Till April

New Fire Regulations Will Not Be Enforced 'Till April First—Commissioner Brownlow Will Issue Informal Order—New Exchange Building Expected.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—With the near approach of January 1, Washington's exchange managers are very much worried over the lack of a suitable film building. On that date the proposed new fire regulations dealing with motion picture exchanges are scheduled to go into effect. It is understood, however, that the district authorities will be willing to have the effective date of these regulations postponed. To this end, Sidney B. Lust recently sent a letter to Commissioner Brownlow, who has had the matter under consideration, the text of which is as follows:

Letter on Building Code Regulations.

"As chairman of the Exchange Men's Association, of Washington," Mr. Lust wrote, "I would like to ask whether it would be possible to defer the enforcement of the regulation relating to the housing of film exchanges?"

"We had practically made all arrangements for a building in G street to be renovated and remodeled with fireproof vaults, and after all these arrangements were made and the lease ready to be signed the Government took over this building.

"We had promises also from two builders some time ago that they would erect a fireproof building for the exchange men, but on account of the cost of building materials, and not being able to get some materials at all, we were disappointed in these.

"I, myself, am making arrangements to move into a suitable place with a fireproof vault, but on behalf of the other exchanges would respectfully ask that you take action looking to the suspension of the regulations in question until conditions more favorable to our purposes prevail.

"In furtherance of this plea for relief we would submit that we have fourteen film exchanges in Washington, employing, in the aggregate, over three hundred people. Our deposits are over $50,000 a week in the Washington banks, and we have been approached by the Chamber of Commerce of Baltimore and a number of other business people to move there. Personally, however, I have observed the liberal attitude displayed by you in the handling of propositions where the commercial interests of the Capitol City were concerned, and I speak for my associates when I say that our hope rests in the belief that, with our case in your hands, an understanding can be had with the district officials that will permit of the adoption of a workable plan whereby we can make arrangements to comply with the law without working an unnecessary hardship on the film exchange men of this city, either as a group or individually.

"In passing, we believe that it is not amiss to offer that our difficulty in a measure is born of our ready deference to the demands of the Government in its levy on office space in the District of Columbia, which, had we had any choice but concede the Government's right, would have been with a graciousness so unstinted as the whole-hearted co-operation thrown behind the Nation's movements for war preparation along the several lines which have been so successfully promulgated through the various mediums of publicity.

"Respectfully,

"SIDNEY B. LUST,

"Chairman of Film Exchange Men's Association, of Washington."

World Man Interviews Commissioner.

When asked by the Moving Picture World correspondent as to what action he would take in response to the request of Mr. Lust, Commissioner Brownlow stated that it was his desire to be fair with the exchange managers, and, realizing the condition of affairs was one beyond their control, he would issue an informal order suspending the date of the proposed order until April 1.

There is some confusion over whether or not the Government will take over the Mather building on G street, near Ninth street, Northwest, now being remodeled so as to be suitable for a film exchange building. The report spread that this structure would be commandeered by the Government for use as an office building as soon as it was ready for occupancy. This is at times denied, and the latest information is that the Government will not take such action, leaving the building alone for the film men. It is said that it would be to the best interests of the Government to permit the exchanges to take possession of the structure and so lessen the fire risk. With Government departments in all sorts of buildings not erected for the specific purposes to which put the risk of fire is greater than under ordinary conditions, and if that risk exists, as the fire marshal declares it does with respect to the film exchanges of Washington, then they should not be hampered in getting a building suited to their particular needs.

Everything at Odds and Ends for Shippers.

Washington, D. C.—The mail, express and telegraph service is in such condition as to greatly hamper the film business, according to Manager E. G. Evans, of the Mutual Film exchange in this city. The result has been a slowing up of business, it being impossible to make inter-city shipments and get films back again for further service on anything like a schedule. The express companies can give no promises of delivery, and it is very often that they cannot get cars to ship matter to the southern points. Christmas coming on top of the ordinary congestion is serving to complicate matters to an even greater extent.

With the telegraph service there are also great delays—the telephone service is aggravating. The former has a great deal more excuse for the condition of its lines because the Government orders wires set up for the transmission of messages to a given point or points, and nothing else moves until those wires are released. The telephone service, it is declared, is a matter more of inefficiency.

The Post Office Department is impossible. Every once in a while an entire delivery is eliminated, and, while the annual reports speak of the service in glowing terms, the exchange managers and exhibitors have their own idea of things. Just at present, aside from normal business, the various Government departments and offices are literally filling the mails with press agent "dope" addressed to newspapers and individuals all over the country. The film men want this needless use of the mails stopped during the holiday period and all efforts bent to the handling of the commercial and personal mails.

Some Super Films Office Changes.

Washington, D. C.—A number of changes have taken place in the office force of the Super-Films Attractions, Inc. R. T. Fuller, who has been in charge of the office, has been assigned to the Baltimore-Eastern Maryland territory. Meyer Emanuel, formerly of the Equitable Film Company, of New York, has been made office man.

Empty Stocking Fund Helped by Many Theaters.

ATLANTA, GA.—The Annual Empty Stocking Fund given each year by an Atlanta paper has won a lot of big hearted friends. Sig Samuels and Williard Patterson, the director and manager of the Criterion theater, are two of its greatest boosters. They gave to the fund a generous percentage of the gross receipts of their popular theater Wednesday, December 5, when the picture shown was "One Hour."

Six theaters, and each by itself, are doing their part, and each is worthy of special mention: Criterion, Alamo No. 2, Vaudette, Strand, Rialto, and Forsyth.

There is no first and last in this list. They all have come to the scratch for the kiddies who otherwise would have a pitifully unhappy Christmas day.

At a date soon to be announced each of these six theaters will give a generous percentage of the entire day's receipts to the Empty Stocking Fund. There is not much that needs to be added—only it isn't just dimes and dollars these six theaters are contributing. They are giving happiness to children who would miss it otherwise. You can't measure that in dollars and cents.

Had a Lobby Full of Old Lamps.

Atlanta, Ga.—Williard Patterson, manager of the Criterion theater, is long on publicity. If one special ingredient is absolutely necessary to the success of a moving picture theater in Manager Patterson's mind that unit is publicity. The happy thought stuck "Pat" that as a lobby stunt it might be well to have the original "Aladdin's" lamp on exhibition on the Sunday preceeding the exhibition of "Aladdin's Wonderful Lamp."

He made known his wishes around the theater, and Jim, the janitor, loyal and true, planned to help the boss to the best of his ability. He spread the news that Mr. Patterson was in urgent need of an old lamp. That was sufficient.

Every boy in Jim's neighborhood and adjoining neighborhoods got out and made a still hunt for old lamps, and then they began arriving at the Criterion with their plunder. There were old gas lamps, bicycle lamps, kerosene lamps, student lamps, flashlights, busted auto lamps, in fact every sort of lamp that was ever invented, and not one of them looked at all like the lamp Mr. Patterson wanted. It took about three hours for manager Patterson to convince the crowd he had a lamp, and it was not Aladdin's original lamp, but it was no candle.

Red Cross Day at Lyric and Grand a Success.

Atlanta, Ga.—Red Cross Theater Day, Wednesday, December 5, at the two local theaters, the Lyric and the Grand, who volunteered all their resources for benefit performances, was a great success financially. Bills at both houses were supplemented by feature attractions in which professional and amateur entertainers appeared, and in which the military atmosphere had a part.

Marine Corps, visited here several days recently and called upon his former associates and friends in the trade. Mr. McQuiggan joined the colors last June and is stationed at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

Buffalo Film Business Waits on Blizzard

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo and many points in Western New York were in the grip of a terrific snow storm, which began Saturday morning, December 8, and continued up to the following Monday morning. As a result, during that period the shipment of film in and out of Buffalo was greatly demoralized. Many of the theaters in towns in the Buffalo territory had to go without their shows and things didn't begin to right themselves until Tuesday.

Buffalo's outlying houses received a fairly good business during the storm, but the downtown theaters had a very slim attendance. The express companies refused to accept film shipments out of this city on Sunday and Monday and those that went out Tuesday were subject to delay. Even shipments from Buffalo to Niagara Falls were negligible for many hours.

In some of the smaller cities a few of the exhibitors followed a co-operative plan and used emergency shows. A few reels were assembled here and there, mostly old material, so that their slim audiences were not entirely disappointed. Fortunately some of the Buffalo exchanges had wisely arranged in advance for such an emergency. The local exchange managers who had made heavy shipments Friday night and early Saturday morning, before the storm had begun to clog transportation, were delighted with their good fortune. They are now claiming medals for being weather prophets.

On Tuesday one train from the east brought two hundred cases of film to this city. These had accumulated at Rochester, Syracuse and other points. An outstanding feature of the storm was the presence here of several handsome road men who were stranded in Buffalo all day Monday and couldn't get out on their respective territories until the following day.

Buffalo Select Chooses New Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo branch of Select Pictures will move to a fine new home at 176 Franklin street about the last of this month. The exchange will occupy an entire building and, according to Manager Charles R. Rogers will be one of the finest. The place will be elaborately furnished, will have a large vault, a rear entrance for shipping and other facilities. The comforts of the exhibitors will not be overlooked. There will be a rest room for their benefit. This will have a fireplace, with real fire, which will bring warmth and cheer to the film men during Buffalo's famous below-zero weather. There will be a table covered with late magazines and the walls will be adorned with good pictures of Select stars.

"We will also have a bulletin board carrying advertising suggestions and news showing how other exhibitors have put over different productions," said Mr. Rogers.

Why Harry Dixon Didn't Make Speech.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Dixon, who used to play a rube part in vaudeville, and is now managing the Frontier and Variety moving picture theaters in this city, used a couple of rural expletives when he met the Buffalo correspondent Tuesday.

"Gosh darn it," he said, "I haven't been getting The Moving Picture World for two weeks and simply can't get along without it. Jot down my subscription in your note book RIGHT NOW."

Mr. Dixon occasionally addresses his audiences at the Variety, using "conservation" and other timely subjects, but he said he refrained at his Sunday matinee. This was when Buffalo's snow storm raged in fury and nearly everybody remained at home.

"I would have addressed my audience Sunday afternoon, but there was no use—the man was deaf," explained Mr. Dixon.

Chapin's Remarkable Lincoln Now Booking.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo office of the William L. Sherry Feature Film is prepared to take contracts on "Son of Democracy," a series of two-reel pictures featuring the life story of Abraham Lincoln. Daniel J. Savage, manager of this exchange, was a recent visitor in New York. Homer Howard, special representative, was caught here in Monday's storm and was unable to get out on his territory until Tuesday.

A. J. Amm Will Assist at Metro.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A. J. Amm has been appointed assistant to Charles A. Taylor, manager of the Metro, Buffalo. Mr. Amm has had three years' practical experience at Shea's Hippodrome in this city. He later was employed by the Fox Film in Syracuse.

Buffalo Territory Newslets.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Louis Green, manager of the George Kleine System, Buffalo, recently screened "Uneasy Money," featuring Taylor Holmes. "For thirty days there will be sixty-two billboards carrying advertisements of this production," said Mr. Green. "Twenty-four-sheets will be used. The locations will be the best in Buffalo."

Mr. Green expects to spend Christmas at his former home in Boston, where Mrs. Green has gone for the holidays.

S. Z. Williams, of Pittsburgh, has been appointed cashier of the Pathe, Buffalo. He succeeds Carl Neilson.

"The Strand, Buffalo, has taken on the first-run Triangle service and is also showing the Hart and Fairbanks reissues," said T. C. Montgomery, manager of the Triangle in this city. Bert Ryde is the new poster man at this exchange.

The Majestic moving picture theater, Buffalo, has a fine new front. This house is having a good business. William Bean, a pioneer in the film game, is proprietor.

Olean, N. Y.—Fire recently damaged the decorations and furnishings of the Palace theater, Olean, N. Y. A. W. Root is manager. As a result the house has been closed several days for repairs. The blaze started next door shortly before the Palace audience would have assembled for a matinee.

Westfield, N. Y.—Road shows and pictures are being featured at the new Grand theater, at Westfield, N. Y. Mr. Carlson is owner and manager. The Grand seats 950 and has all modern conveniences.

The Family moving picture theater, Buffalo, is displaying this sign: "Closed for alterations. Watch for opening date."

Ohio Theaters Struggle with Marked Slump

War Tax and Cold Wave and Coal Shortage Affect Patronage of Shows as Hot Weather Only Has Heretofore—Business May Brighten After Xmas.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Business conditions among the theaters of Cleveland and throughout Ohio have shown a drop within the last four weeks comparable only to the usual hot weather slump every summer. Reports from exhibitors say they never experienced such a drop before except during summer seasons.

In Cleveland the falling off has been general—not confined to any class of houses. The largest and smallest have suffered, and the smallest in a number of cases have closed up or are operating only a few nights per week.

The writer has been receiving many reports from theaters all over the state. One exhibitor in central Ohio says he has had to close up, except for four nights a week. Another says his business has dropped about $75 a week. He is from southern Ohio. A man from northeastern Ohio, on the lake, says: "My business has dropped almost fifty per cent. Last fall my prices were 5 and 10 cents, this fall 10 and 15, and in spite of this during November my business was over $900 less than last November, so you see I will have to eventually close my doors at this rate."

A man from a very small inland town says November was the poorest month he ever had. An exhibitor from another small town says his profit during November was $22.44.

All ascribe these conditions mainly to the war tax, although some say the bad weather had much to do with it. However, the fact remains that business is bad in this section, and probably will be until Christmas. The weather has been bad. There has been coal shortage, and pessimism all around is not astonishing. The war tax has been the deciding factor, but it has been helped from all directions.

Nine Screen Stars in Cleveland Same Week.

Cleveland, O.—The two weeks ending December 15 were weeks to be remembered by the photoplay fans of Cleveland.

For during that time nine screen stars were in that city.

The first week saw the Fairbanks Twins, formerly with Thanouser and with Ziegfield Follies. Naturally many photoplaygoers were attracted to the show on that account. The same week who should come to town but Jackie Saunders and her husband, E. D. Horkheimer. She appeared at the Knickerbocker theater Thursday, stopping off en route from California to New York.

That same day Gail Kane arrived in town, and the next day she and Jackie and Jackie's husband left for New York. They received a fine reception, and left town just before a blizzard arrived.

The fore part of the week saw Evelyn Nesbit in the city, when she came to play a week at Keith's Hippodrome. About Thursday her son, Russell Thaw, was brought from his home at Mt. Lebanon, Pa., to visit his mother.

Richard C. Travers, former Essanay star, came December 2 to visit his wife. "Dick" had just been commissioned a captain at the Ft. Sheridan training camp. He appeared at several theaters, including the Sun, Market Square, Fountain, Halthnorth, Dennison Square, and Clark National.

Fritzi Scheff closed a week's engagement at the Grand theater, December 8.

The second week, Wallace Reid was in Cleveland. He came on the 14th and left on the 15th for Pittsburgh. From there he was to go to New York.

The Famous Players Film Company arranged a fine reception for Mr. Reid, who also appeared at the Stillman theater.

An unusually large crowd greeted the star, and incidentally contributed liberally to the smoke fund being conducted by a local newspaper.

Three Exchanges Now in New Sloan Building.

Cleveland, O.—The Sloan building, one of Cleveland's newest structures, is rapidly becoming another film building. So far the Wolfberg Attractions, the Foursquare, and the U. S. Booking Corporation are located there, as well as the First National Exhibitors' Association, which is just opening offices.

Walter Luck Takes Up New Job.

Cleveland, O.—Manager Walter Luck, of the Mutual Film exchange in Cleveland, has resigned his position and has entered upon new duties as manager for the First National Exhibitors' Association.

He announces that offices will be located on the third floor of the new Sloan building.

E. A. Eschmann Leads Exchange Assn.

Cleveland, O.—E. A. Eschmann is the Cleveland manager of the World Film, but he also deserves much credit for the organization of the Film Exchange Managers' Association, of Cleveland, of which he is the president. This organization is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce, and holds regular meetings at which important matters regarding the betterment of the film business in northern Ohio are taken up. The good likeness of Manager Eschmann that is printed with this item shows a man who will naturally be popular and respected.

Sam Bullock and W. J. Slimm in Washington.

Cleveland, O.—William J. Slimm and Sam Bullock, Cleveland exhibitors, left for Washington, December 10, to attend the convention in that city as delegates from the Cleveland league.

Maritime Provinces News

From Alice Fairweather, Standard, St. John, N. B.

Many Film Men Visitors in St. John.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Never since the last convention have there been so many motion picture men in St. John. Last week the following well known managers were in the city: C. W. Fraser, of the United Booking Office, of Boston; J. F. O'Connell, of the Academy of Music, Halifax; Fred Winter, of the Grand opera house and the Empress, Moncton, N. B.; A. K. Acker, of Acker's Family theater, Halifax, N. S.; J. M. Franklin, of the Strand, Halifax. E. I. Bizar, of the Montreal office of the Metro, will be in St. John for some time looking after the Hoffman Four-square, the Chapman, the Olga Petrova and the Herbert Brenon productions, as well as the Metro specials.

A. C. Smith Becomes Famous Players Manager.

St. John, N. B.—There have been several changes in the local office of the Famous Players here. John F. Grier has returned to Pittsburgh, severing his connection with the Famous Players. M. Bernstein is appointed sales manager for the Monarch and Famous Players companies, while A. C. Smith becomes local manager for both companies. The office staff is to be enlarged. A. Gaudet is to be out on the road as traveling salesman. The serial "Who Is Number One?" has been booked by W. C. McKay, of the St. Johns opera house.

Five Minute Speakers Welcomed in Toronto

Managers of City's Leading Theaters Make Arrangements to Have the Patriotic Message Bearer Talk to Patrons.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The managers of Toronto's leading theaters conferred with Federal Government representatives at the King Edward hotel, Toronto, on December 6, with respect to arrangements to enable prominent citizens to address the audiences between acts or performances for five minutes. The plan is somewhat similar to the privilege extended to the "Four Minute Men" in the United States. The local exhibitors readily assented to the proposal, and asked for only one consideration—that no reference be made by the orators to political matters.

Vitagraph Goes to Top of Building.

Toronto, Ont.—The Greater Vitagraph's office in Toronto now possesses the "Top of the Hermant Building," 15 Dundas Street East, Manager Barrett having taken over the whole floor of this modern structure. Space has been increased by forty per cent. On lower floors are to be found the local Mutual and Fox branches.

More Names on the Honor Roll.

Toronto, Ont.—The first draft of men under the Military Service Act of Canada is taking about twelve more members from Local 173, Toronto Operators' Union. There are already some thirty members of the same organization in France or England, thus making the honor roll of the local more than forty.

R. C. Higgins Becomes Chief Operator.

Toronto, Ont.—R. C. Higgins has become chief operator at the York theater, Toronto, in succession to Charles A. Dentelbeck, who has gone to the new Allen theater. Both men are highly qualified for projection work and the St. John and its large lobby is used for Pantry Sales almost every week. A drawing for a patriotic lottery took place there on Tuesday evening.

Interesting Trade Notes.

Glance Bay, C. B.—John Connors, of the Savoy theater, has booked from G. A. Margetts, of the Canadian Universal, the two serials, "The Mystery Ship" and "The Red Ace."

Sydney Mines, C. B.—W. H. Cuzner, of Sydney Mines, has given G. A. Margetts, of the Canadian Universal, a yearly contract for Bluebirds. Mr. Cuzner has had twenty Bluebird productions and has kept a careful account of them. Of the twenty he found nineteen that pleased his patrons, so he has taken this yearly contract.

Sydney, C. B.—"The Red Ace" opened at the Palace theater, Sydney, to good business.

Halifax, N. S.—The Academy of Music is scheduled to open December 29 under its new policy, pictures and vaudeville. The first picture is Clara Kimball Young in "Magda."

St. Johns, N. B.—The Lyric theater ran "The Warrior" week of December 2 and had good houses. Dr. Bridges, chairman of the Provincial Board of Censors, said: "In my opinion it is the greatest motion picture ever brought to St. John, and you may quote me as saying so if you wish."

Truro, N. S.—F. G. Spencer has booked from G. A. Margetts the Alice Howell comedies for the Princess theater, Truro, N. S.

"God's Good Man" has had several trade showings here.

"For the Freedom of the World" was shown to exhibitors last week.

maintenance of cabinet equipment, according to officials of Local 173.

Made Theater Pay and Sells It.

Toronto, Ont.—The Adamac theater, 1398 Queen Street West, Toronto, has been bought by Manley Sine from J. Campbell, who took the house over a few months ago when the weekly receipts were around $55. Under changed methods, however, the theater soon picked up a good family patronage. Mr. Campbell is in the market for another theater.

Theater Opens as the New.

Toronto, Ont.—The small but attractive picture theater at Queen and Sherbourne streets, Toronto, was recently opened as the New theater after it had been dark for a year or more. The theater has now been rechristened the Moss Park theater. The policy of the management is to hold matinees daily, with changes of program twice each week.

A Clever Way to Handle Prices.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager F. E. Osborne, of the Star theater, Kitchener, Ontario, hit upon a novel scheme to enable him to raise the price of admission for his house. He issued combination tickets for 50 cents, which was good for three different shows within nine days, one attraction being "Womanhood." His admission price had been 15 cents, and with the three-show combination ticket the admission became only approximately 17 cents. But without a combination coupon the admission for "Womanhood" was 50 cents, and for the two succeeding productions the general admission price was 25 cents each. The combination ticket made a saving of 50 cents to a purchaser, but it practically guaranteed patronage three times during the nine days. The idea made it quite easy for Osborne to work up to the increased price of 25 cents permanently.

Windsor Has a Juliette Day.

Montreal, Que.—Following the making of extensive alterations, including the installation of a new heating system and the decoration of the house, the Windsor theater, Dorchester and Windsor streets, Montreal, held a "Juliette Day" on Sunday, December 9, when "Betty and the Buccaneers" was presented. "Jack and Jill," starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, was shown during the first half of the week of December 10, with "The Woman God Forgot" during the last half.

Notes of Interest from Canada.

Montreal, Que.—The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., has lined up nine Montreal theaters for the new Pathé serial, "The Hidden Hand," the first run of which was presented at the Strand theater for three days, December 10-12.

Toronto—Arrangements have been made by the Canadian Universal with the Manitoba Government for the presentation of one program each week at the Provincial Asylum for the Insane at Brandon, Manitoba. This is an innovation for this institution. Subjects shown include educational, news weeklies, and comedies.

Toronto—Manager Ben Crook, of the fine new Allen theater, Toronto, broke away on December 10 from his adopted policy of running through the whole week with one program when he split the week with two attractions. During the first half, "The Woman God Forgot" was shown, while the feature for the last half was "Scandal." Manager Crook is making a specialty of advertising that the complete feature is shown after ten o'clock each night.

Cold Weather and Little Coal in Dayton

Zero Temperature Follows Snow and Several Theaters Are Forced to Close—Some on Account of Cold, Others Fail to Get Shows.

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent.

DAYTON, O.—The entire theatrical business in Dayton, legitimate as well as the picture houses, suffered a slump in business last week owing to the sudden cold spell, which was the worst seen here since 1899. The writer well remembers 1899, and can safely say that it was not as bad as the present cold snap.

Preceded by a heavy snow storm of about eight inches came the extreme cold weather on Saturday the 8th. On Saturday night business slumped, but it grew worse as the cold weather continued, and on Sunday it was colder than ever. There is a shortage in coal in Dayton at the present, and many of the picture houses will be forced to close if relief does not come soon.

On Sunday the motor trucks operated by the Exhibitors' Service Co. were not able to make the trip from Cincinnati with the usual shipment of films, this made it necessary for a special train to make the trip with most of the films. One theater, the Alhambra, did not get its shipment, and in this way lost a Sunday matinee, and would have lost the evening show if the film company in question had not sent a special messenger with the show for the night performance. One other house did not open Sunday afternoon, for, although it received the pictures on the special train, the house is heated indirectly by gas, of which there is a shortage at present, and it was forced to close. The owners of the Mecca, which closed, also control the Midget a few blocks away, and only operated on Saturday and Sunday, so they switched the film to the Midget.

Business picked up some Tuesday, and if the weather breaks things will again be normal.

Glenn Culp Takes a Few Days Off.

Dayton, O.—Glenn Culp, superintendent of the Strand theater here, skipped a few days last week on a trip to the northern part of the state for a brief visit before the holiday rush. The writer has never yet failed to see Glenn on visiting the Strand. He is one of those people who are never satisfied unless busy, and deserves the rest. He is indeed the right person to act as aid to Clay Brehm in making the Strand one of Dayton's finest picture houses.

Want to Make Fox Films Popular.

Dayton, O.—One T. Chifos at the Apollo is surely using a newspaper space to get them in on a second week of the "Honor System." In one of his ads said Theodore states that William Fox, in a personal letter, told him that he should make the price of admission low enough so that everyone could see Fox pictures in Dayton. Fox also said that he wanted to see his pictures made popular in Dayton. Not a bad request at that. If the public is sure the Fox pictures will stay at the Apollo they will respond in large numbers, and we hope the Fox question is settled for once and all.

Mrs. Lotta Hurtig Dies.

Dayton, O.—Mrs. Lotta Hurtig, wife of Max Hurtig, manager of the Lyric theater here, which is now a legitimate house, died last Thursday evening at her home. Mrs. Hurtig was formerly a member of some of the greatest extravaganza successes of years ago, and is very popular among the profession. The burial was at Riverview Cemetery, this city, last Sunday (9th). Jules Hurtig, of Hurtig & Seamon, as well as Joe Hurtig from the New York offices was here for the funeral, also Israel Hurtig, of Cincinnati. Among the pall bearers was James L. Weed, manager of B. F. Keith's theater here. Truly it is a great loss, for Mrs. Hurtig always had a kind word for everyone from usher to manager, and to the lowly court reporter, as well as the city editor. Her loss is felt by theatrical Dayton in its entirety, and many hearts go out to Mr. Max Hurtig.

"Italian War Pictures" Fill Theater.

Dayton, O.—Lefty Miller, Harry Marcus and associates had a good opening for the Italian war pictures at the Majestic. Long before the doors opened for the matinee the entire house was sold and even single seats were hard to get. The orchestra was complete with eight pieces—the same as that at the Victoria the week previous—and it rendered a musical program worth while.

Harry Marcus, well-known in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Eastern Ohio, is managing the show at present pending the arrival of E. A. McFarland.

Coal Shortage Closes House.

Piqua, O.—According to an announcement by M. W. Kress, who operates the Strand theater as well as May's opera house in Piqua, Ohio, it was learned that the Strand was forced to close owing to the shortage in coal. The Strand is one of Piqua's leading picture houses and the writer remembers it as being a splendid house. Mr. Kress has enough coal on hand to operate the opera house for forty days, but after that time that house may be forced to close. Many Dayton theaters are facing coal shortage and as yet none of the managers have announced they have enough coal for the winter. None of the houses have been forced to close by reason of this however.

Interesting Personal Jottings.

Dayton, O.—Al Kinsler says business at the Elite is holding up fine.

George Wilson, of the Standard at Cincinnati, has not been seen around these parts for some time. George we miss you muchly.

Owing to the cold weather no work has been started on the rebuilding of the Auditorium.

The latest gossip has it that the Ideal here is to present the Metro program in the near future.

To H. W. R.: Sure I like your pictures and the whole program, but there are others.

Quite a few exhibitors witnessed "The Judgment House" at the Strand last week, and it must be good, for, with one exception, they all agreed in their verdict—fine stuff.

The Apollo theater here is playing another week of the "Honor System," which makes its second for Dayton. The other time it was presented at the Victoria.

"The Judgment House" was well received at the Strand here last week. Chance brought me into the Orpheum last Monday, and John Lyons allowed me a glimpse of his new organ, which, although it is not installed, is an elegant instrument.

Al Kinsler spent a few more days last week at his favorite pastime—hunting—it seems as though Al enjoys the sport, this making his third time this season.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Kentucky News Letter.

The Mary Anderson Goes Back to Vaudeville.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The B. F. Keith Circuit has announced that its Mary Anderson theater, which for several years has been operated as a moving picture house, will go back to high grade vaudeville at usual standard prices in other cities, while its National theater in Louisville will continue as a twenty-five-cent vaudeville house, that price including the war tax.

Lee Goldberg Managing Big Features.

Louisville, Ky.—Lee Goldberg, who for several years has been in charge of the Mary Anderson and Strand theaters for the Keith interests, has left the Keith interests, and is now giving his entire time and attention to the management of the Big Features Rights Corporation, with which he has been identified for some time past. The latter concern has recently taken over the entire second floor of the Rex Theater building, taking the old exchange which was formerly operated by the Mutual and Central Film exchanges. Mr. Goldberg is secretary-treasurer of the Big Features Company, which controls the district output of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, including Kentucky and Tennessee.

"Submarine Eye" Drew Well.

Louisville, Ky.—In spite of bad weather the Walnut theater drew fairly good crowds to its showing of the big, new feature, "The Submarine Eye," which was extensively advertised. Live war topic pictures have proven fairly active trade improvers, and this film has proven no exception to the rule. As claimed by the management of the theater, "A picture that will draw attendance in such weather is truly some picture."

Strand Gets Artcraft and Fox.

Louisville, Ky.—A deal has been closed whereby the Strand theater will show the Artcraft productions first run, having just signed a contract with the distributors of these high grade film productions. In addition to the Artcraft pictures the theater will show Fox productions and some other material.

Neat Sum Raised for Red Cross.

Louisville, Ky.—The sum of $2,100 was raised for the Red Cross fund in benefit shows given at three theaters, the Gayety, Keith, and Macauley's. Of this sum $1,500 was taken in at Macauley's.

Interesting Notes of the Trade.

Louisville, Ky.—Harold David McLellan, who for several years was connected in various capacities with Macauley's theater, has been accepted into the aviation service, and has left for Fort Sam Houston, Tex., where he joins the birdmen.

Uniontown, Ky.—Edgar Duncan, head of the Idle Hour theater, of Uniontown, Ky., will start Sunday night shows, although he is bucking some public sentiment. However, the theater is the only place of amusement in the city, and he has received many requests for Sunday shows.

Louisville, Ky.—Suit for $2,500 has been filed against the United Theaters Co., of Louisville, by Hortense Hornsby, who alleged that she suffered injuries when she fell on the dark steps of a balcony.

Theater Notes from Nebraska.

Kearney, Neb.—H. E. Wait has purchased the Comet theater from A. F. Bills.

Ulysses, Neb.—C. M. Hogan has purchased the Crystal theater from Earl Bloketer.

Genoa, Neb.—The Grand theater has been opened here.

TENNESSEE LETTER.

Big Business and Big Fish.

Knoxville, Tenn.—The illustration herewith is an excellent likeness of Thornton Parker, manager of the Grand and Star theaters, of St. Petersburg, Fla.; Nat L. Royster, sales manager of the Special Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., and Mr. A. 129 Lb. Tarpon. In addition to big fish, Mr. Royster also reports big business on their features in the South, although the war taxes and other unsettling conditions have hurt business quite a little. Many houses are just about breaking even. He thinks conditions could be greatly improved if film salesmen would study the theaters and co-operate with the managers more closely. The winter season is usually good for the exhibitors in Florida on account of the influx of visitors at all the winter resorts, and conditions are expected to improve after the first of the year.

Loew's Princess Theater Opens Xmas Week

Memphis House Will Be Managed by A. B. Morrison—Four Changes a Week for Best Features at Popular Prices—Loew May Build.

By J. L. Ray, Trade News Service, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—A. B. Morrison, a Memphis man, has been appointed manager of the new Loew house, which will be known after December 22 as Loew's Princess.

The deal whereby the Princess theater was purchased by Marcus Loew from the Princess Amusement Company was engineered by E. A. Schiller, Southern general manager for the Loew interests. The new management will assume charge of the house on December 18, and between that date and December 23, when the formal opening will take place, extensive alterations and renovation work will take place.

"Loew's Princess will be operated upon the same high plane as Loew's Lyceum," declared Mr. Schiller. "It will be the policy of the theater to run only the best film attractions obtainable, and these will be changed four times a week, with popular prices prevailing." The operation of the new house will in no way affect the policy of Loew's Lyceum. The opening of the Princess under Loew management is only in pursuance of the plan of Marcus Loew in establishing motion picture theaters throughout the country. Mr. Loew has now nearly 100 exclusive moving picture theaters in addition to his string of nearly 100 vaudeville houses. Several thousand dollars will be spent in fitting up the Princess.

Unseasonable Cold Wave Visits Cincinnati

Flow of Natural Gas Lowered by Cold Weather Leaves Many Theaters with Inadequate Heating—Attendance Is Heavily Reduced.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—Moving picture exhibitors suffered with the rest of the population when on Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and several succeeding days, beginning December 8, the most severe weather for early December in more than forty years struck the city. Gas pressure was extremely low, and the supply was limited, causing actual hardship and suffering to many people, and having a direct and adverse effect on the numerous exhibitors with smaller houses using gas stoves for heating. These exhibitors found themselves unable to heat their theaters comfortably, and patrons did not linger long nor come again during the cold snap. The downtown houses did not find this a factor to any great extent, as they are all heated by steam furnished by boilers using coal as fuel; but attendance on Saturday and Sunday was heavily reduced in the downtown district from its usual large proportions on account of the storm and the severe cold keeping people at home.

At that, according to one leading exhibitor, the reduction was not as much as one might think, as many people resorted to the picture houses as a convenient and economical means of getting an evening's amusement in a warmly-heated building. This effect was the more pronounced on the week-days following the blizzard, as greater numbers of people were downtown on business, and welcomed the shelter of the theaters from the biting cold. The storm set records that will probably stand for some years in the matter of prolonged low temperatures for early December and in the extent of the snowfall in a few hours.

Cincinnati Theaters Paying Footage Tax.

Cincinnati, O.—A survey of the local field, with reference to the manner of handling the tax on moving picture films, reveals that of the thirty or so exchanges in Cincinnati furnishing films to exhibitors not less than twenty-four are collecting from their customers the charge of fifteen cents a reel worked out as a fair basis for meeting the tax. Several exchanges are making no charge whatever pending some adjustment of the matter, which is expected to result from the joint meeting planned at Washington, and one exchange is reported to have met the situation by adding to its tariff a dollar a day for its features, which, of course, covers the tax of fifteen cents with something to spare.

Local exhibitors have almost unanimously taken the tax kindly enough, and there has been little or no friction as a result of it. Of course, it is by no means welcome, but it is felt that the method adopted of taking care of it is fair to all, and that there has been no intention apparent on the part of the producers to take advantage of their clientele, the contrary being the case.

Work Begun on New Logan House.

Logan, W. Va.—Several local contractors have been awarded part of the work for a $40,000 house at Logan, W. Va., which C. and E. A. Weber, local architects, are building for Frank Middleburg. The largest part of the work, however, will be handled by P. Rozazz, of Logan. Temporary delays due to inability to secure heavy building steel have been taken care of by the substitution of lighter material, with the necessary changes in the plans, and the work on the house will go ahead as rapidly as possible.

Small Fire in Youngstown Opera House.

Youngstown, O.—What threatened for a time to be a disastrous fire in the historic old Grand opera house, of Youngstown, was fortunately taken care of by quick work on the part of the fire department, and the blaze was extinguished with comparatively small loss. The fire occurred early in the evening, and the house was empty. The cause of the blaze was not known.

Will Build Theater in Celina.

Celina, O.—The Celina Theater Co., recently incorporated by Fred Schlenker, Wm. H. Bretz, Jr., and other local capitalists, will build a new moving picture theater during the coming season at a cost of approximately $10,000. The capital stock of the company is $12,000.

Film Folk Here Shivered Last Week.

Cincinnati, O.—Some of the leading film exchanges of the city and their employees had an extremely uncomfortable time during the severely cold weather which began on December 9. These exchanges are the ones located in the Film Exchange building, at Seventh and Main streets. The building uses gas as a fuel under its boilers. When the gas got low the steam also went down, and the film folks noticed the cold very decidedly. The Metro, Pathe, World, Vitagraph, Standard, Progressive, and other exchanges are located in the building.

Atlanta's Efforts for Soldiers Praised.

Atlanta, Ga.—The free motion pictures and music provided for the soldiers from Camp Gordon and Ft. McPherson every Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium by the Atlanta commission on training camp activities have received the hearty endorsement of officers from Camp Gordon. At the round table luncheon of the commission, Colonel Pierce, commanding the 319th Artillery, said: "The great problem for the soldier on Sunday leave is where to go and what to do. Not knowing the people of the city if he chances to be from the north, and all places of amusement closed, it is a very difficult proposition for him to find anything that interests him outside of questionable places."

Mutual Closing Out in Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—The local Mutual exchange is making short work in closing out their office at this point, as practically every part of their belongings have been transferred. District Manager Stephens, of the Southern division, has been in the city supervising the closing up work.

Combines Three Marion, Indiana, Theaters

Miss Dolly Spurr, Head of Mutual Amusement Company, Takes Over Lyric and Indiana Theaters—Now Controls Royal-Grand.

From Indiana News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

MARION, IND.—Miss Dolly Spurr, manager of the Royal-Grand theater for the last six years, and head of the Mutual Amusement Company, on Monday, December 17, will have assumed control of three of the largest theaters in Marion. Leases have been signed by Miss Spurr and representatives of the Washington Amusement Company, which owns the three theater properties mentioned, giving her control of the Lyric and Indiana theaters in addition to the Royal-Grand.

Miss Spurr is one of the most successful theater managers in the business. She started about nine years ago, operating a 5-cent motion picture house in Marion. Later she assumed the management of the Marion airdome, and for the last six years has been manager of the Royal-Grand. She has spared neither pains nor expense in bringing to this city the highest priced and best motion pictures for her patrons.

She expects to give the three theaters her personal and undivided attention, and says she will endeavor to make each house more popular than ever before. She stated emphatically that only attractions of the very highest order will be shown, and that they will be clean and wholesome in every respect.

Her nine years of theater management in Marion, she says, has placed her in a position to know almost exactly what the theatergoers of Marion want, and she is going to do her utmost to fulfill their desires. She is young, alert and conscientious, and the people of Marion predict a great future for the three theaters under her management.

It is understood that extensive improvements will be made at the Royal-Grand and most likely at the Indiana soon after the first of the new year. It is probable that the seating capacity of both houses will be enlarged, as well as improved interior decorations.

Deputy Says Some Managers Are Lazy.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Early returns from the war tax on motion picture theaters in this district are straggling, according to J. T. Spencer, deputy collector, but the returns indicate a larger revenue for the Government than was first expected.

"Some of these theater managers are a lazy lot," said Mr. Spencer. "We have had to send back a lot of reports because they were not properly made out, and its hard to make the managers understand that when we say they must send two copies of their report we mean it. Some of the theaters located in the city of Terre Haute were the first to make their reports in this district, but we can not give out a statement of the returns until we get all of them."

Raised Prices, Now Lowers Them.

Bloomington, Ind.—Robert H. Harris, proprietor of the Princess and Harris-Grand theaters here, will go back to his original plan, charging all children 5 cents admission and adults 10 cents, each person to pay his own war tax.

When the war tax first went into effect, Mr. Harris raised the prices to 10 and 15 cents, and gave a bigger program. The change, however, did not justify him, he says. The present system, he said, also worked a hardship on the children and forced them to stand the blunt of the tax.

W. P. Cluppy Closes Star Theater.

Cayuga, Ind.—William P. Cuppy, manager of the Star theater at Cayuga, has announced that the theater would be closed indefinitely. He gave the increasing cost of staging films, war tax, etc., as the reasons for the discontinuance of the theater.

Indianapolis Operators Lose Test Case

Operator R. L. Gavin Has to Pay Fine—City's License Fee Is Lawful—Union Not Satisfied and Will Appeal to the Circuit Court.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Robert L. Gavin, a member of the Indianapolis Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union, who was arrested two weeks ago on a charge of operating a machine without a license, was fined $1 and costs by Judge James E. Deery in the city court, Wednesday, December 6, when his case was tried. The case was to be regarded as a test case to decide whether the city has the right to impose an annual license of $6 on motion picture machine operators, as authorized in the new municipal code.

It was originally intended to arrest all operators who had failed to take out licenses, but the other members of the operators' union got wise to what was going to happen, went to the city hall and purchased licenses under protest, agreeing whereby a test would be made of the case of Gavin and the others would abide by the decision.

Ralph Spaan, attorney for the operators, has appealed the Gavin case to the circuit court.

Notes of Interest in Indiana.

Crawfordsville, Ind.—Frank Catherwood, of Dayton, Ind., has purchased the Joy theater, a local motion picture house, from Glenn C. Jones, of Lafayette, Ind. Mr. Catherwood, for some time in charge of the public schools at Mulberry, took charge of the house Monday. The consideration was $3,500. The theater has a capacity of 350, and is located on Main street. It was formerly owned by Theodore W. Dees, of this city.

Detroit News Letter.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

M. H. Hoffman Pleased with Prospects.

DETROIT, MICH.—M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Foursquare Pictures, was in town for several days last week. The World correspondent spent a very pleasant hour with Mr. Hoffman chatting on all phases of the motion picture industry. "We are doing a splendid business wherever we have established branches," said Mr. Hoffman. "Our best pictures are coming from now on. The longer we remain in business the better selection we will have to offer, for the reason that we are making our selection with 'our eyes open,' having found out just the kind of attractions which exhibitors want. I am enthusiastic about Foursquare Pictures, our policy and our plans, and I am proud to say that every week is showing a healthy gain."

Additions to the Honor Roll.

Detroit, Mich.—"On the Roll of Honor" of those who are serving their country we take pride in mentioning the names of Floyd S. Wadlow, of the Virginia Park theater, Detroit, who has joined the Aviation Corps; L. L. Hook, of the Your theater, Detroit, who is at Camp Custer; Sam Harris Vitagraph booking manager, who has gone with the Aviation Corps; L. G.

Parkhurst, Vitagraph assistant manager, who enlisted at Camp Custer, and Earl H. Rathbun, son-in-law of Col. W. S. Butterfield, and former booker at the State Film Co., who has enlisted in the Quartermasters' division at Camp Custer. Hurrah for all of them.

Dave Blythe Will Manage U. S. Exhibitors' Booking.

Detroit, Mich.—Dave Blyth, well known song writer, and recently personal representative to George Weeks, has been appointed manager of the Detroit branch of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, which makes its headquarters in the Four-square exchange. Dave has already booked "The Last Raid of the Zeppelin" to the Orpheum theater for one week.

Universal, Jewel and Bluebird in One Office.

Detroit, Mich.—E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Bluebird and Universal exchanges, was in Detroit last week, and while here announced that the Universal, Bluebird, and Jewel exchanges would occupy the same quarters on the fourth floor of the Film building not later than January 1, although each would continue under separate management. For instance, Henry Fried has charge of Universal; Ira Aronson in charge of Jewel, and C. G. Kingsley in charge of Bluebird. The object of the merger is to make for greater efficiency and economy, and hence better service to the exhibitor.

Phil Gleichman Joins Tax Payers.

Detroit, Mich.—Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, has joined those who will pay the film tax. He says after giving the whole matter due consideration he feels that the tax is justly coming to the producers, who are spending more money than ever to make their pictures interesting and consistent.

The Kunsky houses agreed to pay the tax some weeks ago.

Standard Will Not Charge Tax.

Detroit, Mich.—J. C. Fishman, of the Standard Film Service Co., announces that by a new arrangement made with the producers his company will not charge the film tax from December 10 on.

National Circuit Gets "Sign Invisible."

Detroit, Mich.—George Montgomery, manager of the Madison, announces that John H. Kunsky, as the Michigan representative of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has purchased for this state "The Sign Invisible." It will be released through the Madison Film Exchange, and have its premier either at the Washington or Madison theater.

C. G. Kingsley Appointed Manager.

Detroit, Mich.—W. W. Drum, former Detroit manager for Bluebird, has been appointed manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Hoffman Foursquare Pictures. He left for California on Saturday, December 8, to open the new office.

C. G. Kingsley, recent manager at Indianapolis for Fox, and for many months acting similarly in Detroit, has been appointed manager of Bluebird in Detroit succeeding Mr. Drum.

Detroit Notes of the Trade.

Detroit, Mich.—Business is so good at the Mutual that George DeBute, manager, is working a day and night force of shipping clerks.

Three Rivers, Mich.—Fitzpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, have purchased the lease of the Rex theater, and are continuing same.

Detroit, Mich.—Blair McElroy, of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, Chicago theater owners, was a recent Detroit visitor, looking over the new Film building and arranging bookings for his chain of Michigan houses.

Business Notes from Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—The General Film Company announces that "The Seven Deadly Sins," which has been distributed through Triangle, has been taken over by the General, and that bookings on the picture are coming in good order.

Barney Rosenthal, district manager for Universal, was a visitor at the local office of the Universal December 8. Mr. Rosenthal makes his headquarters in St. Louis, Mo.

The local Select office reports that prints have been received first Alice Brady picture, "Her Silent Sacrifice."

Theater Notes Over Texas.

Seguin, Tex.—H. H. Starcke has taken over the management of the Palace theater.

Lampasas, Tex.—Roy. L. Walker, of this place, and his brother, Lee A. Walker, recently of Kansas City, have purchased the Wichita opera house and airdome property. Lee A. Walker will have charge of the property. Some improvements will be made.

Bastrop, Tex.—Bastrop will soon have a new opera house. Chester Erhard, W. A. McCord, W. E. Goodman and Earl C. Erhard have purchased all the stock of the Arion opera house. Plans have been accepted for the complete remodeling and refurnishing of the building. The improvements which have been decided upon will cost over $3,000.

Clarksville, Tex.—Billy Elwood, the new lessee and manager of the Grand opera house, has scheduled December 10 as the date for the opening.

Nacogdoches, Tex.—The Crown and Ideal theaters have been consolidated and a new building is being fitted up. The building is on West Main street.

New Theaters and Changes in Oklahoma.

Drumright, Okla.—C. E. Barber, of Muskogee, has purchased the Passtime theater and will operate it.

Okemah, Okla.—E. H. Gragson, of Eufaula, has leased the Jewel theater. Mr. Gragson at one time owned a picture show at Mangum.

Tulsa, Okla.—William Smith, manager of the New Empress theater, has closed a contract for a $14,000 grand organ which will be installed in the present Empress when it is converted into an exclusive motion picture house, which will take place the first of the year. The name will then be changed to the Rialto.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—The Palace theater will close December 8, according to D. C. Mills.

Kaw City, Okla.—C. F. Knedler has torn down his airdome and will discontinue the motion picture business in Kaw City.

Frederick, Okla.—L. A. Harrel, until recently a resident of Tipton, has assumed control of the Gem theater, which he purchased recently from F. L. Cauby. Mr. Harrel will manage the theater himself.

Sapulpa, Okla.—The new St. Dennis theater, owned and operated by James Dennis Flynn until recently, has changed hands. In the future it will be managed by J. H. Moulder, present owner and manager of the Empress theater.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—The Palace theater will close December 8, according to D. C. Mills.

Foursquare Now Has Kansas City Exchange

New Offices Opened at 1120 Walnut Street—Under Manager S. J. Baker, Who Will Also Be Division Manager—An Able Sales Staff.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Hoffman Foursquare Pictures Corporation formally opened the Kansas City office on the fifth floor of 1120 Walnut street, December 3. The office is in charge of S. J. Baker, who formerly represented the company in St. Louis. Prior to this he managed the Bluebird and Fox offices there. He has been actively engaged in the moving picture industry about four years. Mr. Baker will also be division manager for the company, having the states of Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas and Southern Illinois in his division. He is planning trade showings which will soon be held on the new serial featuring King Baggot and Marguerite Snow "In Eagle's Eye," which picture is reported to be booking fast.

He has announced the signing of the following salesmen: Leo Plank, J. P. Grimes and J. Erwin Dodson. Mr. Plank and Mr. Grimes come to Kansas City from St. Louis, while Mr. Dodson was formerly assistant manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company here.

Fred Thiele Now Omaha Triangle Manager.

Kansas City, Mo.—Fred Thiele, formerly booker for the local Triangle office and now manager of the Omaha, Neb., office of that company, was a visitor in Kansas City December 8.

F. L. Kiltz Leaves Mutual Exchange.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. L. Kiltz, who for the last three years has managed the Mutual Film office here, has resigned. At present he has made no plans for the future, but intends to continue in the moving picture business. The local office is now in charge of M. J. Sullivan, personal representative of John Freuler, of New York City. He is in charge of the selection of a new manager for the Kansas City office and now has a number of applicants under consideration. The Kansas City office does a great amount of shipping and is a valuable exchange for the company.

Charles Goetz in Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles Goetz, district sales manager for the Select Pictures Corporation, arrived in Kansas City December 9. The roadmen working out of the Kansas City Select office were called in for a sales meeting. While in the division territory Mr. Goetz will make his headquarters at Kansas City.

H. C. Robertson Gets Different Job.

Kansas City, Mo.—H. C. Robertson, who since the opening of the local Goldwyn office has been traveling in southern Kansas and in southern Missouri for that company, has been made cashier at the local office of the company.

Goldwyn Will Open at the Liberty.

Kansas City, Mo.—The local Goldwyn office has won the coveted contract among the Kansas City exchanges. This contract is with the Liberty theater, now under construction and to be completed early in February. This is a first run contract of seven days a week for a year. This will be Kansas City's largest downtown theater, having a seating capacity of 1,800. He will open with a current release. Other Kansas City theaters having contracts with Goldwyn are the Linwood, Elsworth, Warwick, Benton, Bonaventure, St. John, Glory and Strand.

With Missouri Exhibitors.

Kansas City, Mo.—The New Liberty theater, which is in the process of construction, will be opened early in February. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,200. Dave H. Harding and Samuel Harding will have charge of the theater. It will be one of the finest in the United States.

St. Joseph, Mo.—Hal Kelley, who recently disposed of his business in Beatrice, Neb., has purchased a moving picture show here.

East Prairie, Mo.—The engine room of the Lyric theater was recently destroyed by fire.

East Prairie, Mo.—A fire in the rear of the Lyric theater did slight damage recently.

St. Louis, Mo.—Robbers recently obtained $26 from the Pageant theater, 3351 Delmar Boulevard.

Caruthersville, Mo.—Cecil Mears, of Blytheville, who is now in charge of the leading movie house here, will also manage the Exchange theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Queens theater here has been bought by A. K. Bossard from Samuel Taylor. Mr. Bossard is also owner of the World in Motion theater here.

Kansas City, Mo.—The New Liberty theater, which is in the process of construction, will be opened early in February. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,200. Dave H. Harding and Samuel Harding will have charge of the theater. It will be one of the finest in the United States.

St. Joseph, Mo.—Hal Kelley, who recently disposed of his business in Beatrice, Neb., has purchased a moving picture show here.

East Prairie, Mo.—The engine room of the Lyric theater was recently destroyed by fire.

Among Kansas and Nebraska Theaters.

Russell, Kan.—R. C. Cunee, who has been manager of the Isis theater for the past several years, has purchased the outfit from the owner, John Thuenall. He will take charge in the near future.

Coffeyville, Kan.—Frank E. Garverick has succeeded the late F. H. Weaver as manager of the Jefferson theater.

Ganey, Kan.—H. R. Bisby, of Kansas City, has purchased the Iris theater of George Atgood, and will open it to the public in the near future. He will remodel the theater.

Diller, Neb.—The Rex theater has moved to the Senoir building, north of Locke store.

Both Are Good Fellows.

Kansas City, Mo.—That the exhibitor and the exchange are working more closely together than ever was evidenced in a postal card received by a Kansas City exchange recently. The following was on the back of the postal: "Have you shipped to-morrow's program to Herbert & Leach, Atlantic, Iowa?" Then followed the name of the picture and the date on which it was to be played. This was followed by "Please ask your booker if it has gone forward. Thanks." At the bottom of the card was written a little note to the exchange manager. Such things as these are good business ideas and tend to bring two mentioned elements of the industry into the friendly relation that should properly exist between the buyer and the seller.

Texas Weather Cold But Business Is Fair

Optimism Is the Good Word Among Many Exhibitors Who Gathered Last Week in Dallas—Other Notes from the Southwest.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Patrons of picture theaters in not a few north Texas towns would have appreciated fire scenes in the films they saw during the second week in December far more than the finest "snow stuff" that was ever filmed. Theaters were cold, and blue noses and numbed fingers predominated. But the theater men weren't responsible. Whatever the cause, a number of cities which depend on natural gas from the Oklahoma fields suffered. The thermometer went down to around ten, which is cold for Texas, and the gas mains "busted." 'Twas an awful combination, and it lasted for a full day until repairs were made.

But it was a good week from the business viewpoint just the same. A whole lot of exhibitors from all over Texas attended a conference here, and none of them had any hard-luck stories to tell. Their general report was that things were rocking along nicely, and that if some advantageous arrangement could be made with the powers that be at Washington on the tax question the future would be rosy indeed.

The cold weather brought some snow up in the Pan Handle country and at some points in north Texas, which will help a lot toward bringing up the badly slumped annual precipitation average. West and southwest Texas still needs a lot of rain, which, if it ever shows up, will make things hum in every line of endeavor.

Making "Heart of Sunset" in Texas.

Dallas, Tex.—California's native sons are the best advertisers California has. Why shouldn't Texas' native sons dwell at length and large on the beautitudes of Texas' climate and the plethora of sunshine her skies furnish for the man with the moving picture camera? She has it, and to prove it a new play by Rex Beach is now in course of making in Texas. P. S. McGeeny, director for the Shamrock Photoplay Corporation, arrived at Eagle Pass, Tex., on December 6 to assist Director Frank Powell in the making of "The Heart of the Sunset" for the Rex Beach Pictures Company. The film is to be finished in the studios of the Shamrock Corporation at San Jose, Tex. Leads in "The Heart of the Sunset" are Anna Q. Nilsson and Herbert Hayes. A number of beach scenes in the picture have been made at Corpus Christie, Tex., which these same native sons declare equals California save, of course, for Seal Rocks and things like that. Mr. Beach conceived the idea of the picture in Texas, and its scenes are laid principally around the Texas border.

Waxahatchie Exhibitor Says We Erred.

Dallas, Tex.—On page 1375, issue of December 1, of this paper we said that the town of Waxahatchie lacked a good picture theater, and that Dallas capital was casting an eye in that direction. We have just received a remonstrance from the Waxahatchie Amusement Company calling our attention to the good shows it is putting on at the Empire and Dixie theaters. We are far from wanting to deny any exhibitor credit for good work anywhere. These theaters are pleasing their patrons and making money. That's a pretty sure test.

Tom Pokwers An Aviator at Everman.

Dallas, Tex.—It may not have been a new experience for Powers, but it was for Powers' pupils and comrades when they saw the man who enacted the leading male role in the Goldwyn "Auction Block," a Rex Beach novel, on the screen at their own aviation camp. Tom Powers did the male lead in "The Auction Block." Tom Powers is not only an actor, but an aviator, and a good one as well. He's now an instructor to the Canadians encamped at Camp Everman, some thirty miles west of Dallas.

They Must Have Noticed Thornton.

Dallas, Tex.—George W. Thornton travels Arkansas territory for Vitagraph. He's built along the lines of Wayland Trask, and has features cast in the mold of Francis Xavier. He's squire to the ladies than whom etcetera. But now he's wondering whether it's his winning ways or merely camouflage. Vitagraph traveling men attended a dinner after recently meeting here with Manager J. B. Dugger. They ate in a regular hotel where there were a lot of Hawaiian musicians, including two handsome girls. Somebody "framed" it so that Thornton came in for marked attention, and that's why he's wondering.

Dallas Mutual Gets New Territory.

Dallas, Tex.—Mutual releases, henceforth, are to be handled for all of Texas and parts of Arizona and New Mexico through the Dallas office, with G. C. Reed as manager. Mr. Reed assumed charge about the middle of November, and has things smoothed out and running nicely. Offices heretofore maintained at Houston and El Paso have been merged with the Dallas office because of better advantage in shipments and other particulars.

First-Run Pictures Seen in Dallas.

Dallas, Tex.—Broadway had nothing on Dallas and Texas during the week beginning December 8 in the way of new offerings.

The Old Mill gave the Goldwyn "Auction Block" and Marguerite Clark in another "Bab."

The Washington offered Alma Reubens in the Triangle, "Firefly of Tough Luck" and Billy West in two reels, "The Goat."

The Hippodrome played to excellent business with the Selig, "Garden of Allah," the first time shown here.

At the Rex theater, Manager Gohlman has enjoyed a big run with the Metro, "Draft 258," and Ethel Barrymore in "The Eternal Mother."

Mr. Gohlman has recently installed a magnificent pipe organ, which adds materially to the attractiveness of his comparatively small, but excellently appointed house.

K.C. Feature Has Fine Des Moines Exchange

Manager R. C. Li Beau Thinks He Has Best Appointed Office in Iowa—Furnished to Expedite Business in Every Way—Experienced Staff.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The K. C. Feature Film Company has opened its Des Moines exchange at 415 West Eighth street. The suite of offices occupies the entire second floor of the Bush building. The suits are splendidly lighted with numerous big windows on three sides. The general offices occupy little over one-third of the space. With advertising, inspecting and shipping departments in the rear. A modern fireproof vault for 2,000 reels has been installed. In fact every type of the latest fixtures for a film exchange construction have been installed.

In the general offices, Manager Li Beau has chosen wax-finished quarter-sawn oak for the furniture, and he has been most generous in the number and styles of desks and chairs and files.

His private office, the private office of Assistant Manager W. F. Coleman, and the "lecture room" for the use of the salesmen and private conferences have been elaborately fitted and tastefully arranged for convenience all around. An indirect system of artificial lighting has been installed for the few times it will be needed. Long rows of splendidly constructed poster and photograph and slide racks have been arranged. Manager Li Beau mapped out the arrangement of the advertising department, and is justly proud of the carefully measured and well built racks. The inspecting tables, steel covered, are furnished with splendid light from mammoth windows, and the shipping tables, also steel covered, are conveniently placed to the freight elevator and vault.

A full office force is to be installed, many experienced clerks coming from Kansas City who already know the K. C. system. They will attend to the booking and shipping of Paramount and Artcraft pictures to the Iowa and Nebraska customers.

Iowa and Nebraska exhibitors should fully understand the relation of this office to the Des Moines Film and Supply Company that recently moved from the Utica building to 702 Mulberry street. R. C. Li Beau was former manager of the latter office, which, by the way, never handled any shipping of film, and is to have charge of the K. C. Feature Film Company. Stanley J. Mayer, long employed by the K. C. Feature firm, will have the management of the Des Moines Film and Supply Company, handling all supplies relative to the operation of a picture house, and of the Yale Photoplay Company, a state rights organization also located at 702 Mulberry street.

The phone number of the Des Moines Film and Supply Company at the new location is the same as the one in the Utica building, Walnut 1861. While the K. C. Feature Film Company and R. C. Li Beau can be called at Walnut 2062, the address being 415 West Eighth street.

Forney and Kvidera Give Red Cross Benefit.

Toledo, Ia.—Messrs. Forney and Kvidera, owners of the Grand theater in Toledo, are right there when it comes to patriotic performances. Recently they presented "The Slacker" with a big percentage of the receipts to the Red Cross, and now they have arranged to show "Joan of Arc" for two days, also for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Find More Patrons Since War Tax Begon.

Des Moines, Ia.—A. H. Garland, salesman for the K. C. Feature Film Company of this city, made an unusual kind of report recently. He says that Geo. W. Neholin, manager of the Empress theater in Rockwell City, and O. D. Benjamin, of the Electric theater in Ruthven, gave him the same curious story. They say that since the admission war tax has been installed they have noticed that their patrons have increased to a remarkable degree. That does not mean that their profits have increased any, but that the number of their patrons night after night are decidedly more than ever before. In fact the two made the same statement that their increase in numbers of patrons was 35 per cent. In the face of streams of falling off of business complaints the reports from these exhibitors are very interesting.

A. H. Blank Enterprises Office Grows.

Des Moines, Ia.—With the removal of the Select Picture office force from the suite in the Garden Theater building the A. H. Blank Enterprises have been able to stretch out. S. S. Schwartz, who has been connected with the A. H. Blank Enterprises for the past eighteen months, has the management of the office. H. L. Wallick is representing the office through the state, with Fred P. Martin covering Nebraska. At present the enterprises have no representative in Kansas, but one will be obtained in the near future. The enterprises will have the booking and shipping of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit pictures in this territory, and also the state rights pictures controlled by A. H. Blank.

C. W. Taylor, who had the management of the Des Moines Select offices, will act as manager for the new office in Omaha, at 1512 Howard street. Fred Solomon, formerly the manager of the General Film exchange in Omaha, will act as assistant manager. During the removal of the offices, Mr. Solomon spent ten days in Des Moines, while Mr. Taylor superintended the arrangement of the offices in Omaha.

Exhibitor Has Fine Patriotic Idea.

Kellerton, Ia.—Manager B. S. Harriman, of the beautiful little Orpheum theater in Kellerton, is continuing to present the wives and children of all men in the service of Uncle Sam with an annual pass to his picture theater, good for every night in the year. This seems to the writer to be one of the best plans for real patriotism yet brought to notice. For what better act could be thought of than the one that takes the mind of the "ones that are left behind" away from their great grief if only for the brief time of a picture show. To give the husband of a family to the service of his country means hard privations for those behind, and their entertainment is necessarily limited. Mr. Harriman deserves a lot of credit for his idea and its working out. And this act is a generous one, too, for there have been an exceptional number of married men leave Kellerton for the front.

San Francisco Briefs.

The Maio Biograph, on Market street, is making a test of mazda lamps in the projection room, and the results are declared to be quite satisfactory.

Mrs. N. Lewis has closed the York theater at Twenty-fourth and Bryant streets.

J. Jacoby, formerly operator at the Regent theater, has opened the Searchlight theater on Twenty-ninth street.

Wm. Knotts, formerly with the World Film, is now with the Vitagraph as salesman.

The Premier Films Corporation has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $50,000, by Adele B. Robinson, F. D. Wismer, and Hale Ayres.

"Kiddies Week" will be observed again this year at the New Mission theater, when 10,000 toys and an equal number of free admission tickets will be distributed by the Mission Merchants' Association.

Northern California Notes.

Los Gatos, Cal.—The Strand theater is now being conducted by Wolf & Thompson.

Sacramento, Cal.—The management of the T. & D. theater has been experimenting with the use of twenty-four sheets as an advertising medium, and has decided that these are much more valuable than any other form of out-door advertising.

Oakland, Cal.—Charles Sexton has taken over the Heidelberg theater and changed its name to that of the Liberty theater.

Petaluma, Cal.—Dr. John A. McNear, Jr., of the Petaluma opera house and the Mystic theater, has returned from an Eastern trip.

Stockton, Cal.—The Maze theater is now being conducted by James W. Barlow.

Kingsburg, Cal.—A new moving picture house will be opened by Messrs. Holsinger & Bell.

Sacramento, Cal.—The Sacramento Film Co. is completing the erection of a studio under the direction of W. McGinn, and will commence work on the first picture before the end of the year.

Eugene Roth Tenders Banquet to Film Men

Exchange Manager in San Francisco Have a Rare Treat at Repast Fit for Lucullus—Little Dinner in New York Honors Event—Those Present.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—On the evening of December 4, Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the California theater, tendered a banquet to local film exchange men in the Monte Carlo rooms of Bergez-Frank's Old Poodle Dog restaurant. The affair was an expression of appreciation by Mr. Roth for the handsome engraved testimonial presented him upon the opening of the new theater on November 1, the signers of this all being present, with the exception of four, who were out of the city.

The entire decorative scheme and the selection and preparation of the menu was under the personal direction of Camille Mailhebau, known as Camille to food connoisseurs all over the world. Each menu card bore a photographic reproduction of the engraved testimonial together with a list of the signers. The menu itself was a remarkable one, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all. It included such delicacies as pate de foie gras, clear green turtle soup, stuffed brook trout, supreme of capon, canvas-back duck, fresh hearts of palms from the East Indies, and Alaska Surprise, with wines for which the Old Poodle Dog is famous.

During the course of the dinner moving pictures were shown, and later in the evening moving pictures were made by Edward H. Kemp. Under the guidance of Mr. Roth there was a steady flow of merriment, short talks were made by many present, raconteurs displayed their wit, and a series of poetical gems touching upon the qualifications of those present were read by Dr. Henry Harris. When the fun was at its height a telegram was received from New York signed by Tom North, Sol. L. Lesser, Mike Rosenberg, Leon Netter, and C. Mel. Simmonds expressing regrets at being unable to be present, but advising that they were holding a jollification of their own in honor of the occasion.

The guests of Mr. Roth at this delightful affair were: Herbert Rothchild, president of the Popular Amusement Co., which conducts the California and Portola theaters; Dr. Henry Harris, a close friend of Mr. Roth; E. J. Carroll, a leading exhibitor of Australia; Joseph Partridge, of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking; Harry David, associate manager and director of publicity of the California theater; Van Clement, manager of the Portola theater; Benj. F. Simpson, Triangle exchange; Louis Reichert, Metro; Herman Wobber and J. W. Allen, Paramount-Artcraft; Newton E. Levi, Mutual; E. M. Asher and E. B. Johnson, Turner & Dahnken exchange; Louis R. Greenfield, Kahn & Greenfield; Louis Hyman, All-Star Feature Distributors; E. O. Child, Pathe; R. B. Quive, Vitagraph; M. L. Markowitz, California Film exchange; A. Markowitz, Western Film exchange; Marion H. Kohn, Consolidated Film; E. C. Jensen, World Film exchange; X. K. Stout, Select Pictures; M. J. Cohen, George Kleine; Harry A. Schmidt, General Film; Edward H. Kemp, Motograph representative; T. A. Church, Moving Picture World; Joseph Huff, representing Wobber's, and J. L. Padilla, official photographer.

Exhibitors Find Business Quiet.

San Francisco, Cal.—In spite of ideal weather exhibitors in this territory are complaining of quiet business. Some ascribe this to the holiday season, others blame the war tax, while still others express the belief that the many "drives" by the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Knights of Columbus, and dozens of charitable organizations is absorbing much of the loose change that formerly found its way to the theaters. The large downtown houses are doing about their customary volume of business, but the neighborhood theaters are not being patronized as formerly.

Exhibitors who are complaining most bitterly are those who formerly conducted 10-cent houses, but who are using service which carries with it a provision that 15 cents must be the minimum price of admission. Within the past few months these have advanced their prices from 10 to 17 cents, and in many instances patronage has dropped off sharply. Exhibitors are still fighting the charge of 15 cents a reel per day being made by most exchanges, and court proceedings are being instituted by Alameda county exhibitors through their organization.

Joseph Partridge Here to Open Office.

San Francisco, Cal.—Joseph Partridge, representing the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp., arrived here early in December to establish a branch office for this organization. While full details have not been decided upon it is settled that headquarters will be established at 191 Golden Gate avenue with the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc. Before leaving for Los Angeles, Mr. Partridge announced the selection of W. H. Korper, well known through his work for the International Film exchange and the K-E-S-E, as the local representative of this concern.

Alhambra Changes Hands.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Alhambra theater on Market street, conducted for some time as a combination vaudeville and moving picture house, has been taken over by a circuit which controls the Superba theater, of Los Angeles, among others. The local house has been renovated and reopened as a straight moving picture theater, the initial attraction being "Sirens of the Sea." Al. Nathan, the new manager, promises a number of improvements in the house, including the installation of an organ and changes in the lobby.

X. K. Stout Resigns from Select.

San Francisco, Cal.—X. K. Stout, who has had charge of the local branch of the Select Pictures for several months, has tendered his resignation, and plans to leave for Denver, Col., about the middle of December to become associated with Foursquare Pictures. J. L. Mulhauser, who has also been connected with this concern for some time, has left to assume charge of the Haight Street and Sunset theaters of this city.

Supply House Secures New Location.

San Francisco, Cal.—Work will be commenced at an early date on a two or three-story building to be erected at Jones street and Golden Gate avenue, the entrance to Film Row. The George Breck Photoplay Supply Company, now located on Turk street, will occupy the ground floor, and the space upstairs will be taken over for film exchange use, possibly by the Triangle. The supply company has outgrown its present quarters, and has been seeking a location on Film Row for several months. It is doing a big business, recent sales of machines having included a Simplex for the Pacific Automatic Advertising Co., of this city, and one for the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Sacramento, and Dolores Church, of this city.

Addition to Hippodrome Circuit.

Sacramento, Cal.—The Empress theater has passed into the hands of Ackerman & Harris, of San Francisco, owners of the Hippodrome circuit, and will henceforth be known as the Hippodrome. The deal involved about $100,000.

Where the War Tax Burden Falls Heaviest

Small Exhibitors Feel That the Footage Tax Puts a Heavier Burden on Their Receipts Than It Should—Percentage Is Too Great.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—J. S. Nelson, Mutual salesman, who has just returned from a trip through the Eastern Washington territory, made some very interesting observations about the motion picture business in the small towns of that part of the state. He reports that many of the exhibitors are closing their houses for two or three nights a week, because of a decrease in business, for which the exhibitors blame both the draft and war tax. The smaller men particularly, he states, are complaining about the tax of 15 cents a reel which the exchanges have passed on to the exhibitors.

These men hold that it is unjust to levy a tax on them as great as is put upon the houses where the box office receipts are five or ten times as great. Mr. Nelson said that he closed many contracts for Mutual service because of the insistence of other companies of levying this tax upon the exhibitor.

"The exhibitors have come to the point where they must count every penny," said Mr. Nelson, "and in a way it is better for the motion picture industry that they must. It is going to make real business men of most of the exhibitors. Those who can't be made over will fall by the wayside. And this in turn is going to force a more business-like management of the producing and distributing companies. The great amount of waste that has heretofore been looked upon as a necessity will have to be stopped, or those producing and distributing companies will follow the unfortunate exhibitors. It means that the entire industry will be reorganized on a strictly business basis upon which legitimate profits will be calculated and made according to the careful business methods of other industries."

J. S. Woody Comes Back to Head Select District.

Seattle, Wash.—J. S. Woody, well known in Seattle and throughout the Northwest territory as an exchange manager, has returned to the city after an absence of several months to take over the post of general manager of the Pacific Northwest for Select Pictures, Inc. Mr. Woody will also have charge of the Seattle office. He returns to this city from Chicago, where he was general manager of the Chicago territory for Triangle.

B. R. Keller, who opened the Select office in Seattle, has not yet announced new connections. George J. Ekre, former salesman out of the Seattle office, has accepted a similar position with the Exhibitors' Film Exchange.

Ackerman & Harris Plan New Theaters.

Seattle, Wash.—Irving Ackerman and Sam Harris, owners of the Hippodrome circuit of vaudeville picture theaters on the Pacific Coast, will arrive in Seattle this week from San Francisco, to decide on a location for a new house which they expect to build this winter. From here they will go on to Tacoma, and then to Vancouver, B. C. They will build new theaters in both these cities also.

Alaska Exhibitors Are Lucky.

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Code, owner of the two motion picture theaters of Nome, Alaska, has come down to Seattle to spend the winter. Mr. Code states that in spite of the setback to the development of Alaska which the war has caused, his motion picture business in Nome this last summer was the biggest that has ever been done in the history of the town. The war tax is being handled by Alaska exhibitors in a new way. The regular admission in all the larger towns of Alaska is 25 cents. No smaller coin is in circulation there. The exhibitors did not want to necessitate the bringing in of nickels by raising to 30 cents, so they decided to raise to 50 cents on Sundays, leaving the daily admission unchanged. The Sunday receipts and the weekly receipts are then balanced, and if the increased price has brought in more than enough to cover the 10 per cent. war tax for the entire week, the balance is turned over to the Red Cross. Mr. Code states that this method is proving very satisfactory.

E. L. Houck Now with Paramount.

Seattle, Wash.—E. L. Houck, formerly road representative out of the Seattle Goldwyn office, has accepted a similar position with Paramount-Artcraft.

S. P. Peck Traveling for Exhibitors' Film.

Seattle, Wash.—S. P. Peck, formerly with Paramount-Artcraft, is now traveling for the Exhibitors' Film exchange.

C. R. Coulter Back in Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—C. R. Coulter, formerly engaged in the state rights business in Seattle, and more recently general manager of Motoy Comedies, is back in Seattle.

Will T. Reed Will Manage Colonial.

Seattle, Wash.—John Danz has obtained the services of Will T. Reed as house manager of the Colonial theater. Mr. Reed comes directly from Everett, where he managed the Star theater. Before that he managed the Casino in Spokane for a year, and before that was for several years employed by James Q. Clemmer at the Clemmer theater, Seattle.

Changes Among the Theaters of the State.

Chehalis, Wash.—T. K. Metz, one of the chief exhibitors of Chehalis, has bought the Empress theater. The Bungalow, Colfax, has been closed, and R. G. Clendenning has moved into the building formerly known as the Bungalow and changed the name to the Pastime, the name of his old house, which he closed.

Ellensburg, Wash.—J. D. Farrell, manager of the Colonial theater, Ellensburg, has leased the Isis from Mrs. Mille Sayles.

Tolt, Wash.—L. C. Brown, an exhibitor of Duval, has taken over the motion picture theater at Tolt.

Molson, Wash.—Dunham & Potter, of Milson, will open a new motion picture theater this month. The building was to have been completed last month, but owing to the lumber strike it was impossible to finish it.

Notes of Passing Interest.

Seattle, Wash.—It is announced from the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office that this office is doing the biggest business of its career.

Seattle, Wash.—James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer theater, has signed a contract for Vitagraph service, to go into effect the middle of December. Mr. Clemmer's original policy included Vitagraph productions, but for the last few months he has been showing only special releases.

Seattle, Wash.—The Portland Pathe office has been closed and all Oregon business will be handled hereafter through the Seattle office.

Minnesota Exhibitors Making No Money

November, Usually the Banner Month, Has Been Slim—Tax Takes Profit Out of Business—Footage Excise Expected to Close Many Houses.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Just how the new Government percentage tax has effected exhibitors of the Northwest is becoming known as visitors to the city come in to do their "Christmas shopping" at the exchanges and to attend meetings of the Northwest Exhibitors' Corp. The World correspondent conversed with over a dozen out-of-town exhibitors, and, although not one of them "hollered" because the Government got its money, none of them would admit that they had made any money since the tax had been in effect.

Judging from what visiting exhibitors say the following is about the way the Government tax has "hit" them: November is usually the banner month of the year for the Northwest exhibitors. The November just past was a splendid show month as far as weather was concerned. The exhibitors had some splendid November shows to pick from this season, and were prepared to handle a big month's business. The tax (one exhibitor stated) took away about all that had previously been profit, because most exhibitors were afraid to raise their admissions. Exhibitors that did raise their prices felt a slump, and during the best month of the year a little slump goes a mighty long ways. One exhibitor stated that though the Government tax was said to be 10 per cent. that on 15-cent admissions it was really 15 per cent. He stated that this tax combined with the Government, state and city licenses and lastly the tax of 15 cents per reel had taken away any chance he had to make a cent. Another exhibitor reported that in contrast to last year's November record he had to cut down his number of film showings this year from seven to five, and that if conditions grew much worse he would only be able to show pictures on Saturday and Sunday nights in the future.

Instead of trying to help the exhibitor as one would expect, one exhibitor remarked to the writer, the producers are now putting more money into their productions than ever, paying their stars too much money, and demand that the local exchanges charge amounts for film rental that will not possibly allow for profit to the exhibitor and nine times out of ten keep the theater man from booking features.

The addition of a fifteen cents tax per reel to the film rental prices charged will cause 20 per cent. of the exhibitors of the Northwest to close their theaters for good by the first of February, according to a consensus of opinions of visiting exhibitors.

As an example of how "hard hit" some exhibitors are one Minnesota theater man informed the writer that recently he booked a feature that had played to a big business in St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Duluth, and paid forty dollars for one day's rental, advertised it two weeks ahead, and when he showed it his receipts amounted to $18.45.

December has made its debut in the Northwest with sub-zero weather and severe northern winds that threaten to keep the attendance at film theaters unusually low. The week of December 2, despite the fact that "Draft 258," "For the Freedom of the World," "The Garden of Allah," and a score of other equally strong drawings cards were featured at Minneapolis theaters, the cold weather coupled with street car strike disturbances kept the attendance at all theaters down.

Associated Theaters Increases.

Minneapolis, Minn.—General Manager T. J. Hamlin, of the newly organized Associated Theaters, Inc., has announced that over 600 theaters have either bought stock in the new organization or agreed to do so before Christmas. Mr. Hamlin states that he expects to be able to have a list of 750 theaters by January 1, and shortly after that date the board of directors will hold a meeting and complete arrangements for the distribution of films and advertising matter according to the organization's plan. Six people are now busily engaged in getting the organization whipped into shape.

Philip Judell Enters State Right Field.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Philip Judell, a brother of Benjamin Judell, local exchange manager, has entered the state rights field here. Mr. Judell came to Minneapolis recently from Milwaukee, where for several years he has been manager of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., and he has secured headquarters for his new enterprise on the fifth floor of the Jeweler's Exchange building. Mr. Judell has secured territorial rights on "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson, and "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and her son. He is also negotiating for rights on several other productions, and will likely be able to announce new acquisitions shortly.

Features and Shows.

Manager Bert Goldman, of the New Princess, St. Paul, will get the first run of "Draft 258" in the Capitol City instead of Manager Hays at the New Garrick. Ruben & Finkelstein, owners of the two theaters, decided to put "The Garden of Allah" into the New Garrick, and caused the switch to be made.

"For the Freedom of the World," a Goldwyn release, began a run at the Blue Mouse, St. Paul, Sunday, December 9.

"The Auction Block," Rex Beach's Goldwyn play, began a four-day run at the Strand, Minneapolis, Sunday, December 9.

"The Man Without a Country" began its second Minneapolis run at the New Garden theater, December 9, 16 and 17, the feature will be shown at the Calhoun theater, one of the leading neighborhood theaters of the city.

"The Whip," a Friedman feature, began a run at the New Garrick, Minneapolis, December 9, to a good business.

"More Truth Than Poetry," featuring Olga Petrova, was the feature at the New Lyric the first half of the week of December 9. "The Silent Man," featuring William S. Hart, was scheduled for the last half of the week.

With the Exchangemen.

Minneapolis, Minn.—W. C. Cook, special representative of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp., is here to talk about "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and other forthcoming U. S. E. B. C. productions. His headquarters while here will be in the office of Manager Law, of the Hoffman-Four-square exchange, Film Exchange building.

Manager Wilson, of the American Maid exchange, has installed a new projection machine in his exchange, and is keeping an operator busy showing "I Believe," George Loane Tucker's production, to interested exhibitors.

Hugh C. Andress, former International exchange manager here, and also manager of the New Lyric theater later, has joined the Triangle sales force. He will undergo an operation at a local hospital next week, and will commence activity for the three cornered offices upon recovery.

L. A. Hummell, former Dakota roadman for Vitagraph, has been commissioned a second lieutenant following a three months' drill course at Fort Snelling, here. Phil L. Ryan, of the Standard exchange, is in New York City on a business visit.

Coppers Shown to Be Unpopular in Oregon

Theater Patrons at Pendleton Stay from Shows Rather Than Carry Pennies—Come Back When Price Is Raised—Notes of Interest.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—C. G. Matlock, vice president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, and one of the liveliest exhibitors in the eastern part of the state, has written a most interesting letter concerning the business conditions in Pendleton, where he is associated with J. F. Greulich in the Pendleton Amusement Company, operating four theaters.

True to the traditions of the real West, Pendleton people shun the pennies as a medium of exchange and an attempt to introduce them at the theaters of the Pendleton Amusement Company to meet war-tax conditions, did not result favorably. Says Mr. Matlock in his letter:

"The Cosy theater of this city was a fifteen-cent house prior to the advent of the admission tax. The Pastime was a fifteen-cent house week days and a 25-cent house Sundays and Mondays. The Alta, a vaudeville house, charged 25 cents showing two acts of vaudeville. On November 1, with the advent of the tax, we charged at the Cosy 17 cents admission, 17 cents week days at the Pastime, and 28 cents adults, and children 10 cents Sundays and Mondays; at the Alta, 28 cents adults and 10 cents children. We frankly admit the public did not like this and there was a falling off of patronage.

"On November 13 we put a new policy into effect, raising the price at the Cosy to 20 cents adults and 5 cents children, also raising the price at the Pastime week days from 15 cents for adults to 20 cents, but leaving the Sunday-Monday prices at the Pastime as they were before the tax went into effect. At the Alta we raised the price to 30 cents for adults, leaving the children's price at 10 cents.

"Since adopting this policy we have had no trouble and the attendance is as good as it ever was. We have found out it was not the additional few cents asked for the war tax that kept the public away, but we figure it was the use of pennies. People now say they are satisfied and we hear no more complaints."

Mr. Matlock desired to correct the impression that all theater admissions in Pendleton had been raised to 25 cents before the tax went into effect. The theater that did charge 25 cents was a vaudeville house showing two acts of vaudeville, together with Paramount, Goldwyn and Fox features. The Pastime, which charges 25 cents for Sunday and Monday shows, plays Artercraft and Fox Standard features.

Even Change Better Than Pennies.

Portland, Ore.—George B. Guthrie, Oregon theater, Salam, reports that after a fair trial of both 17 and 20 cents admission, business is better at 20, the patrons apparently not wanting to bother with the penny change and the inconvenience attached thereto. The Oregon now charges 10 cents on week day matinees, 15 cents on Sundays and holidays and 20 cents every night, absorbing and equalizing the war tax this way.

Ed. Hudson Gets More Territory.

Portland, Ore.—Ed Hudson, the genial Goldwyn road man, has had his territory extended and consequently has a lot more work to do. He now covers all of Oregon and southern Idaho and reports business in these parts good for Goldwyn.

Business Better South of Portland.

Portland, Ore.—B. J. Sperry, Paramount representative, who has been covering the Southern Oregon territory, reports more optimism in those parts than has existed for some time. While the war conditions have affected the theater business considerably, general conditions are better than usual and if exhibitors can stick it out until the tax conditions adjust themselves there is at least a little money to be made in the show game south of Portland. Six months or so ago film companies came to the rescue of the exhibitors in quarters and cut the film prices down to ridiculously low bids so they could get by. Several exchanges now report that the southern Oregon men are paying a more equitable price for service.

Medford is doing exceptionally well, says Mr. Sperry, and the Rialto, the new place, as well as the popular Pops Theater, is coming rapidly to the front. Business has picked up in Roseburg, too, while Grand Pass, located only 32 miles from Medford, is compelled to put on shows in metropolitan style to keep the show goers there from motoring to the neighboring city for amusement.

Joe Belter, traveler for Perfection Pictures, recently returned from Marshfield and surrounding towns and says the exhibitors there manage to get along despite war conditions. Marshfield is getting 10, 20 and 25 cents admission with 50 cents for the big features.

Schlaifer Attractions Expands.

Portland, Ore.—Melvin G. Winstock, with the Schlaifer Attractions Company, in Seattle, has been around his old stamping grounds in Portland for some time, contracting his service. Mr. Winstock reports that his company is going into new and larger quarters in Seattle with Louis Amacher as office manager. The company now has three road men out for it selling 16 state right attractions.

Pacific Northwest Briefs.

Portland, Ore.—Reports at the exchanges here are that Lew Cullins of The Dailies has cancelled all film service which demands the war excise.

Weiser, Idaho.—The picture show here has been compelled to cut out one night a week, due to business depression following the raise in admission to meet the war tax.

Ontario, Ore.—The Dreamland theater is now being operated by A. Janssen, a new man in the business, but a comer.

Medford, Ore.—Mr. and Mrs. George Hunt, former owners of the Page and Star theaters, are now living in Seattle.

Portland, Ore.—C. E. Waite, manager of the General Film office, reports an increase of 400 per cent. in business, due undoubtedly to the removal of the war excise.

Portland, Ore.—F. C. Weskil, owner of the Bungalow theater at North Powder, Oregon, was a recent visitor, and booked a full line of service for his theater until April.

Portland, Ore.—Manager C. M. Hill, of Paramount, reports excellent business on "Who Is Number One?" through the territory, with early calls for "Joan the Woman."

Portland, Ore.—Real patriotism is shown by exhibitors here when they show slides on their screens that takes their business away and gives it to the Red Cross benefits. This occurred during the Allied Bazaar, held at the Auditorium. It was exploited in the picture shows and the average attendance was about 5,000 people a day, which set the photoplay theaters back not a little.

"THE DOOR BETWEEN."

Bluebird Presents an Adaptation of Samuel Merwin's "Anthony the Absolute," by Elliott J. Clawson. Produced by Rupert Julian.

Cast.

Heloise Crocker.....Ruth Clifford
Anthony Ives Eckhart...Monroe Salisbury
Archibald Crocker....George A. McDaniels
Sir Robert.....W. H. Bainbridge

The Story: Anthony Eckhart, a student of Oriental music, meets Crocker in a Geisha house where he extricates the intoxicated man from the results of an attack upon a waiter. Crocker explains that his wife has left him and there is only drink left. Anthony discovers a woman with marvelous voice at the hotel and falls in love with her before he finds that she is Crocker's wife. He confesses to Crocker and offers to leave if Crocker will leave her alone. Crocker promises an answer, but comes to kill his wife. Anthony prevents him and at last Crocker proves a man.

Program Lines: An Occidental story with an Oriental setting.

One of Merwin's best stories in Bluebird's best style.

Advertising Phrases: No one knows the European in Japan like Samuel Merwin.

A love story of our own people in a far-off land.

Feature These Players: Dainty Ruth Clifford as the errant but innocent wife.

Monroe Salisbury who loves a woman well enough to give her up.

Advertising Aids: One and two-column cut mats.

MY LITTLE BOY.

Bluebird Presents a Unique Combination of Dickens' A Christmas Carol with Eugene Field's Little Boy Blue, with Ella Hall and Zoe Rae.

Cast.

Fred Emory Johnson
Clara Ella Hall
Paul Zoe Rae
Uncle Oliver.....Winter Hall
Joe Harry Holden
Clara's Mother.....Gretchen Lederer

The Story: Fred and Clara marry and there comes to their home the little boy they have dreamed of and whom they determine to call Little Boy Blue. The marriage has estranged Fred's uncle, but he comes to spend Christmas with them. Their hopes of a full reconciliation are dashed when he objects so strenuously to Little Boy Blue, but things happen that wring the heartstrings and through Little Boy Blue a truly happy Christmas morning dawns.

For the Program: A story with smiles, a sob and merry laughter.

A tale with all the charm of Field and Dickens.

Advertising Phrases: The charming story of a wholly human child.

With all the charm of Charles Dickens and the pathos of Eugene Field.

Features These Players: Ella Hall, who dreams of the Little Boy Blue who is to be.

Emory Johnson as the father.
Zoe Rae, the tiny star, in the title role.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the phonograph stores to feature the song, Little Boy Blue, and show a placard, "This song is the inspiration for My Little Boy, a BLUEBIRD photoplay to be seen at (theater and date here). Come in and hear it played." Feature the record (with an advertising slide) in your theaters for a few days before presentation, crediting the stores on the slides. For a lobby display use a haystack and a dummy Little Boy Blue with shepherd's crook; hat over face.

Advertising Aids: One and two-column mats.

DAUGHTER OF DESTINY.

Mme. Petrova Presents Herself in Her Own Production of a Stirring Play of European Chancellories—A Tale of Thrills and Heart-Appeal.

Cast.

Marion Ashley.....Mme. Petrova
The Crown Prince.....Thomas Holding
Franz Jörn.....Anders Randolph
Ambassador Ashley....Robert Broderick
Police Agent Morhange.....Henri Leoni
Graham West.....Richard Garrick
Secret Service Man.....Carl Dietz American Minister.....Warren Cook

The Story: Married to a spy who seeks to induce her to betray her country, the daughter of the American Ambassador to Belmark welcomes the news of her husband's death not knowing that he has merely staged a deception. She becomes the morganatic wife of Prince Leopold, of Belmark, but renounces the marriage that war may be avoided, only to learn that the new alliance means a still greater war. She persuades Leopold to renounce the compact, then saves his life by throwing herself between him and an exploding bomb—but the story does not end there.

For the Program: At last, Petrova in a play worthy her merit.

Not a play of the Great War, but a story of what might have come before.

Advertising Phrases: You've seen Petrova. Now see her in a real play.

A stunning spectacle and a stupendous story.

Feature These Players: Mme. Petrova, as the beautiful American girl who gives up hope and happiness for her adopted country.

Thomas Holding, as Prince Leopold. Former leading man with Clara Kimball Young and Pauline Fredericks.

Anders Randolph as the spy, a former Vitagraph favorite.

Robert Broderick and Harry Leoni, both well-known light opera stars, have important parts in this production.

Stunt Suggestions: Make a generous use of window cards and photograph sets, particularly in the better sections of town. You should be able to get Petrova in windows where other plays might be barred. In cities where Petrova has appeared use cards along the general lines, "You who have seen Petrova on the stage may have been disappointed in her screen work. See her in this, the first of her own productions. It is different."

Advertising Aids: Two ones, two threes, one six; one 24-sheet. Window cards. Three sets of photographs. Two one-column half-tones. Two one-column line cuts. Three two-column half-tones, one three-column half tone. One half-tone and line thumb cuts. One portrait and two scene slides.

"THE ETERNAL TEMPTRESS."

A Paramount Production Offering Lina Cavalieri in a Play of War-time Italy. Play by Mme. De Gresac, Production by Emile Chautard.

Cast.

Princess Cordelia Sanzio...Lina Cavalieri
Angela.....Mildred Conselman
Harry Althrop.....Elliott Dexter
Count Rudolph Frizl.....Allen Hale
Prince Estezary.....Edward Fielding
Colonel Althrop.....Hallen Mostyn
Ambassador Lawton.....James Laffey
Borgslov.....Pierre De Mattels
Jeweller.....Peter Barbier

The Story: Austrian diplomats, seeking papers in the possession of the United States diplomat, work through the infatuation of his son, Harry, for an Italian widow. In his desperate financial straits, he is induced to turn traitor to his trust, but the woman, truly loving him, saves him from the consequences of his crime—at the cost of her own love and life.

For the Program: A war-time Camille.

She gave her life for Italy—and love.

Advertising Phrases: The Queen of Song in a Silent Symphony.

Screen Debut of the Darling of Paris and New York.

Feature These Players: Lina Cavalieri, known in the Parisian music halls as "The Most Beautiful Woman in Europe," and later a star at the Grand Opera House, Paris, and Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Her first appearance on the screen.

Elliott Dexter, who plays the part of the young attache.

Allen Hale, as the dashing Austrian Count.

Stunt Suggestions: Emphasize the costly dressing and the famous Cavalieri pearls through window displays by dry goods stores and jewelers. Use signs stating that the displays are rivaled by the costumes or pearls worn by Cavalieri. Mention store displays in screen and program advertising. Use a handsome Italian girl in a show window or in an automobile for street work, with placards.

Advertising Aids: Paper—2 ones, 2 threes, 2 sixes. Photos. Cuts and mats: 5 one column, 3 two column and 2 three column cuts and mats on production and the same for the star. Advertising layout mats. Slides.

Released Dec. 3.

"THE SMALL TOWN GUY."

An Essanay Special Feature Presenting Taylor Holmes in a Dramatization of a Munsey Novelette, "A Picture of Innocence."

Cast.

Ernest Gledhill.....Taylor Holmes
Eleanor Ramsdell.....Helen Ferguson Swell Dresser.....Fred Tilden
Slim McClearn.....Mark Elliston

The Story: Coaxed by sharpers, who seek to profit by his rustic innocence, the boy from the small town goes to the city with them and become, innocently enough, a successful swindler, but he learns of the deception and returns home, too ashamed to seek his old sweetheart. The crooks return to try a blackmail game, but Ern- nie's eyes are opened now. He cleans up in whirlwind fashion.

For the Program: He was slow, but he learned to be speedy.

He cut his wisdom teeth on a gold brick.

Advertising Phrases: Taylor Holmes' newest conquest.

Another Holmes play of laughter and love.

Feature These Players: Taylor Holmes, Broadway musical comedy star and over-night screen favorite.

Stunt Suggestions: Rube the streets with a countrified young man soliciting subscriptions for the Typemetal Club. Send out a postal card reading: "Are you easy? Did you ever contribute to 'We Boys'? If you would learn about fraudulent solicitors, see Taylor Holmes in The Small Town Guy at (your theater and date). It may save you money." Play up the first and last lines.

Advertising Aids: One, three and 24-sheets. Lobby displays (2 sets) four page heralds. Still photographs.

Released December 3.

"THE DREAM DOLL."

An Essayay Screen Fantasia with Marguerite Clayton, Offering Some Unusual Trick Photography, from the Story by Howard S. Moss.

Cast.

Ruby.....Marguerite Clayton
The Toy King.....John Cossar
A. Knutt.....Bobby Bolder
Ruby's Fiance.....Rodney La Rock

The Story: A. Knutt, a crack-brained chemist, discovers an elixir that will endow dolls with life. He does not know that it will change living persons to dolls. He shows his invention to the Toy King and his lovely daughter, and Ruby is overcome by the fumes and is changed into a doll, eloping with a doll lover and undergoing many strange adventures.

For the Program: A play with all the charm of Peter Pan.

A romance of Toyland for tall and tiny tots.

Advertising Phrases: A page from tales of Fairyland.

A drama of dolls with living players.

Feature These Players: Marguerite Clayton as the beautiful daughter of the Toy King.

Stunt Suggestions: Set up in the lobby the dog house in which Ruby and her doll husband are supposed to set up housekeeping. Use a large kennel with a "Furnished Rooms" sign beside the door. If desired an upper floor can be added furnished as a doll house. Work with the toy shops for window displays of doll scenes suggested by the still pictures, the wedding, the discovery of the bomb, etc.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six-sheet posters. Two sets of lobby displays. Four page heralds.

Released December 10.

"SADIE GOES TO HEAVEN."

An Essayay Picturization of a Magazine Story Featuring Charming Little Mary McAllister. By Dana Burnet.

Cast.

Sadie.....Little Mary McAllister
Her Mother.....Jenny St. George
Mrs. Welland Riche.....Frankie Raymond
The Butler.....Bobby Bolder

The Story: Six-year-old Sadie O'Malley has gained her imperfect ideas of Heaven from the teachings of a settlement worker, and when she sees a handsome limousine in front of the settlement laundry, she thinks it must be the bus to the promised land, and conceals herself in a hamper inside the car. She is whisked away to the home of Mrs. Riche and is thoroughly enjoying herself when that philanthropist by proxy returns. Mrs. Riche dislikes unfashionable dogs even more than slum children, so Sadie and George Washington Square decide that it really isn't heaven.

For the Program: It couldn't be heaven, for they didn't like dogs.

Little Sadie McAllister goes to heaven by automobile.

Advertising Phrases: She was only six years old, but she knew it wasn't heaven.

The littlest Screen Star in a new triumph of sentiment and mirth.

Feature These Players: Little Mary McAllister, the heroine of Pants, as the slum child who knew what heaven should be like.

Stunt Suggestions: Get an interesting-looking mongrel for the lobby with the placard: "Should dogs like this go to heaven? See Little Mary McAllister in Sadie Goes to Heaven (date here) for the answer," or use a slide with the dog's picture. Offer a prize of tickets for the best argument for or against the proposition.

Advertising Aids: One, three and 24-sheet posters. Two sets of lobby displays. Four page herald. Still pictures.

Released December 24.

AMERICAN MAID.

Mutual Presents Edna Goodrich in the Story of a Red Cross Girl and An American Soldier Who Has Done His Bit—In Five Parts.

Cast.

Virginia Lee.....Edna Goodrich
Senator Lee.....George Henery
David Starr.....William B. Davidson
Sam Benson.....John Hopkins

The Story: Virginia Lee, daughter of a United States Senator, meets David Starr, a wounded United States soldier, in a field hospital in which she is serving as a Red Cross nurse. Starr returns to the trenches and Virginia's base hospital is moved. Starr is again wounded and invalided home. Virginia has lost sight of him. She returns to America; and in Washington, Starr sees her at a ball at the French Embassy. Feeling her too far above him, socially, he goes West, whither Virginia's father takes her, on a business trip, and there a vital drama is enacted.

For the Program: A thrilling tale of France and the Golden West.

A red-blooded drama that starts on the fighting line and ends in the Rockies.

Advertising Phrases: Trench life and our own great West.

From the Somme trenches to the Santa Fe Trail.

Feature These Players: Edna Goodrich, star of "Queen X" and "A Daughter of Maryland."

William B. Davidson, as the American who did his bit.

Stunt Suggestions: Put a Red Cross worker in a store window, making bandages, with a card announcing the production. If possible, work in with the local Red Cross Chapter. Display war pictures in the lobby with cards for the attraction under the captions.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six-sheets. Banner one sheet by six. Cuts one-half, one two and three columns wide. Program cover cut 4x4. One slide. Lobby photos.

Released Dec. 3.

THE SECRET GAME.

Paramount Presents Sessue Hayakawa in a Five-Part Story in Which the Japanese Spy This Time Works in Behalf of the United States.

Cast.

Nara-Nara.....Sessue Hayakawa
Major Northfield.....Jack Holt

Kitty Little.....Florence Vidor
Miss Loring.....Mayme Kelso
Dr. Ebel Smith.....Charles Ozle
Mrs. Harris.....Raymond Hatton

The Story: There have been innumerable stories of Japanese spies working against the United States, but Nara-Nara, a famous Japanese detective, is employed by his own government and ours to discover a leak in the Pacific offices of the Quartermaster's department. He finds the real informant to be Kitty, the stenographer, whom Northfield, the officer, loves, but through his efforts all comes out to the contentment of all, save the unfortunate Nara.

For the Program: A story of Prussian treachery and Japanese Loyalty.

Hayakawa in a unique and sympathetic role.

Advertising Phrases: What would you do if you found your best girl to be a spy?

The first story of the new United States-Japanese entente.

Feature These Players: Sessue Hayakawa as the Japanese spy who solves a knotty problem.

Jack Holt, as the quartermaster, who finds his sweetheart is a spy.

Florence Vidor, as the spy under compulsion.

Stunt Suggestions: Make a profile scene model of a fleet of U. S. transports on the ocean. Put in a box with a pair of dummy binoculars for peep holes. Above letter, "What Kitty and the Major saw at the end of 'The Secret Game.'" Shown here (date). Have envelopes printed on the face, "This is what the Major gave Kitty. What would you do with it? Find the answer in 'The Secret Game' at (house and date). A novel Hayakawa story." Enclose in the envelope merely a sheet of blank paper. Work toy transports in store windows, with fan for flags.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. Four kinds of photo sets. Five one-column, three two-column, and two three-column cuts and mats, each, on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released Dec. 3.

TOM SAWYER.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Jack Pickford in a Vivid Visualization of Mark Twain's Immortal Story of Real Boys, Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn and Their Friends.

Cast.

Tom Sawyer.....Jack Pickford
Sid.....George Hackthorne
Mary.....Alice Marvin
Aunt Polly.....Edythe Chapman
Huck Finn.....Robert Gordon

The Story: No classic of boyhood is better known than Mark Twain's famous story of Tom Sawyer. Paramount has reproduced all the familiar incidents of the book, in the very town in which Tom and Huck were supposed to have lived, Hannibal, Mo. They play pirates on the very same island Tom and Huck camped upon, and perhaps it is the very same fence that is again whitewashed at a huge profit.

For the Program: They went to their own funeral services.

Those famous boy pirates of the Mississippi.

Advertising Phrases: Mark Twain lives again.

Meet Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn at—

Feature These Players: Jack Pickford as the immortal Tom. One of the most congenial roles he has ever played.

Alice Marvin, as Mary, his little sweetheart.

Stunt Suggestions: Dress three boys in old suits, wooden swords and cutlasses and provides a black pirate flag. Have them distribute throwaways throughout your territory. Offer a copy of the book to the child bringing in the largest matinee party. Work the libraries and get book stores to make a special window display.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. Four styles of photos. Cuts and mats for star and subject, five each one-column, three two-column and two three-column. Advertising layout cuts and mats. Rotogravure. Press book. Slides.

LOVE LETTERS.

Thomas H. Ince Presents Dorothy Dalton in an Exciting Story of Love That Rose Above Suspicion—Form the Story by Shannon Fife.

Cast.

Eileen Rodney.....Dorothy Dalton
Raymond Moreland.....William Conklin
Eleanor Dare.....Dorcas Matthews
John Harland.....Thurston Hall
Robert Maxwell.....Howard Mack
Amos William Hoffman

The Story: Eileen Rodney believes herself in love with Raymond Moreland, who poses as the leader of an oriental cult, but discovers his duplicity in time to avoid the serious consequences of an elopement. She marries her guardian, John Harland, and is happy until Moreland returns and seeks to reopen the affair under threat of exposure. Moreland is killed, and her husband, as District Attorney, takes charge of the case. Her efforts to recover the love letters she wrote Moreland are nearly her undoing, precipitating an unusually thrilling chain of action.

For the Program: A mystery play that thrills the blood.

A murder mystery without morbidity.
Advertising Phrases: Don't write in haste to repent at leisure.

A story that keeps you guessing.

Feature These Players: Dorothy Dalton, as the young wife.

William Conklin, as the pseudo occultist.

Thurston Hall, as the District Attorney.

Stunt Suggestions: Offer a small prize for the best-written love-letter. Work this with a newspaper. For the lobby build a small fireplace, fill the grate with old letters in their envelopes, and with an electric fan blow up "flames" of salmon-colored chiffon lighted by red lights below the letters. Put the chiffon in among the envelopes, and char those nearest these flames. Above, place a sign, "Burn love letters. For the reason see Dorothy Dalton in 'Love Letters.' (Date.) She was nearly charged with murder."

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. Four styles of photos. One two and three-column cuts and mats of star and production. Rotogravures. Press book. Advertising layout cuts and maps. Slides.

THE DEVIL STONE.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Geraldine Farrar in Cecil B. DeMille's Production of a Romantic Story of Superstition on the Breton Coast.

Cast.

Marcia Manot.....Geraldine Farrar
Guy Sterling.....Wallace Reid
Robert Judson.....Hobart Bosworth
Silas Martin.....Tully Marshall

The Story: Marcia Manot, a simple Breton fisher maiden, has found an exquisite emerald, once the property of an ancient Norse queen. The stone is supposed to be cursed, because it was wrested by her from a Christian priest. Silas Martin, the avaricious American owner of large Breton fisheries, marries Marcia to gain possession of the stone, while she marries him in the hope of persuading him to better the condition of his employees. She soon finds that the stone is his sole interest, and that he has planned to divorce her, by compromising her with his business manager, Sterling. In an effort to regain possession of the stone she kills Martin in self-defense and believes the curse to be working, but eventually the stone is given to the priest, that the curse may be lifted, and Marcia escapes the fancied penalty.

For the Program: A Breton maid and a millionaire.

Do devils lurk in glittering gems?

Advertising Phrases: How a Breton maid broke an ancient spell.

Death followed the emerald through long centuries.

Stunt Suggestions: Get some prominent jeweler to make a display of emeralds in his window with "These Are Not Devil Stones. For the story of the Devil Stone see the play (theater and date) and learn how the curse was lifted." Offer matinee tickets to all girls born in May and who, therefore, have emeralds for their birthstone.

Feature These Players: Geraldine Farrar, star of "Carmen" and "Joan the Woman." Wallace Reid, who supported her in the above plays.

Hobart Bosworth, as the detective.

Tully Marshall, as the miserly Martin.

Mention that all four players have been starred.

Advertising Aids: See press book.

Released Dec. 31.

A MODERN MUSKETEER.

Artcraft Presents Douglas Fairbanks in a Rollicking Story of a Hero of the Past in the Strenuous Present.

Cast.

Ned Thacker.....Douglas Fairbanks
Dorothy Morane.....Marjorie Daw
Mrs. Morane.....Kathleen Kirkham
The Navajo.....Frank Campeau
Raymond Peters.....Eugene Ormonde
Philip Marden.....Tully Marshall

The Story: Ned Thacker, through prenatal suggestion, is born in Kansas with the spirit of D'Artagnan, of Gascony, and, naturally, his gallantries are very much misunderstood by maids and matrons of today, but when he falls in love with Dorothy Morane it takes something more than a millionaire rival to head him off, and it takes even more than a half-crazed Indian guide and the face of the Grand Canyon to keep him from the lady of his choice—not even her mother can do that.

For the Program: His love was deeper than the Grand Canyon.

Dumas had nothing on "Doug."

Advertising Phrases: A Fairbanks Fantasy in God's own wonderland.

The apotheosis of acrobatic amours.

Feature This Player: Douglas Fairbanks, as the man who felt himself a king's musketeer.

Stunt Suggestions: Borrow pictures of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado or similar views from the railroad agent or other sources. Label them, "See Douglas Fairbanks drop down these fearsome cliffs in 'A Modern Musketeer' at (theater and date). He outdoes all past achievements." Mount a man in cavalier dress and send him through the streets with a banner on his back.

Released Dec. 17.

FANATICS.

Triangle Presents a Curiously Complicated Story of Mistaken Motives and Misguided Revenge, by John Lynch.

Cast.

Mary Lathrop.....Adda Gleason
Nicholas Eyre.....J. Barney Sherry
Hugh Grosbeck.....Wm. V. Mong
Robert Lathrop.....Donald Fullen
Lola Monroe.....Olga Grey
Billy Haskell.....Eugene Burr

The Story: Failing to get a loan from Nicholas Eyre, the Steel King and friend of his wife's father, Robert Lathrop induces his wife to beg for the money he plans to spend upon his mistress. He is given a check. Hurrying to Lola's apartments, he finds her in the arms of her lover, Haskell. In the fight that follows, Lathrop is killed and left in the park. Believing her husband to be a suicide because Eyre refused to advance him funds, the wife plans to revenge what she considers his murder, but enlightenment comes after terrible damage has been done.

For the Program: She sought through anarchy to avenge her fancied wrongs.

A story of sin and steel.

Advertising Phrases: She sought to kill, but kissed instead.

Steel King resists vampire's advances.

Feature These Players: Olga Grey, as the adventuress.

J. Barney Sherry, as the Steel King.

Stunt Suggestions: Send out a soap-box orator to talk on labor, being careful that he says nothing that will offend either capital or labor. When he has attracted a small crowd let him announce that one solution of labor problems will be found in "Fanatics" at your theater on certain dates. Then he moves on to another pitch, working up and down the main streets. In the lobby display a framed check made out by Nicholas Eyre to Robert Lathrop. Below explain that "This check from the Steel King to the libertine is the point about which the story of 'Fanatics' revolves. Here (give date)."

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet. Rotogravure heralds, slides, special music, 11x14 lobby displays, electros, mats, stills.

Released Dec. 9.

THE LEARNIN' OF JIM BENTON.

Triangle Presents a Masterly Picture of the Old Feud Between the Sheep and Cattle Grazers—Story by Al Neitz, Directed by Cliff Smith.

Cast.

Jim Benton.....Roy Stewart
Evelyn Hastings.....Fritzi Ridgeway
Joe Walter Perry
Harvey Knowles.....Ed Brady
Sid Harvey.....Thornton Edwards

The Story: Jim Benton has been too busy making money to learn to read and write, but he persuades Evelyn Hastings to open school on his ranch and he is her most devoted pupil. The sheepmen carry out their threat to cut off Benton's water supply and Evelyn makes him promise to shoot only in self-defense. He keeps his promise, but still he has to kill, and a packed jury of sheepmen bring in a death verdict. The cattlemen attempt a rescue, but it is Evelyn who saves the day.

For the Program: He could shoot, if he couldn't spell.

His millions could not save his life.

Advertising Phrases: What chance has the Cattle King with sheepmen on the jury?

The unfenced range is gone, but its romance lingers still.

Feature These Players: Roy Stewart, as Jim Benton, the Cattle King.

Fritzi Ridgeway, the girl who could read and ride.

Stunt Suggestions: Build a jury box in the lobby and fill it with twelve tailor's dummies. Below place a sign reading "Jim Benton might as well have faced these twelve as to hope for justice from the sheep sympathizers. See 'The Learnin' of Jim Benton.' (Date)." Get out an imitation jury notice to sit on the case of Jim Benton at your theater on a certain date. Copy as closely as possible the style of the local notice.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet. Herald in rotogravure. Slide. Lobby display in sepia or tint. Electros, mats. Press sheet. Released Dec. 9.

THE MATERNAL SPARK.

Triangle Presents a Drama of the Little Town and the Big City, with Irene Hunt—Story by E. Cecil Smith, Script by George du B. Proctor.

Cast.

Howard Helms.....Rowland Lee
Mary Helms.....Irene Hunt
Bumpkins.....Joe Jacobs
John J. Mills.....Edwin Jobson
Clarice Phillips.....Josie Sedgwick

The Story: Brought from a small town to the big city as the protege of a railroad president, Howard Helm proves himself too weak for the town. His rapid advancement leads to stock gambling and, of course, the other woman. The railroad president checks the gambling by the simple process of breaking and firing Helm; Mary looks after the other woman and they go back to Pepperell to start afresh.

For the Program: He was too small for a big town.

A small-town peg in a big-city hole.

Advertising Phrases: He took the count on the Great White Way.
No woman is wholly bad.

Feature These Players: Irene Hunt as the resourceful young wife.

Rowland Lee, as the man too small for the big town.

Stunt Suggestions: Construct a miniature pond, in which place the largest china or paper frog obtainable. Place in the lobby with a card reading "Howard Helm found it was better to be a big frog in a small-town puddle than to be a tadpole in the city lake. See 'The Maternal Spark' (Date)." The pond can be a small basin set into a soap box filled with dirt with a few branches and evergreens for a backing. For street work send out a man, woman and little boy in an auto. Letter the side, "They're going back to Pepperell. For the reason see 'The Maternal Spark' at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet. Herald in rotogravure. Slide. Sepia or tinted lobby display. Electros, mats. Scene photos. Press sheet.

BECAUSE OF A WOMAN.

Triangle Presents a Story of Love's Renunciation That Was Its Own Reward—Story by E. Magnus Ingleton, Script by George E. Jenks.

Cast.

Noel Clavering.....Jack Livingston
Valerie Greenway.....Belle Bennett
Allan Barrett.....George Chesebro
Muriel Gwynne.....Louella Maxam
Lucia Malvern.....Lillian Langdon
Colonel Gwynne.....Josef Swickard

The Story: Because he desires to shield the father of the girl he loves, though he suspects another to be the real culprit, Clavering takes upon himself the reproach of business treachery and seeks a hiding place as operator at a little telegraph station in the desert. There comes the man he suspects, and Clavering wrings a confession from him, but lets him go when he declares that he is married to the girl. Too late he discovers his error, but in seeking to shield the girl from further distress finds happiness from an unexpected source.

For the Program: Renunciation proved its own reward.

He thought he was giving up happiness when he was really finding it.

Advertising Phrases: A vampire who wasn't.

Fate leads to love by devious paths.

Feature These Players: Belle Bennett, as the Broadway beauty.

Jack Livingston, who gave up a career for love.

Stunt Suggestions: Send out cards with "If you've been disappointed in love" in large letters, running into, "don't despair. In 'Because of a Woman,' to be shown at (theater and date) Noel Clavering gave up his career, and she married his rival, yet Noel found greater happiness than she." And in the same type as the top line, "Don't worry. It will come out right." Use a teaser slide on the screen reading, "Would you give up the woman you love to the man you hated?" Run this a week before the showing. Two days before the playing date, add the title and date.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet. Herald. Slide. Lobby displays and scene photos for lobby. Cuts and mats. Press sheet.

Released Dec. 16.

THAIS.

Goldwyn Presents Mary Garden (Screen Debut) in a Splendidly Spectacular Picturization of Anatole France's Opera, Thais.

Cast.

Thais.....Mary Garden
Paphnutius.....Hamilton Revelle
Lollius.....Crauford Kent
Cynius.....Lionel Adams
Niclas.....Charles Trowbridge
Mother Superior.....Alice Chapin
Nun.....Margaret Townsend

The Story: Paphnutius, a wealthy Alexandrian, is about to embrace the new faith of Christianity, but is persuaded by a friend to first see Thais, the most notable courtesan of her time. He falls in love with her, but is forced to kill a rival and conscience again urges him toward the new faith. He becomes a monk, but leaves the cloister to return to Alexandria to seek to convert Thais. In this he succeeds and she joins a nunnery. He saves her soul but loses his own peace of mind. Note—It would be better to hold the program story to an announcement of the elaborate presentation of this famous opera and to copy the full story from the press sheet for general distribution.

For the Program: The most widely-known operatic artist in her best-known role.

A rival in splendor and story to Cleopatra.

Advertising Phrases: The most colorful opera in a splendid production.

The greatest love story of ancient Egypt.

Feature These Players: Mary Garden, one of the best-advertised women of the operatic world, in the work in which she was first introduced to America. Even the newspapers that are generally hard to reach will take stuff on this star.

Hamilton Revelle: See a recent issue for his Picture Personalities.

Stunt Suggestions: Make a special drive on musical societies, music teachers and literary clubs. If there is a French population, work to them. Work through the musical editors of the newspapers as well as the photoplay men. Send specially printed announcements to a select list of those not generally interested in photoplay. Miss Garden will bring in many persons not interested in pictures. Work to hold them. Make an elaborate production of the film. Work the windows with photographs. See press sheet.

Advertising Aids: Free mat layout. Photographic line cut copy. Cuts from two columns to half pages. Paper, etc.

Released Dec. 30.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

TWO RENEGADES—(One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Bernard O'Keefe (W. L. Rodgers); Doc Milliken (Chet Ryan). Directed by David Smith.

At a reunion of the Confederate Veterans at the Old Soldiers' Home for the Confederacy the moribund veterans were swapping stories and one of their most enthusiastic hearers was a hated yank, Bernard O'Keefe. When asked what he was up to Barney explained why he was "assisting at the wake of the only nation that ever did him a good turn."

It seems that some months before he had gone down to Panama to get in on the ground floor of the Panama Canal "Irritation" and contracted chagres fever. Doc Milliken was sent for and he appeared with a tomato can full of calomel and a saw. Doc, by the way, was an ex-reb to whom Yanks were pizen, but als powders knocked the fever and he and Barney became friends. O'Keefe revolted with the straw hat crowd, was captured by the Colombians, court-martialed and sentenced to be shot. He bribed his captors to take him to the drunk and disorderly Consul, who brought him tobacco and banana fritters, but refused to bring the Atlantic squadron to his rescue.

Finally O'Keefe sent for Doc Milliken and was told that his only hope was in the "grandest nation that ever existed—the Confederate States of America." Barney felt that all was lost if his only hope was in a government that is only remembered on Decoration Day, but he expressed a willingness to try Ku-Klux in place of Khaki, confessed a fondness for whisky and 'possum, took the oath of allegiance to the Confederate States of America, and told Doc to get busy. Negotiations were opened between the two nations, with the result that a mysterious keg was brought to the jail and Barney was bowed out. Bewildered, he asked Doc what it all mean and was told that he had better leave on the steamer sailing in the morning before experts passed on the twelve thousand dollars—Confederate money—that had secured his release.

WHISTLING DICK'S CHRISTMAS STOCKING (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Whistling Dick (George Cooper); Virginia Rodney (Adele De Garde). Directed by George Ridgwell.

Whistling Dick, so named because of his abilto whistle almost any air, is invited to leave the city on the day before Christmas to escape the annual round-up for the reek pile, and trudges out into the country in search of a proper resting place for a man of leisure. As he whistles his way along a country road he is passed by a young lady who calls "Merry Christmas" to him. In her excitement she loses one of a pair of new stockings she is taking home, and Dick picks it up. His nose leads him to a hobo stew being prepared in a gully near a hobo plantation home and he finds Boston Harry, a crook friend, and his gang, and partakes of the feast.

He is invited to assist in robbing the home in which the young lady lives but refuses and is held under guard until the robbery can be pulled off. Dick gets an idea when he finds the stocking in his pocket, writes a note and sticks it in the toe of the stocking with a stone. When no one is looking he slings it through the window of the house, his message of warning alighting on the table during the Christmas Eve celebration. The men capture the gang and release Whistling Dick, who is feasted and honored all evening and is put to bed with the promise of the best job on the plantation. The idea of work is repugnant to his nature, however, and he escapes the next morning to resume his annual hunt for winter quarters.

ESSANAY.

LUNCH (One Reel Comedy).—John is hungry but has only ten cents. He enters a restaurant, observes how others are getting big feeds for ten cents, and seeks to do likewise. He orders a tray full of food, and, winking at the waiter, passes him a button in lieu of a ten cent bribe. The waiter punches his check at 65 cents. Aghast, John switches checks with another patron, but finds the purloined check is for an even high amount. However, he is forgiven by the management when he reveals how the profits are going, and is given a job. But John, too, becomes a victim of temptation, is caught mis-punching checks, and pummelled unmercifully. Things might have gone harder with John had not a big burly westerner gotten up and chased the crowd out with his revolver. The end of the picture shows John hiding under the counter, his head protruding, eating a big piece of pie.

SPARKLE.

THE DETECTIVE (One Reel Comedy).—Jennie Million, in town on a shopping trip, is kidnapped along with her chauffeur, coming out of a department store. The chauffeur is kicked out with a note to Jennie's father, a wealthy banker, demanding one hundred thousand dollars for the return of his daughter. The police are notified, and Will Huntum, the world-famous detective, is put on the case. He advises the banker to place a bundle of fake money in the appointed place. He catches one of the gang in the act of taking the money, but in the mix-up his man disappears through a manhole. He follows through the sewers and arrives at a door leading to their den where the girl is tied up.

The gun-men get into a row among themselves and Bill, the detective, dashes in. A fight ensues and he is tied to a keg of gun-powder. They light the fuse and then start in pursuit of the girl who has freed herself. Left to his fate, the detective weeps copiously and discovers a way out by means of his tears. Holding his streaming face over the fuse he sees the fatal spark go out under the flood of salty tears and, tearing his bonds asunder, he grabs a bomb and dashes after the gang.

Meantime the girl takes refuge up the ladder of a water tank, the gang following. Taking in the situation at a glance the relentless detective calls to the fair one to jump into his waiting arms, which she does, while the detective hurls the bomb into the midst of the ruffians. The tank is shattered and the gang fall to earth only to renew the chase with renewed vigor. The father and chauffeur, having witnessed the chase, now dash after the gang and a race ensues, ending in the crooks being precipitated into a raging stream, while the father clasps his daughter in his arms.

STRAND.

PUTTING ONE OVER (One Reel—Dec. 11).—Billie is strong for Fred, but she catches him flirting with a chum and resolves to administer drastic treatment. The next time her lover calls he is informed that Miss Billie is entertaining a caller and is compelled to wait on the porch. A dapper young man eventually leaves the house and Fred makes a second attempt to get in. He is informed that Miss Billie is expecting a foreign gentleman, who arrives shortly and stays much too long. When he departs there is a suspicious powder mark on his shoulder.

The strangers have both seen Billie, garbed in her brother's clothes. When Fred is admitted, remorseful, penitent and jealous, Billie keeps him waiting while she dons her dress. The plot is revealed by a trouser leg which protrudes beneath her skirt, but Fred admits that Billie "put one over."

LITTLE MISS FIXER (Dec. 18).—Billie and Cullen, after a brief matrimonial voyage, mutiny. He goes to the mountains and leaves Billie. Auntie, who intends to make Cullen her heir if he is happily married, arrives. Billy stalls and says hubby is entertaining customers. He is entertaining, but it is another girl. He returns when Billie sends an urgent call, Elsie, the other girl, coming too. Luckily, Billie and Auntie are out dining with one of Cullen's chums. They all meet in a cafe. Cullen has a scrap with his supposed rival and Billie doesn't smile sweetly at Elsie. Afterward, when Cullen explains they are "customers" and Elsie is delighted to change escorts, things are lovely.

MARY'S BOOMERANG (One Reel—Dec. 26).—Believing that all men are born flirts, Mary resolves to show up Cullen, Grace's husband, whom Grace thinks is a model. She writes a note to Cullen making an appointment at a hotel, wearing a white flower as a sign of recognition.

Cullen passes the buck to his friend Fred, who keeps the appointment, and they have a lobster and trimmings in the hotel cafe. When the waiter hands him the bill, Fred discovers he has left his wad on the piano at home, and calls up Cullen, who rushes to the rescue. Cullen's wife, Grace, returns home and is told by the maid that he has gone to the hotel. When he returns Grace is peeved at his absence.

In the meantime Fred has got too gay with Mary, who resents his manner and goes to Grace's house. Fred follows. There Mary finds Grace packed up and ready to leave, accusing Cullen of flirting. Explanations are in order, amicable relations established, Cullen vindicated and Mary convinced that she has handled a "boomerang."

HER SISTER (Empire All Star Corporation—Five Parts—Dec. 24).—The cast: Eleanor Alderson (Olive Tell); Ernest Bickley (David Powell); Jane Alderson (Eileen Dennes); Miss Minty (Anita Rothe); Mme. Blowsky (Mrs. Clarat-Bracy); Millie (Harriet Thompson); Tessie (Martha Dean); Mrs. Howard (Eileen Errol); Mrs. Bickley (Madeline Mercedith); Arnold Cullingworth (Chas. Edwards); Geo. Saunders (Sidney Blair); Chas. L. Hamilton (Herbert Evans); Mrs. Hamilton (Eleanor Seybolt). Directed by John B. O'Brien.

Eleanor Alderson and her young sister, Jane, lose their positions as models when Eleanor prevents Jane from accepting the invitations of buyers. Eleanor accepts the aid of a retired "seeress" and becomes known as "Isis, the Eastern Mystic," establishing herself and sister fashionably.

One of Jane's joy rides results in her being compromised with Hamilton, a married man whose wife seeks evidence for divorce. Eleanor arrives at the road house in time to save Jane, but Mrs. Hamilton files her suit, naming Jane. Eleanor has met and loves Ernest Bickley, the scarum scion of a wealthy house.

The avoid scandal, Jane accepts the hospitality of friends in a nearby city. Mrs. Herriard, an adventuress, sets her cap for Ernest and, learning of his love for Eleanor, attempts to break up the match while a guest at a party at the Bickley home, where Eleanor is also visiting.

In her exile, Jane falls in love with George Saunders, a chum of Ernest's, but she is panic-stricken when he attends the party, fearing he will learn the truth. A news story of the divorce trial, accompanied by a photograph of Eleanor, causes her to be regarded as the co-respondent, and to protect Jane, she finally acknowledges that she is the woman in the case.

Ernest refuses to believe Eleanor's self accusation. He learns that she has a sister, and by a clever scheme, leads her to believe that Jane is at the door, Eleanor falling into the trap and disclosing the secret. Her loyalty to her sister wins the entire Bickley family and Jane's name is cleared of the stain when it is learned she was innocently led into the affair.

CUB.

JERRY'S BEST FRIEND (One Reel—Dec. 27).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey), the Girl (Claire Alexander); Chuck Farley (Roy Watson). Directed by Charles Bartlett.

Jerry has a wonderful horse, named Oneta, which does everything but talk and, when in the open western country he sleeps beneath his mount, which thus serves both as shelter and guard.

Jerry is much in love with the daughter of a rancher and has a rival for her affections in the person of Chuck Farley, who is in reality a member of a notorious band of outlaws and horse thieves. The sheriff of the county has placed a reward on their apprehension and arrest.

Chuck becomes jealous of Jerry's standing with the girl and also envies him the beautiful horse, so plots with his outlaw band to waylay Jerry and take him to their mountain camp.

Here his faithful steed rescues him by untying his bonds. Jerry rides away, gets the girl and hurries to the sheriff and his posse, whom they lead to the successful capture of the gang. The girl's dream comes true when Jerry is presented with the reward, which he hands to the horse, who, in turn, gives it to the girl.

BULLETS AND BONEHEADS (Two Parts—Dec. 19).—The cast: G. Wataface (Dave Morris); Liberty Bell (Gladys Tennyson); I. Blew Bell (Rube Miller). Directed by Craig Hutchinson.

"I want a plain soda without chocolate flavor," chirped Liberty Bell, the silver-tongued gong of Muchroom Manor, to G. Wataface, the swiftest shooting soda squirter in the whole state. "We're all out of chocolate, but I can give you one without vanilla flavor," sighed the lover, and just then something happened—in walked father. Father, though a rabid prohibitionist always made it a point not to practice what he preached, so he ordered his daughter without—while he imbibed within his daily "medicine."

One night Sylvester Shellfish, a he vampire, spied Wataface depositing a note intended for Liberty Bell in the hollow of a tree, and conveyed the information to father, who had already severed diplomatic relations with the young soda dispenser. But Wataface was the original stick-to-it-kid, so he managed to free Liberty from her father's grasp, and elope with her to Allaboola. General Beetlebuzzer, of the Allaboola Army, goes courting, but when Wataface butts in and tries to help him make love to the Allaboola queen, Beetlebuzzer becomes indignant and gets his army of seven braves to wipe Wataface off the map. Liberty sends a telegram asking her father to get the army and navy to help them. This he does, and when he arrives at Allaboola the army and navy are already there. Wataface is about to be shot when father arrives, and, not knowing whose life he was about to save, disposes of the army in lightning fashion. He is about to shake hands with the wronged man, when he discovers that he saved the life of the villain who had kidnapped his daughter. Just then a healthy bomb, which had stayed from the fold, rushes up to them and bids them both a fond farewell and a pleasant journey.

NESTOR.

SECRET SERVANTS (One Reel—Dec. 17).—The cast: The Wife (Gale Henry); The Husband (William Francis).

Both husband and wife are afflicted with the same madness. They suffer from "daring abroad," a very dangerous disease. While the wife is yodling her tea with the butter the husband is whispering sweet nothings to the girl of the maid, but they catch each other when least expected, and the contribution to the happiness of the other is discharged. Without each other's knowledge they go to the park to air their passions, but when the servants reach the park they determine to get the "good" on their employers, so Bill, the husband, is photographed kissing the maid, while Gale, the wife, is photographed by the maid kissing the butler. When the films developed the two servants go to the house and demand their jobs back again. The evidence is enough, and they are dismissed, but there seems no way of getting the photographs destroyed, and when, after a great deal of searching the husband discovers the wife's photograph and the wife discovers her husband's photograph they realize that the servants are a couple of blackmailers, and oust them from the house, hiring a large colored lady as maid and an old Chinaman as valet, and the unity existing between these two servants is sufficient proof that the domestic harmony of Bill and Gale will never again be marred by the servant problem.

SPECIAL PRODUCTIONS.

BELOVED JIM (Five Parts—Dec. 17).—The cast: "Beloved" Jim Brockton (Harry Carter); Donald (J. Morris Foster); Mary (Priscilla Dean); Robert McGregor (Chas. Hill Mallets); Fritz Hahn (Frank Deshon); Lawrence Darcy (Sydney Deane); The Butler (Ed. Brown); The Derelict (Joseph Girard).

Jim Brockton had three interests in life: His nephew, Donald; the Trinity, three friends of different nationalities, but united by their love for Jim; and a faithful dog named Lady. His affection for Donald, his nephew, was entirely misplaced, and that unworthy young man laughed at his uncle every time he got a check from him, and proceeded to spend it upon riotous living. Christmas came, and with it Donald, who immediately proceeded to call his club friends around him and have a good time. Jim naturally was hurt, but excused Donald on the ground that youth seeks youth. But when he discovered his nephew and a group of his friends bear-baiting a poor beggar even his faith got a shock, but he took the derelict home and into his household and his heart. The next day the three friends introduced Jim to Mary, an admirable woman, and a year from that date saw them married. When Donald came home for Christmas a situation arose which was fraught with great danger, for Donald had previously been engaged to Mary, and had been low enough to permit an action of his toward her to be sadly misconstrued, destroying her reputation. In an endeavor to compromise her again the ingrate brought about two events which came near to wrecking Donald's life, but the old derelict saved the situation and exposed Donald for what he was.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Episode No. 4, "The Secret of the Tomb"—Two Parts—Dec. 22).

The yacht is in a desperate plight. Gaston is a prisoner below, and has stopped the engine. Betty is in a faint in the wheelhouse, with the boat drifting on the rocks. "Red," one of Miles Gaston's sailors, fights his way to the wheelhouse. He swings over the wheel; but without headway the boat seems doomed.

Suddenly arrives "The Mystery Ship" out of the mist. A strangely clad man hurls a coil of rope to the yacht and drags it away from its dangerous position. The people in the engine room, including Gaston, notice that their ship is moving; they do not know the reason and wonder. When the yacht is safe the occupant of the mysterious boat disappears. Betty's party, which had deserted her in the motor-boat, return and overcome Red, and put him below with Gaston. Betty tells her aunt and fiancé that her agreement was to hand over the map to Gaston if he would start the engine. Apparently he had done so, and she means to keep her word. Harry, hearing this, conceives an idea. He goes to the engine room, finds the map on the floor, and pockets it.

Gaston thinks Betty false to her word. Betty meanwhile writes a note in Gaston's stateroom to the effect that her intentions to keep her agreement were honorable; she did not remember anything which had happened during the night. On deck she tells of the letter. Harry sneaks away and tears up the letter, replacing it by another note reading: "Don't think I am a fool. Stay where you are. Betty." This is the note Gaston received.

Arriving at the Island of Hate, Betty realizes she is helpless to proceed with the search until she can locate the map, but goes ashore to look over the ruined temple her father told her about just before he died. When a sailor goes to the hold with food for Gaston and his fellow prisoners, he is overpowered, and Gaston and his men escape. Harry Russell, with half of the map, seeks to locate the hiding place. He is discovered by Betty, who grabs the map from his hands. He pretends he was trying to find the treasure for her, and determines to regain possession of the map if he has to kill Betty in doing so. So he begins to scrape away a section of the wall under Betty. It falls. Harry thinks Betty buried beneath, but she is caught by the wrists by a mysterious pair of strong hands.

Betty wonders who saved her, and Harry declares he did it, thus re-establishing her confidence. Betty enters the crypt containing mummies of kings in which her father found the treasure. As she pokes about a voice startles her. It is Gaston. He demands the map. He threatens to use force to get it. Betty is non-plussed. As they talk, Harry sneaks into the crypt. He advances noiselessly on Gaston, a boulder in his upraised hand, to strike him down.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 10, "Hearts of Steel"—Two Parts—Dec. 22).—The platinum sinks to the bottom of the lake, and Bertha hurries to inform her employer of what has happened, and the wrecking of Virginia's canoe. Winthrop is defending the cabin against attack, and, being wounded, has about reached the point of exhaustion.

As soon as Hirtzman learns that Virginia has eluded him and, in spite of her plan, lost the platinum he calls off the attackers, and they hurry to the lake to make an effort to recover the platinum.

Virginia has escaped from the collision unhurt, and made her way to the shore nearby. She sees Hirtzman's party locate the treasure. All set out for Lost Hope. She hurries to Winthrop with the news, and the two closely pursue. At Lost Hope, Hirtzman leaves the treasure with two of his trusted men, while he and the woman go up to their apartments and start to make further plans.

Fouchard, the innkeeper who has betrayed his country, has given orders about further operations. Winthrop and Virginia arrive at the inn. They realize that they are outnumbered, and decide on desperate means to recover the platinum in order to get it to the factory within the specified time.

Winthrop sneaks up to the inn and sets it on fire. Hirtzman and his party have a narrow escape. Fouchard is lost in the ruins of his hotel. Hirtzman and Steele get the platinum out, and, securing a rig, set out for the nearest railroad station. Winthrop and Virginia secure two horses and follow. At the cross-roads they have a fight, but Hirtzman and Steele elude the pursuers and drive furiously to the railroad station. An engine is standing near by while the crew are at lunch. Hirtzman and Steele, with the precious metal, board the engine and start off.

Virginia sees their plan and riding to the engine, tries to board it. Winthrop has seen her, and secures a railroad speedster. He follows the fast-rushing engine. Virginia catches the step of the tender, and, after she has rested a moment, pushes the muzzle of the revolver into Hirtzman's face. But Steele creeps up behind her and knocks down the weapon. Then he takes her and throws her out of the engine.

Somewhere in America.—At last the Allies' dream of mastery of the air is realized as hundreds of aviators prepare to join Pershing's forces. (Passed by Committee on Public Information.) Subtitles: An entire squadron going up for an "attack in force." Looping the loop. In daring exploits Uncle Sam's birdmen bid fair to rival the air heroes of the war. Swarming over the Teuton lines they will "see" the way to victory.

THE SEVEN PEARLS (Episode No. 15—"The Seventh Pearl"—Two Parts—Dec. 23).—The cast: Ilma (Mollie King) Harry Drake (Orelton Hale); Perry Mason (Leon Barry).

This is the fifteenth and final episode of "The Seven Pearls." The preceding episode closed at the watertank near the railroad tracks. When this tank fell, Perry Mason and Harry Drake were unconscious. The water revives Perry, who finds that Ilma has been thrown from the watertank close to Harry and that both are unconscious. He draws his revolver to shoot Harry but the gun fails to explode as all the cartridges had been used. He looks in his pockets for more cartridges and finds the seventh pearl, which he had secured. Hearing some men approaching he jumps on a passing freight train. Harry revives and carries Ilma to the station, where she is revived. They then board the train for the city.

Perry goes to Ilma's apartment and is searching for the pearls when Harry and Ilma enter. Ilma tells Harry that the six pearls she has secured are in the Security Safety Vaults. Perry overhears this and leaves Ilma's apartment without being discovered. He goes to the Security Vaults and rents a safety deposit box. In this Perry places a package containing chemicals, which he has prepared, sets a clock, which controls these chemicals, and locking the safety deposit box, leaves the vault.

The Sultan's Ambassador calls on Ilma for the seven pearls and reminds her that it is the last day she has to secure them. Ilma pleads with him and tells him she will give him the six pearls she has secured if he will cable to the Sultan for a few hours' extension of the time she has to secure the seventh. He agrees to do so. They go to the Security Safety Vault to get the pearls. Perry has been there before and had secured the pearls from the safety deposit box where Ilma had placed them. The chemicals Perry had placed in his safety deposit box gave off a gas that rendered the guards senseless, and Perry, wearing a gas mask, had been immune to this vapor. He is escaping with the pearls when Ilma, Harry and the ambassador enter; they are overcome by the gas when they attempt to capture Perry.

A general alarm is sent out and Harry learns that Perry was seen at Coney Island. He and Ilma and the police go to that resort and hear that Perry has been seen near the Eden Musee, which contains the wax figure of himself in the act of murdering his brother Charles. Ilma spies Perry and follows him into the Eden Musee. She loses track of him and Harry and the police tell her she must have been mistaken. As they leave the building, they hear a shot fired and return to find Kismet with a bullet hole through his head and Perry with the executioner's dagger through his heart. Kismet had discovered Perry in the act of gloating over the seven pearls he had obtained after he had thrown Harry, Ilma and the police off the scent by taking the place of his own wax figure in the murder group. Kismet had demanded one of the seven pearls, saying it belonged to his people, and Perry could have the others if he gave up that one. Perry refused, and in the fight that followed both men were killed. Ilma finds the seven pearls and returns them to the Sultan's ambassador.

In Harry's apartment after the wedding, Ilma is dressed in a Turkish costume. Harry enters. She puts a Turkish fez on his head and he sits beside her. Turning to him she says, "My Harry," and he answers, "My Harem."

OVER THE HILL (Astra—Five Parts—Dec. 30).

Amos Winthrop, owner of the Winthrop newspaper syndicate of "yellow" journals, delights in posing as the patron of ambitious youth, and he appoints Allan Stone as business manager of the Daily Pioneer at Columbia. The Rev. Timothy Neal, compelled to resign his pastorate because of advancing years, and his granddaughter, Esther, arrive in Columbia, where the minister hopes to make a living selling books. The one failure in Amos Winthrop's life is his pampered son, Roy, and the father sends Roy to Columbia to work as a reporter on the staff of the Daily Pioneer.

Rev. Neal takes many and varied lessons in the gentle art of book-agenting but success does not come to him and Esther is at her wit's end trying to instruct her grandfather how to approach strangers. Their little store of savings dwindle. Jim Barnes is editor of the Daily Pioneer and he delights in applying big-town methods to a small-town paper. He prints sensational stories and is supported in his methods by young Winthrop. Stone, on the other hand, asserts that scandal about people kills advertising prospects. The owner of Columbia's largest department store is Henry Lawlor, and the Daily Pioneer advertising staff longs to secure Lawlor to an advertising contract.

Pneumonia attacks Rev. Neal and he passes away, leaving his granddaughter, Esther, alone in the world. She has met both Allan Stone and Roy Winthrop. The time comes when the only hope of the Daily Pioneer is the Lawlor advertising contract. There is an agreement that if the paper fails to make a stipulated showing before a specified date, Allan Stone and Jim Barnes shall forfeit all claim to their respective shares of stock in said paper. Young Winthrop antagonizes Lawlor and it seems that the contract is lost. He prepares a story dealing with the purported elopement of Lawlor's daughter and the same is set in type.

Esther, considering it a "spite story," burns the entire edition of the Daily Pioneer, thus preventing the story from being read. In so doing she earns the gratitude of Lawlor, who gives the paper the advertising patronage. Amos Winthrop, summoned to Columbia, appreciates the foolishness of his son and orders him to leave Columbia and return home where the father can keep an eye on the boy. Stone wins an allotment of stock in the Daily Pioneer and wins Esther for his bride.

in answer to a telegram from Bud Haskel, True's representative in the West, decide to go westward immediately to inspect a newly-discovered copper mine.

Bud Haskel is, incidentally, volunteer "school master" to the flock of a spy camp, Romany. The girl is loved by Zinga, son of the spy chief. Upon her father's threat to wed her to Zinga, Romany seeks the help of Bud, who aids her to escape. Zinga suspects Bud of conniving at Romany's escape and follows him constantly. Irking under the restraints of her new life, Anitra decides to give her former gayeties a whirl and finds in True's nephew, Hobart, a willing assistant. She learns the enmity of "Inky," who resolves to put True wise to the fact that the actress is not really his daughter. Romany, with the broader knowledge of life, imparted to her by books, turns to her new world with keen expectancy, and is glad to receive Bud again at her first party. That same evening Romany discovers Hobart at his uncle's safe, but does not discover the fact that Hobart has extracted money from the strong box.

Determined to make True see that he is being imposed upon by Anitra, "Inky" seeks out Bud Haskel, telling Bud that the actress is not True's daughter, and that he ("Inky") has cooked up a press stunt to advertise the show she was in. Zinga's persistent shadowing of Bud to uncover Romany's whereabouts succeeds at last. One development is that Romany writes a letter to True stating that she has been grateful to True and Haskel for their kindness, but that she must leave the True Home; that she is broken hearted.

Romany is then suspected of taking the money from True's safe, but after Anitra's deception is exposed to True, Hobart confesses to his uncle that he (Hobart) is the guilty one. Bud discovers Romany's whereabouts and persuades her to return to True's mansion. Bud also secures Zinga's release from prison, where he has been confined upon Zinga's assurance that he has a revelation to make to Mr. True. The gypsy tells True that Romany is really True's daughter; that when the girl grew up Zinga wanted her for himself. That the gypsies named her Romany. True is happy in the recovery of his daughter, and Bud and Romany plight their troth.

THIRTY DAYS (One Reel—Dec. 17).—The cast: Mr. Newlywed (Jay Belasco); Mrs. Newlywed (Ethel Lynne); Billy (Billy Mason). Directed by Al. E. Christie.

A craving for a night with the boys brings grief to the home of the Newlyweds. Jay is at the club and the hour is late. Mrs. Newlywed paces the floor and halts when a cuckoo clock announces the hour of one. She gives up hope and prepares to retire. When the game breaks up, Jay wanders home and makes a stealthy entrance. The cuckoo calls twice. Jay promptly cuckoos some more with the hope of fooling his wife on the hour of his return. She is far from fooled and makes life miserable for him. The next morning at breakfast a messenger brings a telegram that calls for Mrs. Newlywed's immediate departure for her mother's, who is ill. She leaves for the train after making Jay promise not to go to the club during her absence.

Jay determines to bring the club to him. He calls the boys and invites them to a game at his house. While he is talking to them he sees men post a quarantine notice on the house next door. Soon after the game starts Jay sees an old couple approaching the house, and recognizes his wife's uncle and aunt. In desperation he steals the fever sign from the neighbor's house and posts it on his own door. The ruse works and the couple depart in all speed.

Trouble develops when the boys attempt to leave the house after the game. Every effort is foiled by the health officers, until Jay calls the club, and his pals promise to assume the role of undertakers and carry them from the house in coffins. Ethel, in the meantime, gives up the journey to her mother and returns in time to upset all their plans. The police arrest Jay and the boys and they are sentenced to thirty days in jail for the disturbance they have caused. Ethel forgives Jay when she sees him behind the bars.

NEARLY A PAPA (One Reel—Dec. 24). Jack Gordon is happily married, but his great ambition is to be a father. He is offered a position in another city which necessitates his absence from home for a time. Before he leaves he finds a baby's sock on the floor of his wife's bedroom. This he surmises promises a speedy realization of his dream.

Soon after Jack is established in his new position, Helen, his wife's sister, and her young baby, arrive at the Gordon apartment on a visit from the East. Mrs. Gordon sends her husband a telegram: "Big surprise for you, sister, baby arrived today, all well, love, Helen." But the operator made a mistake, and Jack's message read, "Big surprise for you, mister baby arrived today—etc." Jack leaves for home.

On the way from the depot to his home he buys an armload of toys. Meanwhile, Mrs. Gordon and Lucille have gone shopping. Lucille has left her baby with Mrs. Gordon's sister and her child. When Jack arrives at his apartment he finds two children, owing to the temporary absence of Ethel, who has gone out for a bottle of milk. Jack attempts fathering both, unsuccessfully, and while his attention is centered on one of them, Lucille returns and takes her baby. Jack soon misses it and calls in the police. In the midst of the confusion, Mrs. Gordon returns. She is surprised to see Jack. He shows her his telegram. She smilingly corrects it. Jack's hopes are shattered.

CUPID'S CAMOUFLAGE (Dec. 31).

Betty had never met romance, so didn't recognize it, but Billy was willing to look it in the face wherever he met it. Betty was on her way to her aunts and Billy was returning from college. They were both on the train. Billy smiled and so did Betty. The train stopped at a station amid a field of flowers and Betty jumped to the platform for a brief stroll. Billy followed and the flowers opened the way for an acquaintance. Billy started to pick some for Betty and the train started. Billy got the flowers but lost Betty and the train.

Billy's father, a wealthy milk dealer, starts his son in at the bottom of the ladder driving a milk wagon. Coincidence works its magic, and Betty substitutes for her aunt's maid, who has been taken ill just when company is expected. Billy delivers the milk at Betty's back door and they are reunited. Love at first sight. Billy is offered promotion, but refuses it and sticks to the wagon. His father is proud of such a son. Every day Betty manages to meet Billy by bribing the maid, until one day auntie catches Billy kissing Betty, and promises to report him to the company.

Love triumphs when Betty suggests that the company couldn't in fairness discharge a married man. Billy whisks her into the wagon and they make a quick run for the minister. Billy arrives at his father's office with Betty just as Betty's aunt has indignantly demanded Billy's discharge. The father promised to fire the man who dared to kiss his customer's daughter, but everything is happily adjusted when it is found that Billy is the son of the wealthy milk dealer.

FOX FILM CORP.

TROUBLEMAKERS (Fox Standard Pictures—Seven Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Mrs. Lehr (Lillian Concord); Jane and Katherine, her children (Jane Lee, Katherine Lee respectively); Daniel Whitcomb (Richard Turner); Job Jenkins (Robert Vivian); Isaac White (William T. Hays); "Manny" (Stuart Sage); Cynthia (Frances Miller). Story and direction Kenean Buel.

Mrs. Lehr, a young widow who grew up in Cuttleback, decided, after her husband's death in the west, to return, with her children, Katherine and Jane, to Cuttleback, and make her home on the old family estate, which, during her absence, had been looked after by Job Jenkins, caretaker, in the Lehr family's employ since boyhood. Job had been the sole occupant of the estate for so many years that he regarded it as part and parcel of his life, and he was disturbed when he learned that his mistress was coming back with her two children.

Daniel Whitcomb, Cuttleback's leading attorney, read with interest the notice in Cuttleback's newspaper about Mrs. Lehr's intended return, and pondered the romance that had connected his and her life before she left for the west. He wondered if her return would awaken the old-time affection he felt she once entertained for him.

He remembered that before she left Cuttleback she had asked him to see her, which he was prevented from doing by reason of his mother's desperate illness. He had written, but his letter miscarried, and did not reach her until she had become the wife of another. She replied informing him of her marriage and hinting at her disappointment in his not having seen her before she left, but absolving him from any intention to purposely slight her. It happened that Mrs. Lehr and Mr. Whitcomb did renew their old love story.

While this was going on Jane and Katherine were making things hum around the Lehr estate and old Job's patience was taxed to its limit. The kiddies formed a warm attachment for an odd job, handy man, of slow "Manny," who while doing chores about the place, found time to amuse the youngsters and became their faithful attendant.

One day Job's belongings had been removed from his room and the faithful old gardner had dropped out of sight. This happened on a day when a barn on the Lehr estate was destroyed by fire. A charred skull found in the ruins formed the basis for a charge of murder preferred by the town constable against dull-witted Manny.

Mrs. Lehr believed him guiltless, but couldn't prove his innocence, and the children "just knew" he never killed Job or anybody else, but, like their mother, couldn't prove it. Mrs. Lehr sought Daniel Whitcomb's aid, but not only did he refuse her plea, but stated it as his belief that "Manny" was guilty. His decision brought about a break in his love affair with Mrs. Lehr and earned for him the dislike of Jane and Katherine.

"Manny" was tried and convicted—wholly upon circumstantial evidence, and he was being led to the electric chair, when Jane and Katherine arrive on the scene with the supposed murdered man, Job, whom accidentally they had found and who knew nothing about "Manny's" predicament. Of course, everything was cleared up, and Jane and Katherine got a new daddy.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

BOBBY TAKES A WIFE (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Aida (Aida Horton); Uncle John (Templar Saxe); Aunt Jen (Eulalie Jensen).

Bobby and his uncle live together in bachelor disorder, until Bobby makes friends with Aida, who is living with her maiden aunt in the house next door, and who are also finding many difficulties in an unmarried state. While Bobby and his uncle John are struggling with buttons that refuse to stay on, Aida and her aunt Jane have their own troubles with wood that is reluctant to be chopped.

Through the offices of the appealing Bobby and the delightful Aida, the aunt and uncle are married and all come to live together in Uncle John's house. For a time all is serene and the four are very happy, but Aunt Jane begins to resent John's smoking in the house, reprimands him severely for not wiping his feet, refuses to allow him to attend his lodge meetings and in many ways gradually changes from a loving wife into a tyrant.

Bobby and Aida watch all this, and with childish imitiveness work it into their play. One day Aunt Jane hears the children in the yard just after she has had a bitter quarrel with Uncle John and steals out to watch them. The little ones are playing at being married and in their play enact the scenes which they have witnessed in the house. Aida bullies and tyrannizes over her play-husband, Bobby, scolds him for not wiping his feet, snatches his corn-cob pipe from his mouth, tells him she has nothing to wear, and so antagonizes him that he rebels and refuses to play further.

Jane, realizing whither she and her husband have been drifting, goes silently back to the house, but she has learned her lesson and when John returns that evening she goes back to her attitude of the first days of marriage, they are BOBBY'S COUNTRY ADVENTURE (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Aida, the daughter (Aida Horton); Grandpere (Richard Wangeman).

Bobby and his grandfather have reached the end of their resources and they sit in their shabby garret wondering what is to become of them. Grandfather is too old to work and he is estranged from his only brother, a well-to-do farmer in Vermont. But the brother writes telling him to "forget the past" and bring himself and Bobby to the farm to live.

The two have no money for railroad fares, but bravely begin the long walk. They are almost at grandfather's brother's home when they come to a sign post which mischievous boys have changed so that they think they are still very far from friends and, discouraged, crawl into an empty corn-crib to rest.

Too hungry to sleep, Bobby goes out to forage and meets Jacqueline, who falls in love with him on the spot, obtains him food and even steals her grandfather's watch so the wayfarers may know when to rise and resume their journey in the morning. But the owner of the corn-crib is bitter against tramps, and when he sees Bobby and Grandfather emerge from their sleeping place the next morning, he calls his aged father and two farm laborers and they seize the two destitutes.

But through the trick of the boys in changing the guide-post Bobby and Grandfather have been so close to their destination that they have slept in the shed of the brother whom they were seeking—the grandfather whose watch little Jacky stole to give to her sudden sweetheart is the brother of Bobby's Grandfather, and Jacqueline is his granddaughter. So the two old men, who had been estranged and parted for so long, weep in each other's arms and Bobby is given the watch as a reward for his courage.

TO THE RESCUE (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Aida (Aida Horton).

Bobby is a ragged waif deserted by his parents and picked up by the leader of a gang of black-mallers who forces him to play a violin in the streets and then take all the pennies he gets. One day, Bobby wanders where only rich folks live and plays before an iron gate where a dainty little miss is playing with her dolls. She and Bobby talk and her father gives Bobby a dollar, more money than he ever got before.

That night when Pietro, Bobby's master, hears about the dollar he tells Bobby to bring the little girl to their wretched home to see a miniature steamship he is making. And Bobby thinking nothing wrong gets little Aida away from her fine home. Then Bobby is locked in a room and Aida is made a prisoner in the cellar while Pietro and his accomplices write a letter to Aida's father demanding a ransom.

Bobby overhears the plot and slips away to a cellar window and gets Aida out and takes her back home just as her distracted father and mother are beginning to search for her. Pietro and the other men are arrested and Bobby is kept in the fine home as Aida's own little "bruvver."

BOBBY, THE MAGICIAN (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Aida (Aida Horton).

Entranced by the wonders performed by a magician who entertains the guests at his birthday party, when Bobby is given the magic wand which apparently does these wonders and his little sweetheart expresses a preference for an apple over a walnut, he tells her to look under her pillow the next morning. During the night he steals to her home and replaces the nut, which she holds clasped in her hand, with the wished-for apple. Later, when her canary dies, he demonstrates the efficacy of the wand by taking away the dead bird, returning with a live one which he has bought with a five-dollar gold piece, received on his birthday.

His little sweetheart's mother, Mrs. Grover, falls ill, and Bobby's adored one calls upon him to make her well. Through the agency of the young magician's father, a widower with a fast growing interest in Mrs. Grover, a New York doctor is brought, who effects a cure.

Then comes the final test of the wand. The little girl demands that the wonderful instrument bring her a father as nice as Bobby's. For a moment he is at a loss, but then, recovering, he replies that the job is too big for him, but that he will ask his father what should be done. Willingly the boy's father takes the wand and goes to Mrs. Grover, later calling in the children and telling them that Bobby is to have a new mother and his little sweetheart a new father.

IN THE BALANCE (Five Parts—Dec. 17).—The cast: John Strangeway (Eddie Williams); Louise Maurel (Grace Hammond); Sophy Grallard (Miriam Miles); Prince of Seyre (Gaston Vane); Stephen Strangeway (Robert Gaillard); Gralliot (Templar Saxe). Directed by Paul Scardon.

The actress is on her way to visit the Prince in his castle when she is stranded on a lonely road by an accident to her motor car. The Hillman happens along and takes her to Peak Hall. He is still young and handsome, but marked by the stern, fanatical blood of his family that no member of it ever should leave the hills.

In an exchange of confidences, the Hillman warns the actress not to visit the dissolute Prince, and she in turn tells him that for once he should try the broader life of the cities. Both heed the other's advice. She returns direct to the city, and he, in a brief period, follows.

The Prince, still pursuing the actress, seeks to entangle the Hillman by throwing a notorious dancer in his path, but fails. Strangeway, the Hillman, proposes to Louise. His brother comes from the hills to reclaim him, but his mission is vain. Again the Hillman proposes to Louise, who is always in the company of the Prince, and this time is accepted.

Angered at his apparent loss of the actress, the Prince makes a scandalous remark about her at his club, which is resented with blows by the Hillman, whose love is all but crushed, when hurrying to Louise she admits what the Prince said is true.

The Hillman returns to Peak Hill where a few months later as he is reading in a paper of the engagement of the actress and the Prince, she arrives at his home. She assures him that she is good, not bad, and that she did make the promise to the Prince when she believed he loved her, and both the Hillman and his brother receive her as one of them.

BLUE JEANS (Special Release—Seven Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: June (Viola Dana); Perry Bascom, known as Jim Nelson (Robert Walker); Sue Eudaly (Sally Crute); Ben Boone (Clifford Bruce); Col. Henry Clay Risener (Henry Hallam); Jacob Tutwiler (Russell Simpson); Cindy Tutwiler (Margaret McWade); Jack Bascom (Augustus Phillips). Directed by John H. Collins. Adapted by June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor from Joseph Arthur's famous melodrama.

Perry Bascom comes to the town of Rising Sun, Indiana, to take charge of the sawmills which have for years been managed by his father's best friend, Col. Henry Clay Risener. His father's half-brother, Jack, has brought the name into disrepute in the town, so he (Perry) decides to be known as Jim Nelson. Perry sees June, who has been sent away from the poorhouse. He shares his lunch with her and protects her from the attentions of Ben Boone, the political bully of the town.

June finds a home with old Jacob and Cindy Tutwiler, taking the place of their own daughter, whom Jacob had banished from home eighteen years before, and whose picture has been turned to the wall. Perry becomes the conservative candidate for Congress, opposing Ben Boone, who is the candidate of the liberal party. Perry asks June to marry him if he proves successful.

Perry receives a call from Sue Eudaly, with whom he has gone through a marriage ceremony, but whom he left on finding she had a husband living. Her husband, Jim White, has disappeared, and she defies Perry to prove her previous marriage. She threatens to go to the rival candidate with her information, and Col. Risener, as Perry's campaign manager, buys her off. June is alarmed at the interest Sue shows in the man she loves, and Perry urges her to marry him at once, secretly. June continues to live with the Tutwilers. She has discovered that their daughter, who had married a hated Bascom, was her own mother, and that she is the granddaughter of Jacob and Cindy.

Ben Boone has fallen in love with Sue, and his affection is returned. At the political rally June leads the village band, trying to drown out the voice of Boone when he harangues the crowd. The tide seems to be turning against Boone. Sue, deciding to explode a bomb in the camp of his opponents, takes her stand beside Perry and tells him he is a Bascom. She says she knows the wife he has deserted. June says that it is not true, since she herself is his wife.

But the townspeople will not listen. They believe that he has deceived June, and refuse to believe anything good of a Bascom. The Tutwillers take June home with them and Perry is ordered to get out of town.

Perry goes to the Tutwillers' to see June before he leaves. Sue is there. He denies that she is his wife, but she horrifies them all by saying that if Perry's father lured June's mother away from home, Perry and June are brother and sister. Cindy dispels that thought by producing a photograph of June's father. It is Jack Bascom, the half-brother of Perry's father—not a true Bascom by birth. Perry goes away to obtain proof of Sue Eudaly's husband, and June leaves the house, refusing to have anything to do with her grandfather until he retracts his insults to Perry.

Ostracised by the townspeople, June lives in a humble cottage, where her child is born. Cindy goes to see the little one, but June will not permit Jacob to come until he admits that he is sorry. Perry at last returns with proof of Jim White's marriage to Sue.

He seeks Boone at the mill. Boone cannot understand why Sue refuses to marry him. She finally tells him it is because she has a husband living, and that husband is Perry. Boone attacks Perry and overpowers him. Placing him on the log-carriage, he turns the great lever. He has locked June, who has followed her husband, inside the office. Then he and Sue make their escape. Through the glass door June watches her husband's body approaching the teeth of the saw. Breaking the glass of the door, she plunges out, and, reversing the lever just in time, saves Perry from the saw.

Misfortune overtakes Sue and Boone, and with their baneful influence removed, June, Perry and the little one begin a happier life in the little town, with the love and respect of all.

THE TENTH CASE (Five Parts—Dec. 17).—The cast: Claudia Payton (June Elvidge); Sanford King (John Bowers); Jerome Landis (George Macquarrie); Harry Landis (Gladden James); Schuyler Payton (Eric Mayne); Laura Brandon (Eloise Clement); Judge Wallace (Charles Dungan). Directed by George Kelson.

The Peyton family consists of Claudia, an only child, and her father, John, a man of the world, who is supporting in luxury Laura Brandon. Claudia chides Sanford King, a young attorney and legal adviser to the Peyton family because he permits his law practice to take him away from his friends. Jerome Landis, a wealthy widower, proposes to Claudia; she refuses him. Payton loses heavily in the stock market, and informs Claudia that if financial assistance is not forthcoming they will be paupers.

To save her father, Claudia accepts the wealthy Landis, and they are soon married. At a luncheon, Laura meets Harry Landis, nephew of Jerome Landis, and invites him to her apartment. While the newlyweds are on their honeymoon Harry becomes entangled in the toils of Laura. He makes a demand for money on his uncle, which is refused. Harry tells his uncle that the reason why he is not able to help him out is due to the latter's butterfly wife, who married him for his money. Landis becomes infuriated. Claudia, not knowing where Harry's money is going, and feeling as though she is duty-bound to give him some part of her $25,000 wedding present she received from her husband, is handing him a check—the performance being overseen by Landis.

A son is born to Claudia. Harry keeps bleeding Claudia for money, until finally she is forced to tell him that she will not give him another cent. Harry accepts the ultimatum, but says she will regret it. Laura learns from Harry the state of affairs and together they plan a frame-up. That night when Claudia's back is turned, Harry slips into her room and conceals himself behind a screen. She retires, and when her husband returns home he discovers Harry in compromising attire, and believes her unfaithful. Claudia goes to her aunt, and divorce proceedings are started.

Sanford takes charge of Claudia's legal interests. At the summing up of the case the judge makes the following statement: "In nine out of ten cases of circumstantial evidence like this, those concerned are guilty"—and is to hand down his decision the next day. Sanford and Claudia are fearful of the outcome. She tells Sanford she has a plan, which involves a considerable amount of risk.

They go that night to the home of Judge Wallace, and while Claudia is awaiting the judge's return, Sanford slips upstairs. The judge's wife comes in and Claudia says that she has come to plead for intercession on behalf of her child. The wife says she cannot interfere with her husband's affairs. To the judge Claudia makes a frantic plea, but it is of no use. Claudia leaves. The judge goes to his wife's bedroom and is speaking with her when a vase of flowers falls. He fires. Sanford, with coat and collar off, steps from behind the curtains. The judge cannot believe his senses.

The wife protests her innocence—he is suspicious until Sanford explains. "Circumstantial evidence, your honor, may be right in nine cases out of ten; but this, too, is the tenth case."

The decisions handed down by the judge the next day grants the father the divorce, but gives the mother custody of her child for half of the year. Sanford again tells Claudia of his love for her, but she would not think of marriage with the stigma on her name. Harry Landis and Laura Brandon are on a joy-ride. The machine becomes unmanageable and goes over the cliffs, killing Laura instantly, but giving time to Harry to tell the bystanders of his frame-up on Claudia. Jerome Landis then realizes the terrible wrong he has done Claudia, goes to her a suppliant, and is forgiven.

THE PROSPECTOR (Two Parts—Dec. 29).—The cast: The Prospector (Billy West); The Pet of the Camp (Beatrice Joy); The Town Drunkard (Budd Ross); The Saloonkeeper (Oliver Hardy); The Greaser (Leo White). Scenario by Rex Taylor.

After a luckless prospecting trip, Billy starts homeward across the desert, mounted on his little burro with his pick, shovel and pack strapped up behind him. Finally he comes in sight of Red Dog Gulch and, hungry and thirsty, he pushes on toward the city. Susie is the daughter of the town drunkard. She starts out on her horse for a little ride, and a little way from town is attacked by Pedro and Little Casino, two Mexicans, who try to steal her horse. Billy happens along, runs the Mexicans off and takes Susie back to town.

Arriving in town, Billy's first thought is for food. Being without a cent, he hocks the burro in the local pawnshop and goes at once to the restaurant, where he orders a large feed. In the midst of his dinner, he remembers the burro, and knowing that he must be hungry, too, Billy gathers the rest of his dinner and goes to feed his little pal. The pawnshop is closed for the night, and Billy breaks in a window and feeds the burro. He is discovered by the pawnbroker and arrested for burglary, though with Susie to vouch for him, the court soon releases him.

Billy then wanders into the main saloon, gambling room, dance hall, where he has many exciting adventures with the roulette wheel, with a dance-hall vampire and with the local bad man. He finally gets into such a mess that he is forced to run for his life. He breaks into the pawnshop again and steals his burro out to escape on. Then with most of the town in pursuit, he starts out across the desert.

Meanwhile, Oliver, who is the owner of the saloon, has been making love to Susie, who resents it and will have nothing to do with him. Oliver then engages Pedro and Little Casino to kidnap the girl. They do, and are just taking her to their den in the mountains when Billy, in trying to escape from the posse, blunders into them and makes the capture. The posse arrives, bent on hanging Billy, but when they find that he has rescued the pet of the town, they give him three cheers and hang the Mexicans instead. Billy then beats up Oliver for his share in the proceedings, and Susie rewards him in the best approved style.

PARAMOUNT.

THAT NIGHT (Mack Sennett—Two Parts—Dec. 17).—There is harmony in The Cafe until it is accidentally discovered that lovely Mary has had a fortune left her, whereupon Beery, the proprietor, Trask and Murray, two entertainers, all race to her home with the idea of marrying her. Now it chances that Beery is married already, but in order to get the money he hires a crook to pose as a minister, planning to get the fortune through a fake marriage.

He nearly succeeded. The minister arrives promptly, however, as does Trask, who, finding the parson at hand, bribes him to double cross Beery and marry him (Trask) to Mary. Trask, though, believes it to be a wedding on the square.

Then ensues a sequence of the funniest, rapid fire complications imaginable. "You're not married," becomes the slogan of everybody, including the police force. Once the bogus status of the minister has been established, there is a wild chase after the couple, who, in the meantime, have secured a nice little honeymoon flat.

Before they are located, however, the newlyweds have a scrap so that the honeymoon flat is vacant when Charlie Murray arrives. He, too, gets into trouble and, indeed, is so lit up he does not know he is in the wrong room and he's in the bathroom in his pajamas when Mary arrives.

Naturally it doesn't look good to "hubby" when he appears on the scene and he isn't a bit slow in unlimbering his trusty shooting iron. And into the melee somehow comes mother-in-law, the police and a bunch of thoroughly irate citizens of the ultra respectable type, whom the police have routed out through mistaken identity.

The chase that follows is a scream and all through it one observes apartments on whose doors marriage licenses are nailed, proof of the widespread havoc caused by Beery's villainy.

Meanwhile, however, a real parson arrives and the principals again assemble for a real wedding which is about to take place, when it is learned that no fortune is coming to Mary. Right away Trask gets cold feet, Beery being already out of the running, but noble Charlie Murray steps to the front. "I love you for yourself alone," he chortles, and they are made one, only to learn that the act has, after all, brought Mary her fortune.

NAN OF MUSIC MOUNTAIN (Five Parts—Dec. 17).—The cast: Henry De Spain (Wallace Reid); Nan Morgan (Ann Little); Duke Morgan (Theodore Roberts); Gale Morgan (James Cruze); Sassoon (Charles Ogle); Logan (Raymond Hatton); Sandusky (Hart Hoxie); Bull Page (Guy Oliver); Scott (James P. Mason); Jeffries (Henry Woodward); Lefever (Ernest Joy); Nita (Alice Marc); McAlpin (Horace B. Carpenter).

Henry de Spain, a young mountaineer of about twenty-eight, is made general manager of the Thief River Stage Line because he has nerve and can shoot. It is understood that he is to "clean up" the gang of outlaws in Morgan Gap, led by Duke Morgan, with whose pretty niece, Nan, de Spain is in love. Sassoon starts the trouble by a knifing, but de Spain catches him. The laugh is soon turned, though, for Sassoon escapes and soon after de Spain himself is wounded in a fight with about seven of the Morgan gang.

He is severely wounded and falls from the horse. The horse runs away, and de Spain is left there unconscious. He is finally discovered by Nan, who cannot forget her resentment even when she sees that he is half dead. Later she learns the true story of his attack by her relatives and from his own lips the reason of his being a gunman.

This was that his father was shot in the back by one of the mountaineers and soon after his mother had died from the effects of the shock, leaving him with a birthmark to commemorate his father's tragic death. Nan is won over to his side the more easily that she is already half in love with the handsome gunman. A few days later she helps him escape. Afterwards, although he takes every opportunity for seeing her, they seldom meet and her uncle very nearly succeeds in marrying her to her worthless cousin, Gale Morgan.

Duke Morgan is thrown from his horse and seriously hurt. Nan comes to nurse him at the hospital, where de Spain has been since he was shot. De Spain leaves soon after her arrival, but comes to see her under the pretext of bringing supplies. It is while there that she at last surrenders to his pleading and consents to become formally "engaged." Gale learns of the affair and tells Duke. Nan is forced to confess her love for de Spain and her uncle tells her that she will never marry him. Gale wins old Duke's permission to marry Nan and the girl is kept a prisoner in her room until she will consent to marrying her cousin.

One night de Spain gets the following message: "Take me away from here as soon as you can." He knows it is from Nan. He rides to the Morgan ranch, and overhears Duke and Gale planning Nan's marriage. He reveals himself and holds the men at bay while he and Nan, who has appeared, escape. Sassoon, a bad man, nearly kills de Spain, but the latter manages to get a successful shot at his enemy and they reach town, where he takes Nan to the home of one of his friends.

Henry de Spain learns that old Duke Morgan was the one who killed his father. Nan, broken-hearted, starts back to her uncle to learn the truth. She tries to bring him to de Spain, but they are caught in a blizzard, and only saved by de Spain just as they are about to succumb. Duke tells de Spain that he and Sassoon both shot at his father, but that they never knew which shot proved fatal, and they learned, to their horror soon after, that de Spain was not the man they were after—who had killed a member of their clan. There is a make-shift wedding ceremony performed right there in the snow, for old Duke gives in at last to the lovers, but later at the settlement there is a more elaborate wedding, which serves to unite the two enemy factions.

THE FAIR BARBARIAN (Five Parts—Dec. 17).—An Englishman who has made his fortune in America decides to return to England. He takes his daughter, Octavia, to pay a visit to her relatives, especially Miss Belinda Bassett, an aunt whom she has never seen. The father is called to America by an important business cable, and Octavia goes on alone to her aunt. Slowbridge, the home of this aunt, is a sleepy little English village whose snobbish small-town aristocracy is headed by the pompous Lady Theobald. Lady Theobald has everyone under her thumb, including Miss Bassett and her own granddaughter, Lucia, a sweet, shy English girl.

Octavia has about the effect of a dynamite bomb in Slowbridge. Her dresses, her breezy ways, her unconventional conduct, all infuriate Lady Theobald, and at first terrify her aunt. Little by little, however, Octavia becomes a general favorite. She enjoys engineering a love affair between the bashful Lucia and a fine young man, who because he is a mere manufacturer, and not a "gentleman of leisure," has no social standing in Slowbridge.

The worst blow to Lady Theobald comes when her nephew, Captain Barold, becomes exceedingly fond of Octavia. His manner of demonstrating his affection does not please Octavia, for he seems to feel that he is doing her a tremendous favor in bestowing his affection upon her. She decides to teach him a lesson.

Lady Theobald wants Captain Barold to marry her niece, Lucia. Lucia, however, is in love with the manufacturer. Lady Theobald is horrified when she sees Octavia snatching this wonderful catch away from Lucia. Just when Slowbridge is about to blow up with agitation, Captain Barold puts his fortune to the test. He asks Octavia to marry him. She refuses, thereby succeeding in injuring his bump of conceit.

Octavia's father arrives with the news that he is more than a millionaire—that his mining stock has recently doubled in value. With him comes Jack Belsays, an energetic American youth who is a type as foreign to Slowbridge as Octavia. What is the surprise of the small township to learn that Octavia has been engaged to Jack all the time, and never at all anxious to fasten herself upon English small-town society or to intrude into their affairs.

A marriage ceremony follows in Miss Bassett's little villa with young Poppleton, the curate officiating. Through Octavia's good offices, another wedding follows later—that of Lucia and the young manufacturer, whom even Lady Theobald has come to realize is fully worthy of respect—and of the hand of her granddaughter, Lucia.

HIS MOTHER'S BOY (Five Parts—Dec. 24).—The cast: Matthew Denton (Charles Ray); Mabel Glenn (Doris Lee); Banty Jones (William Elmer); Tom Glenn (Joseph Swickard); Jimmie Noonan (Jerome Storm); Mrs. Denton (Gertrude Claire); Mrs. Glenn (Lydia Knott). Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

Matthew Denton is a product of a New England village. His father was a prominent business man, who, during the latter part of his life, had encouraged a number of his fellow-townsmen to invest in the Centipede Company, owners of Texas oil property. Matthew lives with his widowed mother. She showers a wealth of motherly care on him, and refuses to permit him to mingle with the other lads of the town, with the result that he grows up tied to her apron strings, and is known as "his mother's boy."

The purchasers of the Centipede stock receive notice that there will be no dividend, that the stock gives every indication of becoming worthless because of a loss in the wells' producing capacity. A delegation of townspeople, calling on Matthew's mother, denounce her late husband for having induced them to purchase the stock. Matthew overhears the tirade, comes to his mother's assistance, and declares that none shall lose a penny through this investment, for he will go to Texas, work in the oil fields himself, and eventually pay off the investors.

The story shifts from the quaint New England village to a bustling town in Texas—a typical oil town, with its hordes of workers, its rudely constructed hotel and ever-present bar, and its town drunkard, who has a wife and pretty daughter. Matthew begins his career as a workman in one of the oil wells, and lives at the boarding house of Mrs. Glenn, where he meets her daughter, Mabel.

Tom Glenn, the town drunkard, in order to procure money with which to buy liquor, has been tapping the line of the Centipede Company and diverting the flow into his pipe of another concern. Most of the workers live at the Glenn home, among them Banty Jones, the town bully, who has paid Tom Glenn to tap the Centipede line. Banty wants to marry Mabel Glenn, but Matthew wins her love, and when the girl proudly displays an engagement ring, Jones gives Matthew twenty-four hours in which to leave town, with the alternative of being the target for Jones' gun. Matthew's innate timidity makes him cower before the savage verbal attacks of Jones, much to the disgust of Mabel, who returns the ring and announces that from that moment no engagement exists.

In the meantime, Matthew has discovered the parallel pipe lines, and that night sees Tom Glenn about to tap the Centipede line. He hurries to the telegraph office and notifies the president of the Centipede Company of his discovery. Later, Matthew overhears Jones denounce Tom Glenn for failing to tap the line, and, as he realizes the father of the girl he loves has only been the tool of the bully, the hitherto timid and shrinking boy suddenly turns into a ferocious being. When Jones attempts to assault him he returns his blows with such effectiveness that the battle is soon over—and in Matthew's favor.

Then follow a series of exciting episodes, the story ending happily.

SELECT PICTURES CORP.

SHIRLEY KAYE (Seven Parts).—The cast: John Rowson (Corliss Giles); T. J. Magen (George Fawcett); Egerton Kaye (George Backus); Daisy Magen (Claire Whitney); Mrs. Magen (Nellie Lindrich); Earl Rosslyn (John Sunderland); Mrs. Baylis (Mrs. F. O. Winthrop); Dingwall (Frank Otto); Shirley Kaye (Clara Kimball Young). From the play by Hulbert Footner. Scenario by Margaret Turnbull. Directed by Joseph Kaufman.

Shirley Kaye is the vivacious daughter of Egerton Kaye, president of the great Union Central Railroad. The latter holds his position through his descent from "Pirate" Kaye, who founded the line, rather than through any executive ability of his own. Shirley is queen of the most exclusive Long Island set, and as clever as she is lovely to look at.

From the West comes T. J. Magen, a rough but lion-hearted financier, who buys the house next door to the Kayes. Magen cares little for society, and the elaborate household which their wealth forces them to support is a constant worry to his simple and unassuming wife. But the daughter, "Daisy," yearns with all her heart to break into the society and swim where Shirley Kaye reigns supreme.

T. J. and his younger associate, John Rowson who, incidentally, hates all women, especially Easterners, secure a majority of the proxies of Union Central shareholders. Believing that new blood would improve the finances of the U. C., they determine to oust Egerton Kaye, the figure-head president, at the next directors' meeting.

With breaking heart Kaye tells his daughter of the impending blow, which means not alone the loss of his position but also the loss of the family interest in the road. Shirley, angered at the conspiracy, rises supremely to the emergency. She uses her wiles on T. J., dickers with him for his daughter's social position and agrees to give Daisy her heart's desire if he will ally himself with the Kaye interests.

She wins the allegiance of Magen, but Rowson, believing her to be a cold-blooded snake after money and social position, abruptly severs his connections with the venture and leaves for the West. In the end Shirley goes after him and proves herself as capable in love privacy as in the realm of high finance.

Simplex

Just for once: Remember yourself

Yes, it's all right

At this season of the year, when the spirit of giving permeates the very air you breathe, it is all right to be liberal, to give out of the bigness of your heart, and to the extent that the bigness of your bank account will permit.

But

There's such a thing as overdoing it—forgetting that you have duties toward yourself as well as to others, and thereby reducing the prospects of your being able to give liberally next year.

A new name on your list

To guard against that, suppose you add your own name to your list of beneficiaries, and consider just what you ought to give yourself.

Give judiciously

Of course, you will exercise the same care as in making selections for others, and will give yourself something useful, something that endures, something you will always be glad to have received.

A suggestion

If it isn't too late, if you are not already enjoying its benefit and profit, suppose you give yourself Simplex Projection?

Answers the specifications

Nothing could be more useful; its perfection endures; you will always be glad to have acquired it; and it will help make you more capable of giving next year.

Others liked it

The shining lights of the Industry would agree with our suggestion. They gave themselves Simplex Projection, and it proved a large factor in the winning of fame and fortune. You will like it for the same reasons.

He can do most for others who has done the right thing for himself

THE CARBON THAT CHANGES A. C. TO D. C. WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBONS

Give Noiseless Operation on Alternating Current

So steady and flickerless is the light obtained with the new White A. C. Special Carbons that many operators have expressed the opinion that it seems to change A. C. to D. C. This feature of this new carbon has caused the A. C. operators to regard it as the last word in A. C. practice.

The noiseless operation of these carbons has justified their title of "The carbon that changes A. C. to D. C." The remarkable change from the old roaring A. C. arc to this quiet burning, steady white light has given alternating current a new lease of life in the motion picture industry.

FOR DIRECT CURRENT OPERATION

Remember, for D. C. operation the National-Silvertip combination has become standard everywhere. Operators know that Silvertip is but another name for perfect projection.

Let us send you booklets describing these two carbons. With these carbons we can fill every requirement in the moving picture industry.

Your Profits Depend On—What?

Analyze the question! Location, outside and inside appearance, management, screen, machines—these are the obvious. But how about Lenses? The big-paying houses are using

Bausch^{and} Lomb Projection Lenses

Why? Simply because they give best results from the public's standpoint. Because they mean sharper, clearer, more brilliant pictures—pictures illuminated right out to the edges.

These are the things the people want, the things they pay for, the things they go out of their way to get. And—they're all in the Lens.

B. & L. Lenses are standard on Edison and Nicholas Power Machines—obtainable at any Film Exchange or Supply House.

The Red Cross Asks the Exhibitors' Aid to get 10,000,000 new members for the Red Cross by Christmas.

It means millions of dollars for those patriotic souls—perhaps it is your father, your son, your brother, or your friend, who has laid down his arms, perhaps to die, perhaps to live—but deserving of the best on earth as long as the breath of life lingers.

Showing the Red Cross trailer in your theatre is your part

1,000 trailers have been prepared by the Red Cross, declaring the immediate necessity of getting these new members.

20,000,000 at least will see this trailer and get the Red Cross appeal for help, if you exhibitors do your part in this great cause with its tremendous appeal to humanity.

You can get these trailers at any of the exchanges listed below. Remember, the money must be had by Christmas—that means you must get busy NOW—tomorrow will be too late.

Index to Reviews, Comments, and Stories of the Films

Appended is a list of subjects covered by our reviews and comments and the synopses furnished by the manufacturers released for the three months ending December 31, 1917. This list of releases with dates is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or synopsis can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; "S" for synopsis; and "A" for advertising aids. Where reference letter is omitted to either review or comment it signifies that none was published, and the omission of reference letter "S" indicates that synopsis was not furnished by the manufacturer. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.

(N. B.—Synopsis, comments, or reviews of episodes of serials or series are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode. Date shown for Pathe and Universal subjects indicates the week during which they were released.)
